THE ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

The Royal Commission on the Police Force of Victoria started taking evidence on Wednesday, 23rd March 1881. The commissioners included:

The inclusion of the Hon. George Wilson Hall, M.L.A. was a particular interesting member of the board. He was not only the editor of his own Mansfield newspaper and owner of the Benalla Standard, but a staunch Kelly sympathizer, who had only just been elected to the Victorian parliament. With Hall, and Longmore in the chair, the police force was in for a torrid time. Sadleir later wrote: ‘Mr. Longmore was eminently honest and conscientious, but he went relentlessly for scalps.’

Not everyone was happy with the appointments to the board, the following article appearing in the Ovens & Murray Advertiser, Saturday, March 19, 1881:

THE POLICE BOARD.—”John Peerybingle” has the following,—That Police Board that has been appointed is a curiosity in its way. The selection is unique. The chairman, for a start, is Francis Longmore, who declared last week that our judges and juries were unfair. Then there is Graves, the man who lays the charge against the police. He is to be judge, jury, witness, and prosecutor. George Collins Levy, a very estimable gentleman for trotting ladies round the Exhibition, but I shouldn’t think he would be up to much as judge of police duties. E. J. Dixon, a disappointed Radical, who was not selected for Parliament last year, finds a place at the board. George Fincham, another Radical, has to sit in judgment on the bobbies. In fact, taking the board all through, it is a regular sham, and the public look upon the whole enquiry as a gigantic farce.

The Commission did not finish their examinations until the 20th September, hearing evidence from sixty-six witnesses, who were in total asked 18374 questions. (It should be noted that this figure is 500 more than the total numbering suggests, due to an error in the numbering system which occurred on page 281.)

Captain F. C. Standish sworn and examined.

The Witness.—I think it would shorten proceedings if I read an exhaustive statement, and was afterwards examined on that.

The Chairman.—The Commission specially adjourned from its last sitting in order to proceed to-day, and it will be necessary to go on with your examination now.

The Witness.—I am perfectly prepared to give any evidence I may be required, at once.

1. By the Commission.—How long have you been in charge of the force?—I was appointed Chief Commissioner of Police on the 1st September 1858.

2. Coming directly to the business that this Commission was appointed for, have you formed any idea in your own mind of what led up to the Kelly outrages?—For several years before the Kelly outbreak there is no doubt that the North-Eastern district was a receptacle for horse stealers and cattle stealers, and that they gave the police force a great deal of trouble. No outrages were committed in those days, but a wholesale system of cattle duffing was carried on extensively. This appears to have culminated in the disturbance at Greta, when Constable Fitzpatrick went out to serve a warrant on Dan Kelly for horse stealing. He arrived there, found Dan Kelly, and, in my opinion, foolishly allowed him to stay and have his dinner. In the meantime Ned Kelly, Williamson, commonly called “Bricky,” and his brother-in-law Skillion arrived, with two or three others of their confederates and friends. A disturbance immediately took place between these men and Constable Fitzpatrick, which resulted in Ned Kelly firing at him, and shooting him through the wrist.

3. Shooting Constable Fitzpatrick?—Yes, shooting him through the wrist. Fitzpatrick fainted, and lay there in a semi-comatose state for some time while they cut the ball out of his wrist; it had been under the skin, and they allowed him to go. He rode off, and labored under the idea that he was pursued by two of the outlaws, which I have ascertained was not the case. Some months after this occurred, I had a conversation, a long conversation, with Williamson, in Pentridge, and he entirely corroborated every word of Fitzpatrick’s evidence and he gave me some considerable information, and volunteered to assist me in every kind of way.

4. Was it possibly Senior-Constable Strachan?—I think it was.

5. Was Williamson in prison at the time he gave you that information?—He was in Pentridge, with a sentence of six years for that offence.

6. For being present at the shooting?—Yes; I think it was a very severe punishment myself. A reward of £100 was also offered for the apprehension of the Kellys. Late on the night of Sunday the 27th October, I received a telegram from Mansfield, announcing to me that Constables Scanlan and Lonigan had been shot dead, near Mansfield, by bushrangers. After communicating with the Chief Secretary early the next morning, I took early steps to send up reinforcements and special arms. We had a few Spencer repeating rifles in store, and Mr. Berry asked me not to stint me any expenditure in arming the police properly. I may state that the regulation weapon of the mounted police has only been a revolver for many good many months, it was ultimately determined, with my approval, to start two search parties, well armed, in pursuit of the Kellys. One started from Mansfield, under the charge of Sergeant Kennedy, and the other from Wangaratta, under the charge of Sergeant Steele or some other sub-officer of the police.

7. Was that the first time he was sent there?—He was inspecting superintendent, and had to visit the country districts from time to time. I gave him authority to take any steps he thought proper, and to incur any expenditure he thought necessary.

8. What date was that?—Immediately after I received the news. I also obtained authority from the Chief Secretary to purchase a number of breech-loading double-barrelled guns, to be sent up to the district as soon as possible.

9. Then you consider that the original cause of this difficulty was the lawlessness of the district?—I do.

10. In cattle stealing and horse stealing?—Yes.

11. And that the Kellys had been engaged in that for a length of time?—For years. Before proceeding further, I wish to point out to the Commission the very great difficulties which beset the police in various directions. The Kellys, as is well known, had an enormous number of sympathizers in the district, and after their outrages there is not the slightest doubt that a great many respectable men were in dread of their lives, and were intimidated by a fear of the consequences from giving any information whatsoever to the police. Not only their lives and those of their families were in danger, but their cattle, and sheep, and horses, and property were liable to be stolen or destroyed; in addition to which there is not the slightest doubt that there was an enormous number of tradesmen in the district who were so benefited by the large increase of the police, and by the consequent expenditure, that they were only too glad that this unpleasant business was protracted for so many months. I may also state that a great many of the local papers never lost an opportunity of attacking the police in the most unjustifiable manner and on every possible occasion; and remarks of that kind, as I think any sensible man must be aware, were not only calculated to do the police a great deal of harm, but to prevent their receiving material assistance from anybody. On the 6th November 1878 I proceeded to Benalla to confer with Mr. Nicolson. I arrived there about eight o’clock, had supper with Mr. Nicolson at one of the hotels at Benalla and, whilst we were talking over matters afterwards, we received an urgent despatch from Superintendent Sadleir, who was up at Beechworth, saying that they had received information from a person in Beechworth that the Kellys had been at Sebastopol, and believed they were there now. I immediately ordered a special train, and proceeded, with Mr. Nicolson, nine mounted constables, and one black tracker, to Beechworth, which we reached soon after three o’clock in the morning. We started at four o’clock a.m. with these men and an additional body of men from Beechworth from the railway station, and made at once to the house of the Sherritt family, where it was stated the outlaws had been. We arrived there very early in the morning, scattered our men all round, keeping them in the bush, and sent a party of seven or eight men, under Mr. Nicolson, to search the house. Soon after we had searched the house we heard a shot fired. It was subsequently ascertained that it was a gun that went off by accident. We all rushed to the place, and found no traces of the outlaws there. We then rode on to Mrs. Byrne’s house at Sebastopol, the mother of Joe Byrne, and Mr. Nicolson and I interviewed her; but I need not say we got nothing out of her.

12. She gave no information?—None whatever.

13. Did you form the opinion at that time that the information might have been incorrect that Mr. Sadleir got?—I believe the information was correct, but we were a day or two after the fair; so after conferring with Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Nicolson, we decided it was no use carrying on matters further, and we returned to Beechworth.

14. As there have been reports made in which the officers have to some extent given different versions of the matter, and in some instances have contradicted one another, I am going to ask you now if you had perfect confidence in the officers who had charge of the district?—You mean Mr. Sadleir?

15. Superintendents Sadleir, Nicolson, and Hare?—I had at the time perfect confidence in Mr. Nicolson, although I have not now. I found very good occasion to doubt him before I left the police force.

16. What tended to shake your confidence in him as an officer of police?—I have ample proof here of his procrastination and inefficiency.

17. Could you give the Commission some idea of that proof?—I have the papers here, but I think it would be better to continue my recital.

18. You desire to continue your narrative for the present, till the Kellys were taken?—Yes, I think it would be better.

19. Very well?—About a fortnight before the Euroa bank was stuck up, in December 1878, I received information from Mr. Nicolson that a bank would be probable stuck up in the North-Eastern district.

20. A bank?—Yes. I at once issued instructions to Mr. Hare, who had several stations on the line of railway, to warn him to take the necessary steps to protect the banks in his part of the district. Inspector Green also received similar information from a prisoner in Pentridge. No provision was made whatever to protect the banks at Euroa and Violet Town.

21. Whose district was that?—Under Mr. Nicolson, the North-Eastern district; and as both those townships were close to the Strathbogie ranges, it was almost sure that one of those would be selected as the bank to be stuck up. On the 10th December, shortly after I returned from a public dinner at the Town Hall, I received information that the Euroa bank had been stuck up.

22. What is the date on which you warned them to protect the banks?—Immediately after I had received the information, a week or ten days before the bank was stuck up.

23. That warning was simply conveyed to Superintendent Hare and Inspector Green, believing that Superintendent Nicolson, having given the information, would take the necessary steps himself?—Yes, it was his duty to do so. At 11 p.m. on the night of the 10th, I received information that the Euroa bank had been stuck up. I rushed down to the telegraph office, and there was there most of the night telegraphing.

24. At what hour?—A little before 12 o’clock; and I was at the office on and off nearly the whole of the night telegraphing. Communication was interrupted with Benalla, and I had to telegraph through Deniliquin and Albury; and having heard that Mr. Nicolson had gone to Albury, I sent a telegram to him there, which, I believe, was the first intimation he had of it. The ensuing day I had to remain in town to see the manager of the National Bank, and to arrange other matters in connection with the pursuit of the Kellys. I started the following morning, the 12th, by the 6.10 a.m. train, and arrived at Euroa about 10 o’clock.

25. You started by the first train?—Yes, the early train. I there saw Mr. Nicolson, found him very much knocked up in appearance, and his eyes bad, and so I instructed him to return to Melbourne to take temporary charge of the Police Department, my office, in my absence, informing him that I should remain at Benalla some time. He was very much knocked up physically; he had had very hard work; that was on the 12th December.

26. That is two days after the robbery?—The robbery was on the evening of the 10th, and I came by the early train on the 12th. Mr. Hare came up, by my instructions, by the evening train; I proceeded to Benalla by the evening train, and the next day had a long conference with Mr. Wyatt the police magistrate. Mr. Wyatt informed me he was returning from Seymour, or some town on the line of railway, the night the bank was stuck up, and that as the train approached Faithfull’s Creek, near Euroa, they pulled up and saw the telegraph lines on both sides of the railway had been smashed up a couple of hundred yards.

27. They stopped the train to see that?—Yes; and Mr. Wyatt informed me that he got out and picked out a bundle of broken telegraph wires, and took them up with him. On arriving at the Benalla railway station Mr. Wyatt met Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir.

28. Was that on the evening of the 10th?—Yes, on the evening of the bank robbery, Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir were then starting on some strange evidence; they had heard from a friend of the outlaws that the outlaws were going to cross the Murray, and Mr. Wyatt at once informed Mr. Nicolson of what he had seen of the smashing up of the telegraph line, and told him that there was no doubt that the outlaws must have been about there.

29. Where?—At Faithfull’s Creek, or Euroa, or somewhere in that vicinity. Mr. Nicolson pooh-poohed this information.

30. Are you giving this as your information, or what he told you?—What he told me; and I hope the Board will examine him. Mr. Wyatt informed me he pooh-poohed this information, and not only started away himself, but took Mr. Sadleir with him. On their arrival at Albury, Mr. Nicolson received information which, I believe, was my telegram—but I am not quite certain on that—that the Euroa bank had been robbed.

31. Will you fix the dates?—That is on the 12th.

32. You said the bank was robbed on the 10th?—Yes.

33. You have given evidence that you were at a dinner party that night?—Yes.

34. And after that you received a message to say the bank was robbed, and you went up on the 12th?—Yes.

35. You are now giving evidence that Mr. Nicolson received a telegram at Albury—I ask you to fix the date; did you telegraph that night or on the 12th?—I was in the telegraph office all that night.

36. Was it on that occasion you telegraphed to Mr. Nicolson?—Yes, it was on that night, the night of the 10th, I telegraphed to Mr. Nicolson, and the information was also sent to Benalla by this roundabout way, because of the break in the wires, and a party of men immediately started.

37. Sent by you?—Yes; and I arrived there some time during the night.

38. Whom was that party in charge of?—There was no officer there. I think Senior-Constable Johnson was in charge. They arrived there some time during the night, and they received a telegram from Mr. Nicolson, telling them not to leave Euroa until he got there.

39. That would be on the 11th?—Yes, the morning Mr. Nicolson reached Euroa, on the morning of Tuesday; and after some hours delay he started off with a party of police, and returned the next day without any result.

40. You were not there yourself?—This statement can be confirmed by Mr. Wyatt, Mr. Sadleir, and Constable Johnson.

41. Between the Saturday night that Mr. Wyatt gave you the information and the time of your seeing Mr. Nicolson, this information was supplied by some one else?—By Mr. Wyatt. I am given to understand that, though Mr. Nicolson was aware that it was intended to stick up the bank, he never gave information to the local bankers that such a thing was meditated. It seems to me that it would have been very advisable if Mr. Nicolson, when in charge, had instructed the telegraph masters to give notice where the lines were intercepted, whereby a splendid chance of capturing the outlaws at Faithfull’s Creek was lost.

42. Would he know himself at this time where the interruption had taken place?—That I cannot tell you. I proceeded to Benalla on the evening of the 12th, and remained in charge of the operations there for a period of upwards of six months. The Government then decided to send parties of the paid artillery to the various townships of any importance in the North-Eastern district, where there was any apprehension of the outlaws sticking up a bank.

43. Was that on your recommendation?—No, it was against my recommendation. After I had taken charge and direction of affairs in the North-Eastern district I at once sent search parties in the various portions of the district where there were some grounds for believing that the outlaws might be lying, and where we received information of the possibility of their being found. I never heard a rumor of the outlaws being likely to be at any place without at once taking steps to send out police either to find them or to ascertain the truth of those reports. I need not say I was most ably seconded by Mr. Hare, who not only never spared himself in any kind of way, but was most indefatigable in the pursuit of the outlaws. Not only was he most active and energetic, but he was so popular with the men under him that they would have done anything in the world for him. I fact, he treated the men under him like friends, not like dogs—you can easily understand.

44. May I draw your attention to this? Was there another officer of equal standing in the police at Benalla at the time?—Mr. Sadleir.

45. Was Mr. Sadleir of equal rank in the service with Mr. Hare?—They are both superintendents.

46. Was Mr. Sadleir stationed at Benalla?—Yes, permanently.

47. Was his conduct different from Mr. Nicolson’s?—I have made no reflection on him; but he was in charge of the special operations that I had to deal with. In addition to these search parties, which were not sent out on what is called a bootless errand, Mr. Hare and a certain body of very efficient men formed a camp in the ranges, near Sebastopol, not very far from Mrs. Byrne’s house, and where they remained hidden without the slightest information being furnished of the outlaws or their friends. During the night they came down and camped in a sequestered place, close to Mrs. Byrne’s house, and by the route it was quite certain the outlaws would have taken had they come there. I went there one evening myself to see Mr. Hare and confer with him, and spent the night watching with the rest of the party. There is another very great disadvantage under which we labored, viz., that the moves of the police in Benalla, Wangaratta, Mansfield, and Beechworth were closely watched by the numerous friends and sympathizers of the outlaws—at Benalla especially; and I may state that if I had determined, without consulting anybody, in the middle of any night to come down to the barracks by myself and to start a party of police, which I could have done in half an hour, I firmly believe that before the men had left the barracks some of those spies would have been galloping off to the outlaws. I must say the which were sent to me a letter from Mr. O'Connor. I can merely say it is full of misrepresentations, and I have not the slightest intention of taking notice of it.

48. Was it the latter of the 7th September 1880 or the one of the 12th August 1880 you refer to?—It was the 7th September letter I refer to.

49. That, you say, is full of misstatements?—Full of misrepresentations.

50. And not worthy of notice?—Yes. I should only remark that Mr. O'Connor states that, during the whole sixteen months he was here, he was treated by me with the greatest discourtesy. To that I give the lie direct. For several months when he first came—for three or four months we lived together, and we were always on the best of terms; but when I found out things about him, which I do not wish to state before the Commission, I ceased my intimacy, with him. In fact, if I were to state things that I can prove by direct evidence, it would show you how utterly unreliable a man he is.

51. He was in the service of the Victorian police at that time?—Yes.

52. Was he a part of the police force of Victoria?—He was sworn in when he arrived. With reference to a part of that letter which refers to the expedition to the Warby ranges I must refer you to Mr. Hare's evidence, as he can give more satisfactory evidence on that point. About the end of June, after having been upwards of six months at Benalla, finding that all the business in my office was being frightfully muddled, and that things were going wrong both in Melbourne and the country districts, I obtained the authority of the Chief Secretary for my return to Melbourne.

53. In June 1879?—Yes.

54. Was that Mr. Ramsay?—No, Mr. Berry, Chief Secretary at the time; and Mr. Nicolson, being next in seniority, I had to send him up, though I confess I had but little faith in his energy.

55. Was that immediately after your return?—Yes, immediately after my return; and I instructed Mr. Hare to resume charge of his district, which also required a deal of supervision.

56. What date was that?—On the 26th of June.

57. Did you send Mr. Nicolson up?—I sent him up immediately. Shortly after my return I had several interviews with the Chief Secretary, who was not unnaturally dissatisfied at the continuous heavy expenditure of the police in pursuit of the Kellys. I may here state that the great bulk of the expenditure was caused by the new travelling allowances for the police, which were amended and approved by the Government. I should think considerably more than half the expenditure was travelling allowances to members of the police force away from their district, and it must be borne in mind that many of them were married men separated from their wives and families. Mr. Berry instructed me to do all I could to reduce the expenditure. I conferred with Mr. Nicolson, and made reductions wherever I possibly could; and with the view of making a large permanent reduction in the expenditure. I permanently transferred to the North-Eastern district all the members of the police force who had been sent there. Of course this was only a temporary force, but it was absolutely necessary to cut down the expenditure. From time to time I used to meet Mr. Nicolson at Benalla and used to write to him, but both on paper and verbally he was always most absurdly reticent. During the eleven months he was there he hardly ever sent out a search party except just before he was recalled. I left the direction of affairs in his hands, save and except when I was acting under the instructions of the Minister. Mr. Nicolson, it seems, employed a great many agents, some of whom were, to my knowledge, in the habit of communicating with and meeting the outlaws. Mr. Nicolson frequently received reliable information as to the whereabouts of the outlaws, but he took no steps whatever to act on the information, which I believe would clearly, in more than one instance, have led to the capture of the outlaws. Mr. Nicolson used to say to me on every possible occasion, "I have the outlaws surrounded by my spies, and have my hands upon them. It is not a chase of months or weeks, but of days and hours." That was his favorite utterance to me on every possible occasion, and from information which I have received from time to time, I believe there is no doubt whatever that nearly the whole time Mr. Nicolson was in charge the outlaws were hanging about Greta and Glenrowan.

58. How far is that from Benalla?—They are about five miles apart.

59. As you stated that during the whole time that the outlaws were in the neighbourhood of Greta and Glenrowan, you had better say how far those are from Benalla?—Glenrowan is about twenty-five miles by rail, I think. Oh! No, it is a little more than half way to Wangaratta.

60. What is the distance?—I cannot say exactly.

61. How far is Greta?—Greta is about ten miles, I think, from Benalla; and Glenrowan, I think, is about fourteen or fifteen miles. Whilst Mr. Nicolson was at Benalla, the following little incident occurred. ——— was riding through the bush.

62. Who was he?—He is a connection of the Kellys. He was riding through the bush, ten or twelve miles from Benalla, and he saw the four outlaws on horseback together with Tom Lloyd.

63. Who is Tom Lloyd?—Tom Lloyd is a cousin of the Kellys. He did not go near them, but rode straight home to his own place as hard as he could go. When he got home, and went inside his house about dusk, he saw Tom Lloyd go and look at his horse in the paddock, and then take his place at the sliprails. He looked out several times during the night and saw Lloyd still there. Next day —— caught his horse, and while riding along the road, near Wangaratta, he met Mr. Sadleir, who was eight miles from Oxlney, or somewhere in that direction.

64. What was the day?—I have not got the date, but Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Hare will be able to give it.
— told Mr. Sadleir what he had seen on the previous day, and described the spot to him. Mr. Sadleir rode in as fast as he could to Wangaratta, and telegraphed to Mr. Nicolson that he had some important information, and to get everything ready for an early start, and he (Mr. Sadleir) would be at Benalla by the last train. On his arriving at Benalla he gave all the information to Mr. Nicolson. It was arranged that the black trackers and a party of men were to start away at one o’clock the next morning. Mr. Nicolson, Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. O’Connor were to accompany the party. Mr. Nicolson telegraphed to me to come up to Benalla by the early train next morning. At one o’clock in the morning the men were all ready, with their horses saddled. Senior-Constable Irwin was in charge of the men. Mr. Nicolson turned up, and gave orders for the saddles to be taken off the horses, and for the men to go back to their quarters. Shortly after this Mr. Sadleir arrived at the barracks yard, and found all the saddles off the horses, and, upon asking the reason of this, was told that Mr. Nicolson had given the orders. Mr. Sadleir then went to the office, and found Mr. Nicolson and Mr. O’Connor there. He asked him if any further news had been obtained to cause the change of plans. Mr. Nicolson replied, “No; but I have been thinking about the matter all night, and have decided not to disturb the outlaws just now.” A telegram was sent to me at that hour not to come up to Benalla. There is no doubt that though Mr. Sadleir did not know of the exact spot, he could easily have obtained information from ——.

65. Have you no general idea of the date at which this occurred?—I have not; but I have a perfect recollection of it, but I cannot fix the date. Mr. Hare will be able to fix it.

66. And the official records will show it?—Yes.

67. Was it in the early part or the latter part of the search?—It was the early part of last year, 1880. I have ample proof of still further acts of gross neglect on the part of Mr. Nicolson. About the 25th of May last ——, one of the —— family, was at Mrs. Byrne’s house, and, just before she left, Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly came to the house, and subsequently Ned Kelly and Steve Hart, and sat down to tea. —— walked home a distance of about three miles.

68. While they were having tea?—No, after having had tea there. She informed her mother, Mrs. ——, who went into Beechworth next morning and told Detective Ward what her daughter had seen, and no notice was taken of it at all.

69. That would be on the 26th?—Yes, the morning of the 26th, about a week before Mr. Nicolson was removed from Benalla.

70. Can you fix the dates?—Much of this information did not come under my cognizance at the time. The witnesses can prove the dates. The persons referred to can prove the dates.

71. You gave evidence of what occurred on the 25th and 26th of March, before the outlaws were captured, and you say Mr. Nicolson was in charge on the 25th of May, but Mr. Hare succeeded him early in June, therefore it is most important that you should fix the dates, because you see Mr. Hare succeeded him a couple of days after?—About a week before Mr. Nicolson was removed from Benalla, Mrs. —— got up early to look for cows, and when passing an unoccupied house, about six or seven miles from Beechworth, she saw Joe Byrne getting on his horse. She said, “What are you doing here, Joe?” and his reply was, “Looking for Hare, to shoot him.” She had some further conversation with him, and he rode away, and Mrs. —— made her way into Beechworth and informed Detective Ward, who telegraphed the fact to Benalla. The result was that that night Mr. Nicolson, Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. O’Connor went to Beechworth without the trackers, saw Mrs. ——, who stated what she had seen, and decided it was no use going after him, and they returned to Benalla next day. Towards the end of April 1880, I had some conversation with the then Chief Secretary, Mr. Ramsay, on the Kelly business. He asked me my opinion how things were going on. I said I thought that nothing was being done now, and that, beyond employing unreliable spies, I did not see what good Mr. Nicolson would ever effect. Mr. Ramsay told me he intended to consult his colleagues on the subject, and a few days afterwards sent for me and informed me that the Cabinet had unanimously decided that Mr. Nicolson should be removed from his position, and that Mr. Hare should be sent in his place, as they were of opinion that Mr. Hare was the most able and efficient man for that duty. I was requested to communicate the decision of the Government to Mr. Nicolson.

72. What position did Mr. Nicolson occupy at that time?—He was in charge. I sent him after I returned to my duties.

73. Was he next in charge to yourself in the force?—Yes.

74. You said he was removed by the opinion of the Cabinet; the question asked you is this, what position did Mr. Nicolson occupy in the police force?—He was inspecting Superintendent of Police with the honorary title of Assistant Commissioner. It was a title conferred on him by request of Mr. John Thomas Smith, without my being consulted.

75. You gave in evidence that, in conversation with Mr. Ramsay, he said he would lay it before his Cabinet, and that they unanimously arranged to remove Mr. Nicolson from his position?—From charge of the district.

23rd March 1881.
day, and I told him, and asked him if he would accede to it. Mr. Ramsay said he did not see any necessity for seeing him, but if Mr. Nicolson wished it he would see him, but he would only see him in my presence. I communicated this to Mr. Nicolson, and he came down, and we had fixed a certain hour next day—I think 10.30 a.m.—to see Mr. Ramsay, and I told him of this. I also told him that Mr. Ramsay only wanted to see him in my presence. I went to my office, as I always did, at nine o’clock, and had occasion a few minutes afterwards to go and see Mr. Odgers, the Under Secretary, when I saw Mr. Nicolson trying to force his way into the Chief Secretary’s office. I am not certain whether Mr. Ramsay was in or not. We went and saw Mr. Ramsay in the course of the morning, and Mr. Nicolson spoke for about three-quarters of an hour the most incoherent nonsense I ever heard in my life. Mr. Ramsay decided that he was not to remain there; but, at Mr. Nicolson’s request, and with my concurrence, he was allowed to remain there another month. Mr. Nicolson came down to my office afterwards, when I asked him, “When are you going back?” He said, “I am going back by the next train—the afternoon train.” He not only did not do that, but he remained in Melbourne, and went to Sir James McCulloch to ask him to go and see Mr. Ramsay, and intercede on his behalf. Sir James McCulloch went there, but after a few moments’ conversation with Mr. Ramsay he withdrew his request. Shortly afterwards Mr. Nicolson forced his way into Mr. Ramsay’s private business office, and, as Mr. Ramsay told me, spoke of me in a very nasty way, and abused me, whereupon Mr. Ramsay said, “Mr. Nicolson, supposing you were head of a department, and one of your subordinate officers came to me and abused you behind your back, what would you think?” That day a telegram marked “Very urgent” was sent to Mr. Nicolson; it was addressed to the detective office.

77. How long was this after the 26th of June?—This was early in May. The following day a telegram marked “urgent” was addressed to Mr. Nicolson at the detective office. I thought he had returned, so it was brought to me. I opened it, and I found by that he could not possibly have returned, so on chance I went down to the railway station to see if he was going off by the afternoon train that day. I waited there for a few minutes, and just as the train was starting in tumbled Mr. Nicolson. I only had time to hand him the telegram and to give him a bit of my mind. In fact I may say that on that occasion, and subsequently when he was relieved, he behaved to me in a most discourteous, insolent, and ungentlemanly manner; and if I had not been a man who is gifted with not a very bad temper, I should not only have given him a bit of my mind but I would have suspended him from duty; but I had no animosity against anybody in the department. Though I had a great contempt for the man, I had no ill-feeling against him. On Sunday the 27th of June 1880 I left my residence about a quarter past two. A few minutes after I had left a telegram arrived from Mr. Hare. I did not return to my abode till half-past four, when I found this telegram in my pocket. It was addressed to the detective office.

Mr. Hare requested me to communicate with Mr. O’Connor, who, I heard, was staying at Essendon; sent him it by a hansom, and immediately wrote a letter to Mr. Ramsay to inform him of this. In my letter I said I had written to Mr. O’Connor; that I was not certain whether he would consent to go or not, but that if he did I should either send them up by the early morning train or by a special train if necessary. After Mr. Ramsay received this letter. In the meantime I had been down at the telegraph office to communicate with Mr. Hare, and I returned to the club and I found Mr. Ramsay just arrived, and I talked the matter over with him; and I had not seen Mr. O’Connor, and was not certain whether he would go back; but he took me up to Mr. Gillies’ place, which was near Mr. Ramsay’s, and got for me an order for a special train. I returned to the club with this in my pocket, and just about this time Mr. O’Connor turned up. I told him, and asked him if he was willing to go up; said it was a matter of great urgency; and he, in a rather haw-haw way, said he did not see any objection, and said he would go; and I asked when he would be ready to go, and he said he would go this evening. I told him I had an order for a special train and I would get it at once. He asked me to get the train to meet him at Essendon, as his black trackers were at the late John Thomas Smith’s place. I went down to the station and ordered the special train, and he left about half-past nine or ten; I do not know the time exactly. About twenty minutes to six the following morning, Monday the 28th of June, I was asleep in bed when I was knocked up. A telegram was handed to me, saying that Superintendent Hare and his party would join Mr. O’Connor at Benalla. Had encountered the outlaws at Glenrowan; that Superintendent Hare in the early part of the encounter had been shot through the wrist by the first shot. It was too late. I could not have possibly caught the early train, so I communicated at once with Mr. Ramsay, and got an order for a special train to take me up about nine o’clock. An hour before I was going to start I got a telegram announcing that Ned Kelly had been taken alive. A few minutes afterwards I went down to the railway station, and there I heard that Joe Byrne had been shot dead. I started by special train, and got to Benalla about two o’clock. There was an encumbrance on the line, and the special train could not go on. I went to the hotel at Benalla to see Superintendent Hare. I sat with him a short time, and then went back to the railway station, and was detained there till four o’clock. Just before the train left a telegram came down to say that the whole thing was over; the house had been burned, and the charred remains of Steve Hart and Dan Kelly had been found in the house. I went on the special train, and when I got there everything was over. I instructed Mr. Sadleir not to hand over the charred remains of the outlaws. It is just possible he may have misunderstood me, but I certainly did say that to him; but it seems that possibly there was a misapprehension. He allowed the friends of the outlaws to take away those two charred stumps, as you may call them. I saw Ned Kelly lying severely wounded, and the body of Byrne. I ordered Ned Kelly to be brought down to there was no risk in having Ned Kelly sent down to the Melbourne gaol, I ordered him to be taken down in a special carriage by the afternoon train, I think it was. I stayed at Benalla that day, and had an interview with Mr. Curnow, the schoolmaster, to whom certainly we are indebted for saving the lives of all the police, and for putting us on the track of the Kellys. I returned to Melbourne the following day.

78. Is that all?—That concludes my evidence. Of course, I am ready to answer any questions that may be put to me.

79. By the Chairman.—I intend to ask you a few questions upon your report of the 15th March 1880; and after that I will ask Inspector Nicolson and Mr. O’Connor whether they have anything to say, or any questions to ask you. In your report of the 5th of July, you say—“It is asserted and implied that the long-continued efforts of the police force to trace and capture the outlaws have been characterised by supineness and apathy; that the police have been, in many cases, influenced by a desire to avoid rather than meet the offenders, while in connection with the recent outbreak, which led to the destruction of the gang, it is asserted that I have been guilty of most culpable procrastination; that the police officers have shown a want of generalship, and the conduct of the members of the force has been, according to some, characterised by an inconceivable disregard of human life, and, according to others, by an absence of that courage and dash which every good constable should possess. I have long felt the injustice of these reflections, and I think the time has now arrived when I can properly ask to have it ascertained whether they are deserved or not.” Now I think that, in the evidence that you have now given before the Commission, you have asserted that there was both supineness and apathy on the part of Mr. Nicolson?—Certainly.

80. You must have been aware of that at the time you wrote this—this is the 5th of July 1880, after the Kellys were caught?—Yes.

81. What was the period at which you lost confidence in Mr. Nicolson?—During his last stay in Benalla. He remained there eleven months; and, as I have stated in the evidence, he kept saying he had his eye upon them—I cannot believe him.

82. That was before 1880?—Yes, that was the early part of last year.

83. During his last stay at Benalla you lost confidence in him?—He was doing nothing.

84. We want to know the time you began to lose confidence in him?—I cannot say the particular date; but if a man stays eleven months without ever doing anything, and always saying he is going to catch them immediately—has his eye upon them—I cannot believe him.

85. That was before June 1879, where you spoke of his being most insolent to you, and but for your good temper you would have thought of suspending him?—That was in June 1880.

86. We have it in your evidence here that, on the 11th December, Mr. Nicolson went down and returned on the 12th; and you are given to understand that Mr. Nicolson did not warn the bankers that an effort was to be made to stick up a bank?—That is so.

87. You say he did not warn the railway telegraph people, and so a splendid chance was lost to capture the Kellys?—Yes.

88. Had you confidence in him then. Can you fix about the time. Were these the things that were leading up to the want of confidence in him?—Well it rather shook my faith in him. I may say this letter of the 5th July was written after that. I wanted an investigation into the matter, but that the Honourable Mr. Service, who was then Prime Minister, in the election at Maldon made a speech strongly reflecting on me, and the remarks were most unfair and uncalled for.

89. Have you got that speech?—I do not know for what purpose he turned round, and, pointing to his colleague (Mr. Ramsay), said the fact is it was Mr. Ramsay that caught the Kellys. I think it was a most unjustifiable proceeding on the part of Mr. Service, and most uncalled for.

90. On the 5th July 1880 had you confidence in Mr. Nicolson?—I did not refer to Mr. Nicolson in the letter at all.

91. Had you lost confidence in Mr. Nicolson on that date?—I had, and long before.

92. How long?—Three or four months before.

93. What is the date of that?—Fifteenth of March 1880.

94. I refer to all these things you made reference to—first, supineness and apathy; and, secondly, that they desired rather to avoid than meet the Kellys. “That I have been guilty of most culpable procrastination; that the police officers have shown a want of generalship.” In what way do you desire to qualify that, or can you qualify it?—You know the police are constantly attacked in newspapers. Not that it ever affected me in the least, and, being a public servant, it never affects me.

95. You say, there, “I have been charged with being guilty of most culpable procrastination”?—That is Mr. Service’s statement.
96. “That the police officers have shown a want of generalship.” Do you believe “that the police officers have shown a want of generalship,” all or any, and, if so, particularise the ones, if you do say they showed a want of generalship. Do you believe they did or not?—None of those who were actively engaged in the pursuit of the Kellys did.

97. Do you say Superintendent Hare showed generalship, and it would be a false charge saying he showed a want of generalship?—It would be. We could not have had a better officer.

98. Do you say Mr. Sadleir showed want of generalship, you being Chief Commissioner of Police at that time?—He never was at the head of affairs.

99. You do not say he showed want of generalship?—No.

100. Do you think Mr. Nicolson showed want of generalship?—I do.

101. What were you in the service until you left it?—I was Chief Commissioner of Police.

102. What was Mr. Nicolson?—Inspecting Superintendent of Police with the honorary title of “Assistant Commissioner.”

103. Is that honorary title of “Assistant Commissioner” recognised either by the police law or the regulations?—There is no such title in the regulations.

104. What, by the regulations, are the duties of an inspecting superintendent, which Mr. Nicolson was?—His duties are, by my instruction as head of the department, to visit the districts, and to visit all stations, and to make a special report on them, and otherwise to be employed on such duties as the head of the department might direct him to perform.

105. I understand you to say that he was to act, under your instructions, certain duties. Are these his duties:—“It is the duty of the inspecting superintendent to proceed from time to time, in accordance with such instructions as he may receive from the Chief Commissioner, to the several districts, for the purpose of minutely inspecting the force, and reporting on the state in which he finds it, or for the purpose of investigating and reporting on any charge of misconduct against the police, or any other matter which the Chief Commissioner of Police may wish to have enquired into”?—Those are his duties.

106. Who is the next officer after Mr. Nicolson?—Superintendent Winch is the senior superintendent, who is in charge of the City police.

107. Who is the next officer?—Mr. Chomley.

108. The next?—I cannot remember all.

109. Is it not Mr. Hare?—No.

110. Is it Mr. Chambers?—I really cannot tell you. He is one of the five first.

111. The Commission wish to know how the districts are situated. Now in whose district is Melbourne and the suburbs?—Mr. Winch’s, the superintendent of the City police.

112. And outside the city of Melbourne whose district comes in?—Many of the suburbs are in the metropolitan police.

113. From North Melbourne, in that district called the North-Eastern, what superintendent is in charge of the portion between the Melbourne district north-easterly towards the North-Eastern district?—That is what is called the Bourke district. Mr. Hare is in charge.

114. Then Mr. Hare joins onto the Benalla district?—Yes, and the North-Eastern district.

115. Who is the officer in charge of the North-Eastern district?—Mr. Sadleir.

116. Was he there at the time of the murders?—Yes.

117. Is he there now?—Yes.

118. Who are his inspectors?—Sub-Inspector Baber at Benalla, Sub-Inspector Pewtress at Mansfield.

119. Taking the North-Eastern line, and commencing at Melbourne, what station does Mr. Hare’s district stop at?—Avenel.

120. What is the next station?—Euroa.

121. Is that the station the bank was robbed at. Do you mean us to understand that the banks along the line were notified up to the boundary of Mr. Hare’s district?—I was informed that some of the banks in the North-Eastern district were likely to be stuck up.

122. I understand you to say that the banks in the district in which Mr. Nicolson was were not so informed. Is that correct?—I believe they were not.

123. And then at Avenel Mr. Hare’s district terminates?—Yes.

124. And Mr. Sadleir’s commences?—Yes.

125. Mr. Nicolson took charge of Mr. Sadleir’s district, under your instructions, after the murders?—He had charge of the Kelly pursuit party.

126. In that district?—In that district.

127. Those are the two districts in which all these matters occurred?—Yes.

128. Did anything in connection with the Kellys that you have told the Board of in your evidence occur out of the North-Eastern district?—were Euroa, Mansfield, Greta, and Glenrowan in the North-Eastern district?—Yes.

129. Would Wodonga be in it?—Yes.

130. Did you mean to say in your evidence that Mr. Nicolson went to Albury or Wodonga?—Albury.
131. That is out of the colony?—Yes.
132. In the sub-districts where the inspectors are you mentioned Mr. Pewtress, where does his district go to?—From the Broken River north to Wood’s Point south.
133. Where is Mr. Baber’s district?—He has no sub-district, he is stationed at Benalla.
134. Was there an officer at Beechworth at the time?—Mr. Brook Smith.
135. And all those outrages have been committed in the North-Eastern district—the murder of Sherritt, the Glenrowan affair, the murders at Wombat, and the robbery at the Bank, have all occurred in the North-Eastern district?—Yes.
136. What was the strength of the district at the time of the murders, the number of the men?—I really cannot tell.
137. How many men was it increased by?—Well I think about a hundred or a little over; a hundred and twenty men at one time.
138. Do you know the distance from the Wombat where the murders were committed, known as Stringybark Creek, to the place where the murderers were brought to justice, burnt, and shot?—Glenrowan—I can put my finger on the map, but cannot tell the distance.
139. Is it under 30 miles?—I should think about 30 miles.
140. How far is it from Greta, the residence of the Kellys, to the bank at Euroa?—I can spot them on the map, but I have not noticed the distance exactly.
141. On the report you made certain recommendations. “I have therefore the honor to request that an enquiry may be instituted by the Government,” and before that you say “the conduct of the members of the force has been, according to some, characterised by an inconceivable disregard of human life, and according to others, by an absence of that courage and dash which every good constable should possess.” Now is it your opinion there is the least want of courage or dash in the constables or sergeants of police?—I do not think so.
142. Do you believe there was supineness or apathy in these men as a body or in individual cases of constables shirking their duty, or in bringing the murderers to justice?—I believe all the police employed in the North-Eastern district were most anxious to catch the outlaws and would have endangered their lives to catch them.
143. That is your evidence as the head of the department, and after being six months with them?—Yes, I do not say that in the force every man is a hero; there may be some perhaps who have not much courage, but as a body I cannot speak too highly of the men under me for the six months I was at Benalla.

The Witness

144. You were in constant daily communication with the sergeants, constables, and men at Benalla?—I was.
145. Did you ever see the slightest reluctance at any time or period of the day or night to go out at once to perform their duty?—No, on the contrary, a laudable anxiety.
146. According to that, you approve of the conduct of those police who allowed the men to escape after the shooting of Sherritt, was that courageous conduct?—My firm belief is that if they had left the house every one would have been shot dead.
147. You ask that “the enquiry may be full and impartial, and open to receive the evidence of all persons, whether members of the force or not, who may have information on the subject to communicate”—of course, that the country expect—but you say “that the proceedings should not be open to the press, for though the full details of what the police have been doing should be known to the Government, it would be obviously contrary to public policy that they should be published for general information.” I suppose you are aware that all the members on this Board are more or less identified with the public, Members of Parliament, or otherwise; that they receive no remuneration; that they have been severely criticised on this Board; and do you think it would be fair to them that the press should not be present?—My only objection to the press being present has been entirely laid aside by the remark made by the Chairman on the first meeting of the Board, which was to the effect that those portions of the evidence which may bring certain men into positions of annoyance and danger may not be reported by the press.
148. Your number two recommendation you consider unnecessary now, provided what the Chairman said is carried out?—Certainly; I have not the remotest objection to it; the only thing is, I hope the Commission will be good enough to exercise a certain amount of discretion to prevent the names of people being admitted into these proceedings to whom the consequences may be serious, or even fatal.
149. Then you wind up your report with this remark—“They report of the gentlemen making the enquiry should, I think, be all that should find its way into the hands of the public.” Now, provided that the names of the parties who would suffer in their persons or their property by giving information or evidence here are protected by the discretion of the Chairman, do you consider it at all desirable that the public should not have the fullest information upon it?—I think not. Might I be allowed to suggest that some names I mentioned to-day should not appear upon the records.

The Witness mentioned the names of several people named in his evidence which he wished to be left blank.
The Chairman requested the shorthand writer to comply with Captain Standish’s request.

150. Did you approve of the burning of Mrs. Jones’s hotel, while the outlaws were there?—I was not there.

151. From what you have since, do you approve of it?—There is one matter to be considered, whether the outlaws were burnt alive.

152. I mean, taking the evidence as we have it, from what we suppose, whether they were dead or alive, would that action meet with your approval?—If I had been in charge of the operations, I should not have had the house burnt down.

153. Who was in charge at that time?—Mr. Sadleir.

154. I suppose, after all, there is a certain amount of latitude allowed to men of the force who are in danger?—Yes.

155. What was the nature of those instructions communicated to the police officers in the North-Eastern District regarding their actions, should they receive any intelligence of the outlaws. Were there any special instructions?—Every member of the police force was, if he heard any information, to communicate at once with the officer in charge of the district; but if there were good grounds for believing they were in a certain place, and he could get a few men to go with him, he could go at once; but that in urgent cases——

156. They had liberty to take action at once?—Yes, if they had a sufficient body of men to warrant their going out, but if one man heard the outlaws were a few miles off, of course he could not go himself.

157. I ask the question, because it was stated they were limited by certain regulations, and complaints have been made about red-tapeism, that they had good information, but that they could not act upon it without first communicating with the Police Department, and great delay, in consequence, ensued?—If the officer at Mansfield had information, it was his duty to telegraph it at once to the head of the district, and if he had sufficient men, to proceed at once. If he has only one man he could not go out himself.

158. What number would you consider it prudent for any man to start with?—Four men.

159. Then any petty officer in charge of any three men would be justified, as soon as he had telegraphed the news to his superior officer, in starting at once in pursuit?—Yes.

160. Was there any instance of such a thing, where men receiving such information, did not proceed?—I cannot bear in mind any case of that kind.

161. No similar case occurring at Mansfield?—No; because you know there were no end of reports and rumors flying about, a great many false reports circulated, and if we had sent the police after every shadowy report of that kind, we should have worn the whole of them out to no purpose.

162. I mean from the officer in charge?—If the officer in charge, or the senior sub-officer in charge saw his way to catch the outlaws, it was his duty to do so.

163. Mr. Hare in his official report says, “I also told them that at each of these towns I would have a full party of men stationed, so that, if any information was received about the Kellys, they would be in a position to go in pursuit at once; and all I wished them to do was to communicate by telegraph with me previous to their starting off, so that I might know in which direction they had gone.” The question is this, if Mr. Hare gave that instruction in June when he resumed the command, is it within your knowledge that that was not the rule prior to his assuming command. It has been stated in the public press and elsewhere that there was a regulation about red-tapeism, that they had good information, but that they could not act upon it without first communicating with the Police Department, and great delay, in consequence, ensued?—If the officer at Mansfield had information, it was his duty to telegraph it at once to the head of the district, and if he had sufficient men, to proceed at once. If he has only one man he could not go out himself.

164. If there were regulations of that sort, they were not in accordance with your instructions as the responsible head of the department!—Certainly not.

165. At the time you took charge of the Benalla district you stated you organized search parties?—We had search parties.

166. How many did those search parties generally consist of?—No fixed number, it differed.

167. From six to——?—Nine or ten.

168. In the event of those search parties being sent out, if they obtained what they believed to be reliable information, were they allowed to proceed without waiting for any orders or instructions from you?—Certainly.

169. Those parties were not instructed to go a certain distance, and then if they had obtained no information to return at certain fixed periods?—No, they had instructions to act according to the best of their judgement generally.

170. Was there no limitation as to the time they were to return?—When they were to return?

171. Were they under the charge of officers?—Some were, and some under sub-officers.
172. There was always some recognised head to each party?—Yes.
173. In asking about the districts, I neglected one station, I recollect now—was there not an officer at Kilmore, the nearest station to Euroa, in the Bourke district?—Yes, Mr. Baber was stationed there.
174. The Chairman (to Mr. Nicolson).—Do you desire to ask any questions?—I do.
175. By Mr. Nicolson.—Of course you know the difference between what is evidence, and what are mere statements?—I know what is the difference between what is speaking the truth and telling a lie.
176. By the Commission.—The question asked is, do you know the difference between direct evidence and hearsay evidence?—Everything I have stated is not exactly from my own knowledge, but I know it is true.
177. You stated about Mr. Wyatt?—Mr. Wyatt told me it.
178. By Mr. Nicolson.—Is not a great portion of your evidence mere hearsay, and not what came within your own knowledge?—I know it is true.
179. That is not an answer to my question.—I have no other answer.
179a. That is not my question; you are aware of the difference between the two.——
180. You were asked about the cause of the lawlessness at Beechworth, and you spoke of the wholesale system of cattle-stealing there; are you not aware that there are other causes of lawlessness in the North-Eastern District?—That was the principal crime of the district.
181. Are you aware whether there was any other reason for the Kelly gang taking the field?—I believe these outrages would never have happened if it had not been for the shooting of Constable Fitzpatrick, and the consequent anger and indignation of the Kellys at their mother having received that severe sentence, and at their associates having received the sentence of six years.
182. Were you aware before this man Fitzpatrick was sent there that he was a man of bad character?—I was not; he was strongly recommended to me by Mr. C. A. Smyth.
183. Had you not occasion to remove him from Schnapper Point up to the North-Eastern District?—No; the incidents that came to my knowledge afterwards occurred at Schnapper Point, but I never had information of them till after he was sent to Benalla.
184. Are you not aware that for some years, a considerable number of years back, the Beechworth district has been unfortunate through various circumstances, in the officers stationed there, officers dying, and through frequent changes of officers, peculiarly so?—I do not know what you are talking about.
185. Are you not aware that for some years, a considerable number of years back, the Beechworth district has been unfortunate in the officers stationed there, officers dying, and through frequent changes of officers, peculiarly so?—There were one or two; Mr. Barkley, in charge, died. What has that to do with this case?
186. By the Commission.—Was it more so than any other district?—I am not aware of it. At one time it was necessary to remove one or two men from a certain part of the district, but there was not a general removal of all hands.
187. By Mr. Nicolson.—Were there not officers removed from time to time?—So they are in any district; state whom you refer to.
188. I refer to a series of officers?—Then speak out; none of your mysterious hints about officers.
189. Are you not aware—I have a delicacy in mentioning the officers, because many of them are dead, but I will furnish a list of them—you know Whom I refer to?—I do not know, that is utterly untrue. I do not know whom you refer to; mention the name, then I will admit it. Why not speak out like a man, instead of hemming and hawing and hesitating?
190. Who was the superintendent of the district previous to Mr. Sadleir?—Mr. Barkley, of the Beechworth district. You know all these things. Why cannot you mention them yourself?
191. I am examining you. I cannot?—You are talking nonsense.
192. Who was there before Mr. Barkley?—I cannot remember.
193. Was there not a Mr. Wilson?—He was there after. I do not believe it was immediately before Mr. Barkley.
194. Was there not a Mr. Purcell there?—He was, but not in charge of the district.
195. By the Commission.—Was he superintendent?—No.
196. By Mr. Nicolson.—Was there not one superintendent there for twelve months—I mean Mr. Chomley?—He was there.
197. Do you remember my making an inspection of that district in 1878?—I remember you made an inspection of the district some time before this happened, but I must say I did not attach much importance to any of your reports. They were all merely twaddle.
198. Do you remember my reporting Greta station to you?—Yes.
199. What did I recommend?—I cannot remember. I have not seen the papers.
200. Do you remember my reporting the men and recommending their removal?—No.
201. Did I recommend Thorn’s removal?—Yes.
202. Do you remember the establishment of the Glenmore station?—Yes.
203. Do you remember the proposal to abolish Glenmore?—It was of very little use that station.
204. I am not asking that. Do you not recollect it being recommended to break it up?—Yes.
205. Do you remember my protesting against it?—No.
206. Do you remember Mr. Montfort protesting against it?—No.
207. The station was broken up?—The station was broken up.
208. Was I communicated with or consulted with about the breaking of it up?—I cannot remember.
209. Are you aware that at the time I went up to inspect that district the Glenmore station was abolished?—I cannot tell.
210. Do you remember my reporting to you the occasion of that visit that there was a system of horse and cattle stealing carried on uninterruptedly in that district by men from the Greta district?—I was perfectly well aware of that before your report.
211. Why was no step taken to put a stop to it?—I decline to answer that.
212. Did I not recommend that the arrangement should be made through the Inspector-General and with the police of New South Wales for the police of one district to communicate with the other, establishing a system of communication?—I do not remember your ever doing it.
212a. It was done——
By the Chairman.—In writing?
Mr. Nicolson.—In writing.
213. By Mr. Nicolson.—Do you remember the arrest and conviction of the Baumgartens?—Yes.
214. Were you made aware who it was that brought the horses to Baumgarten on which they were committed—that they were reported to the police?—I was made aware of that.
215. Who was it?—I decline to answer.
216. Why?—Because I won’t.
217. By the Commission.—You decline answering that question. Of course the Commission thoroughly understand the grounds on which that would be reasonably objected to in your mind. Do you think it would be injurious to the safety of that person of his family by your giving that information?—I decline to answer the question unless ordered by the Commission. Allow me to observe that I have been asked a lot of questions which have nothing to do with the object of the Commission. I do not know whether it is intended on the part of Mr. Nicolson to annoy me or worry me.

The Chairman instructed Mr. Nicolson to confine himself to cross-examining the witness on evidence having relation to himself, Mr. Nicolson.

218. By Mr. Nicolson.—Did you consult me in the abolition of the Glenmore station?—I would be guided by the opinion of the officers of the district rather than the inspecting superintendent.
219. You say that, about a fortnight before the Euroa bank was stuck up, you received information from me that the bank was to be stuck up?—I did.
220. In what form did you receive such information from me about the bank being about to be stuck up?—I cannot recollect; it may have been a letter, or it may have been a telegram.
221. When I was sent up to the North-Eastern District the officer there was Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.
222. You are aware that Mr. Sadleir was convalescent, after severe rheumatic fever?—He was all right when I was there.
223. And that he was unable to go out of camp—to go out with search parties?—I was not aware of that.
224. Are you not aware that I had no officer at my disposal there excepting Mr. Sadleir?—There was only you and Mr. Sadleir there, the officer in charge of Mansfield.
225. If Mr. Sadleir was recovering from fever, and was only convalescent, was he fit to go out on duty?—Two months after he was in capital health.
226. That was two months after. Are you not aware that I had to go out on search parties myself?—I know I went out a great deal.
227. Had I any leaders to take charge of parties of men in that district to go out on search when I went up on the 28th October 1878?—You had several sub-officers in the district—Sergeant Steele, and that kind of men.
228. By the Commission.—Was not there Mr. Brook Smith at Beechworth; was there not Mr. Pewtress at Mansfield?—Yes.
229. And the superintendent of the district, Mr. Sadleir, at Beechworth?—Yes.
230. By Mr. Nicolson.—I spoke of the men to go out as leaders. What is the quality of a leader to go out; is he not only a man in a proper state of health, fit to take charge of men, but a person particularly with a knowledge of the district?—Yes.
230a. Who, when I went up there, were fit in that way?—There were lots of men who knew the country.
231. Were they senior-constables or non-commissioned officers who also knew the country?—I do not know what you are driving at.
232. Who were fit when I went up there?—Sergeant Steele.
233. Who else?—There were other good men.
234. There was Senior-Constable James?—Yes, he was a good man.
235. By the Commission.—Was Strachan fit?—He was a blathering fellow.
236. Was Senior-Constable Kelly?—He was a good man in some ways.
237. Was Whelan, of Benalla?—He was foot, not mounted. He was a most excellent sub-officer.
238. Was there a man in Beechworth fit to take charge?—Mr. Brook Smith was in charge.
239. By Mr. Nicolson.—Was there not an entire absence of men fit to be leaders?—We sent up a lot of men immediately after the outrage. There were a number of very excellent men sent up immediately after the murder of Scanlan.
240. You say I was out a great deal on search parties?—Yes.
241. Did not that necessitate Mr. Sadleir staying at home?—I suppose so.

242. Was not the result of that that I was compelled to go out instead of remaining at home at headquarters, managing the business. Did it not cause me to leave the office, so that I went out and left another officer to carry on the business and correspondence?—The correspondence of the office was carried on by the officer in charge.

243. With whom had you correspondence?—I had correspondence with you.
244. Was it not mostly with Mr. Sadleir?—I do not think so.
245. If the circumstances of the case compelled me to go out into the bush, and go into the Kelly country, and so on, whose duty was it then to carry on the correspondence?—The officer in charge.
246. Would you expect that I would do both at once at the same time?—Of course if you were in the bush you cannot be in the office.
247. You made the remark here, you never omitted to take steps to do everything. When you were up there Mr. Hare was very indefatigable, and so on, and popular with the men, whom he treated like friends, not like dogs. What officer did you refer to that treated them like dogs?—I merely stated that Mr. Hare treated the men like friends, not like dogs.
248. By the Commission.—The clear inference left on my mind was that, if Superintendent Hare had not treated the men like dogs, some other officer had?—I did not say so.
249. The clear inference from the statement and your manner was that someone else did—
250. By Mr. Nicolson—When you came up to Euroa, on hearing of the robbery there, on the 11th, you stated you found me ill, and sent me to town?—Yes.
251. Are you sure it was not the day after?—I could not say whether it was that day or the day after.
252. You stated that you despatched a party away out to the Strathbogie ranges on that occasion?—I never made such a statement.
253. You stated you despatched a party from Euroa in pursuit in the ranges when questioned just now in your evidence?—I never made such a statement.
254. Did I come down to town, or was I sent down?—You were relieved by me.
255. To get medical attendance?—As I was going to stay up permanently at the time.
256. Did you, at any of your visits previous to the Euroa sticking up, make remarks about my remissness?—I never made any statement about you. The first two months you were there, you were very active rushing about the country, morning and night—in fact, rushing about too much I thought.
257. You say you came down to town, and you found things in a mess in your office?—Yes, very muddly.
258. Did you ever express anything of that kind to me?—I did not see the use of it.
259. Did you do it?—No.
260. Can you give any instance of what you mean by “things being muddled” in the office?—All the matters which are generally disposed of in five minutes you used to keep over five days.
261. Did you find that?—Yes.
262. Did you find any files in your office, left behind there, that were not kept behind for a purpose?—I cannot recollect that.
263. Was it on all occasions when you came to town—you came several times?—Three times I came.
264. On those occasions did you find anything wrong in the office?—I did not do any business in the office.
265. Did you not find everything in order in the office?—I never did any business in the office.
266. When you returned?—There were a great many things held over.
267. Were they not files held over for you as the head of the department, as I, as your locum tenens, did not feel justified in dealing with them myself?—I always heard that you were most procrastinating, and delayed matters most frightfully when you had charge of the office—that is your nature, to be a procrastinator.
268. You say, when I succeeded you in July, I employed spies and agents?—Yes, you told me yourself.

23rd March 1881.
269. You said I must have known they were sympathizers with the Kellys. What class of people do you suppose you could obtain the information from people who knew anything about the Kellys excepting that class?—Exactly; but you must not allow yourself to be made a fool of.

270. How was I?—I heard that some of the men whom you employed used to take your money and laugh at you behind your back and tell the Kellys.

271. You were told that?—Yes, by three or four people.

272. Is it fair to make a statement of that kind without evidence. Do you remember the first visit you made to Benalla after I took charge?—Yes.

273. Do you remember an agent, whom I obtained, coming and meeting me with you privately?—Yes.

274. Do you recollect that man receiving a considerable sum of money, from £25 to £30?—From whom?

275. Do you recollect his receiving money?—No, not from me.

276. Do you recollect his receiving some, said to be for the purchase of a horse—do you remember giving that man an order to any telegraph master, on a slip of paper, in writing, to all telegraph masters—"Permit the bearer to send any messages to me, F.C.S.?"—Yes.

277. Do you remember giving a sum of money on that occasion?—No.

278. Did you give the money or I?—I had no money with me.

279. Did the man not receive a sum of money from you that night?—Not to my knowledge. I do not remember giving the money.

280. You did?—It is possible I may have; I do not remember it. I am not at all guided by your statements.

281. Do you recollect that that document you gave in that order to the telegraph office was, instead of writing to the telegraph masters, to allow him to send any information to Mr. Nicolson, that you told him to send it to you in Melbourne?—Do not get excited; I have some recollection of giving an order to send telegrams.

282. To send the information to you in Melbourne?—I do not recollect that.

283. You speak from hearsay?—I speak of many things I heard from your own mouth.

284. You received a report on the subject where information was given by ———, that he had seen a man on horseback, and so on?—You telegraphed me to come up, and telegraphed me not to come up.

285. Did I not send a report to you?—I do not remember. The report will be in your office.

286. By the Commission.—As a matter of fact, evidence was given by the party named, and the result of that was that it was decided by the police to take action on that evidence, and when the horses were saddled when Mr. Sadleir came back, and without his being consulted, he found the pursuit was abandoned?—Yes.

287. Was there a subsequent explanation, of why that took place, to you?—I do not remember. I remember his telegraphing me not to come up. Mr. Nicolson can produce the papers.

288. You do not know that there was?—I do not remember.

289. By Mr. Nicolson.—I can put a different complexion on that when I make my statement. As to insubordination at the railway station, do you recollect sending me a note requesting me to come down to town, that you wished a conversation with me about various matters?—Yes.

290. To come down on Thursday?—Yes.

291. I had to come down on Friday night, so as to come to your office on Saturday morning?—Yes.

292. When I came to your office on Saturday, what did you say?—Which interview?

293. The first interview, did you first say, "Mr. Nicolson, I have to say the Government have decided to relieve you, and to send some one in your stead on Monday morning"?

294. Where was the conversation you wrote me we were to have together?—In my office.

295. Was that the first thing you addressed me?—If my memory serves me, I think I wrote you.

296. You wrote me, but not telling me I was to be superseded?—[The witness looked for the letter.] I thought I had written to him to tell him he was superseded, but it seems I wrote him to come down. This is the letter—26th April 1880. Confidential. My dear Nicolson, I should be glad to see you down here on Thursday to have a chat with you. Please come down by the evening train, and come to my office the following day as early as convenient. I had a long interview with ——— this morning. He is of opinion that the outlaws are at present between the 11-mile and the scene of the murders on the Wombat ranges. I did not gain much intelligence. He spoke very frankly to me on various matters."

297. Had we any conversation about that on that occasion?—Not on that occasion you came down. Our whole conversation was about your removal.

298. By the Commission.—It was in consequence of that letter Mr. Nicolson came to town. Was the occasion you told him they had decided to remove him?—I think it was.

Cross-examined by Mr. O'Connor.

299. Do not you remember saying to Mr. Sadleir that although he was superintendent he was to be under me for that party?—Certainly not.

300. Do you remember some time about May 1879 receiving a letter informing you that four persons answering the description of the Kellys were in a hut near Benalla?—I remember receiving certain information about the outlaws from a certain source.

301. I will bring it to your recollection—you were dining at Mr. O'Leary's?—I remember receiving that letter.

302. By the Commission (to Mr. O'Connor).—Is that what you refer to in your printed letter?—There were two occurrences—[examining the paper]?—Yes, that is.

303. By Mr. O'Connor (to the witness).—When you retired from Mr. O'Leary's you then went to the hotel, did you not?—Yes.

304. To interview Mr. Hare?—Yes.

305. When I joined you some two hours afterwards, and asked you what the contents of the letter were, did you tell me?—No.

306. To whom did you communicate the contents of that letter?—It is no business of yours.

307. The Commission are asking you—it is for their information?—Mr. Chairman, do you wish me to answer that.

308. What were the contents of that letter—I want to show that that letter should have been communicated to me?—(The witness made an impatient gesture).

309. You may sniff, but that will not alter it at all?—I have not the slightest objection to answer the question to the Chairman of the Commission. I communicated to Mr. Hare.

310. You consider the information contained in that letter was very important?—The information was discussed by Mr. Hare and myself, and we determined to adopt a certain course.

311. That is not my question—did you consider it important?—I did.

312. That is what you ought to have answered first?—Will you conduct yourself like a gentleman? The Chairman interposed, and requested both Captain Standish and Mr. O'Connor to restrain their feelings.

313. By Mr. O'Connor.—Why did you not inform me, or order myself and the boys to pick up the tracks?—Because if we had had you and your numerous baggage, horses, and trackers, we should have been known some hours before we got there.

314. How many men accompanied Mr. Hare in that party?—Seven or eight.

315. By the Commission.—You took immediate action in the matter?—Yes.

316. By Mr. O'Connor.—Why were we sent for and our services not made use of?—They were sent for against my recommendation.

317. Do you ever remember saying to me that you would endeavor to get the Kellys without my valuable assistance?—I never said any such thing.

318. From the outset you were jealous of my trackers finding the outlaws?—That is absolutely untrue.

319. What was the result of Mr. Hare's visit to this hut?—You had better ask Mr. Hare.

320. Is your memory so bad?—He went with a party of men and ransacked the hut.

321. Did Mr. Hare meet a man coming from the hut?

322. The Chairman (to Mr. O'Connor).—You had better for the present confine your questions to any personal matters you wish dealt with at this sitting. The witness stated he had heard things about you he would not like to mention.

323. By Mr. O'Connor (to the witness).—Did you allude to my private character?—No; I said things came to my knowledge that shook my faith in you.

324. By the Commission (to the witness).—I think, in fair play to Mr. O'Connor, you ought now to state what you refer to?—You (Mr. O'Connor) told several people that you were engaged to be married to a certain lady, and I remember asking what day, and you said on the anniversary of your birthday, the 10th of February, and I found that you were married all the time.

Mr. O'Connor.—I give that the lie direct. I say that is a falsehood, and I am ready to prove it. On one occasion when I dined with Captain Standish, he said, “I noticed you were making love to a certain young lady;” and I said, “That is nonsense, it is only fun;” and I thought nothing more about it until I received a letter congratulating me. I immediately wrote back and said there was not a word of truth in it.

The Witness.—I was driven to say this, and Mr. O'Connor was married a few days after he came to Benalla.

Mr. O'Connor.—But everything was quite correct.

Captain Standish.—May I ask for all that to be withdrawn. I request, as a particular favor, you allow the whole of that to be expunged from the evidence.

Mr. O'Connor.—I am sorry for my loss of temper, and will be glad if this matter be not reported.

The Chairman observed that as the earlier statements of Captain Standish’s had already been printed in the Herald newspaper he did not see how the latter remarks could be withdrawn.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till Eleven o’clock to-morrow.

Charles Hope Nicolson sworn and examined.

C. H. Nicolson, continued, 24th March 1881.

325. You are desirous of just making a statement now?—Yes.

326. To be cross-examined upon hereafter?—I am just ready for both statement and cross-examination.

327. What is the position you occupy?—Acting Chief Commissioner of Police.

328. Since when?—About the month of July 1880.

329. What was your position in the police prior to that?—Assistant Commissioner of Police, and Inspecting Superintendent; when I was appointed the former it was stated that that was the more appropriate appellation for the duties I was performing—I mean the Assistant Commissioner of Police, to which my grade was changed, as it better expressed my duties.

330. How long?—I was appointed Assistant Commissioner a very few months before that.

331. About that time?—A few months prior.

332. I think it will be better for you to take the course that Captain Standish took yesterday, and just explain your proceedings in connection with the Kelly outlaws?—Yes. On the 28th of October 1878, Monday, I received instructions from Captain Standish to proceed at once to Benalla as some news had arrived of the murder of a constable, Constable Scanlan, and some other serious catastrophe had taken place. I arrived at Benalla that evening. I found that evening the town of Benalla, and even people along the railway line, in a state of great excitement. When I reached the station Mr. Sadleir, the superintendent of the district, was away on duty in the north of the district towards Shepparton, I believe. Next morning Mr. Sadleir, in the course of the forenoon, arrived on horseback.

333. Will you fix dates?—That was the 29th. Mr. Sadleir had very little news of the matter at that time. He rested for an hour and proceeded on horseback to Mansfield, the scene of the outrage. On the 29th some police had been sent up, but the police were a very small number there.

334. About how many?—Throughout the district there were not about 50 or 60 mounted men, exclusive of 40 or 50 foot constables. For the whole district?—Yes, at that time, but more men had been sent up, and along with me some foot police were sent up and a few mounted men.
Kennedy’s body had not been found, and Mr. Sadleir returned to Benalla after despatching the search party from Mansfield which found his body.

337. How long was that after he went up?—About the 30th. There were also two other parties at first when I arrived, which were unaccounted for, about which there was considerable anxiety—those two parties of police that went out at the same time that the other was out.

338. They went out at the same time as Kennedy went out?—Yes, and there was considerable anxiety about them. When Mr. Sadleir went up to Mansfield there was another officer there, Mr. Pewtress. It is the custom, I may say, and the duty of an officer in charge of the district, to proceed to the spot as soon as possible, when any very serious crime occurs.

339. What was Mr. Pewtress?—A sub-inspector. Those two parties that I allude to, I cannot give the days, but they turned up in a day or two, one of them coming into Benalla. I formed a search party, and sent out parties on the 29th—parties of men that I could muster together to look those men up—to search for them.

340. In charge of whom?—One party in charge of Senior-Constable James, and the other party I cannot say in whose command—I do not recollect.

341. How many in each party?—Not above four or five in each party at that time.

342. Those started from where?—From Benalla. On the 30th instant by the last train I went to Wangaratta to see the state of things there. I then went on alone down to Myrtleford, through that country. On the 29th—I must go back again to that date—I had by correspondence, not being on the spot, organized, with Sub-Inspector Smith and Sergeant Steele, and despatched two search parties from Wangaratta. All those parties came in in a few days.

343. How long after—within a week?—Yes, within a week, they having scoured the Kelly country away behind on the south of the North-eastern and Beechworth road one way and another. Before coming in they had got news of those other two missing parties having turned up, and further particulars of the murders—the two parties that went from Wangaratta and the two parties from Benalla. At this time it was not known who the two murderers were beyond the two Kellys. It was not known who the third and fourth murderers were. Do you wish me to go on from day to day?

344. Just as shortly as you can put it?—I quite understand. The next incident of any importance that occurred was the rumor, about the 1st November, of a man having been stuck up by the gang on the Murray flats near the Baumgarten’s place. On hearing that, I and Mr. Sadleir consulted together, and I had a great deal of experience in police matters of this sort, particularly through having had charge of the detective force for fourteen years; we were hearing wild rumors everywhere, but there was something in this that struck me as correct. We thought there was something in it. I despatched a party that same night to Wodonga, with orders to make their way to that spot, find out this man, and to enquire into it.

345. Who had charge of that party?—Detective Kennedy, now Sub-Inspector Kennedy. The following day I was very anxious, Mr. Sadleir and I did not hear from them. Hearing nothing from this party and no further news from Wodonga, I took the train to Wodonga myself and met the party. They reported to me they had seen the man, found him out. He was a farmer down there, and they were very doubtful about the truth of his statement. He had been drinking, and his statements were wild and doubtful.

346. What was the name of the man?—Margery.

347. Are you quite sure it was at Baumgarten’s that the sticking-up was?—It was by the river side, about a mile or two from the Baumgartens’. I was not satisfied, and I went myself with the party back the next day, went back to the spot to see the man Margery who said he was stuck up. I found the man was not then raving or anything of that kind. He evidently had been drinking, but it appeared to me to drown his fright, and when I saw him he was clean and cool and able to give a coherent account, and from the account he gave to me I had no doubt he had seen the outlaws. We ran down the river calling at huts and examining many places till I came to Baumgarten’s. I went to Mrs. Baumgarten’s house, the wife of a man convicted of stealing for fourteen years; we were satisfied that he had seen the outlaws. It was not known who the two murderers were beyond the two Kellys. It was not known who the third and fourth murderers were. Do you wish me to go on from day to day?

348. Did you find their camp?—Yes, found their camp.

349. What date was that?—I will tell you exactly—[examining a pocket-book]—2nd November, Saturday.

350. You say it was on the 2nd November you saw the man?—Yes, and it was on the same day I saw this. I had with me one good blackfellow—a Darling black-tracker—who traced them up within a quarter of a mile of Barnawartha. By that time—the time we reached there—it was dark, and the tracker could proceed no further, but the tracks were leading away to the right.

351. Towards where?—Towards Indigo Creek. I found that they had passed through Wangaratta and Everton on the Sunday, the third of November.

352. Had you good proof then that you were on the track of the Kellys?—Yes, up to reaching the common.

353. You are satisfied they were the Kellys?—Decidedly.

354. That was their camp you came across?—Decidedly, and their horses—from the description of both Margery and Mrs. William Baumgarten they were decidedly the horses and the dress of the men, and the arms that had been taken from the police. There was no doubt about that whatever. They passed between Wangaratta and Everton, upon the 3rd, on their return. Between the interval before the return, and before I heard of this, I spent some time down there fruitlessly searching, to the punts and other places to see if and
24th March 1881.

355. How far distant is that?—I should say 60 or 70 miles. They had just ridden straight back without a halt. They had rested in the lagoon, and rested their horses there, and ridden straight back without a halt.

356. Then did you ascertain they had passed through Everton?—Yes, they called at certain places, and were recognized. I need not repeat to you the next event.

357. Anything of no importance you can pass over?—I had also the country about there, Rats Castle, and all the ranges, thoroughly searched by the party under Sergeant Harker of Wodonga.

358. Did you lose all trace of them?—Yes; after I heard they had passed through Everton on the night of the 3rd.

359. From that point did you lose all trace of them after they passed through Wangaratta?—Yes.

360. For how long?—The next trace of them was sometime afterwards. Captain Standish came up 6th November.

361. The black-trackers were not then engaged?—No; we had a few black-trackers picked up here and there, and that man I had then with me was a really skilled black. At that time we could get little or no assistance from the inhabitants, and the people were all through the country in such a state of terror. Civility was shown in every town in the district, but no information given. The people seemed to be more afraid of the gang than confident in the police. The next time that I heard of them was on the occasion, about the 7th of November, when Captain Standish happened accidentally to be up in Benalla with me. He came up to talk over matters with me, and we went up to Beechworth that night as related by him. I may state that on my arrival there—we arrived at dark—and when daylight broke I found a very large number of police collected together, upwards of fifty mounted men, that had joined us, and we had a great cavalcade.

362. Was that the time the force was increased?—In the interval reinforcements had been sent. Did I mention that on the morning when we were proceeding to that place the police poured in a great cavalcade?

363. Search parties returning?—No; they had been gathered there specially.

364. By your orders?—No.

365. Was it gathering by accident?—No; orders that had been issued. I took up a few police and a black-tracker myself, but I found this large number of police about Beechworth and the place we were going to. They were sent into the district. I merely mean to show that this collection of men was improper, and calculated to defeat the object we had in view.

366. Who was responsible for that?—I cannot say by whom they were collected. It was not by me. It interfered with my arrangements. As we went along we had to cross some very rough country, great ranges of granite, and the rumbling noise that the party made was simply just like thunder, and the people heard us a mile off.

367. Under whose orders were those men at this particular time—under you or Inspector Sadleir?—No. I know nothing about the particulars of this occasion. Mr. Sadleir met Captain Standish and myself. They left together talking, and Mr. Sadleir telling him all as we went along. We gathered all the police, till there were upwards of fifty. I could not tell what Mr. Sadleir was talking about. All those arrangements were made before I arrived.

368. You were not responsible, and disapproved of it?—Yes; and I was perfectly ignorant of it.

369. Under whose orders were they?—Of course, when Captain Standish came, he was in command, he being the Chief Commissioner of Police, otherwise I would have been, otherwise Mr. Sadleir.

370. Were those men gathered at this particular point by the order of Captain Standish or any officer you know of?—I do not think they were gathered by Captain Standish.

371. Was it merely by accident—what was the occasion of meeting?—That some important information had reached the police at Beechworth about the Kellys, and something likely to come of it.

372. This was not at the time of the sympathisers being arrested?—No, it was on the 7th of November.

373. Nothing came of that gathering of the police?—Well, I will go on to mention about that. Very shortly we came in sight (after we got on some low ground) of what I was told was the Sherritt’s hut.

374. "On 6th November 1878 I proceeded to Benalla to confer with Mr. Nicolson, arriving there about eight p.m. While we were talking we received an urgent despatch from Mr. Sadleir, then at Beechworth, that the Kellys had been at Sebastopol." That was given by Captain Standish. Is that what you refer to?—Yes; I have been reflected upon and attacked about this matter, and I wish to speak about it.

375. How near were you to Sebastopol when this meeting of police took place?—We were all gathered within three miles of Beechworth.

376. You do not know by whose orders?—No, I cannot say. I must say about Captain Standish that he had nothing to do with those orders. If anyone had to do with those orders, it would be Superintendent
Sadleir. Captain Standish came up and was a stranger in the matter, until he was informed by Mr. Sadleir.

377. You were the responsible officer?—And I was perfectly ignorant of the matter.

378. You were in charge of the district?—Yes, but Captain Standish came up into the district.

379. You had that district under your special command for the Kelly business?—Yes.

380. I think a misapprehension has arisen: the district was locally under the charge of Mr. Sadleir, and you were superior officer when you arrived to take charge of this particular business, and when Captain Standish came, he took charge of those fifty men?—He did not come to take control on that particular occasion.

381. Did they come without orders?—I cannot say.

382. Under whose directions did those fifty men appear?—When they made their appearance at daylight I saw them, and they fell in under Captain Standish, but I did not know who summoned them.

383. Cannot you tell, from information since, as to under whose directions those men came on; surely some officer ordered them?—Well, Mr. Sadleir did, I believe, give orders in some instances; but I do not believe he did in all cases.

384. Who did in other cases?—I cannot say; the men sometimes came voluntarily.

385. Was Captain Standish at the head of those men?—No.

386. Were the body of men under anybody as they came in?—They came trooping in.
junior officer; but I would never think, on an occasion of that kind, of disputing. I was thinking only of what ought to be done. I never gave any thought about etiquette or rank. I did what I thought was best under the circumstances when he came and spoke to me.

400. When he came up and consulted you in that manner, would it not have been your duty to have taken charge of the party and directed the men, or failing that, to have given him charge?—I did.

401. You gave him instructions to take command—I understood you to state you considered the noise to be detrimental to the object you had in view, you consequently rushed with a few men to search the hut?—I turned to Mr. Sadleir, and I said, "You look to the back of the hut with some men, and put some men in that field, and see to the outlaws not escaping there."

402. You looked upon Mr. Sadleir as the commander at that time?—Well, I gave him his orders then when he came to say, "Mr. Nicolson, you look to this and that." I said to him, "You look after the back and I will look after the front."

403. There was no misunderstanding at this time; you mutually agreed as to the course to be taken. There was no dissension between the officers?—None whatever. I went into the hut. We had to turn a short turn to the left to make for the hut. I rode down the entrance passage, about that breadth—[spreading his arms]—which I did full speed, threw my legs off my horse, and burst in the door, one of the men—Constable Bracken—attempted to pass in front of me. It has been my custom—a well-known custom in the police force—that no one should go before me on any occasion of this kind. I pushed this man aside and his gun went off. I went suddenly from room to room. I have been accustomed to that sort of duty. I rushed into the next bedroom, whipped off the clothes, and ran to the next room and did the same, and so all through, and I found the whole thing was nothing.

404. At what distance could a man have heard that noise of the police you spoke of?—One man told me afterwards he heard us a mile away.

405. Giving plenty of opportunities of escaping?—We went on after that to another hut, and galloped up to that in the same way, and the man said he had heard us a mile off. We went on till at last we came to Mrs. Byrne’s hut, and found it empty too. Subsequently, at some distance off, I observed Captain Standish surrounded by a number of men, in conversation with a slip of a lad, a young native of the same class of youth as I supposed the Kellys to be, because I knew Ned Kelly very well; I had been previously acquainted with him. I came up to them, and I found Captain Standish was making proposals to this man to help him and to betray the Kellys. This was in the presence and in the hearing of a lot of mounted constables.

405a. Was there more than one of those men of the character of the Kellys?—Only one. I then went and remonstrated with Captain Standish for making such proposals to a man like that in the hearing of others, of any person whatever.

POLICE.

C. H. Nicolson, continued.

24th March 1881.

406. Can you give the names of any present then?—I think Detective Ward was one who was present. It would be quite easy to ascertain.

407. Did this whole body of men remain together after you had searched the hut?—After Mrs. Byrne’s; after searching three huts the men dispersed; but I remonstrated with Captain Standish, and no person with any experience in police duty would have done such a thing. It was contrary to all practice to make proposals to a man like that, especially in the state of terror the country was in, to make proposals of that kind to anyone.

408. Did you believe from what you saw that the Kellys had been in that immediate neighborhood?—From what I have heard since I believe they had. I will come back to that. The information that was acted on, on that occasion, was given by a laboring man, who had been stopping back amongst those ranges in the neighborhood of Mrs. Byrne’s house. Several days after he came into Beechworth, and got drunk, and began what is termed “blowing” about this. The matter came to the knowledge of the police on a day that Mr. Sadleir happened to be at Beechworth, and the action I have described was taken on that.

409. Was that some days after this raid you have told us of—after that those men came back?—Some days previous—this was old information.

410. It was his information that led up to the proceedings you have described?—Yes; but it was too old.

411. Did you remonstrate with Captain Standish after searching Sherritt’s hut about keeping that body of men together before you went to the other?—No. I did not. I did not know what was going to be done.

412. This was all done without your knowledge?—Yes. The next thing that occurred was about the 12th of November. I had come down from Beechworth to Wangaratta, and a messenger came in at night to tell me that a party of police under Sub-Inspector Brook Smith had traced the outlaws from Lake Rowan and Ryan’s from along the Wallaby ranges, and had tracked them with blackfellows, and had recovered one of the police horses, which had been taken from the murdered police by the outlaws. I sent back word to them (they were undecided whether to come into Wangaratta or to remain where they were) to remain where they were, and by all means to keep the fact of their finding the horse secret. An hour or two afterwards I heard a party of horsemen riding into Wangaratta in the dark, about eight o'clock in the evening, and leading a horse.

413. Were those the police?—Yes.

414. And leading this horse you have referred to?—Yes, I ascertained that was the horse. I remonstrated with Mr. Smith, and he stated that he found himself within five or six miles of Wangaratta, that the men were hungry and fatigued, and that he thought it as well to come in and sleep there and rest and feed the horses as to remain out, and that he would be at the spot where he stopped by daybreak in the morning.

415. Had he a black-tracker there?—Yes, two—one an old man, a good tracker, from Coranderrk, one of the old blacks, and therefore possessed of more skill than the present lot, and a young man who the old fellow called his pupil, named Jemmy, a very inferior useless fellow. Next morning I found Mr. Smith had not started. I got him up, went and roused him up, and sent him after his men. I examined the horse either the night before or the next morning with Sergeant Steele of Wangaratta, and we came to the conclusion that the horse must have been dropped about a fortnight from the appearance of the animal, his having been fed on grass, and from the swelling of his fetlocks that he had not been ridden for a week or more. Inspector Smith returned to his party, and his report to me was not satisfactory. Mr. Sadleir and I happened to come up to Wangaratta, and I went out with this party back again to the Wallaby ranges to see to it. We took one part of the country—Mr. Sadleir and I; and Inspector Smith and to the other Sergeant Steele, in whose experience and ability I had reason to have great confidence. We came back without any result. Then I sent Inspector Smith back with instructions to attend to the duties of his district and not interfere with the Kelly business any more.

416. Was that a sort of rebuke?—Well, I did not feel confidence in him; and that was the only occasion that came under my notice in which the men showed dissatisfaction with their officers.

417. What sergeant was with him?—Senior-Constable Johnson.

418. Is that the same man that set fire to the hotel at Glenrowan?—That is the same man.

419. What was the nature of the dissatisfaction?—The men were dissatisfied that they had not stayed there all night and followed up those traces in the morning; they were very sanguine about the gang. They had found what appeared to be a ramrod made from the branch of a tree, and whittled; they picked this up—a very good substitute for a ramrod; they had very great confidence that they could follow it up and find something.

420. Did the men under this officer's charge, by word or any expression they made use of; lead you to believe that they had not faith in him—that he displayed indiscretion or cowardice?—Not cowardice; a want of discretion, and a want of bush ability for work of that kind. No man said such a thing to me, but it was conveyed to me.

421. What opinion did you form of the case, from what you heard expressed by the men—did you form any opinion yourself on that, as to whether it was a want of judgment, indiscretion, or from any other cause?—Want of judgment, and general unsuitability for that sort of duty.

422. Why did you consider him unsuitable—what was the cause?—Well, I consider he had made a mistake in coming in that night. His convictions were not firm and decided; he had not decision of character enough.

423. You said you sent a message to a body of men to instruct them to remain there?—Yes.

424. Had those men then received your message?—I believe so.

425. Are you quite positive on that point?—Yes, I am quite positive on that point.

426. In coming in, he was guilty of insubordination and disobedience to a superior officer's orders?—Yes, and I told him that; and he gave his explanation.

427. Was that in writing?—No, orally.

428. From your own knowledge of what happened, do you think he was near the Kellys at the time?—I have very much reason to doubt it, because my inspection of the horse showed it had been left a week.
day more than the constables, and they get charge of the stations. That was just a month before the Wombat murders. I have just shortly to say that during that time, and subsequently down to the Euroa robbery, I was engaged forming search parties, dividing the country off into sections, and going out myself with them in turn—not all, but some of them.

437. Were you out at the time that information was given that the bank was likely to be stuck up?—I am not aware of hearing anything of the kind. I have not come to that yet. During the time I was compelled to go out, my colleague or subordinate officer in charge of the district, Mr. Sadleir, had just recovered from rheumatic fever, and was a convalescent at the time, and he was unable to go out at that time. He had resumed his ordinary duties, but he was not fit for extraordinary duties—travelling from morning to night through that rough country, and camping out.

438. The last date was the 7th November—what date do you fix for forming those search parties?—I was frequently—several times—out with search parties before then, but not for any length of time. On the 20th November 1879.

439. That was the time that Mr. Sadleir was not sufficiently strong, in consequence of his recent illness to be able to do bush duty?—That is it exactly. I had to go out with several parties, and I was out first with one, and then with another; and when I was not out with parties actually, I was continually travelling from one place to another; and when out with these search parties at that time we could not get any guides or assistance from the inhabitants, with the exception of one man, who is now a mounted constable, Dickson at Wangaratta, who joined us as a guide. He was taken into the force since, and there was a man picked up at Mansfield, named Nicholson, a native of that place or Gippsland, I believe, a resident there at any rate. After travelling through these ranges and that country, when we would come to a halting-place; we were in the habit of camping first and having tea, and placing sentries, and having supper, and then select a place to sleep in, leaving the fire, of which we had very little, and move on to another place to sleep. I, then, instead of being able to lie down to rest with the men, at that time generally had to go with two or three men to places from one to four miles off on foot—huts of suspected persons and so on.

440. What number of men would those parties consist of?—At first from six to eight and nine; but I used generally to go with as few men as I possibly could—small parties, in fact, of about six or seven. I would not get back to the camp after visiting those places until about twelve or two or three o’clock at night. I had to lie down to rest till daybreak, which at this time (November) was very early. This had a serious effect upon my strength. It reduced my strength. It also affected the whole party; we would come in very much fagged, horses and men. The young men used to recuperate in a couple of days; but it took me, at my time of life, and the other members of the force, mounted constables and others, more than that; but I had to go out notwithstanding at once.

441. As a matter of fact, is it not the hardest duty that a man can do?—It is the hardest duty one can experience. I have experienced duty of all kinds in the colony. I had experienced similar duty in that part before in 1852.

442. What sergeant had you?—I have been obliged to go out with different men, Senior-Constable Strahan and Constable Flood.

443. Where is Strahan’s station?—He was then stationed at Greta.

444. What length of time would those search parties be out before returning to head-quarters?—At first a very short time. Myself, or James, or Steele did not remain out for very long; but on those occasions we went out for a fortnight or more, prepared for that. We had to go out as secretly as we could to avoid notice, because any movements of the police always created a sensation amongst the inhabitants and got spread all over the country.

445. What were the general instructions you gave to those search parties?—They had particular districts, and Mr. Sadleir and myself, with the assistance of Constable Wheelan, of Benalla, and Sergeant Steele of Wangaratta, mapped off this mountain country into districts; then each party took a certain district.

446. Have you a copy of that map, as marked at that time?—I left the map up at Benalla.

447. And the names of the various parties?—No. Those parties were told off, not in writing; they were all arranged, and then instructions were given to start.

448. Were any particular instructions given to those parties in writing or verbal?—Mostly verbal. I was out with one party, and Steele was out with one party, and James with one, and Shoobridge (Senior-Constable) with one; and those at a distance would be written to. Those at hand would get the instructions verbally, and they would put that down.

449. Would they give a written report on their return?—Yes.

450. Those reports are in existence?—I should think so.

451. They should be in existence at Benalla?—Yes.

452. Was the Constable Flood that you have now spoken of as in charge of one of the parties the constable that originally was in charge at Greta?—I believe so.

453. Whose name has been connected with this from the first?—He went out with me from the first.
C. H. Nicolson, continued.

24th March 1881.

454. Did you give sectional plans of the country they were to cover?—No; because they knew country; but they got a description of the country, hills, and creeks.

455. Officially, did you give them any sectional plan or written instructions?—Yes, written; and of course, the men who were with me down at Benalla got verbal instructions. I went over the matter with Sergeant Steele himself.

456. In visiting the station you would be aware of the instructions issued by the Commissioner of Police?—What instructions?

457. To the police officers, if they received any information about the Kelly party?—The Chief Commissioner of Police had really nothing to do with that. I was in charge of the district, and the men received full authority to act upon their discretion, and representations to the contrary are not correct.

458. Then it is not true that the officers had to delay matters till they had telegraphed to the Chief Commissioner before they acted?—No.

459. Not from the commencement?—No, not from the commencement, never. When I took any important step, of course I communicated with the Chief Commissioner in writing or telegram.

460. They were to follow up anything?—To use their own discretion. When they were out in those parts of the country they were allowed to do anything they chose.

461. Was your plan of operations ever interfered with by an order from your superior?—Not at that time.

462. Not up to the period you are describing?—No. On coming in one morning from a search party, on Monday, 9th December 1878, I arrived at Benalla; and from the statements and reports of the other parties, I was satisfied that the Kelly gang were not in the Kelly country.

463. What do you mean by the Kelly country?—That back country behind Greta, extending away up on the east side behind Mansfield and Benalla, right down nearly to Omeo, and from there right across east. The country had been so thoroughly searched, and none of the search parties had obtained any traces whatever. After the murders we found their old tracks, and Senior-Constable James discovered their camp, and recovered a number of horses there—the camp they occupied before the murders.

464. At what place?—Called the Germans’ Creek.

465. In the Mansfield district?—Yes, Mansfield sub-district; there were no traces discovered after.

466. In giving that evidence, is your reason for concluding they were not in the country because you got no traces of them, or from your knowledge that they were elsewhere?—No, because there were no traces.

467. You came to the conclusion from that that they were not in the Kelly country?—Yes.

468. Is that bounded by railroad that runs north-easterly up to Strathbogie and towards the Omeo country?—The Kelly country I particularly designate is not as far as Strathbogie; east of Benalla—that road.

469. Northerly and easterly, about the division of the Mansfield coach-road; that is what you call the Kelly country?—Yes.

470. Your information was they were not in that country?—Yes.

471. You did not include in that the Mansfield country?—Yes; from what Senior-Constable James said, I was of opinion it was very improbable they were there.

472. In speaking of the Kelly country, did the Commission understand that you designated the Kelly country about the division of the Mansfield coach-road and northerly and easterly up to Omeo?—Due east from Omeo to the New South Wales boundary; then due north to “the Heads of the Murray river”; then westward as far as Wodonga.

473. That would exclude the Strathbogie ranges?—Yes; a party of police had been stationed at Broken River, on the Benalla and Mansfield road, under Constable Irwin, for the express purpose of searching the country—the Strathbogie country—and back from there to the road from Mansfield to Longwood. There is a road runs right up to there. On that very occasion—I would not like to swear positively, but I had very little doubt of it whatever—a man named ________, who has been alluded to by Captain Standish yesterday—I am quite certain that it was on that Monday—9th December)—came into the yard in the afternoon, soon after we had arrived, and told me he had got information, and requested me to take a party along with him, or rather to meet him up at the head of the King River, in a basin, about seventy miles off Benalla. I believe he subsequently took Superintendent Hare there; but he asked me to do that. I knew the man’s character very well; he is a man of a very treacherous character.

474. Can you tell what connection of Kelly’s he was?—He was Ned Kelly’s uncle. He is married to an aunt of the Kelly’s. He was much distrusted by the Kelly gang, and also by the people of the country. I distrusted him at once. When he came he saw our horses—this was in the barrack-yard—the horses fatigued and jaded; and I said, “How can I bring these men up seventy miles by to-morrow night in the state they are in. You see the horses, and see it is impossible for us to arrive there in a condition to go in pursuit of those men.”

475. Was this the first information you had received from him?—Yes; he promised to give information and to write, and promised to do a great deal, but did not come. I declined to go with him. I also spoke to Mr. Sadleir of the matter.

476. What was the intimation he gave?—That they were living up there; but at that very time they were down at Euroa.

477. That has been proved since?—Yes; they were at Faithfull’s Creek station on the Monday, and they robbed the bank on the Tuesday.

478. You consulted with Mr. Sadleir about it?—Yes.
479. And you both agreed it was inexpedient?—Yes.

480. You thought his object was to lead the police off the track?—Yes. Previously, this man had promised to send for us, or to come, on certain dates on one or two occasions, and lead to where the outlaws were; and could have done so, I think, if he chose to. Still I thought his position and information untrustworthy, because I distrusted him; and I know they all distrusted him.

481. Was this man recognized as an informer, and in the pay of the Government?—No, he was not.

482. Was “Wild Wright”—Isaiah Wright—ever engaged by the police?—Never, to my knowledge.

There was also received, a considerable time previous to that, a letter sent by Senior-Constable Kelly from Hedi, a letter that had in some way or other fallen into his hands; and it revealed, apparently, a plan on the part of some persons on the River Murray to help the outlaws over to escape into New South Wales.

483. What date?—I forget the date. No doubt the letter is producible amongst the others; but it was previous to this. As a matter of form, this was sent on to the New South Wales police, as we were in close communication with them, giving them all this information. Great importance has been attached that was the cause of Mr. Sadleir’s starting up to Albury that night. Now Mr. Sadleir and I had come to the conclusion that the Kellys had been baffled in crossing the river; further, the opinion of all our best assistants, all the respectable portion of the community and the most experienced, was that the Kellys would make another effort to escape across the Murray at that time. Mr. Sadleir and I concluded that we would run up to Wodonga and Albury, as we were assured that the Kellys were not in the Kelly country, to warn the police all the way up and down as to the likelihood of their trying to cross. We two went up by the last train at night, and were to return by the first train in the morning.

484. Was this the time when Captain Standish said you pooh-poohed the information that was given to you about Faithfull’s Creek, and started off with Mr. Sadleir to Albury?—Yes, that was the occasion.

485. Was that the occasion of giving you the information that Captain Standish referred to when you had all the horses saddled?—No, another occasion altogether. We reached the railway station, and at Benalla were just getting into the carriage, and the station was crowded. We saw Mr. Wyatt, P.M., in the crowd.

486. His station is at Benalla?—It is one place he visits.

487. Is that his head-quarters?—I am not aware he has any head-quarters. He visits almost any part of the district. Mr. Sadleir remarked to me, or we remarked together, his carrying something in his hand like a bouquet of flowers.

488. What train was that?—The last train at night, eight o’clock; it was quite dark, and Mr. Sadleir said, “I will go and see what is the matter.” So he went up and spoke to him. Mr. Wyatt and Mr. Sadleir then joined me; this was just as the train was starting, or just about two or three minutes before, and he told us that at Faithfull’s Creek, just as related yesterday—

489. Try and repeat it as closely as you can, because you can see a great deal depends on this evidence?—He told us that at Faithfull’s Creek, opposite Faithfull’s Creek station, a squatting station, it was observed from the train that a considerable portion of the telegraph wire had been broken down—in fact one or more of the posts had been broken; and he produced from the end of one of the posts an insulator, a group of insulators, two or three that he had in his hand; he might have had some wire; I do not recollect it, but perhaps his position and information untrustworthy, because I distrusted him; and I know they all distrusted him.

490. They had not observed it?—They had observed nothing unusual.

491. You do not recollect Mr. Wyatt saying more than that?—I have perfect confidence in what Mr. Wyatt will say about it. I do not remember any more that he said.

492. We understood from Captain Standish that you had received information that the bank was to be stuck up before this?—I had not.

493. Did Mr. Wyatt tell you on this occasion that Euroa had been stuck up?—No.

494. Captain Standish stated that Mr. Wyatt told you a bank was to be stuck up, and so on?—I do not know on what ground Captain Standish says that.

495. This is a portion of the statement made—[quoting the Newspaper report]:—“On arriving at the Benalla railway station, Mr. Wyatt met Messrs. Nicolson and Sadleir. That was on the evening of the 10th. They were then starting for the Murray, on the strength of some strange intelligence they had received from friends of the outlaws, that the outlaws were going to cross the river. Mr. Wyatt at once informed Mr. Nicolson of what he had seen, and told him there was no doubt the outlaws had been at Faithfull Creek or Euroa. Mr. Nicolson pooh-poohed that information, and not only started himself for Albury, but took Mr. Sadleir with him.” In giving your evidence (because this is most important) you said that when Mr. Wyatt showed you this group of insulators that he said there was something wrong; did he connect with that wrong anything about the Kellys?—Yes.
496. Why did not you tell that at once?—I was interrupted.
497. Did he infer anything wrong with the Kellys?—I believe he did.
498. Is that statement of Captain Standish substantially correct?—No. It is not a fair statement.
499. In what particular does it differ—tell us exactly what took place at this station?—I am doing so.
I am only too glad to do so. Whatever Mr. Wyatt said, I understood that he believed that it was in connection with the Kellys. Whether he said so I am not prepared to say, but I took it in that way, and I replied to Mr.
Wyatt. All the time I had in my mind that the men were making for the north, and I was going up to warn the police on the New South Wales side, and at Wodonga, to be on the look out, as I used the words, and you can ask him. I said, “Very well; even suppose they have gone, and pulled down those wires at Faithfull’s Creek, that does not affect what I am acting upon,” or words to that effect.
500. In point of fact, you thought the information you were going to give at Albury of more importance than the information given by Mr. Wyatt?—That was it exactly.
501. Why did you think that of more importance if he gave you actual information, and showed the wires affording proof; why would not that be sufficient to lead you to go and trace it at once?—I thought there was a possibility of the Kellys having, for some reason or other, cut down the wires at Faithfull’s Creek on their way, fearing information might be sent along.
502. But the bare fact of the wires being destroyed, and you getting the information a few hours after, would you not have stood a good chance, by acting promptly, of following up the tracks and catching them?—No; the breaking the wires in that country is very common, not at all an unusual circumstance.
503. Was the impression on your mind of the information given by Mr. Wyatt that the wires had been destroyed by a storm, or by some other means than by the outlaws?—I did not think it was done by the Kellys.
504. You discredited the idea it was done by them?—Not altogether; but I considered if they were making north to cross, that my course going up there that night and giving information that it would be too late to pursue them from where the lines were broken down, and that it was the better way to intercept them.

24th March 1881.
C. H. Nicolson,
late to pursue them from where the lines were broken down, and that it was the better way to intercept them.
very late—I believe it was after twelve o’clock. It was shortly after the train arrived.

520. Had you liberty to use the telegraph wires at any time, day or night?—Yes, at all hours. There were certain times fixed at which the Railway Department’s lines were at our disposal—extra hours.

521. What distance is it from Faithfull’s Creek to Euroa?—Four to six miles.

522. The outlaws left Faithfull’s Creek at eight?—Yes.

523. And what time did you first hear of it at Euroa?—On the return of Mr. Scott, banker, who was taken away with others, between nine and ten, and had been kidnapped at Euroa and carried away to Faithfull’s Creek; and the robbery took place at Euroa in the day—the people were moving backwards and forwards quite unconscious of it, and a lot of carpenters working at a house on the railway reserve, opposite the bank.

524. The police officers had liberty to send all messages in preference to any other messages that the telegraph masters might have—do you know that such an order was issued?—I am not aware, but I never found the slightest delay; we always received the utmost assistance from the Telegraph Department. We got a spring-cart at Albury, and went across, and got back to the train; we went down in the train as far as Wangaratta, and stopped there. I ran from there to the hospital to get that black I had before—the Queensland black that I had before at Baumgarten’s. I found him too sick, and I was sorry I was obliged to come away without him. Mr. Sadleir, by agreement with me, remained there to take out the party of police. I proceeded on to Benalla, and made my way as fast as I could down to the station, and got my horse, and despatched a telegram from Benalla to Mansfield.

525. What men had you with you?—I had no men; and then I went away off as quickly as I could back to the train that was waiting for me, and got into it, and Mr. Wyatt accompanied me.

526. What was the nature of the telegram?—To Mansfield police, telling where I had gone; that I had gone down to Euroa, and that I wished them to send down two trackers from there to me to Euroa—They had three, I think.

527. What hour would that be?—Just before I started.

528. Was it before ten o’clock?—Yes, long before; it was early in the morning—I came down express.

529. And the trackers were to go to Euroa?—I believe that is it; but the telegram can be produced. I also indicated to the police up there which way I thought they should move—what direction the search party should take.

530. In this special telegram?—In this telegram, it has been said that I telegraphed (something monstrous was conveyed about me) that I sent to the Euroa police to—”You have got your orders, go on.” I sent no such telegram.

531. What direction did you give to the police?—I believe, as far as I can recollect, it was to move down the back road from that direction.

532. A copy of it will be available?—I believe so, and the original in my handwriting in the office, but I do not like to touch it or interfere with it.

533. How can the copies of those telegrams be obtained?—In the Benalla telegraph office. I warned the telegraph master to take great care of all telegrams. From the road between Mansfield and Longwood, I think that was it, searching the country towards Strathbogie; I do not recollect exactly, but I indicated the possibility of their making into the Strathbogie ranges. It has been said that I sent orders to the Euroa police to wait until I arrived—as a fact, there was a party at Euroa.

534. Who was in charge of that party?—Senior-constable Johnson and Detective Ward.

535. How many were in Euroa at that time?—Six or seven, that was Johnson’s party. I am not aware and I do not believe that I ever said anything of the kind, as expressed. As I was coming down in the train—Mr. Wyatt was with me—I expressed the fear that I would be too late, that the police would be gone; and Mr. Wyatt told me that he did not think so, something to the effect that the men did not wish to go, they were sure to wait till I came.

536. And that was his opinion?—That he had heard so.

537. That was next morning?—Yes; I reached Faithfull’s Creek, pulled up the train when we came opposite the creek, and left Mr. Wyatt there, and did not see him again; and I went and joined the party at Faithfull’s Creek.

538. At Euroa?—No; I never went near Euroa; I went direct to Faithfull’s Creek on the Benalla side, and joined the party that were waiting there, and started from there as soon as I possibly could.

539. At what hour?—I could not say.

540. Mid-day?—No; in the morning.

541. Between eleven and twelve would it be?—Oh, earlier than that.

542. What distance had you travelled then?—I merely had come down by train; I was in sight of it from the train—the Faithfull’s Creek station is in sight of it from the train. I had come right through from Albury.
543. From Benalla you came down, by train, after sending the telegram, and arrived at Faithfull’s Creek—what time did the journey occupy?—About 30 miles.

544. About one hour and a quarter?—Yes.

545. Did you arrive before the ordinary train at Euroa or afterwards?—I arrived at Faithfull’s Creek before every train.

546. The ordinary is ten minutes past ten, therefore you must have been before that?—I was some time before that.

547 Then it must have between ten and eleven you started?—It must have been much earlier.

548. Can you trace the line at each point in the journey?—I was at Wangaratta soon after sunrise; that would be about five o’clock. I was then only about an hour going down to Benalla; that would be about six o’clock. Then I suppose I had a long way to go from Benalla to the railway station and back, and it would be perhaps over two hours—half-past eight when I arrived at Faithfull’s Creek.

549. When you received, at Benalla, this information from Mr. Wyatt, could you not have communicated with the Euroa police?—No; the line was broken between Benalla and Euroa; it had been cut off at Faithfull’s Creek, and there was no telegraph station there. There was a little delay at the station, owing to a gentleman who had nothing to do with the matter, and I would rather not mention it—it did not make more that ten minutes’ delay—and we got away from him.

550. In Captain Standish’s evidence he said there was a want of judgement or procrastination on your part, therefore we are desirous that you should give the exact information as to what occurred, and fixing the dates and so on?—There was a gentleman there, the overseer of the Faithfull’s Creek station, who had been amongst the party stuck up, and he knew the country very well. I picked out the man, an overseer on the station, whom I subsequently employed, named Stevens.

551. He had been a groom?—Yes; and I saw the housekeeper, an elderly sensible woman, there, who had been there, in the matter, who had been stuck up all night, and I just asked her, “In what direction did you see the last of the dust of those men’s horses?” She pointed the road going down to Violet Town. The men had been looking for traces with a black fellow name Jemmy—a very useless fellow—and they had seen some tracks, and we followed those. We rode ultimately in that direction, and got rid of that troublesome gentleman I spoke of. He had a fall from his horse, which I was not sorry for, and we went on with this groom, who knew the country. Well, we got in, and at last we crossed the line and re-crossed the line, and we got on the road running to the Murchison road, to the Strathbogie side of Euroa, and there we found what we believed to be the traces of the men. They turned down towards Euroa. We followed those traces right down. I was riding on the right, with some of the men in front with the blackfellow. Stevens and I were riding together, and there were a number of fine young men in the police party, and they were also observing the tracks too. The spur ran down from the Strathbogie range right down into the road, and the main road was a mile from it, and the paddock rail ran right into this part, leaving the face of the spur the boundary of the road. The blackfellow turned off, and said there were the tracks of two mounted men who had gone off the face of the road on to the range. He pretended to trace them along this spur about half way, and then lost them, and said there was nothing. In the meantime, myself and Stevens, the man from the station, and the others, kept our eyes upon these two tracks remaining on the road. Bye-and-bye we lost the whole altogether. After a little pursuing on that road, trying to pick them up, the road at this time being very dusty, we satisfied ourselves there was nothing down on that spur at all, and the young men were the first to discover and pick up the tracks again on the road, at the side of the road, some distance down. The tracks led to an open space on the right-hand side, and then going towards the gate leading into a paddock beside the railway; the men got off their horses and traced them in a very clever manner; and they branched off into the paddock. In the centre of the paddock these traces were lost. I halted there, and I made two or three of the men gallop round; I did so in order to see if the fellows had taken off, if they had jumped their horses over. There was no trace of any such thing. All this time we were in sight of Euroa, and all trace was lost; it was about mid-day. I brought the men down and could not make anything more of that. I brought them down to the village of Euroa, took them to the police station to put their horses up, and we came into Euroa; and then the enquiry was made, for the first time, at the bank, amongst all who could give any information or throw any light on the matter. At the same time I ordered dinner for the men at the hotel; and we had something to eat whilst the horses were feeding. The men were overpowered at this time (it was a very hot day) with fatigue and the heat, fatigue particularly, because most of them were the same men I had with me just two or three days before; and at the table the men actually fell asleep over their food (there is no exaggeration in saying this) with fatigue, in all sorts of attitudes, not drinking a drop or anything of the kind. Johnson, who was the strongest and hardiest man of the party, a most energetic man, went to sleep on the bush sofa at the side of the room, and the old man of the house—that is, the Euroa hotel—thought Johnson had a sunstroke, and he began practising upon him for that. The man was so dead asleep that he was not awaked, though they poured water over him. I could not take the sleep there for an hour or two. It was bright moonlight weather; and about six o’clock had tea ready for them, and as soon as that was over we started away down the Murchison road to a place we had heard of that they were likely to go to—two or three several places. It seemed when they were at Faithfull’s Creek that they were asking from one or two persons—a boy particularly—where a certain boy was living; and they learned this. I was pretty sure they had gone north towards Murchison—due north. We searched all the suspicious places without any result.

552. Then you absolutely deny there was any procrastination?—I do most decidedly.
553. Were the members of the artillery force then stationed?—No, not until after. When I returned to Euroa—I had been very ill all that time, I mean nearly blind and suffering great pain from my eyes. We got in about six in the morning, and I got the men all to bed, and I lay down myself, but I got no sleep. I could not sleep, and in the course of the morning Captain Standish arrived by the morning train, on the 12th, and he consulted me about what was best to be done, and we decided to start off a party into the Strathbogie ranges, but I told him I was quite unfit to join the party. I was almost quite blind at this time. I was suffering great pain. We agreed to despatch a party that night into the Strathbogie ranges, and Mr. Hare was sent for to relieve me in consequence of the state I was in.

554. Was it your impression at this time that the sympathizers of the outlaws were watching the movements of the police wherever you went through the Kelly district?—Yes; I had no faith in anything that was done by the police except it was done in the most secret way possible. I have evidence to prove that at this very time I had no faith in the matter. I wrote a letter at that time to town that this galloping after these men—

555. To the department?—No, a private letter stating that we would get these men no doubt, but this galloping after them through the country was perfectly useless.
556. Because your movements were watched by sympathizers?—Yes, and I knew those fellows were too clever to be caught by a party galloping after them.
557. And that is how they got their information, by their own spies?—Yes.
558. To whom did you write?—Well, it is a very delicate matter—it is a letter I wrote to my wife.
559. Did you write to Captain Standish or any officer to the same effect?—No.
560. Irrespective of this private letter, will any document be found showing that you stated that this system of galloping about would be ineffectual?—No. I had hardly any correspondence with Captain Standish at that time; I was doing the outdoor work and Mr. Sadleir did the correspondence.

561. You still continued that system of galloping?—Up to the time of the bank robbery; after that I did not. I did so because there was such an outcry at that time about search parties, and about the police not doing anything. It was only after I knew at that time it was no use attempting to confine our efforts to secret work, we must have made some demonstration because of public opinion.

562. I understood you had supreme control of all the operations placed under your charge?—Yes.
563. If there was anything to complain of with regard to tactics, were you not solely responsible for any mistake made?—Yes.
564. Then wherein lay the necessity for any complaint; if there was anything wrong with the proceedings, were you not responsible, and independent, and equally capable of carrying out any other plan?—I was responsible distinctly; the Chief Commissioner gave me carte blanche.
565. Why did you not alter the plan?—I would have done so, but I was removed; but what I wrote at that time was the conclusion I had arrived at then from the experience I had gained.
566. At what time did you arrive at that conclusion that it was useless?—[The witness looked for a letter.]—I can get it.
567. Could you fix about the date you had made up your mind to alter the plan of operations of which you had full control?—I cannot say; I made up my mind to alter the operations. The last party I came in from was that Fern Hill party, and it was about that date; that was about the 10th.
568. You made up your mind about that time to alter?—Yes.
569. Was that feeling growing upon you?—It was.
570. That was the process?—Yes.
571. You found that you were wasting strength and could not catch them?—Exactly.
572. How long had you been in charge of the Benalla district?—Then about six weeks.
573. Only six weeks?—That is all.
574. Did you, at the interview with Captain Standish on the 12th, communicate verbally that it was a mistake to follow out this system of search parties?—No. I do not think so.
575. Did you to any other officer subordinate to yourself?—No; at this time I was taken up talking of other matters.

576. You intended to reverse the policy; you were in continual communication and conversation with Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.
577. Have you at any time in conversation with him expressed the opinion that an alteration should take place in the mode of procedure?—I have no recollection of it, but I think it is very probable.
578. Can you say you did?—No; I think it is very possible I did.
579. I suppose on the morning of the 12th a general conversation took place between you and Captain Standish when you met at Euroa?—No, not much.

580. I suppose there would be some conversation?—Yes.
581. Relating to the mode that had been pursued before?—No.
582. This is important. The conversation of necessity would not have been, “How is Mr. Jones, or Mr.
583. During that conversation did you say, "I am very unwell, and I have arrived at the conclusion that we ought to alter the procedure"?—I cannot recollect.

584. Then, as far as you recollect, you never communicated your determination to anyone in the police force?—No; I do not say the determination, I say the opinion; and on looking at the letter I find I used that expression. I felt quite heart-broken—our work and worry, and no result from it.

585. Had your state of health permitted, and you had not been removed by Captain Standish, in all probability you would have continued the same mode of operation for some time after the bank robbery?—

No. I would have continued this pursuit until it was exhausted, and then I should have proposed to Captain Standish another system.

586. What do you mean by “exhausted”?—Pursued the party into the Strathbogie ranges, given them a thorough search, as was done, and if any information had come in about their being anywhere, I would have sent the police in search of them; but I intended then, if no result occurred from that, I should have proposed another system.

587. Then you were consulted about this special party that was despatched into the Strathbogie country?—Yes.

588. And at that time you had your mind made up that if that resulted in no special effect —?—I did not say my mind made up, but the opinion I had formed.

589. I understood you to say that you would exhaust that system, and you explained what you meant by that, and you had made up your mind that when that party went out, that was to be the end of that system of procedure—is that so?—Yes.

590. You would have thought it wise not to communicate what was existing in your mind at that time to Captain Standish?—My mind was not so completely made up as to arrive at any definite conclusion as to what I would do; but that is what I felt, that a lot of this was a useless system, galloping over the country.

591. You say that you had written to a private friend to say you considered the system hitherto pursued by yourself, from your experience, was inoperative. You came to that conclusion about the time of the bank robbery?—Yes.

592. And you wrote that to a private friend?—I can produce the letter.

593. When you were relieved from duty in consequence of your eyes being sore and this tremendous hardship you had to undergo, when you came down you did not communicate to Captain Standish about this conversation?—No.

594. Can you say whether you did to your successor, Mr. Hare, then or at any subsequent period?—I had no communication with him.

595. Did you go on leave when you came down here, or go on duty at once?—I went on duty from the day I came down from Euroa; I arrived in the evening, and I went next morning.

596. Had you interviews with your chief after you arrived from Euroa, and while Mr. Hare was in charge in your place?—No; the Chief Commissioner came down two or three times from Benalla to Melbourne, and he never spoke to me about what was going on—he was exceedingly reticent.

597. You did not carry on a correspondence with him while you were in Melbourne doing duty, telling him verbally or by official communication that you considered the system of riding after the Kellys would be inoperative?—You had better ask him, but I have no recollection of it. When I came down to town—when I was in town in charge of the department, on every occasion that Captain Standish was called down to town by the Government, and it was very often he would be in my office, and he was most remarkably reticent, and never would give me the slightest information—I would not ask him. At the same time, I always asked him, “Do you wish me to go up, I am ready to go at any time?” That was all that passed between us, and he would shake his head and say nothing, and I knew nothing from that time of what was going on in the country.

598. You then resumed duty in that district yourself, relieving Mr. Hare?—Yes.

599. Did you then continue the system you considered would be inoperative?—No.

600. You carried into effect what your feelings were as to what ought to have been done in the first instance?—I did so; but I may explain that I began in this way, that the force was reduced by a very considerable number; that was when I resumed duty.

601. When was that?—About the 6th July 1879.

602. Did you make any private reports during the time you were on duty here. You left on the 13th of December, and you resumed duty in the district in the following July; did you, in the meantime, communicate either by official communication to the head of your department, the Under Secretary, or to the Chief Secretary any opinion as to how these men could be brought to justice?—I did not; I had no conversation with Sir Bryan O’Loghlen on the subject, because I could see he was in correspondence with Captain Standish.
603. Was Captain Standish then discharging the duties?—Yes, in pursuit of the gang; I was acting as Chief Commissioner.
604. When he took charge himself he assumed the position you had held?—Yes.
605. And Mr. Hare was acting under him?—Yes.
606. And when you came to town you did the ordinary routine office work of Captain Standish?—Yes.
607. Had you then in any official communication with the Acting Chief Secretary, Sir Bryan O’Loghlen, suggested how the Kellys might be brought to justice?—No; I knew at the time I had no knowledge of what was going on, and all communications at that time with the Government were with Captain Standish.
608. Directly with him and not through the office?—Yes.
609. At the time you left Benalla from ill-health, and having gained the experience which you necessarily must have had as a vigilant officer, does not it strike you now as extraordinary that you did not advise with your successor or with your superior officer as to the best course to be adopted in the interests of the public safety?—My relations with Captain Standish at that time, when I was in town, were against my doing so.
610. They were strained?—They were strained, and any expression of opinion by me was treated with I would not say almost contempt, but something very near it; I was not in his confidence at all.
611. At what period did that strained relation begin between you?—At intervals for some years past.
612. Under what circumstances—did that arise more particularly out of your official position?—Yes.
613. And the discharge of your public duties?—I had never any disagreement about the discharge of my duties, but frequently in other matters, and, now I think of it, perhaps in the discharge of my duties there may have been.
614. Would it be for the public interest to know the particulars?—I would not like to give a positive answer that some of our differences may not have been about public matters.

C. H. Nicolson,
continued.
24th March 1881.

615. At any time were your public functions interfered with as the officer second in command by Captain Standish?—Not up to the time of the Kelly business.
616. On any other occasion?—Subsequently; not up to that period. Our relations were strained previous to the Kelly outrage.
617. But up to this period, officially, do you wish the Board to understand that you and Captain Standish worked in harmony in your respective positions?—Yes, we did, especially during the Kelly outrage; and, as far as I am concerned, I maintain that on every occasion I worked in harmony with him up to that period. I had no serious difference with him until afterwards.
618. Then, at the period when you were taken ill, and it was necessary for you to leave for a time, do not you think, in the interest of the public service, it was absolutely your duty to communicate with the gentleman who took your position and your superior officer as to the best course to be adopted?—No encouragement was ever given me to offer suggestions.
619. No, but did you not think that to the Government, of which you were a very important officer, it was essential for your own personal safety and the public security to advise as to the best course to take from the much larger experience you must have acquired through being in that position?—Yes; I was quite ready to do so, but any advice I offered on the strength of my experience was pooh-poohed, previous to that and on that occasion.
620. On this occasion you left no record, neither did you verbally express to the gentlemen with whom you were associated as officers the importance of following out any course you thought best adopted for the object you had in view, neither in writing nor verbally?—No. The day I left was upon that occasion, the 12th. I was, as I tell you, when I came in from that party, completely prostrated; in fact when I was going about the street I had to be led about, and take the arm of someone.
621. Your answer is that you were too incapacitated at that time to advise?—Yes.
622. And Captain Standish did not ask you?—No.
623. Subsequently you say you performed all the functions pertaining to the Chief Commissionership of the colony?—Yes.
624. You were in constant communication with the Government on matters official?—Yes.
625. After you had time to recover your health, did you not think it of sufficient importance then, from the position you had occupied and the important position you then occupied, to consult with the Government, and to advise as to the best course?—I did not. Captain Standish at the time was in direct communication with the Government himself, and I was not. I did not know what course he was pursuing at all, and he never invited me to give any opinion. I gave an opinion once or twice—a suggestion—but on all those occasions he treated me with coldness and repelled me.
626. In your opinion, do you not think it probable that to the want of harmony that should have existed between the officers at the head of the police force at this time that failure which occurred is to be attributed more to that cause than any other cause?—Not up to then—not at that time.

627. How many years have you been in the service?—Nearly thirty years.

628. What position has Mr. Hare among the superintendents?—There is Mr. Winch, Mr. Chomley, Mr. Chambers, and then Mr. Hare—he is the fourth.

629. You being, up to this time we speak of, Inspecting Superintendent; that is the legal term of your position under the regulations?—Yes.

630. Did you, in that position, constantly visit and inspect the stations under Mr. Hare’s charge, and were you in constant communication with him?—No.

631. Were you on unfriendly terms with Mr. Hare?—No.

632. Was your position with Mr. Hare as strained as with Mr. Standish up to that time?—No; Mr. Hare was a man (excepting about ten years ago) that I had very little communication with. I only inspected his district once.

633. Did you communicate anything about your opinion on the Kellys to Mr. Hare on his assuming your place, or at any subsequent time?—No; I had no communication with Mr. Hare.

634. There has been a strained feeling between you and Mr. Hare for some time?—No; we had been as acquaintances friendly enough, but no intimacy.

635. Did you accompany Mr. Hare to capture Power?—No, he accompanied me; I was the superior officer.

636. And you went there—that is some years ago?—Yes, that is about ten years ago.

637. In this same district?—In the Benalla district.

638. You did not communicate with Captain Standish, the Government of the day, or Mr. Hare any information that you had learned by your experience as to how the Kellys would be best captured till you resumed duty?—I did. Any information that came to me or I could gather I forwarded them on to Captain Standish. Some of this used to be returned in a contemptuous manner, and often the only allusion he made as to some information I had sent him would be to sneer at it.

639. That was between the 12th September and the 6th July?—Yes.

640. And during the whole time, in any of those communications you had with Captain Standish, you never expressed the opinion that they were pursuing the wrong course?—I did not do so officially. It was not an uncommon expression on my part on that subject.

641. Was it in consequence of the feeling between you and Captain Standish that he abstained from communicating with the Government the opinion he had formed as to the mode of procedure?—It was not; nor from any feeling between Captain Standish and myself that prevented me from communicating with him; but at the time that I left I was too prostrated to do so, or to think of it; and from Captain Standish’s manner towards me when he visited town it drove anything of the kind out of my head. I would not have presumed, under the circumstances, to have offered any suggestion whatever, as it was subjecting myself almost to insult.

642. Then there must be something in that question I asked you, that it was in consequence of the discourteous manner that you withheld the information?—I say I might have thought of it, and would have been only glad to give the benefit of any thought that came into my head, but that prevented it.

643. You had arrived at a certain conclusion before you left on the 12th, that if the search party had failed you would take another course?—I did not say that exactly. I would have tried something else.

644. For a long time it was your impression that the operations to capture the Kellys were futile?—I will not fix the date.

645. When the parties were out searching for the Kellys you had the impression for some time that the operations of the police were futile?—Yes; it must have been I was disgusted with the mode of procedure.

646. I would like to ask now, as it seems to my mind important—you have now, in the course of your evidence, intimated the position that some of the officers held, and to use the expression that it is strained, that there was an unfriendly feeling, a want of the usual co-operation, between you and Captain Standish, and between you and Mr. Hare?—No; I do not say so at all. There is not that feeling; but Captain Standish exhibited towards me that feeling on frequent occasions for a considerable time.

647. Now between you and Mr. Hare what is the position?—Just now?

648. For some time you say you had not much communication with him?—I have not. There are many officers I do not have communication with.

649. Up to the 12th December was there any unfriendly feeling?—No.

650. Looking after the efficiency of the force was your special duty under the 36th section of the regulations, and I want to know from you what was the feeling between other officers of the force—was there a friendly feeling between Superintendent Winch and Captain Standish?—Mr. Winch and Captain...
Standish were on very good terms. I do not know now—I believe they meet and speak with each other.

652. Do you believe that Captain Standish and Superintendent Winch are on friendly terms with each other, such as would be between a senior superintending officer and his chief?—Well, it appears that just about the time of the Kelly business at Euroa, but nothing to do with that, there was some feeling between the two.

653. Then would you say at the time of Captain Standish leaving the service that there was a strained relationship between Superintendent Winch and Captain Standish?—No, not at that time.

654. Is there now?—I am not aware.

655. Is there a strained feeling between you, the next under Captain Standish, and Mr. Winch?—No.

656. Not in the least?—No; I am not on intimate terms with or in the habit of associating with any of them.

657. It is not a question of intimate terms?—I met Mr. Winch on duty, and he meets me, on the same intimate terms as I met all the others, with one exception.

658. Who is that?—I would rather not mention it.

659. Is that with Captain Standish?—He is not in the force. I say, with one exception, I am on friendly terms with every officer I come in contact with in the force, especially those who are well conducted.

660. You do not think there is a strained feeling between Superintendent Winch and Captain Standish, or between any officer and yourself?—I do not know about the feelings between Superintendent Winch and Captain Standish; I do not want to know anything about them.

661. It is important to see we have got the right statements before us; it is important to see what is the feeling of the brother officers; and, as the Acting Chief Commissioner, I thought you could have formed an opinion and could have told us what is your feeling with regard to the feeling of one officer to another. Is it one that is advantageous to the public service?—I believe the feeling between the officers is exceedingly good.

662. You say between the officers, one with the other, that the feeling is extremely good?—Yes, I do; but officers come very little in contact with each other now. Some do not come in contact for years, and they get strange to each other.

663. Was that the cause why you did not give your information to Captain Standish?—On my honor, I never kept any information from Captain Standish or Superintendent Hare; I gave them every information I could; and that suggestion that you have spoken of; if it had occurred to me, I would have given it; and it is only since I came to town, and looked among the papers for the Commission, I found the expression I used in the letter to that person.

664. You only desisted in tendering that information when you noticed Captain Standish’s manner to you?—I did not desist in tendering information to Captain Standish; I did not keep anything back; but his demeanour towards me was not calculated to develop information.

665. In what way has that arisen?—It is very mysterious to me. It has arisen and shown itself in many ways.

666. Is it jealousy?—I should be very sorry to say so. I entered the force in the humblest position, and have risen to my present position. When I was removed from the mounted police, I was promoted for service some years ago—about the year after I joined, in 1853—and I have been continually on active service since; and I was selected by Sir Charles Mac Mahon to take charge of the detective police when it was organized. I took charge of it, and during that time I was in the heat and brunt of everything that was going on, and when I had to leave the detective force on account of my health breaking down, Captain Standish was not pleased with it, and I went to a quieter district, at Kyneton, to carry on my duty there, and along with other men I arrested Power, though I arose from an attack of fever. I followed him into the district where he was, and made arrangements for his arrest along with Mr. Hare, and took him. I had information that he had passed through a portion of my district, and on that I acted. I was then appointed to the city by seniority. I received no promotion on account of the Power capture. Every step has been simply by seniority.

667. Your position now has been attained simply by seniority?—Yes. My first promotion was for distinction, and after many steps and many years passing my present position has been reached simply by seniority. For fourteen years I was in the detective force, and though rising to first-class superintendent, I was receiving less pay than any superintendent in the force, and I would have received that pay still if my health had not broken down, and I fell into the rank of District Superintendent. At that time I was made the subject of much unpleasantness, as Inspecting Superintendent, and on several occasions Captain Standish did not support me.

668. Captain Standish stated that in his evidence as having been before that year?—Captain Standish behaved on several occasions in that way, and I forgave him over and over again. Then it came at last to this. I never made use of political influence, or assistance of any kind in my life, until my position became almost unbearable, and then I told Captain Standish of it. At last I was appointed Assistant Commissioner of Police.

669. How long ago is that?—A very short time.

670. Did that improve Captain Standish’s feeling towards you?—Yes. I felt it necessary to apply for a higher position to protect myself.

671. Have you had any personal quarrel with Captain Standish?—Never, until I received a letter asking me to come down to town on Saturday to have a chat with him, and the first announcement he made was that I was superseded; a junior officer was to go back on the Monday. Then my indignation broke forth.

672. That was just before the capture?—Yes.

673. Did he say why you were superseded by this other person?—That the Government had decided so. I replied to him I did not believe the Government had decided at all; that he had done it; that he had communicated with the Government, and that I would not submit to it, and I would see the Government about it.

674. Were you under the impression that there was a feeling on Captain Standish’s part from the time you joined the police in 1853, a feeling as against you from that time?—No, not until I left the detective force, more particularly after I gave up the City Superintendence and accepted the Inspecting Superintendence.

675. I want to know whether the feeling which was evinced yesterday for the first time to our knowledge, as between you and Captain Standish, to your knowledge exists between other members of the force?—Not to my knowledge; and I never in my life heard Captain Standish speak as he did yesterday.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Eleven o’clock.

FRIDAY, 25th MARCH 1881.

Present:

C. H. Nicolson Charles Hope Nicolson further examined.

25th March 1881
678. And from the 19th of November, the date when you wrote that letter to your friend, until the 12th of December, when you were sent to Melbourne by Captain Standish, you had not altered the operations then pursued?—No. I had not. I must add, with reference to that, that it was a thought just occurring to me while writing a hurried letter. I still pursued the work I was on, and I never entertained any serious thought at that time of the necessity for changing the tactics we were pursuing, because I considered it a matter of duty to search the country thoroughly first. But that was an opinion in advance.

679. Is this it? On the 19th of November you had a feeling that the mode you were adopting was likely to be inoperative except by some fluke?—Yes.

680. And you never took the trouble to think of any other means from then till the time you left Benalla?—It was a very floating thought—just what one would write in a hurry. It was not want of trouble in the matter. Although I expressed the thought, it was not confirmed in my mind up to that time. I will be much briefer than I was yesterday. When I returned to town I went to duty at once. I never left the office. I took charge on the morning after my arrival when I was relieved.

681. You were relieved through sickness?—Through fatigue. I was not ill at all, but I was suffering from pain and the effects of fatigue, and I was never incapacitated from duty for one hour from that time till I went up to relieve Captain Standish. He visited Melbourne several times. I spoke to him on the subject of the Kelly gang; but he was always very reserved, and did not seem to think fit to enter into the subject with me at all. But on his very first visit to Melbourne I remember distinctly saying to him this, speaking about the mode of operations—"Do you remember that man Sherritt, whom we saw at Mrs. Byrne's that morning?" I said, "That is the sort of man to employ—that class of man."

682. Was that Sherritt the man whom you saw Captain Standish speaking to before the trooper on the morning of the Sebastopol attack?—Yes, that is the man—of the same class as the Kellys themselves.

683. You said that was the sort of man to employ to get these men?—Yes.

684. Did you speak ironically to him of this proceeding?—No, quite seriously; and on the first occasion I say most solemnly that I said that to him.

685. What date was that?—About—I cannot tell. Captain Standish can tell. It was the first day he came to Melbourne, and the first opportunity I had after I came down to Melbourne in charge. I was on friendly terms with Captain Standish at the time; I was never unfriendly until I was superseded.

686. That is the 12th of December?—No, the following year—in June.

687. At the interview with Mr. Ramsay?—Yes, that was the first time. On every occasion that I could I did everything to aid the police up there; and I wish to speak straightforwardly in this matter, and although I do not pretend that that private letter influenced me at all, still the same thought was running in my head; the consequence was that the first time I met Captain Standish I did say that to him I merely submit that, if the Commission imagine it was through any desire to prevent assistance to Captain Standish that I did not speak to him before, it will be a misapprehension. I should like very much to know the date on which Sherritt was employed.

688. Was he employed by you?—Never by me at that time. He was employed then by Captain Standish and Mr. Hare—whether before that date or after I do not know.

689. Did you engage him at any time?—On my second visit I did. I left Melbourne on the 3rd of July 1879 for Benalla, to relieve Superintendent Hare, in consequence of instructions I had received from Captain Standish. I have something of importance to say on the office—that during the time I was in charge of the office, I carried on the business of the office most carefully.

690. In Melbourne?—Yes.

691. From December to July?—Yes; several documents which I considered, and which the chief clerk of the office suggested to me were matters for him to deal with, I sent to Captain Standish, and in every way I recognized his position of Chief Commissioner of Police. There were no documents kept back at all.

692. You were Assistant Commissioner at that time?—Yes, I was, and acting for him. When it was known decidedly that he was coming down to Melbourne, a few documents of the same kind were kept back for him instead of sending them up (they not being urgent), and nothing else. If you think fit to send into the office, to call upon the chief clerk in charge of the office, he will tell you the state that the office was in when I left it, and there are no grounds whatever for the statement of Captain Standish that I left the office in a muddle. I have always found, when I acted for him in the office, that it was the easiest billet I had had in the service.

693. What is the chief clerk's name?—Mr. Moors.

694. Has he been there long?—Yes.
695. Does he understand the routine of the office?—Perfectly.
696. Is it usual for the chief clerk to see all the official documents that come in for the head of the office?—Yes.
697. He would know all the routine of the office?—Yes, perfectly.
698. Did Captain Standish, at any time since the 12th of December until Tuesday last, make any complaints as to the way in which you administered the department when in Melbourne?—No.
699. Did Mr. Moors?—No. Of course Mr. Moors was subordinate.
700. But he can give evidence as to it, one way or the other?—Yes. Further, on that point, when I had occasion to see the Honorable the Acting Chief Secretary on police business—Sir Bryan O’Loghlens—I was always most careful to mark the distinction that I was merely acting, and that Captain Standish, who was away, was the Chief Commissioner of Police; and I took the liberty once or twice (I do not suppose I am breaking confidence) to suggest to Sir Bryan O’Loghlen the advisability of Captain Standish resuming his proper place down here, and my going up there in his place.
701. You said just now that you were appointed some time between the 12th of December 1878 and the time of your resuming duty in the North-Eastern district in July. You were then appointed Assistant Commissioner of Police?—Yes. I was appointed assistant before; I was then acting.
702. When were you appointed assistant?—Long before that.
703. Can you give the date of that?—[The witness having examined certain papers, was requested to hand in a note of all his appointments, with their dates, from his joining the force, which is as follows]:—
    “Lieutenant, 14/2/55; Sub-Inspector, 31/1/56; Inspector, 2nd Class, 20/6/56; in charge of Detectives, 5/8/56; Superintendent of Detectives, 1/10/57; Inspecting Superintendent, 15/1/73; Assistant Commissioner, 13/12/78; Acting Chief Commissioner of Police, 13/9/80.” I spent a few days in looking over the reports and seeing what had been done on my return to Benalla.
704. That was on the 3rd of July?—Yes.

C. H. Nicolson,
continued.
25th March 1881.

705. In what state was the correspondence?—It consisted of letters and telegrams that had come in from the public and the police to the police authorities and the Chief Commissioner.
706. Were you then taking charge of the papers that Mr. Hare and Captain Standish had in charge in your absence?—Yes; all correspondence.
707. In what state were the correspondence and telegrams—were they properly filed in rotation?—Yes. The Chief Commissioner was in Melbourne. I relieved Mr. Hare.
708. Before you arrived in Benalla he had left?—Yes; and I relieved Mr. Hare. A large portion of the strength of the force and of the military had been withdrawn, and the force reduced.
709. You have not said when they were sent there?—They were sent there immediately after the Euroa robbery.
710. And after your removal?—Yes; and large reinforcements of police.
711. By whose orders were they sent?—At the request of the Chief Commissioner they were sent by the Government. The Chief Commissioner ordered the police up, not the military. There was a portion of the military left. I had then to set about re-organizing the arrangements of the stations and the strength of the stations.
712. Are we to understand that the military were withdrawn immediately preceding your arrival?—Yes; a large portion.
713. The change took place simultaneously with your going up?—Yes; the horses also. I set to and re-organized the men on this basis, and adopted this view, that with the materials at my command my best course to adopt was to secure places from outrage where there was treasure, so that the outlaws would be baffled in any attempt to replenish their coffers or to get more money. I stationed at Wodonga a small party of men under Sergeant Harkin at Wodonga; the same at Wangaratta, under Sergeant Steele; the same at Bright, under Senior-Constable Shoebridge; and the same at Mansfield, under Sub-Inspector Toohey and Sub-Inspector Pewtress. At each of those places there was barely strength enough for a search party, but they could make up a fair party—seven or eight—by calling in men from neighboring stations. The only place where a complete search party was kept was Benalla. I provided for that subsequently, at the suggestion of Mr. Sadleir. I instructed the police throughout the district to arrange to get quietly and secretly from two to four townsmen of the right sort—that was the expression I used—who would turn out and aid them in case of an attack by the outlaws in any of the townships.
714. Men outside of the constables?—Yes, townsmen. This done quietly, and the names of the men being concealed, we had no difficulty in getting them in every place, it being done secretly and quietly, as I had directed.
715. Were you furnished with the names of these people?—Yes.
716. Was there an engagement entered into to pay them so much?—No, it was voluntary. There was one instruction conveyed in my letter—to rouse the people of the district to their duty as townsmen to resist the outlaws.

717. Was there a sufficient amount of firearms provided the police, and sufficient for any civilians who might assist?—Not altogether; there were sufficient for the police; they were thoroughly well armed at that time and a surplus over; and as far as that surplus went, we distributed arms; but in many instances the men had arms themselves.

718. In the first instance, were the people properly supplied with arms soon after the murders?—No, they were not. The police were without any arms themselves, excepting revolvers.

719. Do you know whether men were not sent up from Melbourne without being furnished with arms?—I am not prepared to answer that question.

720. The police?—Where men were there were arms sent up, of course, which we kept a very careful account of in the district; and when men were sent up without arms, an order would come that such a man was to take the arms of such and such a man, who had left the district, or any arms unused and in reserve; but I am not prepared to say that men were sent up without arms. I am prepared to say that men were not sent up at all; that when casualties occurred to men through sickness or injury of any kind, I found great difficulty in obtaining men to supply their places.

721. Was this after your second visit?—On the second occasion. I have been over a dozen short, and at that time I could not spare a single man.

722. So you arranged for three or four persons to be engaged in each place?—Yes, I did. I arranged also a system that the police should have full authority to go out upon any occasion, according to their discretion, on any information.

723. You allowed the parties to start at their discretion?—On any good information they received.

724. Even from the commencement of the search?—Yes, even from the commencement of the search. I am not aware of anything to the contrary. I directed the police to be very very quiet; to discontinue search parties; to make no demonstrations at all.

725. When was that?—About the same time.

726. About July 1879?—Yes.

727. About what time in July did you tell them to discontinue?—At the very first.

728. Immediately after taking the papers over?—Yes; and I gave other directions by speaking to the men and otherwise to endeavor, by discretion and by not talking much, and being careful not to mention names or use peoples names at all, and in every way they could to regain the confidence of the people about the country. I sought to reduce the expenditure. I found police using hired horses, and some even in the habit of hiring buggies and horses; that I put a stop to, and called in the accounts for them. I had no carte blanche for expenditure—I had no money placed to my credit at all. I paid those accounts out of my own pocket and all other expenses.

729. Was that afterwards refunded to you?—Yes. I was going to add that I subsequently represented the matter, and recovered the money in the usual way from the Government. I found bills for the hire of some of the horses greater than their value. In one case the bill was about £19, and Mr. Sadleir bought the horse for £15. He got the man to cry quits for £15, and got the horse. The stable was a large one, and it was full of police horses on full rations. There was beautiful grass at this season. I had the stable cleared out, and the horses turned out into the paddock, with an allowance varying from 18 lbs. to 20 lbs. of good dry hay per day, in addition to the grass they were getting. I inspected those horses regularly with Mr. Sadleir.

730. How many?—Well, there would be all those horses that were told off for duty. There would be in the paddock there altogether (horses for all parts of the district, and working horses) about twenty to thirty horses. Many of them were spare horses, in case of accident, kept in condition. We inspected them thoroughly, and they kept condition exceedingly well—they were as muscular as possible. Whenever we observed a horse getting apparently sickly, which may happen with any horse, he was taken into the stable, and coddled up a little with oats and bran mash, and in a few days turned out with the rest. We kept the horses in such condition, because it was not advisable that horses that had to go out in pursuit of this gang should have heavy stable feeding, as they could not last above three days, whereas horses fed in this way, just as the outlaws fed theirs, all that had to be done was to turn them out to feed wherever they then were at night. I brought the horses up to that pitch, just as the outlaws were doing theirs.

731. Are we led to believe that this saving was in consequence of the new policy adopted by you on arriving at Benalla?—Yes.

732. Because, on your abandoning the search parties, you did not need so many horses to be kept in the stables?—No; the horses for search parties I did not stable.

733. And the horses were more effective under this method than stable fed?—Yes. I was continually travelling about the country myself, seeing people, and making acquaintances of people in all directions, and making friends, and trying to induce farmers and others to assist; and the men were doing the same, inducing people to see me, or making engagements to come and meet me. I always found them at the time very desirous to assist, but it was always about a month after that one of them would come in and give information, making it nearly a month old. At first it resulted in their never giving any information until it was about a month old.

734. Had they been in possession of this information a month?—Sometimes for a month; then gradually it was reduced to about a fortnight, and occasionally their information latterly, in some cases, Would be about a week old. I have in my hand a return of police expenditure in connection with the search of the gang of outlaws.

735. From what date to what?—From October 26th 1878, three days before the outrage, until December the 12th 1878, the day I was relieved. The railway charges were £703 15s. 7d.—that was on account of the first reinforcements sent up. [The witness handed in the following document]:—

During that period, up to the time I was relieved, the expenditure was £3,407 19s. 11d. From December 13th, the day after I was relieved, until July the 7th, when I returned, the expenditure was £11,371 5s. 4d. From July the 8th 1879, when I began duty, to May 31st 1880, the amount was £6,772 15s. 7d.

736. That is the two occasions you were on duty. The other occasion Captain Standish was on duty?—Yes.

737. Can you account for the increase?—This account, on examination, will explain itself. From June 1st 1880, that is, when I was superseded by Mr. Hare, till June 28th, £673 15s. 11d.

738. From where are those records obtained?—From the accountant.

739. Then the accountant of the department will have all the detailed expenditure in connection with this matter?—All the details, I believe, have gone to the office. Then I gradually obtained agents employed on secret service, and after a time succeeded in collecting four. All I can recollect that I kept end paid regularly for any time were four. Those men were not on the whole of the time, but some at one time and some at another.

740. Were there any women engaged?—No, not that I am aware of. There were other persons that gave me information from time to time, in addition to those casual men, in a casual way, that I may have given a pound or two. I have employed, on an occasion, a man I could rely upon to visit a certain hut at midnight and watch it, where a policeman could not go, or a stranger could not go—a man in the confidence of those people and whose appearance there would have attracted no notice; but that was very seldom, and sometimes I have given a man ten shillings less. I obtained the assistance of a few people, end a great many assisted me from time to time.

741. All under pay?—No, a few occasionally; and persons who could do what I wanted. Without being remarked I ascertained in a very short time. I had information of the outlaws within about a month or six weeks of my arrival; circumstantial and positive information. My first object in going up was to ascertain whether they were in the district or not positively, and I found within about six weeks that it was as I had stated, that they were in the district. The information, at that time, always came too late. Gradually I began to get nearer and nearer to those men and more familiar with hearing about them; but I felt satisfied at last, from the information I was getting, that they would fall into my hands, as many other men of the same description, not quite so notorious, have fallen into the hands of the police with me; that I would have them arrested with ease. As time wore on, they were remarking the absence and non-appearance of the police, and were getting the notion once or twice, and expressed the notion, that the police were afraid of them, and that was the reason that there was no stir at that time; in fact all through towards the end.

742. What time is that?—Down from September, October, November, and December 1879. One time I received a telegram from Superintendent Sadleir; he was up at Wangaratta all September. I had better hand in the telegram.—[The same was handed in, and is as follows]:”—whom we have conversed with on previous occasions, met me to-day here, on his way to see Sergeant Steele. Saw the Captain Sneak and other two close to T. Lloyd's, in the bush, on foot, at eight o'clock last night. He recognized them clearly, but they jumped behind the trees, and he rode on without speaking. He has indicated the spot, so that it can be found without difficulty. Informant says two other horsemen passed almost at the same moment, residents of neighborhood, and, as suspicion may fall equally on them, he risks the information. He only asks that tracks may be taken up at daybreak, before people are moving. His manner is very confident, and any misstatement can be soon discovered by tracking. He should have come into Benalla last night but that he was followed home by a lad on horseback, he thinks young Lloyd, who probably watched his place all night. I shall arrange here with Steele about local crossings, &c., and with the Eldorado constable. If party goes out, as I certainly recommend, you should send out orders to other places. Spink's crossing, near Tarrawongee, not fordable. Two more constables, without horses, required here, and one, with horse, to Myrtleford; but this can be done best from Beechworth. Will return by six p.m.” I telegraphed to Mr. Sadleir to bring that informer down.

743. Where was that from?—From Benalla to Wangeratta. Mr. Sadleir happened to be up at Wangeratta, and met this man, and telegraphed that down to me, and I impressed that strongly upon him, and I went up to the train to meet Mr. Sadleir, and on his return he came alone. I asked him where was the man, and he said he was drinking; he left him drinking at the hotel at some place; that he did not think it worth while to bring him, because he thought he was quite able to lead me to the place himself. Upon conversation with Mr. Sadleir, I found that he could not do so, that his knowledge of the place was quite vague. One ridge on the right, among many other stony ridges—this was in September, and I found that before we could have any possibility of catching up with the supposed outlaws, even if they had left any tracks—those footmen, for they were on foot, not on horseback—the people about the country, who were the greater portion of them sympathizers, would discover us; and if we went to the spot with the blacks, we would be discovered before we got away from it, in tracing the way to where they had gone, and warning would be sent to the outlaws. Without saying more, I will hand in this letter to Mr. Standish, and to which he alluded in his evidence.

744. Is this the case—where the horses were unsaddled, where he said you got reliable information from Mr. Sadleir, and which up to a certain time would be acted upon—Mr. Sadleir thought that you countermanded it—is that the case you refer to now?—Yes.—[The letter was handed in and read, as follows:—]

MEMO.—Attached are Superintendent Sadleir's telegrams. The informant was -----; he stated he saw five men. From conversation with Superintendent Sadleir, upon his return from Wangeratta, it did not appear that "the spot was indicated so that it could be found without difficulty," nor that "it could be taken up by the trackers at daybreak before the people were moving" and had become conscious of the presence of the police among them. The subsequent examination of Mounted-Constable Ryan as to the locality and its approaches did not tend to remove the above impression. It appeared that the neighborhood was settled, and that our party could hardly expect to pass Lloyd's house, even at midnight without being discovered, and that the trackers might have to search over at least a quarter of a mile before finding the footprints; and considering the precaution said to have been taken by the men seen by ---- in sending a man to dog him home, it seemed likely that they had taken the other precaution of moving off, and, with the fifth man and other friends, each had taken separate directions, so that the trackers pursuing might find themselves running down one wrong man. Sub-Inspector O'Connor was of opinion that the chance of success was a bad one. Considering my other improving sources of information, I determined, upon this occasion, not to disturb the false sense of security into which outlaws have been lulled. Although I decided upon the above course upon the merits of the report made to me, yet I may remind the Chief Commissioner that -----, the informant, was the man who tried to induce me to proceed with the Benalla police and meet him at the head of the King River on the day before the Eureka bank robbery.

(Signed) C. H. NICOLSON, A.C.P.

To the Chief Commissioner of Police.

745. Can you give an idea of the locality—was this near Tom Lloyd's house?—Yes.

746. At Killara?—Yes. I may tell you the man intended to come down to Benalla and lead us there himself to the spot. Considering the success of the system that I was following at that time, I was determined not to throw away the chances I held of securing the outlaws by running any risk of alarm at this time and frighten the outlaws away, and perhaps losing sight—losing all run of them—for months. I formed no cordon at any time. It was often supposed by people that the police had formed a cordon round; that was attributed to me—that I was endeavoring to form a cordon round them. I never intended or attempted to do such a thing, excepting of secret agents. On the contrary, I had very strong reason to apprehend that if we started them and betrayed to them the knowledge of the possession of good information against them and they escaped, that they would abandon that part of the country altogether and move away eastward to the north-east corner of the district, across the river, to Tomroggin, in New South Wales, a very inaccessible district, and remain there until the vigilance was relaxed—in fact, remain masters of the situation till vigilance was relaxed, and then come down and make another raid upon the district. My determination was to prevent them making any raid; and I felt quite capable, from the means at my disposal and the way my system was working, of doing so, and I succeeded in that. I have often been out with mounted police at night; and any experienced member of the police force will tell you that going out at night with a party of mounted men on anything like vague information into the bush to make an arrest is a very unwise thing. Experience shows that it is a thing that should not be done unless upon good information, as it results—as I have seen it often do—in the men being humbugged, kept out all night, and returning home, the laughing-stock of the people all round, without success. I may tell you that about this time, on the 20th July 1879, I visited a camp. A camp was discovered of the outlaws, up a creek in those ranges, between Chiltern and Beechworth. I found a camp in a depression in the low-lying ground alongside the creek, amongst some bushes. There were the marks of their horses standing there, and the marks of the bridles chafing the bushes, and very small quantities of ashes spread over about a couple of yards, and no appearance of the fire here they had come from. On removal of a heap of leaves and rubbish, there was a round fire—a mark on the ground of black, showing where the fire had been, which they had carefully concealed in that way. Before abandoning this camp, they had put the fire out and thrown the ashes away and covered up the fire-place in this way. At last there were reports came in from the neighborhood of some distance from Greta, and between Greta and Oxley, of their stealing a number of mould-boards of ploughs.

747. What date?—About the beginning of February 1880.
748. Where is the armour of Ned Kelly that is supposed to be made out of that?—It is in the depôt.
749. Can the Commission see it?—I think so. I had three suits of armour at the depôt.
750. Can we have Ned Kelly’s armour brought here?—Yes; that can be done. [The Chairman requested that that might be done.] I sent the police out to enquire into those matters, and the enquiry was very actively prosecuted. It was personally in the hands of Senior-Constable Kelly. Some footmarks were discovered; but though they were out for several days enquiring, they could not discover who had been the offenders. Those mould-boards were taken from more than one man. There were two or three different farms they were taken from.
751. Within a radius of what?—About eight miles. There were traces of footsteps discovered; and I also received from another source a description of the footmarks of the men, and I believe they corresponded exactly with the description the police gave. One of them described was the footstep of a man with a very small boot, with what is called a "larrikin" heel upon it. I received information from one of my agents that the Kelly gang were the offenders.
752. Were the black trackers then under your control?—Yes; there were two black trackers went out with this party.
753. I mean the special detachment?—Yes; the Queensland blacks. There were two went out on those enquiries. There were other things stolen. There was a man named Carney, a selector, lost, I think, two sides of bacon, which were taken by the same party.
754. Was that from the same neighborhood?—Yes; from the same neighborhood. Subsequently I heard that they were being made into, and were intended for, armour.
755. How long after you got the first information about it did you hear that?—It was on May 20th. I will read if you will allow me—[handing in a letter]. We wrote those letters in a special way. Each of my agents had a special character given them. This one was supposed to be an inspector of stock, and the term “diseased stock” was supposed to mean the outlaws, and under that veil he wrote to me as follows:—“Greta, May 20, 1880. Mr. William Charles Balfour, Benalla. Dear Sir,—Nothing definite re the diseased stock of this locality. I have made careful inspection, but did find (sic) exact source of disease. I have seen and spoke to — and —— on Tuesday, who were fencing near home. All others I have not been able to see. Missing portions of cultivators described as jackets are now being worked, end fit splendidly. Tested previous to using, and proof at 10 yards. I shall be in Wangaratta on Monday, before when I may learn how to treat the disease. I am perfectly satisfied that it is where last indicated, but in what region I can’t discover. A break-out may be anticipated, as feed is getting very scarce. Five are now bad. I will post a note giving any bad symptoms I may perceive from Wangaratta on Monday or Tuesday at latest, and will wait on you for news how to proceed on a day which I shall then state, before end of the week. Other animals are, I fear, diseased.—Yours faithfully, B. C. W.” I would draw particular attention to the date of that—May 20th.
756. That is a week before you were removed?—Yes. [The witness handed in a list of his appointments.]
757. You were a cadet were you not?—I was.
758. Will you proceed?—I had interviews with my agents from time to time, the one who wrote previous to that, and other agents as well, that the outlaws were in the vicinity of the Greta ranges, and were reduced to great straits. Their horses were worn out, and most of them were abandoned. They were on foot, and used to conceal themselves during the day on the ranges in various parts. They were for a short time, from information I was led to believe, on the edge of the Greta Swamp.
759. The ranges come quite close down to Greta Swamp?—Yes, and the outlaws used to move from there back; then they would go round and get across the Ovens River by the near bridge or some of the other crossing places that make away to Sebastopol, and make away towards the Pilot Range near Wodonga at night. They used to travel until before daybreak. They were generally accompanied by their sympathizers; their immediate aids and active assistants were reduced to about four.

760. What month was this?—About the months of April and May. One of the four, I may mention their own sister; one or two of those sympathizers, when they travelled, used always to go about ahead on the look-out, and they would follow at the usual distance, just within sight. One of those sympathizers—the principal of them, and the most active of them—told them that they must get some money; they must go and "do a bank," or "another bank."

761. This is a portion of the agent's information you are now giving?—Yes, that agent in particular.

762. Received about the time you got the correspondence?—Yes, I was in communication with them some time before that; the outlaws had been settled at somewhere in the low ranges between their uncle, old Tom Lloyd, and the paddock along the Oxley road—Wilson's paddock; they had settled down for a time, concealed there. At that time, perhaps you may recollect, notice was taken by the press of very disorderly conduct at the Glenrowan Hotel.

763. How far are those places?—Greta Swamp was quite close, but the Glenrowan Swamp was some distance off. Glenrowan is about six miles from Greta Swamp.

764. They had settled down at Wilson's paddock—how far is that?—Oh, a long way; that is not far from Greta, a few miles from Greta, nearer Wangaratta, on the Greta road.

765. All those places were in the immediate vicinity of the Glenrowan Hotel?—Yes, vicinity—but not immediate vicinity. I had a man, an agent, by the Glenrowan Hotel, watching it; and he was reporting to me from time to time the people who frequented it—they were creating a disturbance at this place; this was in May.

766. Would you indicate what hotel?—Jones's hotel, where they were ultimately taken.

767. Were those communications by word of mouth?—Verbally, and I used to see him and note regularly in my note-book. None of the outlaws came to Jones's hotel; they were all sympathizers, and they were, no doubt, carousing about there for a purpose.

POLICE.

E

C. H. Nicolson, continued.
25th March 1881.

768. For the purpose of obtaining information?—They were there for the purpose of watching. I had a close watch at the same time from that down to Lake Rowan where there were some friends of the Kellys. The effect of those notices in the press drove them away from the neighborhood of Greta.

769. During the month of April or May?—The month of April. My informant stated that he knew perfectly well; he was never in personal communication with them, but, from his sources of information he knew perfectly well that they were in some gully between the Greta Swamp, Mrs. Skillion's and Tom Lloyd's, or the Quarryhole. He thought they would probably be, and he would find out.

770. That was all in the immediate neighborhood of Glenrowan?—Yes, not immediate neighborhood.

771. What were the notices in the press?—The local press drew attention to various riotous conduct going on at this public-house, and suggested that the police should take some steps about it.

772. You mentioned in your evidence notices in the press, have you got those extracts cut out and pasted in any paper?—No, I have not.

773. You did not take notes of them in your diary?—No, the outlaws had a tent about four feet high with them to cover them in bad weather, and, with a little vigilance and keeping perfectly quiet, my man said he would be able to bring us close to them, in fact, indicating in such a way that I anticipated in a very short time, being able to go to this place at midnight, wait till daylight, and have our hands on their throats without any trouble. At this time I also found very suspicious movements taking place between Glenrowan and Lake Rowan by means of the watch I was keeping up.

774. On the part of the outlaws?—Their friends; there was no appearance of the outlaws themselves. A party of their friends, active sympathizers, crossed the line just at Glenrowan, on horseback, got up mounted and dressed and equipped as if they were starting for the shearing. They were closely watched in the neighborhood of one of their friends at Lake Rowan, and a change was observed take place in this party. Four of the number (there were about six of the men) were stopped at Yarrawonga punt by the police, and it was ascertained who those four were. They were acquaintances, and were apparently going shearing, and were equipped in what is termed a very "flash" style for shearsers.

775. Were those same the four you mentioned just now, when you said the number of sympathizers was reduced to four?—Three of them were; one, the principal man, was Tom Lloyd.

776. You are aware he was with them all through; during your evidence, you have mentioned young Tom Lloyd?—I think I have not mentioned young Tom Lloyd—he was absent for some considerable time in New South Wales, and then made his appearance.

777. What relation was Tom Lloyd to them?—First cousin. He disappeared from among those starting to shear. The police watched them, by my orders, as closely as they could, without being discovered. Then one of my agents, who was watching the relatives' house at Lake Rowan, observed a hut at some distance from the main house; he was watching it all night. At daylight he saw a man, one of the sons of the house, come out of the hut and leave the door open. He was a very sharp man, and in a minute he saw the door close, and he was able to discern it was not closed by wind or any natural swing, but it must have been pushed to. He came in and reported this to me, and I knew that the Kellys had visited this place. I had heard of them and, although I did not expect much from it, I considered it necessary to send a party to surprise this hut, which they did, and they found master Tom Lloyd.

778. What date was that?—About the 13th of May; the men under Senior-Constable Kelly found Tom Lloyd on the 20th May. The party passed through on the 15th. Though my agent told me about Glenrowan and Greta, I was very watchful and very uneasy about that other country—about their being down in that other country—Lake Rowan, and from there north toward Murray river.

779. Going north?—Yes, north, towards the Murray.

780. Between the Murray and Glenrowan?—Yes.

781. Did they arrest Lloyd at the hut?—No, they stopped him and made him stand, and they saw the man, but there was no charge against him; he chaffed them and they came away quite good humoredly. There was no ground for arresting him whatever. We could have arrested him at any time some time previous to that.

782. Was Lloyd one of the men ultimately arrested as a sympathizer?—Yes, it is the same man.

783. Who was in Beechworth Gaol as a sympathizer?—Yes. About this time, soon after this I heard of Dan Kelly and Dick Hart calling at the place of a man near Chiltern, a well-known house.

784. Do you mean the outlaw, Dan Kelly?—Yes.

785. And Hart?—Yes.

786. What was the name of the outlaw Hart?—Steve Hart.

787. You did not say Steve?—I meant Steve Hart. They were described to me as very much emaciated; in a very miserable state, and asking for food. My informant told me that Dan Kelly’s face was remarkably broad, and he was so emaciated that you could put your fists on his cheek bones; but this information was not given to me until some considerable time after that; but that was the first time, after, the movements of these men, that I heard any authentic information of the outlaws. I then heard of them——

788. When is this, April and May?—This is within a few days after the 20th May. At this time I had received notice of being superseded.

789. When is that?—A few days after the 20th, during the month of May. I received notice I was to be superseded in April, and that I was to be granted a month more. The month’s extension was given me, and all these important movements were occurring during the month of May. Then I received information of the outlaws having been seen in the Sebastopol, both at Mrs. Byrne’s, the mother of one of the outlaws, and at ——, or ——— had seen Joe Byrne.

790. Will you fix the date for that?—Yes, on the 26th May.

791. Had you heard it on the 26th, or had she seen him on the 26th of May?—I was in Melbourne on the 26th, and I heard it on that day on my way up.

792. That ——— had seen Joe Byrne?—No, the appearance of some of the outlaws at Mrs. Byrne’s house.

793. On what day was he seen?—It was some days before that.

794. And on the 26th you got notice he had been seen?—Yes, I came up from Melbourne, on my way to Beechworth. On Saturday the 29th of May I saw ——— personally.

35

795. Which ———?—Old ———. She told me that, about three days before, she had seen Joe Byrne, in the morning.

796. How far would ———’s house be from Byrne’s?—A considerable distance; this was a hut of ——, about a mile from the holding of the ———.

797. Was this where you saw her?—No; I saw her in Beechworth. This was early in the morning, and this person said she was looking for her cows, and when she came to this hut she saw the outlaw Joe Byrne come out of a calf pen, and his horse was near at hand, in an enclosure. Some conversation passed between them—I presume you will hear it again, perhaps—shall I repeat it all?

798. It will be as well to give the information?—She asked him what he was doing there, and his reply was—“Oh, we could go anywhere were it not for your sanguinary son there.” That was the principal thing I recollect. There were some other words between them, but I do not recollect them.

799. Did you take any action on the information supplied by this woman?—Yes; I had the place examined where his horse was said to have been, and I had the horse tracked from there to Mrs. Byrne’s house, then tracked away again from the house for some distance, on to a road, amongst a lot of tracks, where it was indistinguishable, the track was lost. I hurried down to Benalla—this was on Saturday—from Beechworth, arranging before I went for a party to go to a certain hut—Aaron Sherritt’s—commanding a view of Mrs. Byrne’s.

800. Did he live at that time with his mother?—I think the mother-in-law was living with him. I do not know whether she was there at that time. I do not know who was there, except that Aaron Sherritt lived there with his wife, and his mother-in-law lived with him before he went there. The men were to keep a look out in that neighborhood, to watch Mrs. Byrne’s.

801. Were those the constables that were afterwards in Sherritt’s house when Aaron Sherritt was shot?—No, I believe not. On Sunday I had the telegraph office open all day, I think, and I attended very closely to the telegraph office at Benalla all day. Then I had an agent that had been down watching and discovered young Tom Lloyd in the hut. I sent him up there into that country. I removed him from where he was to the Sebastopol ranges, and that country, and I had a party of men ready, and warned the Beechworth men also to be ready, and I had the trackers also ready with the view of proceeding. I received a communication in the course of Sunday that a man, believed to be Joe Byrne, had been seen by my agent at the back of a rock, at the head of a gully near a place called London—a gully along Mrs Byrne’s house, at the mouth of which her house is situated; it is a very long gully, remarkably steep. After a consultation with Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor, I determined to go out, and acting upon that information, started about five o’clock by the early train on Monday morning from Benalla, with the trackers and five or six men. We reached Everton, and got out there, meeting my agent end Aaron Sherritt, who had been employed even before I came up in enquiring into the tracing of the outlaws with the police. We proceeded on through the bush, guided by Sherritt, so as to avoid coming in contact with any individual, and reached Crawford’s paddock. We proceeded on foot through that country until we came to the head of that gully. I sent three of the mounted men to take one side, and three to take the other side, on the very top of the precipices and cliffs. I myself went down with Mr. O’Connor and the trackers and one or two men. We left the horses. I had brought some of the men mounted to take the sides of the gully; however, down we went to the place with the guide to point out the spot where he had seen the man. The trackers went to the place. We could see the trace of footsteps, and we could see along the gully, but when we came near to this place, and we went up to the rock behind which he saw the man appear, there were no traces of any one whatever, and Mr. O’Connor told me the blacks explained to him there were traces of a young man with a foot just such as described as Byrne’s, with a small foot, driving a cow up the gully. Mr. O’Connor and the blacks followed down this gully to near——’s house, and, looking for traces all round for a mounted man on either side of the cliffs, we examined the gully all down, and the men up above examined the country above, and without any trace whatever. I had no doubt at this time that this information of seeing a man was perfectly true; other information about seeing the man at the hut, and about his being at Mrs. Byrne’s, I was very doubtful of—at any rate, I was quite satisfied, after the search we made, and seeing this agent was wrong in this instance, that these (the outlaws) men were gone from there at this time. They had been there two or three days before, but they had returned back to Greta. I know that since then immediately after that they went to, and came round by, Greta, and crossed Glenrowan; they went away beyond Lake Rowan. In that direction I was watching before, and there the horses were stolen which were found when they were arrested, but I had to return and meet Mr. Hare.

802. The horses found on the capture of the Kellys they found afterwards were horses belonging to a man called Ryan, at Rowan?—Yes.

803. And those were the horses you speak of?—Yes; in fact I may state this with reference to that: I saw the convict Ned Kelly, after his conviction; had an interview with him; I knew him pretty well before, and he said to me in a sulky sort of way, “I hear, Mr. Nicolson, you have been saying you surrounded me, but you know very well I did disable you, that you were disabled and starved; you were on your last legs.” And his reply was, “Oh, how was that? Look at those horses we got.” “Ah, but,” I said, “you stole those horses in June?” —“Yes.” “Are you not aware that I left before June; I left in the beginning of June?” “Oh,” he said, expressing the greatest surprise.

804. Did you see those horses?—Yes. “Look at those horses we got.” “Ah, but,” I said, “you stole those horses in June?” —“Yes.” “Are you not aware that I left before June; I left in the beginning of June?”

805. Were those stable-fed horses?—I do not know; I never saw them.

806. You have brought us up to the 27th or 28th of May?—No; I have brought you up to the very last.

807. What day was that?—31st May. On the 1st of June we slept that night at Crawford’s.

808. At Beechworth?—No; we did not go near Beechworth. I sent a party of men into Beechworth.

809. I want to get the time that your connection with the Kelly search ceased?—On the 1st June, at daybreak. After that night we slept at Crawford’s paddock, and after that I broke up the party, and despatched them to search through the country. I returned with the trackers, and with Senior-Constable Kelly, the two constables, and Mr. O’Connor, to Benalla. Next morning, 2nd June, I had a meeting with

Mr. Hare, and I left Crawford’s on the 1st of June. On the 2nd I met Mr. Hare by appointment, and then I myself returned in the evening to Melbourne.

810. That was your last connection with the Kelly business?—Yes.

811. Do I understand that you had nothing further to do with the Kelly capture after that date?—
Nothing whatever. I received orders to proceed to the Wimmera, the North-Western district, and on the day they were captured I found myself away on the border of the South Australian colony, as far away as I could be.

812. Were you at Benalla or in Melbourne at the time of the Jerilderie bank robbery?—I was in Melbourne.

813. Do you know the particulars of the robbery there?—I have heard them just from hearsay. I know very little of it; I was out at Porcupine Creek, near Chiltern, on the road between Beechworth and Chiltern, and the track was pointed out where they had passed, and where Joe Byrne was seen.

814. You were in Melbourne at the time of the Jerilderie robbery?—I was.

815. Who was in charge of the north-eastern country then?—Captain Standish.

816. Did you make yourself acquainted with the particulars of that robbery, namely, what moneys were taken?—Yes, all the particulars.

817. I want to ask you about it later on?—Yes the particulars reached me in the usual way.

818. You had full information how many five-pound notes were taken, what bank, and so on?—Yes.

819. You had official knowledge—not at once?—I believe so.

820. You had not yourself personally?—No, I had not. I could not speak now, unless I looked them up.

821. I would like to ask some questions about that robbery, in consequence of its being spread about that a large quantity of those notes were circulated in Benalla; and therefore I should like you to be ready?—I may say, when in Benalla, I was informed frequently of the circulation of the notes, but they could not be identified; and I remember a correspondence passing through my hands, when I was here about notes that had been circulated, passed from one of the sympathizers to a storekeeper in Wangaratta, but I know of notes also that were passed in Benalla.

822. An article appeared in the papers about that time, that notes of the Jerilderie bank, in New South Wales, which would be subject to exchange in this country, were being very freely distributed in the neighborhood of Beechworth, for stores and otherwise. The matter was brought up in the House, and I did state that I personally found that that money was exchanged in Benalla for goods and stores; can you say whether that information, from your own knowledge, that I asserted was correct, was correct or not?—I believe it was—not to a large extent.

823. Do you know, of your own personal knowledge—when you were in Benalla were you informed by any person that supplies were bought in Benalla, or in the townships about, by the Kellys?—No; I have seen the Miss Kellys frequently in a shop at Benalla, making purchases there.

824. What character of purchases?—A very ordinary character; they were generally on horseback.

825. What did they buy?—Well, they were principally things for themselves, for their own consumption.

826. What things?—Clothing for the children.

827. Tobacco?—I am not sure of their buying it.

828. Was tobacco reported to you?—No.

829. Was it reported to you that they paid in Bank of New South Wales notes?—I was shown notes to smell. They smelt as if they had been planted in the earth.

830. Was it reported to you by any agent, or officer, or policeman that the Kellys were in the habit of getting supplies at Ball’s shop and elsewhere, and that they paid for those purchases in notes issued in New South Wales?—Yes, I heard they did.

831. Have you heard that tobacco was bought there?—I will not say I have heard tobacco was bought there, but I know old Tom Lloyd, a relative of theirs, an uncle, used to buy stores of every kind, tobacco and other things, which I have no doubt reached the outlaws.

832. Did you hear beside of the purchase of sardines, and tinned fish, and hams?—No, I cannot say that.

833. You do not recollect the particulars?—No, I have heard of that kind of stuff being bought at places, evidently for them.

834. You have no doubt in your own mind that their relations—this man was their uncle?—I speak of other people also, sympathizers.

835. As a matter of fact, you know those supplies were bought there?—I heard afterwards that they were purchased.

836. Have you any doubt that those reached the Kelly outlaws?—Some things I have very little doubt of.

837. And that money was paid for those stores in Bank of New South Wales notes?—Yes.

838. And you yourself have smelt those notes, and said they had an earthy smell?—Yes, two were shown me.

839. Besides those notes, were you aware of other notes for large amounts being issued in the district?—I have heard of it, but I have only seen two notes shown to me by a storekeeper there. I wish to add, in reference to something said by Captain Standish: In the course of my duty there, hearing various rumors and reports from Aaron Sherritt, since deceased, of the appearance of one of the outlaws singly, sometimes singly and sometimes in couples, suddenly out of Sherritt’s house, and also assertions that Byrne was in the habit of frequently visiting his mother’s house, I formed a party and placed them in a cave just about Mrs. Byrne’s house.

840. When was this; you had left on the 2nd?—This was previous to my leaving.
841. Will you fix a date?—About the 1st of December 1879. This place was thoroughly secret, and is away in the centre of nothing but rocks and stones, and no vegetation at all—nothing to induce any person to go there—and it was unknown, I was led to believe, to every one but Sherritt. I selected four men, and I spent with them, in the presence of Senior Constable Mullane and Detective Ward, one to two hours in going over and instructing them in their duty, warning them against every possible contingency or occurrences that might take place, and impressing upon them that their object was not to be surprised, but to surprise again. They had the assistance of the deceased Aaron Sherritt. They started at midnight, humping down their provisions, and blankets, and necessaries, without meeting with any one, and all these precautions were taken. Their practice was to come down the hill. The house (Mrs. Byrne’s) was watched by Sherritt.

842. He was not in the cave?—No, in the long grass, commanding a view of her house. About ten and eleven o’clock these men used to emerge from this cave and come down very warily—they had been rehearsed in it all—and take up position apart from each other, to surprise the outlaws if they should attempt to visit that house. I had other four men who relieved them. They were relieved by four men at the end of each week, once a week. Before daylight in the morning they used to ascend the hill and get back before daylight into the cave. Aaron Sherritt was instructed and employed to go round quietly, and warn them not to leave any traces, footprints, &c.; and he was instructed to hide and conceal any if they did leave any. This was continued on for some time. Whenever I reported it to Captain Standish I received a reply from him to remove them at once.

843. To remove the men from the cave?—Yes.

844. Is that in writing?—Yes, I can produce the letter. That if I considered it was a secret, I was mistaken, that it was actually known in the Richmond Depot.

845. What was known?—About the secret cave party. I replied, remonstrating against doing so, and assuring him of the perfect safety of the arrangement, and that it was a perfect secret up there. I also added that I was very sorry that the depôt was such a place which received information of that kind so rapidly on such a matter where such matters were concerned, the secret movements of the police.

846. This was in December 1879?—Yes.

847. At that time I understood you to say you had full charge of that district?—Yes.

848. Then why was the necessity of communicating with Captain Standish at all?—I had to keep the head of the department advised of what I was doing, for the Government as well as himself.

849. And he had the power to countermand, by his order, what you did?—Yes.

850. Have you got the letter?—Yes, I have a letter to that effect.

851. You can put it in at some future time?—Yes.

852. Is that the first time that you make the statement that any order of that character was sent to you—it is in your memory that he was in the habit of sending similar orders?—I have other orders that I have received of a similar description.

853. I understood both you and Captain Standish that you were altogether acting on your own responsibility, that he understood you were acting in that way; and I understood you to say also you had sole control?—So I had until he interfered. As Chief Commissioner of Police he had the right to interfere.

854. When would you fix the date if the first interference—was this a solitary instance, or was it a matter that had occurred before the 4th December 1879?—I would rather defer answering that for the present.

855. I want you to see that Captain Standish was very specific; on more than one occasion the word that he used was that you had carte blanche, and did exactly as you liked—that you yourself took the responsibility?—I did take the responsibility until any occasion he interfered with me, when I had to submit.

856. Is this the position of affairs—you are now complaining of what Captain Standish did in 1879, countermanding orders you had given?—Yes.

857. He did so on other occasions?—Yes, he did so on other occasions.

858. You are not prepared at present to give that information, but you will do so later on?—Yes.

859. Did you let Captain Standish know that you had these men in the cave?—Certainly, I did, and soon after I received that letter.

860. Captain Standish says this matter was known in the depôt?—Yes.

861. Were your men bound to any secrecy?—Yes, they were.

862. Then the matter must have been communicated from your men to the depôt at Richmond?—Yes, I have no doubt he had been informed from the depôt. [The extract from the letter referred to was read, under the date 15th January 1880, as follows:—] “It would be better to have this work done by them (that is the ——) if the —— are to be depended upon, even if we had to subsidise them occasionally. As to secrecy which you believe has been observed about this watching party, I may tell you that the existence of this party and even the names of the constables employed are known all through the depôt.” That was the position then.
when I received peremptory orders to retire.

863. Did he give you instructions, in addition to that, to stop it?—He did, on more than one occasion, till at last I had to give it up.

864. Were the instructions in writing?—I cannot remember; a number of Captain Standish’s letters I did not keep.

865. I take it that you put in this letter to show that you were carrying out certain arrangements in this district, and they were unfairly interfered with by Captain Standish?—Yes.

866. Had you, after receiving this letter, positive instructions to discontinue this party?—I had; I wrote back to him, telling him, whether it was secret at the depôt or not, I could not say, but it was a dead secret up there, and for months afterwards.

867. Is it not perfectly credible, in fact, that it would be known at the depôt and not there?—Yes, but if it was known at the depôt, it must have been known by the men in my district; the men serving in Benalla and Beechworth did not know of it.

868. Have you the next letter of Captain Standish’s imperatively commanding you?—No, I cannot say whether he wrote or ordered me verbally. He frequently visited me at that time.

869. Can you fix your memory now, not fixing absolutely to time, is it on your mind that on any other occasion he absolutely issued an order to you which, in your opinion, was contrary to your duty and interest?—Yes.

870. So that it interfered with the efficiency of the duty that you were then doing?—It did, and I can satisfy you of that. At the same time, whilst these men were out on this cave duty, I had a man travelling amongst the population all round who did not know the men were there, but his orders were, “Find out what is the talk about the Kellys.”

25th March 1881.

871. The point really is that your arrangements there were unfairly interfered with by the head of the department. He has sworn you had carte blanche, and yet it appears he interfered?—I ultimately, from his persevering and ordering me on this subject, had to break up this party.

872. Were there other occasions of the same sort?—I will come to another occasion. I can bring witnesses also to prove these things.

873. Is it not a fact that nearly all the statements made by you, the same as Captain Standish’s, will be corroborated; the official documents will put them right?—Yes, I am quite confident of that. When I took charge of the district, casualties arose: men, from one thing and other, had to withdraw from the district; a man with a broken leg, a man suffering from sunstroke or fever, and the meagre skeleton of the force I had was often reduced by about twelve men, and I could not spare a single man. One man died up there as the result of the work. I used to write very strongly, several times, about those vacancies being filled up. Here is one instance. There were all these men absent at one time—[handing in a return, which was as follows:—]

This is my letter in reply to him:—
In reply to the Chief Commissioner’s minute M 7787, 1/8/79, I beg to refer to the attached report, of 2nd instant, from Superintendent Sadleir, and also to the amended return furnished in consequence of changes made since the 19th ultimo. I beg to remind the Chief Commissioner of the reductions made recently in this district, viz., fifty-two constables and twenty-three soldiers, in all seventy-five men, and which do not include the detachments of military also lately withdrawn from Seymour and Avenel.

The attached return shows what is left in each station in this district; and I must respectfully protest against any further diminution of strength, excepting where constables are employed watching the banks shall be replaced by suitable men at the expense of those establishments.

The question appears to resolve itself into this:—Is it desirable to prevent further outrages by the Kelly gang? I submit that it is desirable to prevent further outrages. There is no doubt that their success has given them prestige, and that, together with the amount of money they obtained, has procured them assistance, and has acted as an antidote to the high reward offered against them.

I have reason to believe that the above effect is gradually becoming weaker, in consequence of their money being nearly all expended.

There is also the bad moral effect which would be produced should they make another successful raid, especially if blood is shed.

The mere loss of money to any banking establishment is, I consider, of the least importance in this matter.

It is not advisable to speak, at present, of the prospect of capturing the outlaws. But I trust that the existing state of things will not last much longer in the North-Eastern District; and I hope that the present strength will not be reduced, and that as little attention as possible will be drawn to the subject.

C. H. NICOLSON,
Asst.-Commissioner Police.

874. The date of that letter is 4th August 1879?—Yes.
875. Then that was the month after you resumed duty on the second occasion?—Yes, I had to go down to Melbourne once or twice to remonstrate about that; and my whole time, as witnesses will prove, was taken up in that way; there was not a month or two months passed without something of this kind to distract us from the business we had in hand.
876. When was that?—The whole time till the time I was superseded.
877. This is the communication you sent a month after you resumed duty?—Yes.
878. Was there any answer from Captain Standish?—Yes.
879. Have you it?—No, I have not, but the amount of men and the strength of the system I was to pursue was known to Captain Standish before that. The reason I repeated was, I found it necessary to repeat in matters of duty of that kind, to make it as plain as possible to Captain Standish.
880. Did he reply to that, explaining why the number of men had been reduced?—I have no recollection; probably he did.
881. Do you complain that, in reply to that, he reduced the men further, or did he send you more?—My reply to that is, that my force was never kept up to the mark. When I did get men to supply the places of those men, I had sick men and invalids sent up to me in that district.
882. He did not assist you after that remonstrance?—He may have sent one or two men. I can get the exact reply.
883. I recollect, at that time, there was a long talk in the House of the outlay, about the large expenditure, and the money would not be voted—perhaps there was some reason?—There was no increase to the estimates, to the number of the police force at all, so that there was no increase with the number of men with this Kelly raid; those extra men in the North-Eastern District were taken from other districts.
884. As the answer to that letter would be of an official character, is it likely to be in the press copies of the department?—I hope to find it in that; but during that time the strength of the force was never made up; and when I left the office, I used always to keep that and other memoranda before me on my writing table in the office. There was a list of the men who were missing on the table or above the chimney. I have been short of men even at Cashel, that most important place, where most serious outrages might have been committed, where we had no telegraph station.

885. Will you supply the Commission with the force of the North-Eastern District at the time that you left charge in 1880?—Yes, I will do so. Captain Standish alluded to my business habits, and my agents. I do not wish to take any notice of that, but I just wish to show the mode of my settling up, and for that purpose I will quote my report to the Chief Commissioner with reference to one of those agents. I wish to draw your attention to the fact that the essentials have been complied with. In the first instance the man does not make his appearance for a certain date, but I had arranged he was to be paid off on the day previous to that. I did not pay him after that, because I communicated with him in the channel which he chose himself. I next make sure I part with him on good terms, and not to send him away to do us harm.—[The witness handed in the following paper]:—Benalla, 26th February 1880.—Memo.—Confidential.—I. The attached claim is for service principally rendered last year, that is from 1st November 1879 to beginning of February 1880. Claimant made a charge up to yesterday’s date, but, as I had sent him notice on 3rd February that his services were no longer required, I have only allowed to the 5th, as any delay which occurred was his own fault, my notice having been sent to him through a channel of communication chosen by himself. 2. Of course I have taken care to satisfy him that he has been treated fairly, and he is ready to take service again if required. 3. He has been employed watching Brien and his orangery, and working between the place and Greta. His observations and information obtained are valuable. 5. Will the Chief Commissioner be good enough to cause the amount to be drawn through the attached form H and sent to this office, so that £5 advanced to him can be stopped.” I was most particular in paying away money to the same class of people as the outlaws. I used to get receipts from the office here, and have them witnessed by Mr. Sadleir; and my expenses did not mount up; for one man and the service of his horse it amounts only 15s. and £1 per week whilst I had him employed. The poor man lost by it, but it just happened by the arrangement he made he thought he could gain by it. But the total expenditure of mine of that kind was very small indeed. I have finished my statement.

886. I will draw your attention to two matters. This is your printed letter of 30th June 1880:—“I have the honor respectfully to request that, before proceeding to acknowledge the services of those engaged in the destruction of the Kelly gang of outlaws, a searching enquiry be held into the whole circumstances and transactions of the police administration in the North-Eastern District since the Kelly outbreak in October 1878, and particularly into the circumstances of my recent withdrawal from that district”?—Yes.

887. The question I want to ask is this. You have entered into a lengthy detail of the exact position of the Kelly outlaws at the time you left the district. Is that the reason that you ask that enquiry might be delayed until these facts you have now stated were made public. Am I to understand that you have now entered into the full details of the exact position you had the outlaws in at the time you withdrew in May and April?—Yes.

888. And therefore you consider at that particular time you were unjustly treated in your withdrawal?—Yes. Nothing to do with the reward at all, but with my withdrawal.

889. Was that what you meant in that letter you wish delayed till the facts you now mentioned were before the department?—Yes.

890. You wish us to understand in your opinion you had the Kellys almost completely under your control at the time you were withdrawn?—I do, and I say it not only on behalf of my assistants and agents.

891. Was that the object of the letter?—Yes, for myself and the others.

892. You recollect a letter—you have not alluded to it—which was given upon oath by a young fellow named ——, is he one of the —— that is alluded to in Captain Standish’s letter?—I suppose so, I know the man well.

893. Did you pay him any service money?—I did.

894. Under whose control was the North-Eastern District; who was in charge when the sympathizers were put in Beechworth gaol?—Under Captain Standish.

895. Who was the officer who appeared against the sympathizers on the remands?—Mr. Sadleir, I believe, had to appear.

896. You were not in charge?—I was not there, so I have no exact knowledge of it.

897. Did you inform the officer that took charge when you last left the district that you were satisfied that you had the Kellys almost within your grasp?—I would not like to say that.

898. Did you give him such information as would be useful to him in the interest of the public?—Oh! Yes.

899. In every respect?—In every respect.

900. You gave his a detailed account of all the proceedings leading up to what you believed to be almost immediate capture, had you remained and carried on operations?—I spent over an hour in the presence of Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor, and I gave him during that time all the information I could think of; and turned from time to time to Mr. Sadleir; and asked him, “Is there anything else, Mr. Sadleir, you can suggest?” and Mr. Sadleir from time to time would tell me if he had thought so, and remind me; but I presume it would be better to defer that till Mr. Hare has been examined.

901. What was the nature of your relationship with the men and officers during the time you were in charge of the North-Eastern District; not your superior officers, but those under you—the men under your charge?—Mr. Sadleir was the superintendent of the district, he was under me, and we were, and are still, on the very best of terms always.
902. He was immediately under you?—Yes; he was in charge of the district, and he rendered me the most valuable assistance through out and spared himself in no degree; and many most valuable suggestions he gave me, for instance, that about working the people up in the township to assist the police in case of attack, and so on. My acquaintance with Mr. O’Connor when I first came up; but after a time he told me that he had not been fairly treated, he considered, by my predecessor, and there was a disposition to leave him out of the way on any occasion when there was a prospect of capturing the men.

903. When you left the charge of the place one of your successors would be, of course, Mr. Sadleir, would it not?—No; when I left charge Mr. Hare was there, but I exclude Mr. Hare; he was not with me.

904. By your predecessor, you meant Captain Standish?—Yes, in this respect only. Mr. O’Connor was on very good terms with Captain Standish even when I came up, but he was very dissatisfied with being left out. I told him that I considered it a very improper thing myself of any one to do anything of the kind to him—an officer coming from a neighboring colony with a party of men. I considered that it would be a very improper thing for the officers of police of Victoria to behave in such a manner towards him, and that he might feel perfectly satisfied on that point that there was hardly an officer in the colony would do such a thing, and from that time our relations were perfectly satisfactory. He placed the trackers at my disposal, and I could take them myself at any time—to take them whenever I chose, he could trust me entirely; I am not going to crack the police up and seek popularity by speaking of them; but I can only say they showed the greatest possible spirit throughout, and as a proof of it there was not one man brought before me for misconduct while I was up there.

905. Neither black or white?—No, not one, during the last time I was up there.

906. In the course of your examination you stated you were displeased with the conduct of one officer?—One exception.

907. Who you think did not act correctly in that search, and whom you instructed not to undertake any search parties again? I mean Mr. Smith?—That was not the officer I alluded to.

908. The question I ask is this: in the course of your evidence you state there was one search party under the control of an officer, Mr. Smith?—Yes.

909. And that he acted indiscreetly in returning when he ought not to?—Yes.

910. Was he continued in the district, and was he in the district when you resumed control, in August of the following year?—Yes.

911. Excepting that instance, did you find it your duty to find fault with the discretion, want of pluck, or courage of any officer or constable under you?—No, I did not.

912. Would it be untrue to say, in your opinion, the men showed want of courage and dash, which constables should possess?—It would be incorrect, in my experience, to say that.

913. And that the constables under you have constantly discharged their duty as they were bound to in the public service?—Yes, during the whole time I was there, I can say that. I do not pretend to say I was a brother to the men, but I was always their comrade.

914. It could not be to you that the inference could apply, in Captain Standish’s evidence, as to having treated the men like dogs?—Not truly, for I never had occasion to reprimand or admonish a man up there, from the time I relieved Captain Standish till I was superseded.

915. You have no idea whom Captain Standish referred to?—No, but I take it to myself. There is just one letter I was going to hand in—this is the letter of remonstrance I sent to Captain Standish, dated 19th May 1880—during the month I was given a month more to work. I found, from the disturbance during that month, that it was quite impossible for me to carry on. —[The witness handed in the following paper]:—

V.498.

Police Department,
Superintendent’s Office, Benalla, 19th May 1880.

With reference to my recent interview with the Honorable the Chief Secretary, in the presence of the Chief Commissioner of Police, upon the subject of the search for the Kelly gang and a proposed change in the conduct of the proceedings, I now submit the following remarks, with the request that they may be laid before the Honorable the Chief Secretary:

For the first six weeks after the murders, giving the Kellys credit for more boldness than they are now shown to possess, I pursued them with search parties in the hope that they would not be at such pains to avoid the police. At the end of that period, on the 10th December 1878, they committed the Euroa bank robbery, and our pursuit of them failed through want of efficient trackers, even although the tracks were recent.

On the 13th December ’78, in consequence of injury to my eyesight, I returned to Melbourne, after which the force throughout the North-Eastern district was further increased by extra officers, a considerable number of mounted and foot police, a body of the permanent artillery corps, besides three detectives—Eason, Berril, and Brown—all acting under the special directions of the Chief Commissioner of Police and Superintendent Hare, and the system continued for nearly seven months more, about ten months altogether, without obtaining any traces whatever of the offenders. In that interval there occurred the bank robbery at Jerilderie, N.S.W., in February 1879, when the Victorian police in this district used every effort to intercept the outlaws on their return, but, as at Euroa, in the absence of efficient native trackers, without effect.
Although reports did come in of the re-appearance of individual members of the gang at different places, it was found impossible to follow up the traces. Immediately after the Chief Commissioner’s return to Melbourne in July last, I was sent back to the North-Eastern district, and placed in charge of the work. Superintendents Hare, Furnell, and ultimately Sub-Inspector Toohey were withdrawn, also over forty of the police, and the main portion of the permanent military detachment (the remainder, about twenty-two soldiers, were subsequently withdrawn from Shepparton, Violettown, and Euroa, but ultimately I obtained (7) seven constables in their places).

My own experience of active search in the ranges here, without something like precise information of the whereabouts of the gang, is that it is worse than useless, and I am supported in this opinion by the experience of every officer whom I have spoken to on the subject. It is most costly and most harassing to men and horses, and, owing to the bush skill and wariness of the outlaws, and to the security afforded them by the nature of the country, and by the character of a large number of the inhabitants, it is the most unlikely mode to be attended with success.

I believe it may be positively asserted of all the numerous search parties that were sent out at so much trouble and cost, no one connected with them went out or returned with a correct notion of what point of the compass the Kellys were secreted, or, in fact, whether they were in Victoria at all. Knowing this, it would have been folly on my part to have continued such a system.

With the reduced means at my disposal, my first object was to re-arrange and secure to those townships where there was treasure protection against a raid; to maintain a few extra mounted men at Wodonga, Wangaratta, Bright, and Mansfield, ready to act in case of emergency, at any of the distant points. The only complete search party has been retained at Benalla, the head-quarters of the district.

Previously there had been search parties at each of the above-named places. With the assistance of the district superintendent, Mr. Sadleir, which I have received throughout, economy was enforced in every direction. Not one special railway train has been used; and in view of the search being protracted, every effort has been made compatible with efficiency to bring down the working expenses to the cost of an ordinary district employing the same number of men.

A further important reduction was effected by the Chief Commissioner’s orders—Y1676, 5/10/79, and Y1933, 18/12/79—abolishing special travelling allowances to the police engaged in the North-Eastern district. I may here state that, even when the outlaws are finally disposed of, this district will not bear much reduction in the present number of police for one or two years to come—until not only the criminal, but the large lawless, portion of the population are put down, and confidence in the police protection is restored among the honest and industrious.

Keeping the police on the alert, but quiet and undemonstrative even to conveying the impression that their keenness had become dulled and the pursuit relaxed, I endeavored to discover and cultivate as many sources of information as possible.

It can be easily understood that much difficulty exists in finding suitable agents to assist police in this matter; moreover economical considerations rather restrict me in this direction.

A few respectable farmers, selectors and others are, I believe, willing, and promise to furnish the police promptly with information; but when the opportunity occurs they shrink from the duty until too late, lest their complicity with the police should be discovered, and not without reason, for the friends and sympathizers of the outlaws are very watchful. As an illustration of their danger: The search of the police would commence at a certain point. The fact, unless precaution is used by the police, is frequently sufficient to indicate to the criminal class the source of the information, and in this Kelly case would probably entail serious consequences upon the informant.

To induce persons of the same class as the outlaws, and possessing the necessary knowledge and ability to become useful agents, is a matter of time and circumstances.

However, after working as secretly as possible, positive tidings of the presence of the outlaws in the district, and of the localities visited by them, was obtained, although to late to employ the police to pursue them. Since then, gradually, but steadily, more accurate and closer information of them and their movements has been received, until I have had strong reasons to expect their steady arrest, and that, by continuing to pursue the course I adopted, their ultimate capture is, I feel, a positive certainty.

They have never shown themselves openly, as at Euroa and Jerilderie, since the arrival of the Queensland native trackers here. The presence of the latter, and the precautions taken against a successful raid have baffled the outlaws. Their funds are almost exhausted, their prestige had failed considerably, and, consequently, the number of their admirers has decreased.

They are depressed and very distrustful. They have almost ceased to use their horses, or to carry their rifles, excepting when shifting from one neighbourhood to another. They conceal themselves during the day, and moved out at night on foot, and visit or meet their few friends at irregular periods, and generally unexpectedly. These friends are confined to their blood relations, and a few chosen young men of the criminal class, who have known them from childhood, none of whom, up to this date, can be induced to betray them, even for £8,000.

They are accompanied by one or two scouts, who search the ground before them for ambushes, and they use all their craft in leaving any trail for the trackers. When they do visit any hut or place, they watch it for several hours previously, and after satisfying themselves that no strangers are within, one of them enters, and, if all is well, the others follow leaving one or two of their scouts outside.

The length of time occupied in their capture must depend much upon the opportunities given by the outlaws, the skill of the police, and the disposition of the people to aid the police.

I have already related how wary the gang are. Nevertheless, their exhausted means compels them to expose themselves more and more to danger of betrayal and (or) capture, and this is already observable to a marked degree; and their friends are decreasing, while the police are increasing in knowledge and experience, and in the number of those disposed to help them; rendering the capture of the gang certain, unless some unfortunate change takes place, and the outlaws, by a successful raid or by some other means, refill their purses again; in which event, to ensure their capture, the work of the police will have to be done over again.

The system that has had to be adopted in this extraordinary case requires the exercise of patience among all concerned. A premature and fruitless attempt to capture the gang would be madness. It would awaken all the fear of capture, and perhaps cause them to separate and steal out of the colony, and leave them masters of the situation, to return when least expected, and surprise us by another successful raid.

While acknowledging the consideration of the Government in proposing a change in the management of the Kelly business, thereby relieving me from the very trying duty upon which I have been continually engaged for the past ten months, nevertheless, my sense of duty impels me to point out, respectfully, the inadvisability of such a change. It will be seen by this report the system which I have pursued—a system which appears to be the proper one, under the circumstances. It does not seem well to remove the officer who has collected and holds in his hands all the threads of a long and tedious enquiry just at the crisis.

Again, I submit that the change is impolitic, as this case is one in which keen public interest has been taken. The proposed change will probably be considered as an admission of failure on the part of the police; and, especially if my successor happens to be unsuccessful, a clamour will probably be raised that the organization of the force is wrong. This may lead to breaking up the constabulary, and to weakening the power to maintain law and order in the colony; whereas the real truth is there is no failure at present; on the contrary, by the exercise of patience and fortitude, success is a certainty.

TUESDAY, 29TH MARCH 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. LONGMORE, in the Chair;

J. H. Graves, Esq., M.L.A., G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A.,
E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P., G. C. Levey, Esq., C.M.G.
J. Gibb, Esq., M.L.A.,

C. H. Nicolson further examined.

The Witness.—I wish to be allowed to supplement my evidence by a few remarks, which will take a very little time—a few facts which will take a very short time to put in.

916. By the Commission.—You had better go on then?—I wish to state that the interference with me in the North-Eastern district, on the part of Captain Standish, that I alluded to, worried and crippled me considerably, and also the two officers who were with me.

917. Crippled their action also?—Yes.

918. Who were they?—Superintendent Sadleir and Sub-Insp. O’Connor of the Queensland police; but I never allowed it to interfere with my work. As an instance, when I received from time to time several orders to withdraw the cave party, I did not do so. On my own responsibility I took that course. When objection was made to the employment of Aaron Sherritt by Captain Standish, I discussed the matter with him. At the same time I continued to employ Sherritt, although I at last received an actual order from Captain Standish, saying he insisted upon my ceasing to do so. He said he was untrustworthy, and so on.

919. It was the first time you have stated that Captain Standish instructed you to discharge Sherritt?—Yes. I kept Sherritt on, on my own responsibility, and paid him out of my own pocket for the time being, whether I got the Government to recoup me or not, until the day I left.

920. Did you get that account disbursed again?—Yes, I did get paid without any difficulty. As to the repayment, I had never any difficulty in getting it in Melbourne. I considered, and I maintained, that I was the best judge on the spot as to whom I should employ and whom I should not employ, and that it was impossible for Captain Standish, or any person sitting on a chair in Melbourne, to judge or dictate to me, with all the responsibility that was thrown upon me, in what I was doing up there, whom I should employ and whom I should not.

(C. H. Nicolson, Assistant-Commissioner of Police.)

To the Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday next at half-past Eleven o’clock.
921. Were those the only two instances he interfered with you?—There was a spirit the whole time pervading that way; in fact, for months before I was withdrawn I had the consciousness that there was some mischief brewing.

922. You felt there was mischief brewing against you for months before you were withdrawn?—Yes. I charged Captain Standish on one occasion, at Benalla, with exhibiting my confidential letters to him to Mr. Hare at the depot. His reply was to the effect that he considered he had a right to do with the letters he received what he liked; consequently, I was very guarded in my communications to him. During this time I maintained courteous relations with Captain Standish, and outwardly there was no exhibition of feeling on my part, at any rate, towards him. When I, in April, received notice in his office in a very curt manner, that I was to be superseded, then seeing that the public service was being sacrificed and all the labor of years was to be sacrificed—

923. That was nearly two years after?—Yes. I was saying it was only then that I expressed indignation to the Chief Commissioner of Police.

924. That was in 1879?—No, in April 1880.

925. That was when you got the month’s notice?—When I first was informed, and called down to town, and I warned him of the disaster that would ensue.

926. Was it all verbal?—Verbal; but I will give you more of it. I then insisted upon having an interview with the Honorable the Chief Secretary.

927. That was Mr. Ramsay?—Yes

928. He had only just taken office then?—He had just taken office. This was on the Saturday.

929. What date?—I arranged with Captain Standish that I would come on the following Monday morning. I will give the date presently. Captain Standish said, “Well, if you wish an interview with the Chief Secretary, I should wish to be present,” and I said, “Certainly, I have not the slightest objection to you or anyone else being present.” I would not go into this fully but that Captain Standish says I attempted to steal an interview without him. On my arrival at the office on Monday, Captain Standish told me I could not see the Chief Secretary till two o’clock—that he would not be at the office till two. As I was just leaving Captain Standish’s office after hearing that, I saw the Chief Secretary going up stairs to his office.

930. Both departments are in the same building?—Yes. I followed Mr. Ramsay up stairs—I did; not rush up after him, as was insinuated—and, when he reached his room, I asked him if he would allow me to speak to him. I said, “Mr. Ramsay, Captain Standish tells me that I am to have an interview with you at two o’clock; he did not expect you at your office till two; would it be all the same to have the interview now, because I wish to return to Benalla by the half-past two train?” Mr. Ramsay was quite agreeable, and I was turning away from him to go and tell Captain Standish when Captain Standish came following up, running after me, as if I were trying to steal a march on him, and looking at me in an insulting manner, as if I had been trying to steal a march upon him.

931. That was the inference you drew?—Yes, he came looking at me in that way.

932. And you now, in giving your evidence, say that he did look at you, and you felt he was looking at you in the way you describe. That is what you swear?—I do; and my impression was confirmed by what he said, the other day, in evidence before this Commission. Mr. Ramsay heard me most patiently.

933. Where was this?—In his own room—in the Chief Secretary’s room, in the presence of Captain Standish. And he received me more than courteously, I may say kindly; and he assured me that; it was no reflection intended on me; that it was just a change, like in a game of cricket—a change of bowlers.

934. Was that the exact expression he used?—That was the exact expression he used on that occasion. I explained to him how dangerous this was, and that there was very little analogy between the Kelly business and the game of cricket; and how dangerous this change that was about to be made would be. I then left Mr. Ramsay, he promising to consider my application not to be removed. I understood that the thing had already been decided upon.

935. Your remonstrance was with a view of his reconsidering his determination?—Yes; I called at Mr. Ramsay’s office in the course of the afternoon.

936. What office?—His private office, that afternoon; and he led me to understand that I would receive an intimation about the matter—a favorable reply. On that occasion I did not force myself into; Mr. Ramsay’s room, but saw him in the usual way that anyone going to his office would see him.

937. Was that about the time Sir James McCulloch’s name was introduced?—No, after that. I returned then to the district.

938. Why did you ask for this extension—a month’s time?—Because just at that time I was receiving other information from that man that wrote about the armour, and ought to have gone on. The information began to come in at that time when I went back very fast, of a very important character—all indicating a speedy termination.

939. You stated in your evidence that between this date, on or about the 20th April, your agents were giving you almost daily information?—Yes.
940. And you stated in your evidence the position of the men at that time—that they were short of money, and were in the habit of going to Lake Rowan and other places?—I do not know exactly about Lake Rowan.

941. You said about that time?—Yes, from the time I went back and resumed work again, I found it was not as easy for me to continue going on with the prospect of being withdrawn at the end of the month. You cannot command information, of course, in police matters; you must wait until it comes to you. I telegraphed to Captain Standish about the middle—the 20th—of May, stating that I would be down the following day, and asking if he would be good enough to obtain me another interview with the Chief Secretary. Captain Standish spoke in his evidence as if there was only one interview; there were two interviews. I followed my telegram the next morning, and presented myself at Captain Standish's office. On meeting him I was polite, as usual, and he to me. He said, "Ah, Nicolson, I was dining at the Governor's last night, and I saw the Chief Secretary, and he does not think there is any occasion to have any further interview with you." I replied, "Do you then tell me that you are unable to obtain an interview for me with the Honorable the Chief Secretary?" He said, "Yes." So I took leave of him. I left his room and went down to Mr. Ramsay's private office, and had an interview with him; it lasted about half an hour.

942. That was on the 20th?—On or about the 20th of May.

943. It would be the 21st, the day following your telegram?—Yes. I then told Mr. Ramsay the state of affairs up there, as I had told him before in the presence of Captain Standish. I told him that Captain Standish was no authority on any matters of the kind; that he had no practical experience. I told him that Captain Standish would not give his mind to the business, and hardly to any one else; at any rate, that I could not get him to attend to me ten minutes at a time—to sit down and talk over the Kelly business. He could not, even of a period of ten minutes, fix his attention upon the matter. And I expressed to Mr. Ramsay that it was a great pity that before he decided that he had not consulted me also. I suggested that, though I was Captain Standish's subordinate, still I was his colleague, and I had been up there a considerable time, and I was an experienced officer, and I was a better authority on the matter than Captain Standish possibly could be.

944. Were you at that time recognized Assistant Commissioner of Police?—Yes, I was. Mr. Ramsay listened to me very attentively throughout, and there was no warmth whatever between us, excepting on my part, in endeavoring to induce him to reconsider the matter; and we parted just in the same friendly manner as before, he promising to reconsider and let me know. He made this one remark, showing the impression that I had made upon him, "Well, you see, Mr. Nicolson, having made all these arrangements with the head of the department, it is very difficult to alter them."

945. Captain Standish was not at this meeting?—No. It has been said that Mr. Ramsay interrupted when I was saying this, about my speaking in this matter of the head of my department. I have no recollection of Mr. Ramsay doing so, no recollection whatever, and this was the only opportunity that I had. I was certainly speaking very plainly, and speaking out very strongly about the part that Captain Standish had taken in this matter to him; I certainly was. I met Captain Standish at the railway as I was leaving by train when I was returning to Benalla. He handed me a telegram, addressed to me, and he said, "Paying you an amount of courtesy in bringing you this telegram which I suppose you would not show to me. I hear you have had an interview with Mr. Ramsay, and you have been abusing me. I consider your conduct very disloyal." Now when he said that, I smiled at his talking about my conduct being disloyal to him. He had t

946. He did not state that?—Yes, he stated that. This was at the platform, in a great hurry; the bell was ringing; he detained me so long I had to go away without a ticket. I replied just in hurry, about that violent conduct and checking me, "Never," not in a violent way at all, quietly; and the bell was ringing at the time, and, just as I was going away, he put himself in a very offensive attitude and manner, and said, "I believe Mr. Ramsay," as much as to say you are telling a lie.

947. Is this the occasion that Captain Standish stated he met you at the train?—This is the occasion mentioned in his evidence.

948. And this is your account of what occurred?—Yes; I am not sure that I spoke. He was addressing me all the time; but when he said I had spoken in a violent manner, and Mr. Ramsay had to check me. I said, "Never." Of course I do not disbelieve Mr. Ramsay either, but Captain Standish meant to convey a very offensive imputation. On my return to Benalla I was superseded by Mr. Hare, as I have already told you.

949. Had not this telegram anything to do with it?—It was important information from Mr. Sadleir to hurry me up, important information having come in, which I have already related to you. I acted upon it up to the day before Mr. Hare relieved me.

950. You were superseded immediately?—Not till the 2nd of June, a day or two after; but between that date and the 2nd of June I was engaged upon the duty up to the night of the 1st of June, when I came in to Benalla to meet Mr. Hare. I will point out to you that that is one of the instances when I was worried and interfered with; instead of being at Benalla when that important information came in that had to be attended to, I was down fighting in Melbourne, contesting against him in Melbourne.

951. That letter is dated May 20th (the one about the diseased stock; can you say from memory whether that was in your possession prior to your interview with Mr. Ramsay, or afterwards?—It was in my possession on that day, and I showed it to Mr. Ramsay.

952. You showed that letter to Mr. Ramsay?—I showed the letter to Mr. Ramsay, and I should here state that I did not show it to Captain Standish. In my previous interview with him, when he told me he could not get an interview with Mr. Ramsay, my interview ended, and I left the room and went out to Mr. Ramsay. On the previous visit to Melbourne I spoke of, before Captain Standish insinuated that I had remained in town all day on the occasion of my first visit to Mr. Ramsay in April, Captain Standish makes a mistake; he speaks of only one interview, whereas there were two. On that occasion Captain Standish——

953. On what date?—In April. He wrote to me, saying something to the effect, “You did not go away,” and he has spoken here of his sending a messenger to the railway station to see me off or to give me some message, and I was not to be found, insinuating that I did not go off with the train. Now

29th March 1881.

Captain Standish knows very well, for I wrote it to him, that I went out that day from town to Flemington. I had to see some friends there, and I took the train from there instead of Spencer street, and I went back the same train, and I wrote to Captain Standish telling him, so that I did go by that train.

954. This is what he did say:—“Mr. Nicolson came down to my office afterwards, when I asked him, ‘When are you going back?’ he said, ‘I am going back by the next train—the afternoon train.’ He not only did not do that, but he remained in Melbourne, and went to Sir James McCulloch to ask him to go and see Mr. Ramsay and intercede on his behalf?”—That was on the last occasion.

955. Early in May?—Yes. I returned by the train I mentioned to you from Flemington. I may mention there is a significance in my calling upon Sir James McCulloch at that time. Sir James McCulloch was in office at the time Power, the bushranger, was arrested. At that time he (then Mr. McCulloch) expressed himself very handsomely as Chief Secretary about my conduct in the arrest of Power.

956. May I ask is there a complete file of the particulars connected with the arrest of Power in the department?—There is. I should be very glad, with reference to that, if one or two members of the Commission would go over that file. Sir James McCulloch had expressed himself in that way years before, and though I never sought for influence or went to any person—but on that occasion I thought the best thing I could do was to go to Sir James McCulloch, and mention to him the position I was in, and remind him of the opinion he had expressed of me when he was in office, and to speak to Mr. Ramsay.

957. When was that—the Tuesday following the Monday you saw Mr. Ramsay in the morning?—The 21st May. That was the second occasion.

958. Although you knew Sir James McCulloch, what was the necessity of your asking him to accompany you to Mr. Ramsay’s private office?—Sir James McCulloch had the experience before him of the Power case. He was in office at that time, and he had, as I have already said, been very complimentary to me on the occasion of the capture of Power. He had learned when he was in office what sort of work it was. He did not accompany me to Mr. Ramsay’s office.

959. Did you think if he saw Mr. Ramsay he might influence him?—I did.

960. Now will you tell us by what train you left Melbourne after interviewing Mr. Ramsay on the last occasion?—On the following day.

961. That would be the 22nd of May?—Yes, the 22nd of May, by the half-past two train. On that occasion I did not go this telegram had not come, but after leaving Sir James McCulloch. I did not leave town that night. I wished, if possible, to get some definite answer or information before I started as to whether I was to remain. It seemed very little use my going back, but I was determined to go back, but it was important to have a definite answer before I went up.

962. Did you go from Spencer street then?—Yes.

963. The difficulty in this matter appears to me as is to date. Your first interview with Captain Standish was in April, and the second was at the private office in May?—That is it.

964. The first time you went from Flemington and the second from Spencer street?—Yes.

965. It was upon the May occasion that Captain Standish met you at the railway station?—Yes.

966. Did you come upon that occasion—that is about May, about the time of the letters about the armour—and interview Captain Standish here?—Certainly.

967. He knew you were in town?—Yes.

968. What time was it that Captain Standish told you he had interviewed Mr. Ramsay at the Governor’s dinner?—May—the morning of the last interview with Mr. Ramsay, and the only interview I believe I had with Sir James McCulloch.

969. What was the date of the first interview with Mr. Ramsay?—The first interview was on Monday the 3rd of May.

970. That was the time you alluded to the interview between you and Mr. Ramsay, when he said he would let you know later on whether he would consent to your remaining a month longer?—Yes, that is so.

971. That was on the 3rd of May—the afternoon that Sir James McCulloch accompanied you to Mr. Ramsay’s office?—No, he did not accompany me.

972. Was it on the 4th of May you returned to Benalla?—The Chief Commissioner directed me to stay, and then on the following day—on the 4th of May 1880—the Chief Commissioner informed me that the Honorable the Chief Secretary had continued me for one clear month.

973. And you left by the 2.30 train that day?—Yes, I left Flemington at three o’clock on that day.
974. You were informed that you had another month?—Yes.
975. When did you return to Melbourne again to see Mr. Ramsay?—The 25th of May—Tuesday—I returned to Melbourne.

976. What was your reason for returning on the 25th?—Because I saw it was certainly impossible to go on any longer with the state the case was in with the prospect of being superseded.
977. You came down on the 25th of May to point out to the Chief Secretary that you had things to arrange, that it would be a false policy to remove you then?—Yes, on the Monday, the 24th—looking at a diary—having requested the Chief Commissioner to obtain an interview with the Chief Secretary on the 25th.
978. On the 25th, when you saw Mr. Ramsay, was there any complaint of your unfairly endeavoring to force yourself upon him?—No, not the slightest.
979. On the afternoon of the 25th Sir James McCulloch accompanied you to Mr. Ramsay?—No, I called on him alone.
980. He did not accompany you?—No. I did not ask him to. As to what took place between Sir James McCulloch and Mr. Ramsay I do not know to this day.
981. You do not know that he saw him?—I believe he did.
982. Captain Standish states that Mr. Ramsay said, “Mr. Nicolson, supposing you were head of a department, and one of your subordinate officers came to me and abused you behind your back, what would you think?” On what day would that be if it occurred?—On the 25th of May.
983. Mr. Ramsay made that statement to you on the 25th?—I have no recollection of Mr. Ramsay saying such a thing, but if he did it was on that date.
984. I think you joined the police force about 1852?—Yes.

985. As a cadet?—Yes.
986. I think you got your first promotion for gallant conduct about the time of the capture of Conor and Brady in Kilmore?—Yes.
987. Since then you had a large experience of police business?—I have.
988. You were for a length of time in the detective police?—Yes, about fourteen years.
989. And you kept yourself au courant of what was going on in this colony, and also in New South Wales?—Yes.
990. You were in constant communication with the force of New South Wales?—Yes, while I was in charge of the detectives.
991. Will you hand in a return of the length of the time it took to capture the bushrangers in New South Wales and in Victoria—Power and other men; Ben Hall and Gilbert—can you get this?—I will, but it will take a few days to get it—it is many years ago.
992. The time during which Power was at large, and the length of time of various times in New South Wales—Hall, Gilbert and other men, an specially those men who shot a number of police under circumstances not very dissimilar to the circumstances of the shooting by the Kellys—do you think you will be able to supply that?—Yes, I think so; it will take a few days, but I can do it.
993. You have read Superintendent Hare’s report?—Yes, his letter to the Chief Commissioner of Police, 2nd July.
994. Have you a copy of it?—Yes.
995. Will you look at paragraph 3.—“I received orders from you at the end of may that I was to proceed at once to Benalla to relieve Mr. Nicolson. I accordingly, on the 2nd of June, went up there. I arrived at Benalla at about eleven o’clock that day. I saw Messrs. Nicolson, Sadleir, and O’Connor in the office. After some conversation on general subjects, Mr. Nicolson produced a letter he had received from you, directing him to give me all the information he had obtained concerning the Kelly gang during his stay at Benalla; he showed me the state of his financial account with one of his agents, and said there was nothing owing to any of the others. He opened a drawer and showed me a number of papers and the correspondence which had taken place during his stay in Benalla, and said, ‘You can get all the information from these papers’. He gave me no verbal information whatever, but said, ‘Mr. Sadleir can tell you all I know concerning the movements of the outlaws’. He left the office, and I never spoke to him again, and he went to Melbourne by the evening train.” Have you any explanation to offer about that report?—I would rather wait until Mr. Hare gives his evidence on the subject, if the Commission will allow me.
996. You give the statement a denial?—I do, but I would rather speak of it after hearing Mr. Hare’s evidence.
997. Have you closed?—No, but I will shortly do so now. I am going to hand in my report, and ask you to allow me to read the points of it.
998. Will you put in what letters you received from Captain Standish ordering you to dismiss Aaron Sherritt—I will try and do so. I have to say this, that I had no difference with Superintendent Hare. I was on terms of friendly acquaintance with him up to the date of his letter on the 2nd of July. When he arrived there, on the 2nd of June, I, with the other officers, Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Sadleir, received Mr. Hare with kindness, although I was frequently annoyed by his being brought into opposition to me, sometimes apparently on his own account, and sometimes through Captain Standish.

999. Will you give any evidence of that?—I will produce papers presently; I am just finishing this. When I took charge at Benalla in July, relieving Mr. Hare and Captain Standish, I found the men, notwithstanding their seven months' work, very ignorant of how to use their arms—the rifles (the most important arms of precision)—the Martini-Henry, and other weapons with which they were armed. Some of them had lost their ramrods, others their side-guards; some of them had never fired a gun in their lives (so they stated), and they had all the appearance of it.

1000. Ramrods are used for cleaning those guns?—Yes, they are fastened in the usual way. The guns are breech-loading.

1001. What were those men you alluded to?—Policemen.

1002. Were those the men you were selected for this special service, or were they there by accident?—They were the men left in my absence to continue the work.

1003. Those men, you say, on your return to duty, in July 1879—were they all inefficient—you have your mind's eye on some particular man?—Yes, the men at Benalla.

1004. Did those men remain on with you on duty on the district?—Yes, until I left.

1005. You still retained them?—Yes, I still retained them.

1006. Could you name some of those men?—They were nearly all the staff, with few exceptions, senior-constables.

1007. Your statement applies to the general body of police?—The police as a body. One of the men named Keene shot another, Mr. Henry.

1008. Shot a comrade?—In the barrack-yard, larking.

1009. This is a proof of his inefficiency, you think?—Yes, he was larking. He thought his rifle was not loaded. He was handing a Spencer rifle down, and he saw no cartridge, and he drew the trigger. He was so ignorant, and thinking it unloaded, and he drew it back and forward, and loaded it without knowing, and shot this man through the body, on the 26th of July 1879, immediately after I took charge.

1010. Did you put them through a proper drill after that?—I did. I formed a class for them at once, under Senior-Constable Irvine, and, when duty admitted of it, I had them taught properly how to shoot, measure distances, and so on.

1011. With what weapons?—The Martini-Henry and Spencer rifles, and double-barrelled breech-loading guns, the three weapons they were armed with; but gradually, as the men got proficient, they all took preference to the Martini-Henry rifles.

1012. They believed in their precision and lightness?—Yes; this is the analysis of their scoring, showing what progress and efficiency they arrived at.

1013. Were the equally efficient is the use of revolvers?—They all knew how to fire a revolver, but a great many of them did not know how to aim.

This was regularly carried out as rifle practice, and the score kept as you see there.

1015. And they attained fair proficiency?—Yes. In Mr. Hare’s letter, in which he speaks of the men firing with great precision, he pays me a great compliment.
1016. That was on the 16th, at Glenrowan?—Yes.

1017. You practised it yourself?—Yes, I was doing this with the utmost care and economy when I received the communication from the Chief Commissioner of Police, that Mr. Hare said “I was wasting too much ammunition,” and the Chief Commissioner said “I must stop it.”

1018. Was that communication in writing?—Yes, I extended this practice all through the North-Eastern district, allowing a certain amount of ammunition to be used in that way in every station in the district. I also instructed the men myself how to attack the offenders if they should ever come in contact with them either in a house or in the bush. I also taught them that they were to dismount if on horseback, and how to fire their rifles. They were to dismount, and how to do so; never to fire off the horse’s back, Anyone who takes an interest in those things will know that it is an axiom introduced in all the late wars never to fire a rifle off a horse’s back. It is admitted as a general rule that a man cannot shoot with accuracy off a horse’s back; of course the very heaving of its flanks would prevent that. I directed them also how to approach and engage with these men—a very simple matter. I just told them, keep twenty yards from each other, the leader and two or three men in front, the other two or three men under the senior-constable to run up at right angles in this way—[describing the same by gesture]—driving them along by degrees till they close in on them and rush them. I was inspecting the Beechworth district in 1877, the year before the murders.

1019. What constable was there then?—Mounted-Constable Thom. This is my report of the man in charge at Greta.

1020. Is this the station where you drew attention to the necessity of having an efficient man at Greta?—Yes. Mounted-Constable Hugh Thom, 2372, about eighteen years’ service, “32 years of age, intelligent but not smart looking, soiled dirty jumper, dirty breeches, and a crushed uniform hat, beard untrimmed, his arms clean and serviceable.” I may tell you now that Mr. Hare has had the most efficient men in that district.

1021. May I ask are those specimens of the usual reports you make?—Yes, the usual reports.

1022. Could you, without inconvenience, get the report made on that station prior to Thom’s coming there?—Yes. That would be not by me, but by the Inspecting Superintendent of the day.

1023. What action was taken on your report?—This man Thom was removed and another man put in his place.

1024. Not for a long time afterwards?—I cannot say. I visited the notorious Mrs. Kelly’s on the road from hence to Benalla. She lived on a piece of cleared and partly cultivated land on the road-side, in an old wooden hut, with a large bark roof. The dwelling was divided into five apartments by partition of blanketing, rugs &c. There were no men in the house, only children and two girls of about fourteen years of age, said to be her daughters. They all appeared to be existing in poverty and squalor.

1025. What is the date of this?—April 1877. “She said her sons were out at work, but did not indicate where, and that their relatives seldom came near them. However, their communications with each other are known to the police.” This is important. “Until the gang referred to is rooted out of this neighborhood one of the most experienced and successful mounted constables in the district will be required in charge at Greta. I do not think that the present arrangements are sufficient.

1026. Whom was that sent in to?—The Chief Commissioner of Police. This is one of my “twaddling reports”: “Second-class Sergeant Steele, of Wangaratta, keeps the offenders referred to under as good surveillance as the distance and means at his command will permit.”

1027. Will you fix the distance from Wangaratta to the Kellys’ house?—I should say about 16 miles.

1028. And how far from Greta to Mrs. Kelly’s?—About four—under four miles. “But I submit that Constable Thom would hardly be able to cope with these men; at the same time some of these offenders may commit themselves foolishly some day, and may be apprehended and convicted in a very ordinary manner.” This was the cause of my instructions to the police generally; and I had expressed my opinion since that to the officer in charge of that district, that without oppressing the people, or worrying them in any way, that he should endeavor, whenever they commit any paltry crime, to bring them to justice, and send them to Pentridge even on a paltry sentence, the object being to take their prestige away from them, which has a good an effect as being sent into prison with very heavy sentences, because the prestige these men get up there from what is termed their flashiness helped to keep them together, and that is a very good way of taking the flashiness out of them.

1029. In making a report of that description, did you ask Thom had he made them amenable to justice lately, for instance the members of the family, the —?—I did.

1030. What was his reply?—I forget.

1031. It was sufficient to induce you to make a report, that a man should be sent to keep them under control?—Yes.

1032. Are you aware who his predecessor was?—No.
1033. Do you know whether it was Flood?—I think it was.
1034. Do you know that he always had four or five of them in gaol?—I know Flood was very efficient.
1035. Was this report before of the shooting of Fitzpatrick?—Yes. I took a young constable with me part of the road, Constable Hayes, and I instructed him—similar instructions as those to Thom—and warned him never to go near that house, and to tell the other police that came there never to go near that house alone, always to have a second constable with them.
1036. Then you had an idea they were absolutely dangerous all through?—Oh, I knew it well; and I instructed the police never to go into that house alone, simply because I knew if there were two constables together bad characters are always afraid to proceed to extremities with them, because a constable is a witness and support to the other.
1037. And you had previously known Ned Kelly personally?—Yes. I visited Chiltern, the same district, at the same time, 1877.
1038. Do you recollect the date of the shooting of Fitzpatrick—April 1878?—Yes, I think it was.
1039. This is previous to that again?—Yes.
1040. This is before Byrne became connected with it?—I believe so. In speaking about the crime report book—that is the book in which reports are made, and in which reports are made of people who make complaints to the police—I may quote the following:—“About six cases to date, in 1877, mostly horse-stealing, which horses were ultimately recovered, impounded in New South Wales.” This is a form of crime which is said to be common here when the Murray River is low. “The animals are said to be impounded with the view of buying them out cheap”—that is over in New South Wales—“they are frequently recovered, but the offenders, said to be New South Wales men, are never convicted. I can see no difficulty in bringing those offenders to justice, if the Ovens district police make systematic arrangements with the cooperation of the well known Mr. Singleton, who is in command of the New South Wales police, Albury district.”
1041. I suppose, in making that memorandum, you were aware that in New South Wales no man can legally ride another man’s horse without either a permit or some notification in his pocket that the horse he is riding belongs to other man?—Yes. This is a communication from Mr. Singleton:—“Albury, 14th September.” This is to the officer in charge of the Beechworth district, to whom my communication had been sent for his attention. “My dear Sir,—In reply to your confidential note of the 12th instant, I beg to state that I believe that a regular system of horse-stealing is carried on by Victorian thieves, and that the animals are brought across the Murray and impounded in New South Wales, where they are sold for a mere trifle, and vice versa by New South Wales thieves to Victoria; very many horses stolen from Victoria have, I believe, been impounded at Quat Quatta, near Howlong. I would suggest that on a report of horse-stealing being made within a reasonable distance of the border, that you give instructions to the police in Albury, Howlong, and Corowa be informed as soon as possible.” Very soon after this regular system was established, the well-known Baumgartens were discovered receiving a very large number of horses, and Ned Kelly was the man who brought the horses to them.

1042. One of them?—One of the men.
1043. Corowa was opposite the Victorian town of Wahgunyah, Howlong being the nearest place to Chiltern, and the other to Wodonga—the three crossing places?—Yes. Here is a document showing the reduction of strength at a station, done without any reference to me whatever. I do not know whether it is worth taking notice of; but I was in that district, at Stanley, near Beechworth; that is not in the dangerous district.
1044. Whose recommendation was that?—Mr. Brook Smith’s.
1045. Were the police taken altogether away from Stanley?—No; but there were two men there. I do not mean the reduction was not a proper one, but I was not made acquainted with it; and that was the usual custom, and that was what I was annoyed with Captain Standish for; they were done by him without consulting me, and without my knowledge, though I was visiting and reporting on the district. Here is another matter that I would like to draw attention to. While inspecting the county of Bourke district, in April 1876, I pointed out some irregularities in the mode in which the constable kept his money books. Shall I read that portion? This is the date—“5/3/75. Murdoch v. Murdoch, Hotham. Prisoner delivered at Hotham lock-up, by Kalkallo police, but no receipt producible, 23/12/74. Stephen v. Snowden, distress, £7 3s. Donnybrook. Amount collected by constable, who handed same to plaintiff direct, instead of to clerk of petty sessions.” And several others of the same kind. I was trying to introduce a uniform system.
1046. What was done on that?—I pointed this out to the Chief Commissioner in this report, and it was referred to Mr. Hare by the Chief Commissioner, who referred it to Constable Redding.
1047. You are pointing out this as a portion of your ordinary duties?—Yes.
1048. The object you have in view is to show that your recommendations were not attended to?—Yes.
1049. What was done in that case?—The correspondence does not show, and I am not aware of it.
1050. What will show that?—It ought to be on the papers, and its not being so is a proof of the irregularity. “With reference to the receipt for prisoner Murdoch, the watch-house book at Hotham will show the prisoner was lodged there. I consider that in a place like Donnybrook, where the clerk of petty sessions only visits twice a month, and the clerk requests that the proceeds of distress warrants may be paid over to the plaintiffs, there is no objection to the constable doing so, providing he holds a receipt from the person to whom he paid the money, which was done in these cases. I am not aware how Mr. Nicolson became aware that Constable Redding is wanting in discretion, and requires looking after. He has been a long time under me, and I have not discovered it; on the contrary, I have found him a most zealous man, and most anxious to do his work, and a man in whom I can place the greatest reliance.”

1051. It then, from that version, becomes a matter of difference of interpretation as to what it properly the duty of the constable?—Yes.

1052. You considered he was guilty of dereliction of duty; Mr. Hare, on the contrary, considered he performed his duty under the circumstances?—Yes; I am quite prepared to show that my system was the correct one. I reported: “Mtd.-Constable Redding, 1990, general appearance clean and creditable; kit clean and in good order; the leather pad under hilt of sword worn out and the mouth of scabbard loose and requires immediate attention. He has had no practice with his Webley’s revolver; permission given to fire six cartridges and report result.” “Mtd.-Constable Redding, 1990, is a man of considerable police experience, but wanting in discretion, and requires looking after; otherwise, from the opportunities of distinguishing himself which he has had, he might have occupied a better position in the force.” I sent this as usual to the Chief Commissioner.

1053. Soon after resuming again you said you had been frequently interfered with by Mr. Hare, and sometimes by Captain Standish; is that one of the cases by Mr. Hare!—Yes, that is one of them.

1054. Are the cases generally that you have referred to in which Mr. Hare has interfered with you of a similar character?—No.

1055. Are there some of a more serious character?—Yes; this was done. Mr. Hare says, “I am not aware how Mr. Nicolson became aware that Constable Redding is wanting in discretion, and requires looking after. He has been a long time under me, and I have not discovered it; on the contrary, I have found him a most zealous man, and most anxious to do his work, and a man in whom I can place the greatest reliance.” He praises him up, and contradicts me about the man, and asks my reason.

1056. Would Mr. Hare have greater opportunities of seeing the way in which this constable performed his duty than you would as visiting inspector?—As a rule, he would, but I might have special knowledge of the man.

1057. You were only paying a visit of inspection to this particular station—how often?—I had no knowledge of the station.

1058. But, as a matter of fact, the Bourke district was under Mr. Hare?—Yes.

1059. Would you or Mr. Hare have a better opportunity of judging of the merits of any particular constable?—As a rule, he would. I may remark further, here is the result of this. On the 26th June 1876 Constable Gill reports from Wallan Wallan:—“For the information of the Superintendent in re accidental death of Constable Redding.” The day of this man falling off his horse, I said the man wanted looking after, and I find the man fell off his horse after a night’s drinking, and broke his neck. “It appears from information received from Mrs. Redding, together with the evidence given at the inquest, that he (Redding) left Donnybrook at about half-past two or three o’clock on the afternoon of the 23rd instant, for the purpose, as he stated to his wife, of going to Wallan Wallan on duty. He reached Beveridge at about half-past three or four o’clock, and went into O’Connor’s store for the purpose of paying a small account. After the account was paid, Mr. O’Connor asked him to have a drink, which he (O’Connor) says is usual with him when an account is being settled. He (Redding) had the drink, a little brandy, and remained at O’Connor’s for an hour or so, and went from there to Mrs. Wall’s hotel, where he had another small nubber of brandy. He remained at Wall’s for some time, but had only the one drink there. He went back to O’Connor’s again, where he remained for another hour, or an hour and a half, and had a drink or two more. In short, it appeared from the evidence given, that he might have had a half dozen drinks altogether while at Beveridge; but it was also stated that he could carry a good many drinks before they would show on him. Mr. McCormack, farmer, of the Red Barn, and Mr. O’Connor, the storekeeper above referred to, were the last to see him alive at Beveridge, between nine and ten o’clock on the night of the 23rd, and I think my remarks proved correct.

1060. Is that the moment serious charge you have against Mr. Hare for interference with your duty?—I was acquainted principally with this man. He served under me, and I saw he was just the same as before, and I gave them the benefit of that knowledge, and warned them. This is the last thing I have to refer to. In Captain Standish’s examination he alluded to paying my agents large sums of money. I just hand in this document, to show the sums that were actually paid. That was the first payment made when I went up there by myself, and these were the amounts afterwards—[handing in a paper, Bourke, 23rd May 1876, and papers attached]. He paid a large sum immediately when he went up there, and raised the market on me as it were.

1061. This shows the money paid for secret service by you and Captain Standish?—In one instance.

1062. Can you give the return of the secret service money paid by Captain Standish. You paid the secret service money yourself when you were there?—Yes.

1063. Can we get the return of that?—Yes, I will hand in the complete return.

1064. That shows that for the same service Captain Standish paid more than you?—Yes.

1065. Can you produce the letters in which Captain Standish ordered you to discontinue the employing——as an agent?—Any letters on that subject are amongst the bundle that have come down from the country, but I am prepared to prove that by oral evidence. I may say my statements have been made almost entirely from my own memorandum books; the papers on the Kelly business were left behind at Benalla, and I have not seen them. I have had nothing to do with them, and I have merely applied for anything that I wanted. One thing I omitted to say, in practising the men’s shooting, I expended about eight or ten pounds in prizes for them, and in shooting I have paid for ammunition for them out of my own pocket.

The witness withdrew.

Stanhope O’Connor sworn and examined.

1066. What are you?—I am a gentleman living on my means at present.

1067. What were you formerly?—Formerly Sub-Inspector of the Queensland police; and at the time when I applied for this enquiry, I was in the police, and had no intention of living.

1068. You have left the Queensland police now?—I have. I met Captain Standish in Albury on the 6th March 1879.

1069. Was that when you came from Queensland?—It was.

1070. What was the cause of your coming to the colony?—This is a document sent by my Government showing the arrangements made that brought us over—[producing a document].

1071. It was by request from this Government and Captain Standish you came down?—It was.

1072. You brought some native troopers with you?—Yes.

1073. You met Captain Standish, you say, in March 1879?—The 6th of March 1879 at seven p.m. I was accompanied by six black troopers, and by one senior-constable, a white man. The names of my men were—Senior Constable King, Corporal Sambo, Troopers Hero, Johnny, Jimmy, Barney, and Jack. I requested permission from Captain Standish to halt for the day, as one of my troopers named Jack, was very ill. This Captain Standish granted at once. On the 8th March 1879, at nine a.m., Captain Standish, I, and my men left Albury for Wodonga, Victoria, where Captain Standish directed my party to remain for further orders. Captain Standish and I proceeded to Benalla, arriving there at two p.m. On Monday the 10th Senior-Constable King and the six troopers arrived at two p.m. from Wodonga at Benalla. On the 11th of March, Captain Standish ordered us out on our first trip, but had me sworn in previously member of the police force of Victoria.

1074. And your men?—No; only myself and my senior-constable. The black trackers do not take the oath ever; they are enlisted. We left Benalla at eleven a.m. on the 11th in company with Superintendent Sadleir and five or six Victorian constables. Prior to leaving, I told Captain Standish that I only required two of his men; but this I was told was not sufficient, and I must take not less than six Victorian constables with me. Captain Standish informed me in the presence of Mr. Sadleir that I was to be in charge of the party.

1075. That was that you were to be above Mr. Sadleir?—Yes; certainly the whole party, playfully saying to Mr. Sadleir, “Although you are Superintendent of Police, do not think you are over Mr. O’Connor.” Those are his words as near as I can swear to them. Mr. Sadleir and myself were always on the best of terms. I and my party returned to Benalla on the 18th of March at 5.50 p.m., owing to the fact that the party was not sufficiently supplied with necessaries, and that one of my troopers, Corporal Sambo, got very ill.

1076. What do you call necessaries?—Blanketing and clothing.

1077. Provisions?—We were not supplied sufficiently with those. I consider necessaries everything.

1078. Food and clothing?—Food and bedding would be better. He was so bad, indeed, that I had to send him back to head-quarters on the 15th.

1079. What do you call head-quarters?—Benalla. I always called that head-quarters; and on the morning of the 18th we met Constable Bell, who informed me that my trooper was dying. This man died on the evening of the 19th of congestion of the lungs. I do not attribute any blame to the Victorian authorities in this matter. In fact, Captain Standish showed my men every kindness.

1080. Where did you go?—Mr. Sadleir will know all about that. He knows more about the country.

1081. He was with the party all the time up to the 18th?—Yes. On the 16th April we started out 1082. That would be about sixteen altogether?—About fifteen or sixteen—five of my men, myself, Mr. Sadleir, and my senior-constable, and five or six Victorian constables.

1083. Did all those trackers came from Queensland?—Yes, up to this time.

1084. Because you recruited afterwards?—Yes; I will come to that directly. We had no information.

1085. Had you any the first time?—None. We went up to King River, and on the fifth day, namely, the 21st April, arrived at De Gamaro station. —— informed us of his having found on the run, near the Black range, a horse, answering the description of one of the horses ridden away from Jerilderie by one of the outlaws. —— offered to show us the horse and its tracks; but just as we were arranging for an early start for the morrow a constable galloped up with a letter from Captain Standish, saying if we were not on anything perhaps it would be better to return.

1086. “Anything good?”—Any good information. The letter stated that Mr. Hare thought that he had found some traces in the Warby ranges. Mr. Sadleir and I conferred together, and sent Captain Standish word of what we had been told, and as he had left us to decide, we preferred to follow our own information, but if he (Captain Standish) still thought it advisable for us to return, he was to send us word again, and we would obey. This he did the next day, and we returned to Benalla immediately, on the morning on the 23rd.

1087. Where was Captain Standish?—At Benalla.

1088. At what distance?—I do not know exactly—about thirty miles.

1089. Did you go to De Gamaro station to look after the Kellys?—Certainly. Subsequently, after Mr. Nicolson took charge, the above horse was recovered, and was found to have been one of the Jerilderie horses taken away by the outlaws.

1090. A police horse?—A New South Wales police horse.

1091. How long was this after you received information about the horse?—A considerable time—months. Captain Standish, I may say, did not believe anything. When we gave information about it, he laughed at it, and took no more trouble about it. Up to about this time, and a little later, Captain Standish was upon the most intimate terms with me, (in my statement, in my report of 7th September, it ought to be fourteen months he treated me most discourteously instead of sixteen) and often expressed a wish that I would join the Victorian force after the Kellys were taken. Captain Standish showed a great want of interest in any work in the Kelly pursuit. This was not only observed by myself, but by both Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Hare.

1092. Was that verbally, or how?—Repeatably, day after day. Mr. Sadleir will be to prove it, and I suppose will repeat what he has often said to me. In fact, Mr. Sadleir often observed to me that he never could get two minutes’ conversation with Captain Standish upon Kelly business; that the moment he began to talk upon the subject Captain Standish would take up a novel and commence to read. Mr. Hare also frequently remarked the indifference of the Chief Commissioner to his work. About the beginning of May 1879, Captain Standish, in official matters, began to show his dislike, and frequently remarked the insolent manner of Captain Standish to me. Mr. Hare frequently observed to me that he never could get two minutes’ conversation with Captain Standish upon Kelly business; that the moment he began to talk upon the subject Captain Standish would take up a novel and commence to read. About the beginning of May 1879, Captain Standish, in official matters, began to show his dislike, and frequently remarked the insolent manner of Captain Standish to me. Mr. Hare also frequently remarked the indifference of the Chief Commissioner to his work.

1093. Between the colonies?—I suppose that was what was meant; but I never objected to let my men go out, whenever I was asked, without my accompanying them. I never found any difficulty in working with Mr. Hare. He always treated me with the greatest kindness, and frequently remarked the insolent manner of Captain Standish to me. Mr. Hare and I, with my men, went out upon those expeditions Captain Standish told me most markedly that Mr. Hare was in charge; and upon the last one, which was in the vicinity of the Bald Hills, Mr. Hare stated, from what he saw of my men’s efficiency at tracking, that he thought we should never go out unless upon the best information, as something good might turn up in our absence. Mr. Hare’s usual plan of working was to scour the country with large parties of men—not upon any information.

1094. How are you able to say that?—Because I was quite conversant with all the working, with the exception of two or three times Captain Standish withheld knowledge.

1095. To your knowledge?—Of course I am speaking of myself.

1096. Were you with the parties?—Only on two occasions. I used to hear him say when he came back, “I will go out in the mountains in a couple of days’ time,” and so on. Mr. Hare went upon the chance at dropping across the outlaws. I may remark that this, I say, was his usual plan—of course once or twice he got information. The man, Aaron Sherritt, was employed by Mr. Hare, and Mr. Hare firmly believed in him. On one occasion a letter was written and sent to Aaron Sherritt from Joe Byrne, asking him to meet the writer at Whorouly races to ride his (Joe Byrne’s) horse. It told Aaron where to meet the writer. Mr. Hare returned, stating that Aaron Sherritt said he could not meet the outlaws. I cannot give the day of that occurrence. On another occasion, of which I cannot give the date either, Captain Standish received a note about eight p.m. from a man, stating that without doubt the four outlaws were in a certain hut, which he described, and informing the Chief Commissioner he could easily capture them by sending out a party. Captain Standish sent out Mr. Hare and a large party of men, as near as I can remember, consisting of eleven.

1097. Can you say in which direction they went to identify it?—No; I have forgotten that. Captain Standish admitted the letter the other day in his evidence.

1098. Was it after the Whorouly races?—After this he admitted remembering getting the note while he was dining at O’Leary’s.

1099. Is that the date?—Yes. After Mr. Hare had proceeded some distance on his journey, the party met a man whom Constable Faulkner and other constable of the party recognized; this man rode away. Mr. Hare and party surrounded the hut in due time, and the door was opened by the same man as the party had met on the road, but there was no sign of the outlaws. It was upon this occasion that the Chief Commissioner would not let me go out; and when I explained his folly in refusing his permission, he replied, “I will endeavor to get the Kellys without your assistance”; and by sending this party out I considered it was conclusive evidence of his trying to do without our assistance. In Captain Standish’s evidence he says the Queensland police had such a train of men and baggage horses, and that we would be so slow. Now Captain Standish would not let us go out without six or seven Victorian police; and as to our slowness, that is not correct, as Mr. Hare will remember that, upon one occasion, he and his constables could not get up to one of the trackers, who at the time was following some horse tracks, before the tracker had gone a distance of four railes. This was on account of the great pace the boy was going.

1100. Was he on horseback?—Yes. Mr. Hare told this, not only to me but to Captain Standish and Mr. Sadleir; and I may mention that the trooper Mr. Hare had then was not a man that I relied on, as I only got him in Victoria, from Coranderrk, after the death of Corporal Sambo, and he had no experience in tracking.

1101. Was this a Victorian tracker or was he a Queensland man?—I believe he was originally from Queensland, but he had been at Coranderrk since he was a youngster.

1102. What was the special duty of the black trackers in Queensland—the same as here?—Just the same as the white police in one branch, as we have a large district of blacks to deal with; on the other hand, to arrest bushrangers, horse stealers, and cattle stealers, travelling sometimes sixty or seventy miles a day. I have done it myself in arresting a horse stealer, going at the rate of forty miles a day, and arrested him successfully. You can read in the papers about our going thirty or forty miles a day in tracking.

1103. The other charge was as to baggage and that kind of thing. Is it a fact that the black trackers require a lot of baggage, or do they go with the least possible thing they can go with?—With nothing at all in Queensland. They strip there and go with only their cap and ammunition and rifles; but it must be borne in mind that those boys and men came over from a tropical climate. I lost one from congestion of the lungs, and I only wanted sufficient covering for them at night. If we had been on actual information we could have gone without a pack-horse or anything—when the good information came in we could have done it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Eleven o’clock.

WEDNESDAY, 30TH MARCH 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;

G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A., E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P.,
James Gibb, Esq., M.L.A.

Stanhope O’Connor further examined.

1104. Will you go on?—In my opinion, Mr. Hare’s energy was misdirected. Mr. Sadleir, upon several occasions, remonstrated with Mr. Hare, and tried to show him the folly of his going out, as he did, upon no information. Before going any further, I wish to state that Captain Standish often spoke of Mr. Nicolson in the most disparaging terms. On one occasion, after Captain Standish had been running Mr. Nicolson down, Mr. Hare replied—“You should not say that; Nicolson is, and always was a true and loyal friend to you.” On another occasion, Captain Standish, referring to the death of the late Hon. John Thomas Smith, said—“Now Nicolson’s billet as Assistant Commissioner will soon been done away with, as the Hon. John Thomas Smith got it for him; the billet is a farce, and it will be all up with him now, as he has no other friend left.” Captain Standish never once went out with a party of police the whole time I was with him in Benalla.
1105. You heard Captain Standish’s statement here?—Yes, he went to Melbourne several times, but never stayed long, as he told me he was always hunted out of Melbourne by Sir Bryan O’Loghlen, the Acting Chief Secretary at that time. After Mr. Hare came home from his last trip in the bush, he was very down-hearted and in very bad health.

1106. When was that?—That was just immediately before they went to town, about the end of June 1879. He expressed himself as being thoroughly beaten, and that he did not care about staying any longer, as he could not see his way to capture the outlaws. Captain Standish was most reticent of his information; he would not tell Mr. Sadleir anything until Mr. Hare was first informed, and even then not until some days after. Captain Standish and Mr. Hare left for Melbourne about the end of June 1879, not together, but one left before the other. Mr. Nicolson arrived at Benalla on the 3rd of July 1879.

1107. Was Mr. Hare at Benalla when Mr. Nicolson arrived on the 3rd July?—If he was, he was on leave; I know he got so many days’ leave. He commenced to work in totally different manner to his predecessors. He went about and had interviews with several persons who would be likely to have the ear of the Kellys or their friends, and succeeded in getting some to work for him as his agents and spies. He (Mr. Nicolson) was not in the least reticent of his information to us—that is Mr. Sadleir and myself—but was always asking about it and advising with us both. On the 15th August 1879, a telegram was sent to Mr. Nicolson, from the Chief Commissioner.

1108. Did you see it?—I did; the contents of it were the information of the sticking up the Lancefield bank, telling Mr. Nicolson to start our party by special train for Kilmore, But he, Mr. Nicolson, was not to accompany us.

1109. Do you mean by “your party” the trackers?—The trackers. We arrived the same day at Kilmore, late at night. Although it poured with rain all night, we succeeded in picking up the tracks of the robbers, and we followed them down the telegraph wires, a distance, I believe, of eighteen miles. Here a heavy storm of hail and rain came on, and quite obliterated the tracks, already very faint of the last night’s rain, but we have solved the great question, namely, the direction the robbers had taken, and to our assistance the speedy capture of the bank robbers was due. I refer you for corroboration to Sub-Inspector Baber. This gentleman is a Victorian police officer, and accompanied us through the whole trip. The first information we received was on the 29th September 1879, from Mr. Sadleir, who was up at Wangaratta, and, I believe, somewhere about there saw this man, who informed him that he had seen five armed men answering to the obvious character of the informer, very properly decided on my advice, and told us that the informer told him that he (Mr. Sadleir) would find the tracks of the outlaws about half-way between the above places, and Mr. Sadleir said to us—“I think I can find the place that the informer means,” but upon Mr. Sadleir referring to me for my opinion, I told him and Mr. Nicolson I thought it was a good chance thrown away, as the party would have to find the tracks before daylight, for if we failed to pick them up, the people going to work in the morning would discover us, and the alarm would be spread far and wide, so I strongly recommended our not going unless the informer came and showed us the tracks. Mr. Nicolson, after considering my advice, and remembering the previous character of the informer, very properly decided not to go. After this we were unable to get any information fresh enough to work upon, as heavy rains always had occurred before we got the news, until one day, I cannot remember the date, at 6 p.m., we had information that the outlaws had been seen on the railway line about Wangaratta, with the telegraph wires broken. We started within two hours of the notice to the scene, but upon arriving at Wangaratta got word that the whole thing was a mistake, and was explained in the press next day. It was a threshing machine pulled down the telegraph wires in passing across the railway line. After this appearance of activity on the part of the police, information ceased for some time to come in, as the Kellys got so frightened that they did not go another mile. I have no date, but some time about the time the plough boards were taken, I think; it was after this breaking of the line; it was drawing near the close—about April, I suppose, I would not be sure. He told me to be in readiness to start at any moment, as he knew that the Kellys were within a certain radius, and he was only waiting for information that would point to the exact spot where they were last seen to enable us to pick up their tracks; and I have not the least doubt that if Mr. Nicolson had been allowed to remain, the outlaws would have been easily taken. Everything was pointing to the fact; information of a much fresher date was continually coming to hand; and at last, about a week before Mr. Nicolson was removed, an informer actually saw Joe Byrne and spoke to him. We got word after twelve hours after she saw him, but we had some four or six hours’ heavy rain between. We, Mr. Nicolson, Mr.
Sadleir, and myself, proceeded to Beechworth, and there saw Aaron Sherritt, who begged and prayed of Mr. Nicolson not to go out, as he himself had tried to follow the tracks of Joe Byrne, and found that they went from where Joe was seen to his (Byrne’s) mother’s house, and from thence on to a main road, occasioned by the rain which had washed them out. He also said, if we did not get the outlaws, they would know who had given the information, and would come and murder him and his connections. Mr. Nicolson was very anxious to go out, as he considered it would probably be his last chance, and after working so hard for such a long time he did not like to give it up; but he asked the opinion of all present, namely, Superintendent Sadleir, myself, Senior-Constable Mullane, and Detective Ward, and we all said we considered it would not be justifiable to risk the lives of the informers under the circumstances. This occurred just in the last week of Mr. Nicolson’s being up there. As nearly all our agents were in this portion of the district, we still hoped to have another chance, and we thought we should, too, when on the 31st of May, an agent, whole name I will call — sent in word that he had seen Joe Byrne up a gully about a mile from his (Byrne’s) mother’s house. We started out at once, took train to nearest point—Everton; thence by horseback to a certain paddock, about two miles, I think, from the spot where the outlaw had been seen; thence by foot to the exact place. We got the man’s track, and, after following it for some distance, found it was only a man collecting cows. The tracks went from one side of the gully to the other, turning down the cattle, and eventually a mob of tracks went down the gully towards Mrs. Byrne’s house, followed by this track. You can always tell when they are driving, because the man’s tracks are on top of the cattle. Aarons Sherritt, who had met us near Everton, and who acted as a guide and accompanied us on the trip, saw at once that it was Joe Byrne’s brother, Patsey, who was very like the outlaw. We returned to Benalla, and Mr. Nicolson was superseded by Mr. Hare the next day, the 2nd of June 1880. I may here state that hardly a fortnight passed but Captain Standish was ordering and counter-ordering Mr. Nicolson, sometimes demanding him to reduce the number of his men, at other times he was not to employ such and such a person, or not to put police here and police there, until I often wondered Mr. Nicolson did not pitch the whole thing up; but, as he often say to me, all his private feelings were sunk out of sight, and, therefore, for the public good, he stuck to the work. Before I conclude this part of my evidence, I wish to refer to the part of my published report in which I state—“He made a series of communications to the Queensland Government, tending to depreciate me and to remove the men from my control and supervision. This was done without my knowledge, and, consequently, I had no opportunity of explaining to my Commissioner.” Captain Standish’s communications were these, and I may state that I applied for them to the Queensland Government, whom I am representing officially now, and they evidently misunderstood, and sent me the wrong letters, not the ones I asked for; so if the Commission wish for them, it will be fully a fortnight before I can get them.

1112. How going to work?—Going to work in handing over the office and giving him information of everything about his time up to then. I remained some time longer. Mr. Nicolson came out, and then the three of us walked down to the hotel to lunch. Mr. Nicolson, a short time after lunch, asked me to dinner at seven o’clock to meet Mr. Hare, and I accepted his invitation, but about 5.50 p.m. Mr. Nicolson ran up to me and told me he had to go to town by the six train, and therefore would have to put off the dinner, but he was going to write a note to Mr. Hare explaining his apparent rudeness. Mr. Hare, a few days after, expressed to me that he thought Mr. Nicolson did this a slight, but when I told him that I had been asked as well and had been put off in the same way, he said that of course made the thing look different, and from the 3rd of June to the 25th of June, the day I left Benalla, Mr. Hare was working just in the very same way as Mr. Nicolson had been doing when he was removed from Benalla. Mr. Hare, two days before I left, told me he did not know what to do; although he had carte blanche to do what he liked and unlimited money to spend, he could get no information. That concludes my evidence in chief up to the time I left Benalla. I left Benalla for Essendon with my troopers on the morning of the 25th of June 1880.

30th March 1881.
1113. This was in consequence of your recall by the Queensland Government?—Yes, I put up at Flemington. I made arrangements to take berths in the Queensland steamer that was leaving on the 29th, but on Sunday the 27th of June, at half-past 7 p.m., I received a note (this is the original) from Captain Standish.

1114. Were you at Essendon when you received it?—I was at Flemington:—“Melbourne, 27th June 1880.—My dear Sir,—I have just received telegraphic information that the outlaws stuck up the police party that was watching Mrs. Byrne’s house, and shot Aaron Sherritt dead. The police, however, appeared to have escaped. In the urgent position of affairs, could you return to Beechworth with your trackers by the early train to-morrow, or by a special train, if that can be arranged. If you can oblige us in this way, could you manage to come in at once to see me at the Club by the hansom which I send out with this?” I lost no time with responding to Captain Standish’s letter. I got into his hansom which brought his letter, and was driven to the Melbourne Club; there I met Captain Standish, who had said—“Mr. O’Connor, in the urgent state of the case, can you manage to accede to my request?” I replied immediately—“It has always been my wish to have the chance of getting those fellows.” Captain Standish in his report, stated I “haw-haw’d.” I never did such a thing in my life; I was only too glad to get the opportunity. The only condition I made was, being under orders to proceed to Queensland, I was disobeying the head of my department, and therefore I must request that he would ask Mr. Ramsay to see that I was held blameless with my Government. Before leaving, Captain Standish said—“How long will you be before you are ready to start?” I looked at my watch, and I forget what time it was, but I told him I would be ready at ten that night. At half-past seven I got his letter, and at a quarter to ten I was ready at the station. All my arms were packed up, and the boys’ uniform and everything put away. I had to break open the cases, clean up the guns, accoutre the men in a proper way, and get back to the station by ten, and I was there at the train at a quarter to ten.

1115. It was not a ruse to make the Kellys believe you were going?—No. I was under orders to go. I mentioned one thing to Captain Standish, that is, that my wife would accompany me to Beechworth, as in all probability this tracking would be for several days, if not a week; she would like to be near where the work was going on, and therefore I requested that he should see that there was a first-class carriage on the special train for her convenience. Captain Standish referred to a memorandum which he had in his hand, and replied—“Of course there will be a first-class carriage; there will be a first-class carriage, a guard’s van, and an engine—they always have these on the special train”; and I remarked that this was not the case, as on our special trains, when we used them, there was only a guard’s van and an engine. I have a reason for mentioning this, which will appear by-and-by. You know by the press reports about the journey up as far as Benalla. There I arrived about 1 a.m., and met Mr. Hare with several men. They got into the train with us, Mr. Hare in the same carriage with myself and wife and my wife’s sister—we all talked and chatted.

1116. There was really a first-class carriage with the train?—There was. We all conversed together, and were upon the best of terms. Mr. Hare even asked me when I had got information by letter from Captain Standish. I replied—“At half-past seven.” He said—“I never saw such a fellow as that Standish. He does not seem to care a single rush about the work. I told him hours before about it, and I begged of him to go out and see you personally, as I knew it was a condescension on your part to come out to work again after the way he treated you.” I said—“Well, he never did, he wrote.” We ran on towards Glenrowan, and were stopped before we got there, by the pilot engine being seen pulled up ahead. Mr. Hare, who had a key, opened the carriage and got out upon the line, and met a porter or guard carrying a lamp, who stated to Mr. Hare about the line being taken up. Mr. Hare, after informing me of this occurrence, said—“The only thing we can do is to draw up to the platform at Glenrowan, so as to enable us to get our horses out.” This was done, and Mr. Hare and I were talking and considering the advisability of mounting out horses and riding down to the place that we supposed to be a mile off, the broken part of the line, and the order was given to that effect to get the horses out. It was just in the middle of this getting the horses out that Constable Bracken appeared upon the platform in the most excited state. He did not, as far as I remember, address any person in particular; but he stated—“The Kellys are in Jones’ public house; for God’s sake take care or they will escape.” Mr. Hare turned round to me and said—“Come on, O’Connor, or they will be gone,” or “they will escape,” and we started, Mr. Hare slightly in the lead. Before going a few yards, Mr. Hare said—“O’Connor, are the men coming?” As I said before, the men were in the act of getting out the horses and the noise was terrific, the horses coming out half rearing and plunging through the van. I turned round and sang out—“Come on, boys, come on,” and I saw following me a line of men. It was just sufficient light to be able to see that some were black and some white, but not to know the names; in this form the party approached Mrs. Jones’, and when about twenty-five yards from the house, as near as I can remember, we were stopped by a single shot, which was immediately followed by a volley from the outlaws from the house. This I, and, by my hearing, I judge our party replied to.

1117. How many were the party?—I should think about seven in the first rush up to the hut. Before I could load my rifle, which was a breech-loading Snider, Mr. Hare sang out to me the words which I stated here—“O’Connor, I am wounded, shot in the arm; I must go back.” This Mr. Hare did, and I may say I am giving him ample margin when I say he was five minutes on the field, that is at the front in the fight.

1118. He was not over that?—Not over that certainly. In Mr. Hare’s printed report he states that he spoke to the men and ordered them to stop firing. "I was struck by the first shot, and my left arm dropped helpless beside me. The firing was continued on both sides with great determination for about five minutes, when it ceased from the verandah, and screams from men, women, and children came from the inside of the house. I at once called on my men to cease firing, which they did." I deny that statement most emphatically.

Mr. Hare went back, I do not know for certain whether he went to the station as I stated in my written statement, at any rate he left the front, but whether he left to the platform or the station I did not know from my own knowledge at the time, but he did not return again to the front. And it was I who gave the order for the men to take cover, and it was I who, upon hearing the cries of the women, gave the order to cease firing. It was I, who called out to the women to come out. I never heard Mr. Hare speak after he left the front.

1119. What did you say in telling them to come out?—I sang out—"Cease firing," and I had to continue that for some seconds, some long time after the firing ceased, and then I sang out—"Let the women out, let the women out!" and the cry was taken up round the line by the men, and a few minutes after the women passed out immediately on my left. There was a man between Constable Kirkham, he was immediately on my left at the time, and I challenged the women to see there were no outlaws getting out, and he challenged them also.

1120. How near were you to them?—I imagine it was about the width of this room of where the women passed out. That was the first intimation that I received, and may I say, on the part of the other men, that any man received, of there being other than outlaws in the house. Mr. Hare also states that he loaded and fired his gun several times after the shot wound; this I must emphatically deny. I will in due time bring one, if not more, witnesses to prove what I state. After Mr. Hare left, I suppose—I will not swear, but I suppose—ten minutes or a quarter of an hour intervened before I saw one of the engines going back towards Benalla. This engine was followed immediately, within five minutes, by the second engine.

1121. What was the time that the first went?—I could not tell the exact time; it was after Mt. Hare left the front and retired. This second engine, subsequently, I found contained Superintendent Hare, which, I think, he admits in his evidence. I at this time—just about the time that Mr. Hare was going away—saw that we were most recklessly exposing our lives, and as I stated, ordered the men to take cover. I dropped into a little gully that was running past the front of the house. My men were on each side of me. I had only five with me, as you may remember one had been taken away. If I may be allowed to guess at the time, about half-an hour or three quarters of an hour after I had taken cover, a bullet struck a piece of wood in front of my position, which at once showed me that I was not in a secure place. I then followed the drain or gully down until I came to the position which I never left until I was superseded by Mr. Sadleir. I may state my position, which at on 1122. Had you pretty good proof at this time that all the persons other that the Kellys were out of the house?—I cannot tell the time, but I will refer to that presently. While I was in this second position, Senior-Constable Kelly came to me and said—"O, my God, I believe the outlaws have all got away." My reply to him was—"I will swear they did not get out at the front, as I have never left this place from the first attack." I asked him why he thought so, and he replied—"As I was passing round at the rear of the hut, about a hundred yards from the back door, I came upon a rifle all covered with blood, and a scull cap. I believe the rifle to be one of the Kelly's, as it is a revolving rifle. It looks very like as if the outlaws had got away."

1123. It was daylight at this time?—I do not think so; I could not be sure. Upon another occasion, subsequently to this one, Senior-Constable Kelly again came to me and said—"I hear that there are 40 prisoners in the kitchen of the hotel." I asked him who told him, but I do not wish to say positively who it was, but I believe it was Constable Braken, or he had heard it from some man that Constable Braken had told him.

1124. Can you say the time?—No, I could not make the attempt. I remember ten o'clock seemed to me to be four o'clock in the evening.

1125. You do not know whether it was daylight at the time?—I would not like to state.

1126. It was after several volleys had been fired from your men?—Of course. Oh, certainly. Mr. Sadleir then arrived, and made his way up to my position, and we had some conversation.

1127. He was not on the ground before this?—Not when this was told me.

1128. Was he on the ground before he came to you?—I believe he came straight to me.

1129. Did Mr. Sadleir arrive at this period?—No; not when I took my second position. When he came to me and showed himself to me, I saw he was there, he took command.

1130. Previous to this point of your evidence, about the 40 person inside, you have stated that Mr. Sadleir had arrived, and superseded you in the command?—I did mean it in that way.

1131. You got the information before you were superseded?—Yes; that was the first intimation when I saw him that he had arrived.

1132. Was that subsequent to everything I have stated?—I believe so; he made his way to my position.

1133. He was with the party before that so far as you know?—No, certainly not; he spoke to me S. O'Connor, continued.
about the Kellys, I cannot remember what it was, and left me there.

1134. Did you confer as to the best course to take then?—Well, we had plenty of men then, we were conferring about the number of men. There were plenty of men then, and Mr. Sadleir considered it best to keep them secure, if they had not got out.

1135. Did you confer as to the positions of the men?—Not at that time. I told him I would remain there and let my men command the front of the house, and cannot remember what he said to me; but he left, and subsequently sent for me, which was at half-past ten a.m.

1136. That was hours after?—An hour perhaps.

1137. You remained where you were; he left you, and you saw no more of him until he sent for you at half-past ten?—Yes; I made my way at once to where he was at the railway station.

1138. Had he arrived by train with a lot of men?—Yes. There we had a long conversation. Ned Kelly had been taken prisoner.

1139. Was this the first time you were aware of that?—No; I knew about it from Constable Dwyer, who was bringing ammunition round.

1140. Did you take part in the capture of Kelly?—No, that was right away to my right.

1141. About what time was this?—Half-past ten when he had this conversation, Kelly having been captured. Kelly was wounded in the station-house at that time. Mr. Sadleir and I then walked round the line of men, getting what information we could, and suggesting any improvement in the way of watching the house. In Mr. Sadleir’s statement, he mentions the time which I do not dispute, that the outlaws let the prisoners out. When the prisoners came out, they told us immediately they came out, which I most decidedly considered the best time to get true information, that Joe Byrne (that was in the morning. I think it was eleven o'clock) had been shot at daylight in the morning, by a shot that entered at the front door, cutting the femoral artery, and that Joe Byrne was in the act of drinking some grog at the time.

1142. Would not their armour cover that femoral artery?—No, there were cracks in it. One of them stated that Joe Byrne’s toast was “Many more years in the bush for the Kelly gang.” Eventually, Mr. Sadleir and I conferred as to the advisability of endeavoring to break into the house, but when we considered there were two determined ruffians, in nearly invulnerable armour, en-cased, as the prisoners told us, in the brick fireplaces of the house, and the doors barricaded with the furniture of the house, we thought that we would not risk a single life if we saw the slightest chance of getting the remaining outlaws without that risk, even if we had to wait the whole day. While talking together, Senior-Constable Johnson came up and proposed a plan to drive the outlaws from the cover of the house. He proposed to set fire to the building, and when the smoke got thick he had no doubt the outlaws would run out. Mr. Sadleir acquiesced in this, but did not allow him to carry into execution at once. We still had a hope that they would surrender. We were calling out to them to surrender, but getting no reply, we allowed this constable to carry into execution this plan.

1143. Before doing this, were there many volleys fired into the house?—A great many before we called out. A great many.

1144. Not exactly volleys?—Indiscriminate firing. But under cover of heavy fire the man approached the house to set fire to it.

1145. Previous to that, have you any recollections when you noticed the last shot coming from the house?—I can only give that from hearsay. I cannot tell when I saw the last, but one of the constables reported to Mr. Sadleir that a shot was fired, I think, about a couple for hours before the house was burnt—two hours before the house was set fire to. But one of the men stated he saw one of the outlaws pass the window about twenty minutes before the house was burnt. Mr. Sadleir will be probably able to remember the man. One of the men came up and said he saw, I think, Dan Kelly, pass the window about twenty minutes before the house was burnt. We collected the men, and put them upon two sides of the house, and called out to the two outlaws that we would give them so many minutes, and if they did not surrender, we would fire, and I think we stated that we would burn them, but there was no reply, and after giving two or three heavy volleys, under which Constable Johnson approached the end of the building, and set fire to the house. I think we gave them ten minutes or a quarter of an hour after we warned them.

1146. Was there any firing on the part of the police from the time that you were made acquainted with the fact that there were others in the hotel besides the Kellys, until after the prisoners were liberated?—I should say most decidedly, yes; but mind the prisoners were in the kitchen, a totally distinct building, separated by several feet from the building where the outlaws were.

1147. Fired indiscriminately through the house?—No. We knew the prisoners were in the rear in this kitchen, a totally distinct building, separated by several feet from the building where the outlaws were.

1148. How did you know that?—From information before, whenever Senior-Constable Kelly got the information. They were in the rear of the building, and it was from out of there they came.

1149. Then on the man’s statement, which was not corroborated, you caused firing of that sort?—We replied to shots that were fired at us.

1150. Was the door open at this time?—No; all barricaded. I took it for granted that the prisoners were in the building behind, I took that as gospel truth.

1151. But with the knowledge of the large number of people there?—I did not believe all about the people there. I heard there were 40 men there.

1152. How many actually came out?—I think it was stated 20; they all threw themselves down in a heap, so that it was not easy to tell the number.

1153. From the time you got the information till eleven o’clock, when the prisoners were released, was there firing at the house by the police?—Certainly there was, but it must not go out as if we were firing. into the 40 or 20 prisoners.

1154. It was only a small place?—There is a great deal of difference in the matter of where we pointed the gun. I admit that every bullet had its billet, and was meant for the outlaws; but I never fired into that kitchen.

1155. You received information from Senior-Constable Kelly that there were some 40 prisoners in the kitchen?—That he heard so.

1156. He informed you of that?—Yes.

30th March 1881.

1157. Firing took place after that, before the prisoners were released?—Yes, certainly.

1158. Did you tell every member of your force that there were prisoners in the kitchen, and to direct their firing to any special part of the building?—I did not, but Senior-Constable Kelly, I imagine, did.

1159. Of your own knowledge, did he—did you tell him to?—No.

1160. Would it not have been your duty, as commanding officer at that time, to avoid any unnecessarily risk the life of innocent persons, to have at once sent round to the members of the force?—In a time of excitement like that you cannot always do the most advisable thing and reckon what is best. I did what I thought best, and that was on no account to let the Kellys escape. I knew this, if there were any people in the house they would, in all probability, be friends of the Kellys, their relations and sympathizers, and men that helped them.

1161. You are giving us this impression, that you did not unnecessarily risk the lives of those people, because you were concentrating your firing of that portion of the building occupied by the outlaws?—Yes.

1162. At the same time, you say the remainder of the force were ignorant of that fact, as far as you knew?—I did not say that, but I believe Senior-Constable Kelly went round and informed all the men.

1163. How many were in your force at that time?—I believe about 14 of us.

1164. Armed men outside?—Yes.

1165. I mean from the time you were relieved?—No, I cannot say that, because fresh men kept coming in.

1166. Up to the time Mr. Sadleir came?—No, I cannot say, because men came in from different parts, when I left my position, which I thought most dangerous one.

1167. Mr. Sadleir had arrived before the prisoners were released?—Yes, a long time.

1168. Did you inform Mr. Sadleir of the fact that there were 40 prisoners in the kitchen?—Yes, he knew of it.

1169. Was there firing from then till the release of the prisoners?—Yes.

1170. At that time you did not know the number of men engaged on police duty?—I do not know up till this moment. I believe there were about 60 eventually; they kept coming in fives and tens. What I wish to state is that there was no indiscriminate firing after I knew, on my part, and the men who were with me, into the house where the prisoners were. Our fire was concentrated on the place where the outlaws were, and where the firing came from.

1171. Were you aware that there was a man then in the house beside the outlaws, before the place was set on fire, or when it was being set on fire?—I cannot remember.

1172. The old man Cherry?—I cannot remember whether I heard of it before or after, now. I remember so much afterwards that I am frightened to say now whether I knew it before. Before going further I would like to hand the copies of the telegram that Captain Standish sent to my Government, asking to keep me. These were sent before he asked me, dated 16/6/80—“Would like to retain troopers till Superintendent Chomley returns with trackers from Queensland; he will reach Brisbane on Monday.” The telegram was the telegram before I left Benalla. This is the telegram the Government sent 27th May 1880—“Colonial Secretary, Queensland. Kelly gang have again broken out. It is of the utmost importance that you should give orders to Sub-Inspector O’Connor to remain here and assist for a few days. He will return to Queensland to-morrow, unless your telegraph to-night to contrary.—ROBERT RAMSAY, Chief Secretary.” The reply was—“Keep O’Connor and police so long as they can be of any service to you. Sorry to hear these scoundrels are adrift again.—A. H. PALMER.” Anybody would have inferred from that I had been asked to go and had refused. Instead of that, it has been sent before I had ever been communicated with. Well, the house was burned, and eventually the bodies of the two remaining outlaws recovered, together with that of Joe Byrne, and Captain Standish arrived on the scene.

1173. Were those the only two bodies discovered?—The two outlaws, Dan Kelly and Steve Hart, and the body of Joe Byrne.

1174. Were they all dead?—They were all dead.

1175. Were you present when Cherry’s body was taken out?—I was, and he was not dead.

1176. Did you hear any remark he made?—He could just speak in a low voice; I could not tell what he said; the priest spoke to him, and gave him absolution, I believe, and he died immediately afterwards.

1177. Martin Cherry was the only man taken out who was not dead?—Yes. Captain Standish arrived upon the Glenrowan platform at about half-past five.

1178. What was the cause of Cherry not being able to speak?—His being shot in the house.

1179. Was he injured by the fire?—No, not touched by the fire; the body of Joe Byrne and Martin...
Cherry were neither of them touched by the fire. Captain Standish got out on the platform, and immediately saw me, but took not the slightest notice of me.

1180. That was about half-past five?—Yes; until I put out my hand, which he just touched with his fingers. Mr. Sadleir also stated to me that Captain Standish was very cavalier in his manner to him. After a little delay, the whole party, with the exception of a few men left to guard, proceeded back to Benalla. I do not know if it is necessary to state here, but in Captain Standish’s evidence, he says, “I instructed Mr. Sadleir not to hand over the charred remains of the outlaws.” To the best of my memory, I overheard Captain Standish, in reply to Mr. Sadleir about the bodies, say, “Certainly, by all means, let them have them”; that they were to give up the bodies. I have had no conversation with Mr. Sadleir about this, so of course, if he says “No,” I am mistaken; but from the best of my knowledge and belief, Captain Standish gave him permission to give them up.

1181. Do you remember Kate Kelly going up to the house?—No, not actually going up to the house; but I remember her making a step in advance, as if she were going up.

1182. Was she ordered back by the police?—Yes.

1183. What time was that?—Just after the house was set on fire, she made a step forward, and Mr. Sadleir, who was in charge of the attacking party, said, “Kate Kelly, stop a minute; where are you going?” She said, “I am going up to see Dan,” or one of them she mentioned. Mr. Sadleir said, “Will you induce them to surrender?” “Surrender to you——dogs; no, I would sooner see them burnt alive!” Mr. Sadleir said, “Stand back”; and he said to me, “If that woman gets up there, we cannot do a single thing; we will have to leave the outlaws, instead of trying to rush in and get the bodies.” We cannot do anything if she got in and got them under her protection. We thought they were alive at that time. If she had said, “yes, I will induce them to surrender,” we would have been very glad for her to have gone up.

1184. Do you remember any conversation with the priest before he went into the house?—Yes, I remember the priest started to go up immediately, about half a second, after Kate Kelly; and Mr. Sadleir stopped him, and he asked him some questions, which I have forgotten, and I have forgotten the answer. At any rate all the crowd began to clap him; and he drew back again when Mr. Sadleir remonstrated. He then went on—the crowd clapped again. Mr. Sadleir said, “If anybody is to go up, it is my place, and I beg you to go back.” The priest stood back, and the crowd clapped, and he stepped forward at the same time. The priest was in front of the body of police. Mr. Sadleir and myself, and several men, moved with the priest, the priest having a lead about the length of this table.

1185. He proceeded and entered the house?—He entered one door, I forget which door it was; it was not the room the Kellys were in, but the police—four constables—tried to burst open the door in the partition of the room, in which the outlaws were, and I saw them try three or four times till the door gave way, and then only through the fire which had charred everything; it was like a seething furnace.

1186. Did the priest followed the priest immediately?—Some men did through the way he went.

1187. Simultaneously?—Immediately after.

1188. Did the priest not first came out of the house and hold up his hand, signifying that all were dead, before the police entered?—No; he did it to the people, not to the police; he went in at the door and came out again, and held up his hand to the people. At the time he went into the room there were constables trying to burst the door of the closed portion of the house, and it gave way after three or four attempts; it fell in nearly burnt through the time.

1189. And those police went up at the same time as the priest went?—Yes; immediately on his proceeding. Mr. Sadleir said, “Father so and so, if it is any one’s place to go up, it is mine—stand back,” and the priest went on, clapped by the people, and Mr. Sadleir said, “We must go on now;” and we all went on, and then the whole crowd closed in round us when they saw us moving.

1190. What resulted from the priest’s entrance; what was the next?—Nothing resulted.

1191. Did he communicate anything to the police after this?—Mr. Sadleir said to the priest as he passed through when he went out, “Did you recognize them?—the fire was so fierce we could not recognize a face when we looked in. He stated to the best of his belief he saw the two outlaws dead.

1192. Was that in the room where the police burst the door open?—Yes, the partition was burned, which the police did not know, and the priest not knowing either, went in by a fluke through it.

1193. The priest did not know them?—Yes, he did, that is what I understood from him.

1194. He was a priest from another colony just travelling through?—Well, I gave the description of it as far as I know, and it was this, to the best of his knowledge it was the two outlaws. I am only telling what I learnt subsequently from Mr. Sadleir. The priest was occupied immediately after with this dying man Cherry.

1195. Was the hotel door standing open all the time, or how did it come open?—I cannot tell you, because after I left the door of the house I was very little engaged there. I saw no open door when I was in the front of the house. I cannot give any evidence on that. Up to the time, I left to the front again. I was round at the rear most of the time.

1196. Not between half-past ten at the time the place was burned. You do not know when the door was opened?—No, I cannot say. The dead bodies of the two outlaws and of Martin Cherry the Chief Commissioner saw on the platform, and, after this conversation with Mr. Sadleir that I referred to above, we all got into the train, with the exception of a few men left on guard, and proceeded to Benella. Captain Standish never as much as said “Thank you, Mr. O’Connor,” or recognized me in the slightest way, except what I have referred to there; he just merely touched my hand. I went in and saw Mr. Hare on my arrival at Benalla.

1197. Where?—Into his bedroom; and his remark to me was—“Let bygones be bygones,” and seemed very friendly disposed. I accepted his hand at once.

1198. Are you aware whether any civilians offered to enter the house before it was set fire to?—Not to my knowledge; I cannot remember—certainly not; I think I would have remembered the circumstance if it had occurred.

1199. During the time you were serving under Mr. Hare, you had no quarrel in your capacity as an officer?—Not any at all, nobody could get on better that we did all the time we were together.

1200. Officially you agreed?—Officially and privately, until the time we had a private quarrel which I have previously spoken of. And then on Mr. Hare coming and assuming command again, we were on the most friendly terms.

1201. This private quarrel in no way interfered with the discharge of your public duties?—In no way at all. Resuming my narrative:—I saw Mr. Hare, and he then in conversation said to me—I cannot remember the words, but something about “I sent up to Mr. Sadleir to tell him or advise him to burn the house”; that was the effect of it, that he had been either cognizant of the burning or had sent instructions; I do not know which it was. I only bring this in because Captain Standish’s evidence states something about it. Next morning, after never receiving a word of thanks from Captain Standish at all, I left Benalla for Melbourne. Mr. Hare was in the same train, and also Ned Kelly. Mr. Hare was in a separate carriage when I arrived at Euroa, where the trains meet. I received the Age newspaper, and, upon reading the report, I saw that my name was not mentioned; in fact, I might have been in Queensland. I waited till I got to Seymour, where the train waits for a quarter of an hour, and went into Mr. Hare’s carriage. I said—“Hallo! Hare, how is this, look at this report, why you have been doing everything by it, and I am not mentioned; how do you account for that?” Mr. Hare replied—“Oh, wait a bit, wait till you see the Argus, that will make it all right; the Argus is all right; the Argus is here, you can have it,” and he handed me the Argus. I took that with me into my own carriage. The Argus report mentioned we were at the place, and that was all. When I met my friends, they wanted to know what I have been doing at this fight—why did not I accompany Mr. Hare in the first rush, why not help him in some way, and would not be satisfied until I told them the whole story, and actually had to go down and publish in the Argus a short résumé of what occurred. In Mr. Hare’s report he stated, after omitting my name, you night, say altogether, he published a short paragraph on page 7, at the top of the page—“Since writing the above, I have seen a statement made by Mr. O’Connor to the press, and, after reading it, I can have no doubt his statement is perfectly correct; but in my report I have merely stated facts that are within my remembrance, and, no doubt, in the darkness of the morning and the excitement of the time, I may have omitted many incidents that occurred.” Well, I say if Mr. Hare acknowledged that to be true he should have mentioned it before. This is the report:—“I went down by the special train on Sunday night, at the request of Captain Standish. I collected my troopers, and started three hours after I received notice. I agreed to go on condition that the Government of Victoria would see me held blameless, as we were under order to leave Queensland. On our arrival at Glenrowan, we heard that the rails had been taken at some distance further on. We thought that the best course would be to get the horses and proceed to the spot. Bracken then appeared, and informed us that the Kellys were at Jones’ public house. Superintendent Hare, myself, and four or five men rushed up to the house. When we got within 25 yards we were received with a single shot, and then a volley. We returned the fire. Hare said, ‘O’Connor, I am wounded, I am shot in the arm, I must go back’. He left immediately. We remained, and our incessant fire drove the outlaws into the house, which we heard them barricade. Mr. Hare returned to the station, remained a short time there, and then went to Benalla. I stood at my post until half-past ten in the forenoon, when I was sent for by Superintendent Sadleir. I was within 25 yards of the house the whole time. At daybreak I got behind shelter. One of my troopers was shot alongside of me—cut across the eyebrows. He jumped on the bank, fired five shots into the house, and said, ‘Take that, Ned Kelly’. It seemed to afford him great relief, but rather amused me. I was left in charge of the men from the time Mr. Hare left until Mr. Sadleir arrived on the ground.” I had not seen Mr. Hare’s report at this time. I never thought that officially it would be the same as the newspapers, and it was after I reached Queensland that I got the Argus with this report published in it. My Government met me on the steamer when I went to Queensland. A report was handed me by the constable, and I did not get this till five or six days after I arrived there. I had not seen this one then, calling upon me to explain how it was I had not done my duty; in fact, the whole of it was so strong that that day I wrote an account, and that same day sent in my resignation.

1202. What do you mean, “not doing your duty”?—I consider it was not doing my duty when they said, “Why did I not do this and that.” Judging from the reports that went up, they thought I have not been there, and that Mr. Hare had done everything.
1203. Had you heard that Captain Standish had written to the Queensland Government respecting your delay in the colony as permitted?—There was nothing about that in the report; but I refer to the account of the Glenrowan affair, and they did not consider that I have acted as an officer, and called upon me to explain, and I was so annoyed that I sent in my resignation the same evening and gave a full statement, as I am giving now. The following morning I called at the Commissioner of Police’s office. The Commissioner of Police was very hurt at my sending in my resignation. He begged of me to withdraw it, and represented to me that it was not his fault this report came to me, it was the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Palmer. After a couple of hours’ talk I agreed to withdraw my resignation. The Governor subsequently sent for me, and with the Chief Secretary spoke to me about the whole occurrence, asked my opinion upon several incidents in it, for instance, the burning of the house, and I gave my opinion; and then they asked me what steps I intended to pursue; my reply was, “I must return to Victoria to demand an enquiry to Mr. Hare’s report about what occurred at Glenrowan.” They quite agreed with me that I should have one, and upon that understanding I came over to Victoria again, as you can see by the date of my application for the enquiry, 7th September 1880, and now the date when the enquiry began, the 18th of this month. My Government most kindly gave me leave, and I think for nearly five months I was on leave, but still I could not satisfy them that I was going to have the enquiry. I could get no answer. So at last they wrote and told me that they could not give me unlimited leave, and my reply was, “I beg to resign,” and was sorry they did not see it was for their own interests that I should still remain in the Queensland force to attend any enquiry that might be called for. It was very shortly after this Kelly Reward Board was appointed. The Queensland Government telegraphed to me in a great state to represent them officially at that board for fear that I would not do so. I agreed to do so. So you see that I actually resigned my appointment to get this enquiry, although I did not mean to infer that I would have stayed for a very long time in the Queensland police, but I mean it was really the cause of my resigning my appointment in Queensland not being able to get the enquiry into this. I have been labouring under that ever since the Glenrowan affair, most people believing Mr. Hare’s statement was true. After I arrived in town I never received a communication from Captain Standish, never so much as “Thank you Mr. O’Connor,” or anything whatever until I received this.

1204. That was the first official recognition?—Yes, I will read it; “Police Department, Chief Commissioner’s office, Melbourne, 2nd July 1880.—Sir—I have the honour to enclose for your information a copy of a letter I have received from the private secretary to His Excellency the Governor. It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity of conveying to you this expression of His Excellency’s appreciation of the important services you have recently rendered to the Police Department and the community generally in connection with the destruction of the Kelly band of outlaws. I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, F. C. STANDISH, Chief Commissioner of Police. Stanhope O’Connor, Esq., Sub-Inspector Queensland police.” This is the enclosure, “Government House, Melbourne, June 30, 1880.”—You notice the difference of the dates, the time that elapsed before Captain Standish was “pleased” to send this to me.—“Sir—Although the Governor has already communicated to you by telegraph his congratulations to the police of the successful overthrow of the Kelly gang, he was not at the time fully aware of all the circumstances of the case, and I am now directed by His Excellency to request that you will convey to Mr. Superintendent Hare, Mr. Superintendent Sadleir, Mr. O’Connor, and the members of the police force engaged on the occasion, his thanks and congratulations upon the promptitude, courage and determination displayed by them, and also upon the very proper prudence and caution exercised, by which, no doubt, several valuable lives, which might otherwise have been sacrificed, were saved.—I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant, (Signed) FREDK. LE PATOUREL, Private Secretary, Captain Standish, Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne.”—You can see from that that nearly all the people imagined that Mr. Hare remained on the field, and was, in fact, doing everything. Subsequently, I dined at Government House, and I gave Lord Normanby a full detailed account of what happened. He was not aware of anything of the sort. In fact, the first telegram, that Mr. Hare got, I believe, thanked Mr. Hare, not mentioning any others at all. Afterwards, Mr. Ramsay wrote this to my Government:—“9th July 1880.—I avail myself of the opportunity afforded by the return of Mr. Sub-Inspector O’Connor to Brisbane to express to you the thanks of this Government for the great service rendered by the Government of Queensland in allowing that officer, and his man to remain on duty in Victoria for so long a period, and especially for your prompt reply to my telegram of the 27th ult., authorising me to detain Mr. O’Connor and the native troopers when on their way back to Queensland. Mr. O’Connor and his men were present during the whole of the encounter with the outlaws at Glenrowan, and it will gratify you to learn that they rendered most valuable assistance on that occasion. I am assured by the Chief Commissioner of Police that there is no ground whatever for supposing that a feeling of jealousy existed at any time of the part of the Victorian police towards Mr. O’Connor and his party of trackers. It appears that the greatest cordiality invariably prevailed between the two bodies, and I am quite at a loss to understand what can have given rise to a contrary impression.—I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, (Sd.) ROBERT RAMSAY.”—I wish to state that the Chief Commissioner of Police was... aware that there was this jealousy, because, prior to my leaving, I called upon the Chief Commissioner of Police, and he, in his office, offered to shake me by the hand, which I declined. He asked me, “What is this I have received from your Government. They state there has been a feeling of jealousy between your men and our police?” My reply was, “Captain Standish, the Victorian police, as a body, both officers and men, have always treated us with kindness, with the exception of the Chief Commissioner of Police, Captain Standish”; and I said, “When the time comes, as I have no doubt it will, I will do my best to prove to the satisfaction of the commission or board what I say”; and in the face of that he tells Mr. Ramsay to write the letter there was no feeling of jealousy. I think I may say I have concluded, with one exception. In reference to my evidence this morning, when word was sent to Mr. Sadleir that Joe Byrne was seen at a certain place, and that we started up to Beechworth, I wish to state more fully about that. The communication was addressed to Mr. Nicolson, at Benalla. Mr. Nicolson was, at that time, down in Melbourne worrying about this business whether he was going to be removed or not. He was down there when the information came. We immediately sent a telegram down to him, which was the telegram that Captain Standish said he was so courteous as to hand to Mr. Nicolson at the Spencer-street station. Mr. Nicolson came up by that train, arriving about eight o’clock, and met Mr. Sadleir and me at the platform, and we all then went up in the train to Beechworth.

1205. What is your opinion of the action taken by the police in setting fire to Mrs. Jones’ hotel?—I think it was the most proper thing to do. We knew at the time the outlaws were encased in what you may almost call bullet-proof armour. They were in a bullet-proof house as long as they kept in the chimneys and the house was barricaded. There was no way, except by serious loss of life, and it is the duty of a police officer not to sacrifice his men’s lives; if he can see his way to do his work as effectually on the field was of more value than two outlaws’ lives. After mature consideration Mr. Sadleir and several of the sub-officers considered it was a proper thing to do. Any army man would consider it nothing but false sympathy about those ruffians.

1206. Have you related all the circumstances of the attack on the house?—I can only speak from hearsay.

1207. Were there not some other persons injured?—Yes; but I would suggest that Mr. Sadleir, who knows all the circumstances of the case, would be better able to speak of that.

1208. You did not see the prisoners?—I saw them, but I have forgotten, and Mr. Sadleir will go more clearly into all the details.

1209. As a matter of fact you know there was a child hit?—I know there were one or two persons hit.

1210. They were not situated in that part that was in your view?—I believe they were in the front.

1211. You were not cognizant of that?—No.

1212. You were in charge at the time?—I was certainly in charge as a sworn-in officer of the Victorian police. I have heard statements since that the authorities here say that I was not, because I had left, but it was on the understanding that once being an officer here when I was asked to go back and resume my work I still occupied the same position; but I believe, from a very fair authority, that is one of their police, that I had nothing at all to do with it—that I went up there simply as a volunteer.

1213. You went up at Captain Standish’s special request?—Yes; and I was not it worthy, after he had done that, of being acknowledged?

1214. And did not that show jealousy on his part?—If you follow the evidence throughout you will see the matter culminated in that point.

1215. Why did he ask you to go back?—Because he knew the outlaws would get away, and the police would be the laughing-stock of the colony. It was against his wish, but Mr. Hare recommended it. You see the time he took to do it—when he saw the country and all would be at him he reluctantly did it. If it was not for Mr. Ramsay, who believed in the trackers, I firmly believe he would not have sent for me at all.

1216. Is it in evidence when Captain Standish received the telegram?—I think he said early in the day. What I say is this—taking merely one instance, I most decidedly admit it would not be borne. But to understand that you must take the events all through from the commencement, from the time I stated he would endeavor to take the outlaws without us. Then there is the fact of his meeting me and saying, “What the Dickens have you done here; you have done nothing”; and I can bring out a great deal more in evidence.

1217. He stated you have brought contrary to his recommendations?—That, I think, is very conclusive.

1218. There was no jealousy between you and Mr. Hare?—Certainly not; not to the slightest as far as I know, while I was up there, and the Police Department, as a body, worked most harmoniously together excepting Captain Standish; that was the only case that would be injurious to the public interest.

S. O’Connor, continued.
30th March 1881.

1219. During your experience with the police, did you see any want of efficiency on the part of the men?—As policemen or what?

1220. In any way?—As bushmen, certainly, there was a want of efficiency.

1221. You were here when Mr. Nicolson gave his evidence; he alluded to several instances of men in the police service where they were unable to know the proper use of firearms—in some cases, never having shot a single shot from any gun—did you meet with any men to lead you to suppose they were so thoroughly ignorant and unfit for that particular class of duty as that?—There were several cases. I cannot recall names or times, but I know there were men sent to Benalla who did not know what a breech-loader or a cartridge was, and they had to be thoroughly instructed; and Captain Standish objected to this, and wrote to discontinue this wasteful extravagance; but I mean as police constables they were a fine body of courageous men. I state that all those that came under my notice could not be better; they were a splendid body of men.

1222. Not lacking in courage?—No.

1223. But in discipline?—No; in discipline they were splendid. I never heard of a case where a man was called up and reprimanded.

1224. But they were no bushmen and not used to arms?—I do not say all of them, but a few. As to their capacity as bushmen, Mr. Hare will bear me out that on one occasion, in going to a certain place, we suddenly came across a road, and there were eight or nine or ten men, a great many of them thought they knew the country thoroughly, but they had no more idea than the babe unborn where they were. They had to send a constable a few miles down to find out where they were. There were no guides amongst the police, showing the actual necessity for some outside assistance, such as spies, who knew the country. I was out with Mr. Sadleir, with a party under Senior-Constable Flood, a most good and able man; he was able, but even he showed he did not know the country. After proceeding till four o'clock, instead of being at the place we thought we would, he told us he had gone the wrong way, that he thought the road led one way and it led another.

1225. Were they better adapted for town police than for a service of that kind?—No, I did not say that. I say we wanted guides, we could not do with the police solely, some men (Mr. Hare and Captain Standish) never had guides, which I want to maintain Mr. Nicolson made it his first duty to get.

1226. On what terms were those men specially selected— their special knowledge of country life?—Well, no; during Mr. Hare’s time generally county Bourke men were, I believe, taken, because they belonged to county Bourke and to Mr. Hare. I know one or two of the men had complaints that when Mr. Hare went out that he excluded the men who used to be in my party, he took on new county Burke men instead. The men came up and did not like it, and at one time two or three of those men Captain Standish recommended Mr. Hare to take, which he did.

1227. Is there anything else?—Nothing else that I remember.

1228. One general question: can you, now the matter is long past, account for the long delay in capturing the Kellys, you being an officer of the service here and of Queensland?—Well, the first principal point I always considered was the want of knowledge on the part of the police of the bush, they did not know the country. In conversation which I had with a gentleman up there, a thorough bushman, he pointed this out. He said to me, “Look here, men in the police here, what they want to do in this country districts is to learn the bush. These men never go off the main road.” He said when the men were stationed at Hedley, they just used to ride up and down the road. “I have asked them to come and muster cattle, and to see how those outlaws work.” They wanted men more of that kind—bushmen, men who could go through the bush. I know there are some of that sort; there is one constable, Graves, a capital bushman, who led us in one party very well, but it was only in a very small circle of district. This man knew the country, and could go on end for a day and still know the country.

1229. As far as you were able to judge, was there a want of a thoroughly well organized system for the outlaws’ capture to be established by the officers in command?—There were two different systems employed; and I most decidedly say the first system of scouring the country, after the first two or three trips, was certainly useless, because you could never get away without it being known; and in that country a large number of men riding shod horses can be heard half-a-mile away; and, unless on certain information, you may ride within half-a-mile of the men you are looking for and not know it. When I arrived, I found they had no information, and never could say the Kellys passed such and such a house at such a time, so that we really never had an opportunity of finding the tracks. We got on track several times in our travels which we thought were the outlaws’; and we followed, on one occasion, four men following stock on the run; and we thought undoubtedly those were the outlaws, because no one would have ridden over those ranges.

1230. Do you think any information was given at any time that would have been of service, and, for want of promptness of action on the part of the officers, the opportunity was lost in capturing the outlaws?—No, I do not know a single case where there was a want of promptness of action; but, in my evidence, I said I thought there was a chance which Captain Standish interfered with our going out, which I considered one of the best chances. That was the hut referred to in the evidence, where the information came in that the outlaws were undoubtedly in the hut; and by the fact of the man going up and opening the door—the same man who met the police—there is some color for believing the outlaws had been there. I say that Captain Standish showed a great want of judgment, to say nothing of jealousy, in not allowing us to go out then.

1231. Do you think, from your knowledge of the country now, that it would have been possible to cut those men off from their supplies?—No, I think it would have been impossible.

1232. They had supplies at every turn?—They were supplied anywhere they liked by their friends, and had only got to arrange with them where to take up their provisions.

1233. Your impression is that they had a number of friends and sympathizers in that district?—Undoubtedly.

1234. Who always kept them supplied with the ordinary necessities of life?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Stanhope O’Connor further examined.

1235. The Witness.—I forgot to mention in my evidence yesterday—I said in my evidence I was to be at the railway station at Essendon at ten o’clock. I arrived there at a quarter to ten, and at ten o’clock the stationmaster at Essendon sent for me—I was a little way down the platform—to ask me if I knew anything about the starting of the special train from Melbourne. He said the train was there but there were no orders. I told him I knew nothing; I could not give any opinion. About ten minutes after ten he sent for me again. He said, “Can you tell the officials in Melbourne, if there are any police coming up, or even Captain Standish, because they do not know what to do.” I replied, “All I know is that Captain Standish informed me that the special train would be at Essendon at ten o’clock.” The second remark I wish to make is, one of the members of the Commission asked me yesterday in my evidence as to who gave Senior Constable Kelly the information as to number of prisoners, and whether they were in the house. I forgot at the time. I said I believed it was Constable Bracken, but since looking at my notes I find and I believe it to have been a woman, who came out of the house, because Constable Bracken, I find from hearsay evidence afterwards, had gone immediately after the telegram. The third remark I wish to make is, when I mentioned about the delay in sending the Governor’s letter by Captain Standish, one member of the Commission suggested that Sunday might have intervened. Well, the 27th, we all know, was Sunday, and the 30th was Wednesday, and was the date of the Governor’s letter, and I received it from Captain Standish on the 2nd; so that Sunday did not intervene.

1236. After one of the children was wounded in the house did you see a man rush out with a child in his arms—a man named Neil McHugh?—No, I did not.

1237. It is stated he brought out one of the wounded children; did you see that man that day?—I cannot remember seeing him; in fact, I saw none to speak to, none of the women, or any of the people that came out at all, to my knowledge, to speak to the whole time. I only knew of their passing by.

The witness withdrew.

Francis Augustus Hare sworn and examined.

1238. The Witness.—I joined the police force as lieutenant of police on the 1st January 1854. My salary then was £300 a year, with all the allowances I now have, and in addition rations. I now, after twenty-seven and a quarter years’ service, receive £375 per annum and without rations. I was promoted to the rank of superintendent in November 1866, which rank I now hold. I had nothing to do with the Kelly business until the murders at the Wombat. On the 26th October 1878, the morning after the intelligence reached Melbourne that Sergeant Kennedy’s party had been shot, Captain Standish came to me to the depot, and ordered me to get as many mounted men as possible from the depot and Bourke district men, and to pick out the best men I had.

1239. Kennedy’s party was shot on the 26th?—Yes, on the morning after the intelligence reached I had—1240. I want you to fix the date of that?—That would be the 27th. It was a Monday morning. I think he was shot on the Sunday.

1241. I want you to fix the date for certain?—Monday must have been the 28th. I was ordered to pick out the best men in the district; also to get ready all the available arms out of the store, and select as many horses as I could get out of the paddocks that were fit for work. I sent several mounted men that day to Benalla. For some weeks afterwards I was busily engaged getting in horses, buying arms, and instructing men how to use them.

1242. That was in Melbourne?—Yes. Every day men and horses were arriving at the depot en route to Benalla. It appeared to me that the picked men in the colony had been selected for this duty, and they were all splendidly mounted. From the time Kennedy was shot up to the time of the Euroa bank robbery my time was fully taken up sending supplies of horses to the North-Eastern District. On the 26th of November 1878 Captain Standish sent for me and told me that Mr. Nicolson had informed him that he had obtained reliable information that the Kelly gang intended sticking up a bank in some part of the district, and that Mr. Nicolson had requested Captain Standish to tell me to take the necessary precautions at the stations in my district. I was all this time in Melbourne.

1243. Was this statement of Captain Standish’s verbal?—Verbally. Captain Standish frequently used to send for me on occasions of that kind. He consulted me in that way, and spoke to me. I think the Seymour bank was specially mentioned as likely to be stuck up. I issued orders on the subject, which I will read to the Commission. The order is dated 26th November. This was to the men, telling them to instruct the banks. I will tell you what I did first. On the 30th November 1878 I informed Sergeant Purcell, at Seymour, that the Kellys contemplated sticking up one of the Seymour banks, and that there men would be sent up there for duty, and that I wished their duty to be kept quiet. I did not wish him to let the public know they were policemen.

1244. A kind of secret service?—Yes, and the banks were also to be informed.

1245. Were those men to stay in plain clothes?—Yes. On the 27th December, three constables arrived at Seymour. There would then be five men at Seymour, that is the three I sent up, a sergeant, and a mounted constable. On the 4th December 1878 I sent a memo. to Avenel to the following effect, “A foot constable armed with a revolver would be sent to Avenel. A constable should be placed on duty in plain clothes, and should never lose sight of the bank during office hours.” The next day Constable Kelly arrived at Avenel for that duty.

1246. What Constable Kelly is that?—He has never been mentioned.—Foot-Constable Kelly, from the Brighton station, and he is at Brighton now. This made three men at Avenel—that is the senior-constable in charge, a mounted constable, and the one I sent up. On the 7th of December 1878 I sent the following telegram to Sergeant Purcell, “Send one of your plain clothes men to Nagambie for same duty there, and send Constable Byrne” (he was in charge of Nagambie) “copy of instructions you got from me.” That same day Sergeant Purcell sent one of the three men to Nagambie, Constable Burton was his name, with a copy of my memo, dated 30/11/78, that made three men—a senior constable, a mounted constable, and this man, made the three men at Nagambie; these were the three next to townships adjoining in the North-Eastern District.

1247. Avenel being the next bank township adjoining Euroa?—Yes. “Depôt, 26th November 1878. Memo.—Information has been received that the Kelly gang contemplate sticking up one of the Seymour banks, and I have thought it advisable to send up three foot constables for duty in the streets of Seymour. One should always be on duty in plain clothes, with instructions to keep a watch upon the banks, especially the Colonial Bank, which could be easy robbed.” My reason was that the Colonial Bank is situated some distance outside the town, some distance from the people, and could be easily robbed on account of its isolated position. “It would be advisable not to let the public know that these men are constables, otherwise a statement to that effect might be inserted in the local newspaper. I have arranged that Sergeant Purcell’s case should be heard at the General Sessions the first thing on Monday morning, so that the sergeant may be able to return the same afternoon. I think it would be advisable that S. C. Gilfedder should remain at Seymour during Sergeant Purcell’s absence, and the constable at Seymour be sent to Tallarook, Sergeant Purcell therefore give instructions accordingly. The managers at the local banks had been cautioned to be on the alert, in case the rumors circulated may be true.—FRANCIS HARE. P.S.—It would be advisable not to let the public know that these reports are going about; it will only cause excitement which may do considerable harm.—F.H.”

1248. Are you quite certain Captain Standish told you he had received information about the bank being stuck up?—Undoubtedly, and from Superintendent Nicolson.

1249. Not from Mr. Green?—No; I never heard anything about him till the last seven or eight months that he had anything to do with it.

1250. Where was Mr. Nicolson at this time?—In charge of the North-Eastern District.

1251. And Mr. Green is an inspector, is he?—An inspector in the city.

1252. Was Mr. Green inspector in the city in your district?—No.

1253. Who was he under?—Under Mr. Winch. About 12 noon on the 12th December 1878 I received a telegram from Captain Standish (I was in Captain Standish’s office, he being up the country), and the clerk handed me in a telegram directing me to report myself with horse and accoutrements at Euroa that night.

1254. Where was the telegram dated from?—From Euroa. I left Melbourne by the train between two and three o’clock. I met Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson at Euroa, and there was a number of police there. Captain Standish wanted me to go out that night with a party of police in search of the Kelly gang. I told him I knew nothing of the circumstances of the bank robbery, except from I had seen in the papers, and I thought it unfair, without making some enquiries myself, to be thrust into such a position; and as two days had elapsed since the robbery, in all probability the outlaws would be 100 miles away by that time. I did not care about rushing into the matter without making some enquiries into the circumstances of the case myself, besides which I told him I was not at all well at that time. I did not feel fit to go out. Had I wished to shirk the duty, I could easily have got a medical certificate from any doctor in the colony so to state. But still I went up to Euroa on this Kelly business. The party of police started off next morning into the Strathbogie ranges under Senior-Constable Johnson; he was a fine plucky fellow. I did not know what their orders were, but I think Mr.
Nicolson started them. I did not get up and see them start. I did not see anything of them again, but they remained away from six or seven days, and then reported themselves at Benalla without finding any trace of anything.

1255. To whom?—To Captain Standish and myself and Mr. Sadleir, we were all working there together. I then set to work to gain a knowledge of the men; there were a great number of them strangers to me.

1256. The constables you mean?—Yes, the constables under me, and also the district. I obtained general information as to what had been going on since the murders at the Wombat; I conversed with every member of the force I came across to find out their opinions on matters, and what men I thought fit to take charge of parties. Sometime afterwards I selected three very good men, they were constables, and I asked Captain Standish to give them the rank of senior constable, which is similar to the rank of corporal in the army, so that they would not be of the same rank as the men they took out.

1257. What would be the increased pay?—Sixpence a day; at that time there were no vacancies in the force for senior-constables, but they were to be put on permanently as vacancies occurred. Under this arrangement they would have control over the men. Captain Standish complied with my request, and the next day constables Johnson, Mullane, and Hood, were appointed senior constables.

1258. That position has an increase of pay of sixpence a day?—Yes.

1259. Which is the increase of the senior-constable?—Yes, there were no vacancies in the force at the time.

1260. Is this Johnson a man that was stationed at Violet Town and who was afterwards at Glenrowan?—Yes.

1261. Is Flood the man who was mention as the man stationed at Greta in the old time?—Yes, and is now stationed at Yackandandah.

1262. Is Mullen the man who is now stationed at Beechworth?—Yes. From the time the sub-officers were sent out in charge of search parties they were told what information had been received. I might explain as to sending out search parties, there were rumors coming in of every sort and kind, some true and some untrue. The search parties were sent out and were left unfettered in every possible way to go into the ranges and search. Besides the men I have mentioned, who were fit to take charge of parties, there were Senior-Constable James of Mansfield, Sergeant Steele from Wangaratta, Senior-Constable Irwin at Alexandra, Senior-Constable Shoebridge at Bright, and Senior-Constable Kelly at Wood’s Point.

1263. Is this Senior-Constable Kelly who was afterwards at the Glenrowan affair?—Yes; and there may be other men whose names I have forgotten—those are the men that come to my mind. The first month or so I did not go out with the search party. I remained at Benalla, and my time was fully taken up going about the district making enquiries and getting things in order. About this time all the sympathizers were arrested.

1264. By whose orders?—By the order of Captain Standish. We all acted together, Captain Standish, myself, and Mr. Sadleir.

1265. Captain Standish was there?—Yes; he was in supreme command at this time. Those sympathizers gave us a great deal of trouble. I had to go up, some five or six or seven times to Beechworth every Friday afternoon, and remain there all Saturday—sometimes all Sunday, because I could not get away on Sunday—applying for remand, and fighting for it.

1266. What was the nature of the annoyance the sympathizers gave which led to their arrest?—I will state first what we did with reference to the arrest of those men, and upon what information. All the responsible men in charge of different stations who had been a long time in Benalla—the detectives and officers—were all collected at Benalla, by Captain Standish’s orders. They (the different constables and officers and detectives) all went into a room, and were asked the names of the persons in the district whom they considered to be sympathizers. I had nothing to do with it, merely listening and taking down names that fell from the mouths of the men.

1267. Who asked the questions?—Captain Standish and Mr. Sadleir, and I myself asked some.

1268. Did Captain Standish asked each constable, “Whom do you consider a sympathizer in your district?” and so on?—Captain Standish, Mr. Sadleir, and myself asked that. I knew nothing about the sympathizers, but one man came forward and said, “There is so-and-so Smith.” “What did he do?” “Well, I know he is a useful friend of the Kellys. On one occasion I saw him follow us about.” Then we said, “Put his name down.” Then the detectives knew a great many men, and they went through the same process of enquiry, and so we selected a certain number of names.

1269. How many?—I should think about twenty. The Government were aware of the action we were about taking, and it was with their consent we did all this. It was necessary for us to arrange to capture all the sympathizers in one day, because if we had not done so, it would have been just as much difficulty in catching them as the Kellys; so it was done confidentially, and on a certain day all the men were arrested, with but two or three exceptions. There was one case of a man of the name of Ryan, of Lake Glenrowan. There are two brothers, very much alike. We picked out one brother as being a great friend of the Kellys, and the two constables who went out to arrest this man saw what they thought to be the man, but it was really his brother, and when they found their mistake they let him go, he not knowing what was up; but, thinking there was something wrong, took a short cut, and they saw him galloping up to his brother, but the constables caught him before he got there. As to the cause of the arrest: it was found these sympathizers were annoying us in every possible way, watching every move we made. One or two men, I heard before I came up, were watching the police at all times. A man named Isaiah Wright was one.

1270. Were there any remarks about either of them beside watching?—I was not there; I know it was the substance of the complaint. About five or six days before the Jerilderie robbery, Aaron Sherritt came to Benalla (that was the first time I had ever seen Aaron Sherritt), and asked to see Captain Standish. He was away from Benalla. I explain to Aaron who I was, and asked him what he wanted Captain Standish for. He said, “I have some important information to give him, and I wish to speak to him privately. I told him Captain Standish would not be back that night. I led Aaron to believe I did not care to hear his news, but kept him engaged in conversation. I had heard his name and knew who he was. Captain Standish informed me, when he returned, that he had never seen him either from the day he spoke to him at that Sebastopol affair, at Mrs. Byrne’s, which Mr. Nicolson referred to. Some time after—about an hour—Sherritt said, “I think I can trust you with my information;” and then he told me that on the previous afternoon, about two o’clock, Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly came to his selection. This is not Mrs. Sherritt’s house; Aaron was not at that time living with his mother, he was living on his own selection; it was mid-way between Mrs Sherritt’s and Mrs. Byrne’s. He said Joe Byrne came to him whilst he was working on his selection. He told me Joe Byrne jumped off his horse, and that he had always been his most intimate acquaintance; he said he came and sat down beside him; he had been his schoolfellow and with him in crime nearly all their lives; he said Dan Kelly was very suspicious, and would not get of his horse, and did not get near him, and he said they sat talking for a long time, and then asked him to join them, as they were going across Murray, and intended going to Goulburn, in New South Wales, where the Kellys had a cousin. He said they urged him to go for a long time as a scout. Sherritt never told me that at that time they were going to stick up a bank. He told me he refused to go with them, and after some pressing, Joe Byrne said, “Well, Aaron, you are perfectly right; why should you get yourself into this trouble and mix yourself up with us.” He said they were talking to him for about half an hour, but kept looking round and watching every move that was made. I do not remember any further conversation then. Not to go into the town. He was a remarkable looking man. If he walked down Collins street, everybody would have stared at him—his walk, his appearance, and everything else were remarkable. I said, “Be careful, now you are in Benalla, that you are not seen here; do not go into the town, or two parties, I am not quite certain—in charge of Senior-Constable Mullane and another, about Chiltern. It is a wide locality, however. One party I am certain of; and we started up the Murray towards the Gravel Plains, in the direction where the Kellys’ friends were known to be; and also it would be a likely crossing-place if they went over to Goulburn, because there is a chain of hills running right across the Murray—right across to Goulburn, in New South Wales. These men remained away for six or seven days. They had a long way to go, and before they returned the Jerilderie bank had been stuck up. I think, but I am not quite certain, that Senior-Constable Strachan was in the locality, and we sent him to some of the other crossing-places on the river.

1276. Who was the officer in charge of the special you spoke of?—Senior-Constable Mullane, and I think Sergeant Steele was also sent out with the party; and we informed them of the brands of the horses, and gave every information in our power to the police of New South Wales, right up and down the river. The day after Sherritt had given me the information, we heard that Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly had been recognised—and had been seen late in the evening—that was, the evening of the day that he saw them riding horses of the description given to me by Sherritt, towards the Murray, which in every respect corroborated Sherritt’s statement. The Jerilderie robbery took place on the 10th of February 1879. Directly we heard of it we sent parties to almost every crossing-place on the Murray. We got a telegram at Benalla about eight o’clock, informing us of the robbery, and we sent out, and watched every suspected place on our side, but no tidings could be obtained of their return. On the Saturday after the Jerilderie bank robbery—I think the 15th of February—I went to Beechworth, and there met Aaron Sherritt by appointment; Detective Ward made an appointment with him to meet me. I arrived at Beechworth at eleven o’clock on that night, Saturday, and I met him after that time. He told me that on the previous Wednesday, Dan Kelly had called at Mrs. Byrne’s house, and had his breakfast there; and told Mrs. Byrne that after the bank robbery the outlaws all divided and agreed to meet at a certain place; that he had kept his appointment, and he came to see if anything was wrong with the other men, as they did not keep their’s. That afternoon on the Wednesday that Dan Kelly was at Mrs. Byrne’s, we received information that Dan Kelly was seen riding towards the Buckland Gap, towards some very thick country there; that a man saw him, and I saw the man; he said he had not the slightest doubt it was Kelly, and that again corroborated what Sherritt said. Aaron Sherritt said to me, “Now you had better come to-morrow night. I have good reason to believe they will be at Mrs. Byrne’s house—the other three men—you have better come and watch the place.” Of course, I had my doubt about Sherritt all the time; but still I thought he was true. He was acting fairly towards me, and it turned out to be the case; but all my men were suspicious of him, and they were afraid to see me go out with him, as I did frequently. The men all said, “You will come to grief with that man some day, he will ‘sell’ you to the Kellys.” I said, “I have the greatest confidence in him” I deserved to be “sold” if I did not know a man when I saw him, as I had had opportunity of seeing Sherritt, and I agreed to go and watch Mrs. Byrne; this was about Saturday night, about twelve or one o’clock.

1277. What day?—The Saturday. I might say Detective Ward was present during the whole conversation. I made arrangements with Aaron where I would meet him, some distance out of Beechworth, on the following night, Sunday, at eight o’clock. Next day, Sunday, I went down to Eldorado, where there was a party of police in charge of Senior-Constable Strachan. I directed Strachan with his party to meet me at a certain place on the bush. I do not think I saw him himself, but one of his men; he was out at the time. I said, “Tell him to meet me at a certain spot”—an old hut that he knew, and the man I was speaking to knew—that at nine o’clock at night.” I then returned to Beechworth about 14 or 15 miles, and I was engaged all that day making other arrangements, in company of Detective Ward. Met Sherritt at the appointed place, and we then started to the place that I had directed the constables to meet at, but after waiting there for an hour—that is Ward, myself, and Sherritt—Sherritt said to me, “Mr. Hare, if we do not go at once, you will lose the chance of getting the gang.”

1278. The constables did not come to the rendezvous?—They did not come to the rendezvous. He said, “I am confident of being there to-night.” I was very much put out not meeting the police, so I turned round to Ward and said, “Will you stick to me if we go by ourselves?” he replied, “I will, Mr. Hare.” I said to Sherritt, “All right, lead the way;” and we got on our horses and went through a terrible country—thick, scruffy, stony. I had never been through that country before. At last, as we were riding along, Sherritt pulled up his horse and said, “Mr. Hare, do you see anything?” I said, “No, I do not see anything.” He said, “Do you not see a fire ahead there?” He was a little at advance of me, and on looking closer I saw a fire, and he said, “Those are the bushrangers, they have made a fire to-night, and they are camping there, and it is a thing I never knew them do before; they must have some drink in them, otherwise they would not make the fire so foolishly;” and said, “this is the bushranger’s country, and no one but them would be out in this country.” We dismounted from out horses and made him do the same, sat down on the ground, and he turned to me and said, “Mr. Hare, what do you want me to do—what is the best to be done?” I said, “I think the best plan to do is to make certain the outlaws are at the fire, because if we know they are at the fire we know how to act. It may be anybody else; and you crawl up to it, take your boots off, and get as close as you can, and ascertain if you can hear voices or anything else.” He went away and left Ward and myself sitting, and we fastened our horses up behind. He remained away about ten minutes. He came back again walking, and Ward said to me, “By God, we are sold.” I said, What is the matter, Aaron?” He said, “Mr. Hare, how far do you think the fire is from us”; and I said, “About 150 yards, I thought,” and he said, “It is nothing of the kind, it is three miles away.” I said, Nonsense, Aaron, you have sold me; you have gone and warned those fellows to be off.” He said, “No, come, get on your horses; where is the fire now?” he said “We will ride up to it.” We rode and rode and rode, until we got to the edge of a high bank—a precipice—and we found the fire was on the other side of the gully, the Woolshed diggings were between us and the fire on the hill above us,” and I said, “You are right—what is to be done?” and he said, “Hurry along as quick as you can, and come away from this mistake we have made, and come on towards Byrne’s house.”

1279. Was there anybody but the three?—Nobody; the police never made their appearance. We then rode towards Mrs. Byrne’s house. It was then about half-past ten that at night. We left our horses about half a mile from Mrs. Byrne’s house, and we walked down to Mrs. Byrne’s. We listened for some time from a distance, and we could hear no voices, but we saw a light in the house. Aaron Sherritt then crawled up to the house, and he listened under the window for five or six minutes, and there was no sound, and he returned to us. He then pointed out a spot to me in the bush, and he said “That is where they tie up their horses when they come here,” and frequently after they had their meals at Mrs. Byrne’s they lay down beside their horses and that spot. The three of us went through those bushes, and we saw nothing.

We were very cautious in walking, and had to use the utmost caution. This spot he pointed out to me was previously told to me by Detective Eason or Brown while stationed up there, that they were shown the droppings of horses, and where the bark had been eaten off by the horses. I recognised that, and saw the stockyard, and he said, “Now, Mr. Hare, if the outlaws come at all, they must come this way, through the stockyard, and towards the scrub I have shown you. We will wait here now till the morning for them.” We laid down watching that night until daylight, but saw no signs of anything. Aaron Sherritt said, “Those men will be here. They have disappointed me to-night, but they will come within a day or two. Now, if you want the outlaws, you must watch this place.” I said, “All right, Aaron, we will watch it. We then got on our horses and rode into Beechworth—about six or eight miles, I think—and I went into Beechworth to arrange for a permanent party to come out—not the Eldorado men—and we went out there to stay. I stayed there for 25 nights, watching all night and lying under a rock by day, with a party of men—I think I had seven men. At the same time, above us there was a wonderfully formed camp of the outlaws that they used to resort to, that Aaron Sherritt pointed out to me. It was most ingenious—a place impossible to be attacked. They could shoot any number of people coming up, and you could not touch them. I put four men in this camp. They were about one mile above me in the mountains. I formed a sort of a camp for myself—took our provisions there, about a mile away from Mrs. Byrne’s, where we used to retire to every morning at daylight. The duty during this time was terribly irksome. We had no cover by day, lying on the rocks, and sitting behind a tree all night.

1280. Who was the sergeant in charge?—I had a party of my own men, Bourke men. Senior-Constable Mills, who had been at Whittlesea, was in charge with me, and Senior-Constable Mays, now at Mansfield, was in charge of the upper camp. That duty was not only irksome but dangerous in the extreme. I never left my camp at night to take up my position but I felt anxious as to whether the outlaws might be in our watching place and open fire on us, and again when we returned to camp at daylight in the morning the outlaws might have taken out our position in the mountains, and shot the whole party without the slightest difficulty. My way of going to and from the watching place was this: I generally used to start a few minutes ahead of the party and separate them, that is keep about twenty yards apart, get into the watching place myself first, and the men would follow, so that if one were shot, at any rate the others might be able to take the outlaws. That we carried on for five and twenty nights. I felt the responsibility on myself very great, but the prospect of our meeting the outlaws cheered us all up, and so it went on day by day. We had great difficulties to contend with, first to supply ourselves with water, which is one of the chief things in a watch party. There was only one waterhole, and we used to carry our water with a can, and even then, from our position, we used to see Mrs. Byrne looking for our tracks, because policemen’s tracks are always known over the place. They have different boots and different shoes to their horses. We used to see this old woman go to the water and look for our tracks, and also look about the road. We had no fires, except occasionally when the men beseeched me to let them have a fire to boil tea, and then it was put out immediately. The nights were exceedingly cold.

1281. What month?—March. Some of the men were very much frozen when we left our places in the morning. However, I kept it up, but Mrs. Byrne by accident discovered our camp about the twentieth day. Aaron Sherritt’s knowledge of the movements of the police was wonderful. He said he was the scout, or head-badge, of the district; that he could give me any information about the movements of my men in any part of the district. I said, “I do not believe you.” He said, “You may question me—try me if you like—and see if I do not.” So I asked him one day, “Can you tell me what has occurred the last few days, or the day before yesterday?” He said, “Yes; Detective Ward and other men rode out of Beechworth, a party of police have come into Eldorado, and some men through near Everton; but I do not know the particulars beyond that there are some policemen there.” I said, “Now, Aaron, will you tell me how you got to know?” He said, “I will not.” I said, “Why, are you not in my confidence?” He said, “No; there are certain things I will not tell; I will tell nothing against myself to convict me, although I have been in all the crimes with the Kellys for years past.” It would take me a week to tell the half he said. All this time this man was faithful and true to me. I say he was a man of most wonderful endurance. He would go night after night without sleep in the coldest nights in winter. He would be under a tree without a particle of blanket of any sort in his shirt sleeves whilst my men were all lying wrapt in furs in the middle of winter. This is an instance that occurred actually: I saw the man one night when the water was frozen in the creeks and I was frozen to death nearly. I came down and said, “Where is Aaron Sherritt?” and I saw a white thing lying under a tree, and there was Aaron without his coat. The men were covered up with all kinds of coats and furs, and waterproof coatings, and everything else, and this man was lying on the ground uncovered. I said, “You are mad, Aaron, lying there”; and he said, “I do not care about coats.”

1282. Do you know he was a constable’s son himself?—Yes, his father was a constable in England. He was born on these mountains. I said to him on one occasion, “Can the outlaws endure as you are doing.” He said, “Ned Kelly would beat me into fits.” He said, “I can beat all the others; I am a better man than Joe Byrne, and I am a better man than Dan Kelly, and I am a better man than Steve Hart. I can lick those two youngsters to fits; I have always beaten Joe, but I look upon Ned Kelly as an extraordinary man; there is no man in the world like him, he is superhuman.” Frequently, when he has been lying by me at night, he said, “You will catch Joe, Steve, and the others,” and I said, “Why,” and he said, “He is too —— smart.” I said, “If he comes here, I will get him.” He said, “No, except you take great caution; do you think that Ned ever goes in front? No, he sends the other three a hundred yards ahead.” I said why do they obey him, and do that; and he said, “He carries out his orders at the point of his pistol.” I said, “This must come to an end”; he said, “No; I look upon him as invulnerable, you can do nothing with him,” and that was the opinion of all his agents; nearly every one in the district thought him invincible. When the police had a row with any of the sympathisers they would always finish off by saying, “I will tell Ned about you; he will make it hot for you some day,” never speaking about the others at all. I went back to Benalla after leaving this. Would you like... me to state how my camp was discovered?

1283. You had better do so?—It was discovered by accident in an extraordinary manner. Two days before it was discovered—

1284. You said it was about the twentieth day out?—Yes, and I remained about five days after. One of the party in the upper camp (it was a very hot day) was induced to sneak down to a water-course, say a mile and a half away, and he was carrying a bucket in his hand. Directly this occurred Mrs. Byrne got information. She sent for Aaron Sherritt immediately, and said, “There is a party in the mountains; go and look for them to-morrow.” Sherritt said, “All right; I have not seen anything of them.” She said, “No, but a man like a constable was seen walking with a bucket towards the creek, and I myself went to the creek, and I found where there was some soap. The fellow had washed his hands there, and he had been whittling a bit of stick,” and she produced this stick to Aaron, and said some was sitting there, and believed it was one of those constables. Aaron said, “All right; I will go and look for them.” Next day he went back and said, “I have been in every direction, and cannot find them at all.” On the Sunday morning we were lying at our camp—that was a day or two after—and the sentry who was on guard, about nine o’clock in the morning (we were all asleep except the sentry on watch), he came down where I was lying, and said, “Mr. Hare” —— I said, “What is the matter?” and he said, “The old woman is in our camp, and Aaron is lying down at the lowest point, and she has seen him.” I jumped up and saw the old woman’s back walking out of the camp, and I watched her away till she got over the brow of the hill; and I rushed down to Aaron, and said, “Good heavens! You are discovered; the old woman has seen you.” He had his hat over his face, and I put my hat and coat over him to change his style of dress, with a white helmet, and I said, “Cut away to some place as to prove an alibi if you had been seen.” He went away and showed himself in some other part of the district. He came back that evening, and he said he was in a mortal funk for fear the old woman had seen him. He took a flute and went down to the house, and said that broke the ice. He said on his return, “She has lost her faith in me, but she did not recognise me. She said, ‘A pretty fellow you are, going to search; I found the men in the mountains today,’ ” He said, “I am all right; I am still on terms of intimacy with the others in the house.” I said, “How did the old woman find us?” Aaron said, “Because one of the men left the sardine tin on the rock,” she saw it across the valley. We watched her going down the hill, and on the opposite side there was a hill across the valley, and I saw her walking straight, across to something white on the rock, and she told Aaron Sherritt when she was up at the rock that she saw something glistening, and she came across and found the sardine tin, and found our men in the camp. She told Aaron Sherritt—“If she could only find out the number of men in the camp, she would get Joe to shoot any number under fifteen or twenty. She said, “There must be a great number of them there, because of the way the ground is beaten about, but I only saw one men lying there.” The same thing occurred again the next morning. The sentry saw the old woman again, and I called the sergeant, and said, “We had better give her a fright.” The sentry saw her going right over us, up the range, to peer over a rock, to look down upon us. I said to Senior-Constable Mills, who was with me, “Go up and give the old woman a fright,” and he went up in the direction she was going, and hid behind a rock, where he could see her. She used to go crawling along like a rabbit, and only show her head over the rocks. At last she passed the rock where the constable was hidden behind, but he was on the one side and she on the other, he followed her, and directly she got away about a yard or two he gave her a tremendous yell, and jumped on her. The old woman lost her presence of mind, and almost fainted, and said, “What! What! I am only looking for cattle,” and then she soon recovered her assurance, and got impertinent, and said, “I will get my son to shoot the whole —— lot of you.”

1285. What age is the old lady?—I am not certain; I should think between 40 and 50. Now, going back to my narrative: I stayed at that place five days after the camp was discovered, at the earnest request of Sherritt, who said to me, “It is no use going away; she has no means of communicating with the outlaws. I am the only one that can do that, and when they come I will get the news.” I said, “I did not believe it.” He said, “Believe it or not, but do not go, because she has discovered you.” I stayed five days longer, and then I thought I was wasting my time there, and I went back to Benalla, leaving my parties for, I think, a fortnight longer. By that time, I think, Mr. O’Connor had arrived with his Queensland men. They arrived on the 8th of March. After this I was nearly all my time out with search parties. I went out of information that the Kellys had been seen in a certain part of the country, or that they were likely to frequent a certain locality, and upon that information I went to search the locality. The way we used to work in the thick bushy country was this: I would put the men who knew the country in the centre, extending our line as far as we could according to the nature of the country leaving a distance of about ten yards from the first man, the next one ten yards from him, and so through the men from right to left; but as the country became open, we would leave a longer distance between, say 50 or 10 yards, and so search the whole country for miles and miles without being heard or making a noise, which was an important thing to observe. In going up steep mountains or gullies (and the ranges were very steep) we used to ride thus, the leading man would be about twenty yards ahead of the second man, which was generally myself. We kept in a line, so that if an attack was made only one man would be killed, and the others could come up immediately. I am just now coming to Mr. O’Connor and his report. Mr. O’Connor has mentioned some information about Cleary’s house, that Captain Standish withheld the information from him. This was on the morning of the 26th of
May. I will state all the circumstances in connection with what was done. On the evening mentioned, Captain Standish and Mr. O’Connor were dining at Mr. O’Leary’s; I was at the hotel at Benalla, where we all lived. The letters were handed to me about seven o’clock. I opened them all. I used to open all Captain Standish’s public letters and any letters giving information. I could tell what sort of writing they would be in, and I read this note that came from a certain person. I have not got the note, and do not know where it is, and Captain Standish has not got it. The information was this, “that a party of four men had been seen crossing through some country on two occasions by a farmer, and that they were going in the direction of Cleary’s house.” He gave us all this information. He said, “I am certain that they were the outlaws.” He said, “I did not know them by their personal appearance, but from their manner I think they must be the outlaws.” He then added, at the bottom of the letter, an extract, which I took out with me. This is the portion of the letter which I found among my papers—[producing the same]. I have not the rest of the letter. I took out that extract from the letter that very night, as it gave me certain directions how to find Cleary’s house, not knowing the house or the locality:—“If you could cross over to the 15-mile convenient near the Glenrowan station, and thus evade Greta, you could cross on to the road leading between Wangaratta and Tom Smith’s; and when you get as far as John Patterson’s, 200 yards in the direction of Tom Smith’s, there is a lane running due east; go up it through the first cross road right on over the hill, and Cleary’s is on your left, just as you come into a piece of open ground. It is a chock and log fence. His house is at the side of the fence towards the east end; you will find it as I say, right against the east end of the Wattle Hill.” That letter arrived on Saturday the 24th of May. Directly I received it I thought the information very important, and I sent over to Captain Standish to tell him that I wanted him at once. He came over within about ten minutes or a quarter of an hour. He said to me, “Now I think this is good information, and you start first thing in the morning; you had better arrange about getting your men ready at seven or eight o’clock.” I went over to the barracks and I saw my men, and said, “I want to turn out to-morrow at seven o’clock.” I told them to get pack-horses and everything ready, and gave them no further information. Mr. O’Connor returned about, I think, an hour or an hour and half afterwards, and he said, “What is the news?” I nodded my head to him as if to say, “Ask Captain Standish,” and he turned round and repeated the question, “What is the news?” Captain Standish had previously told me not to say a word about it; and I said, “Not even to Mr. O’Connor?” He said, “No, I want this to be kept perfectly quiet.” Mr. O’Connor got very much annoyed, and he said to me, “What is the meaning of this?” Up to that time I think he had pretty well known all the information we had received. Nothing had been kept from him as far as I know, and as far as I am concerned I had not a thought in my mind unknown to him. I told him everything. I did not tell him, however, in this case; as Captain Standish had bound me to secrecy, I told him nothing. I got up at six o’clock next morning, and started with my usual party; and Mr. O’Connor lent me one of his boys named Moses, whom he generally lent me when I went out. We started away about seven o’clock from Benalla, and instead of going in the direction of the place we were going to, we took the opposite direction, following the advice of my informant, as given in that memo. I have read. The direct course would have been through Greta and straight to the house, instead of that I went in another direction, as if going over the Warby ranges. When I got on the road that runs at right angles to the road we were going, that is from Glenrowan to the station owned by Mr. Newcomen, some of my men saw a man they recognized some of the greatest sympathizers of the Kellys, a man named Nolan. I was at the head of the party. We were going through settled country between fences; we had not gone into the mountains. One of the men cantered on to where I was riding and said, “Mr. Hare, we have just passed that fellow Nolan.” I said, “All right.” This was on the Sunday. I said, “That is all right, he cannot do us any harm, because we are in the opposite direction we intend to go to search to morrow.” We continued in the direction of Wangaratta, leaving the place we were going to search entirely to our right. We went over the Warby ranges to a camping place that I knew there, and when we got on the Wangaratta side of the Warby ranges we turned up to the right to a camp that I had used before. I must go back a little. I did not know the country well there, nor did any of my men, so I telegraphed to Sergeant Steele at Wangaratta, on the Sunday, to send a constable named Dixon out who knew the country there, and tell him to meet me at a certain spot. Dixon met me at that spot. When I got out of Benalla, about five miles, and got into a quiet spot, I told all the men to dismount. I never told them in the town what information I was going upon. I got them round me and said, “I will tell you now what information I am going on,” and I read them the letter that had been received by Captain Standish, and gave them all the news that I had. They were all in great spirits, and thought it was capital information. We stayed at the camping place that night, and fastened up the horses, and gave orders to the men to turn in after they had had something to eat. We made no fire or anything of the kind, and I said that I wanted to be called at one o’clock in the morning. At one o’clock we all saddled our horses, and away we went. Dixon led the way, as he was acquainted with that part of the country. We passed through Glenrowan gates, and we went down exactly as directed by my informant how to go. We got to the railway about an hour before daylight, and saw the hut, and it was exactly as described in the letter. I sat on a lock in front of the house with my men around me, and said to the senior-constable, “You take three men to the back of the house, and I will keep three here; take which men you like. When you see me move from my position, you move from yours, so we will approach the house; you keep the back, and I the front.” Just at grey dawn and I could see some distance, I jumped up and told the men I had with me to follow me and also the black boy. I went to the house and knocked at the door. When I knocked some one said, “Who is there?” I said, “All right; open the door.” The owner of the house, a man named Cleary, jumped out and opened the door. I said to him, “Have you any strangers in the house?” He hesitated a moment, and said, “Yes.” I said, “Who are they?” very quickly, and he said, after hesitating for a moment, “A man by the name of Nolan.” I rushed into the house and called to the men at the back to come up, and we searched the house thoroughly. We searched the place. I saw Nolan, and said, “Hullo, Nolan, what brought you here?” I knew him. I had bought a horse a few days before from him for the Government. He said he thought the outlaws were going to steal it, so he sold it. I said, “Why did you come?” And he said, “I came to warn the people of the district about a funeral that was going to take place.” I said, “Where is the funeral?” He said, “Out in that direction; the other side of Glenrowan.” I then made a thorough search of the whole premises. I got the boy Moses, to take a circuit round, and see if he could find any tracks, and we remained and searched the straw-shed where there was a cellar or anything of the kind, and we could find no traces whatever of the outlaws. We were all on such friendly terms, Cleary never asked what we were looking for, and Nolan said, “What brought you here? I suppose this blackfellow tracked me here, and you have come up on my tracks.” One of my men answered, “Yes, they are wonders these Queensland blacks.” He said, “Do you mean to say that they can track in the dark?” And he said, “Oh, it matters not what tracking they do, they can track you wherever they like,” and then related some anecdote about their wonderful skill. Then we searched all round the premises to see if there were any tracks. There had been very heavy rains three days previously, and any tracks at all would be noticed as plainly as possible. We took a circuit round Cleary’s place and then returned to camp where we had stayed that day. We stayed there all that day and night; next day we went into Benalla. Those are exactly the facts with reference to this matter.

1286. You were convinced that the Kellys had not been there at all?—I could see no traces whatever of them. The party that I always took out with me were chiefly men from my own district—this is to say the Bourke district—with the exception of a man named Canny, who was taken on account of his knowing the country and also the personal appearance of the outlaws, and another man named Bellis, who was a wonderful bushman, accustomed to bush life. He was a kangaroo hunter by profession, and made a capital living by shooting kangaroos. He has not joined the police. Many of the men taken on at that time joined police, but this man did not; he is now a selector, and is living near Yarrawonga. I would like very much if the Commission would summon him, as he was an expert, a thorough bushman in every respect. He is a wonderfully acute and intelligent man. His evidence would be of more value than the constables or any of the men who were with me. By taking out my men on all occasion with me gave some dissatisfaction among the men at Benalla.

1287. Jealousy?—Yes; but I knew my men and they knew me, and I could depend upon them if we happened to fall in with the outlaws. The duty was arduous, and great responsibility was thrown upon the leader. There was a great deal of work to be done by day and night. Some of the Melbourne papers used to describe our life as a pleasant pic-nic. I never asked the men to do anything I did not share the work with them myself. We had always to keep guard of a night over the men who were asleep, and also watch the horses whilst grazing—the feed for our horses was a great difficulty with us, and the poor beasts, after carrying us all day, had to be turned out often in a rocky mountain without any grass, and frequently in low sour stuff that they could not touch. Frequently after we arrived in camp I would send a couple of men out on the tops of the high mountains to watch for fires—distant fires—and do the same at daylight next morning. I used to catch and saddle my own horse every morning, and unsaddle him every evening. I called the men myself every morning when it was time to get up. We used to get up about daylight, pack the swags, put them on the pack-horses, and have our breakfast. I assisted in this every morning. I or my men never slept in a tent all the while we were out, nor had a fire after dark, with the exception of two or three occasions. By my assisting the men in everything I kept them in good spirits. I put myself on the same level with them in every respect, and I am sure every man that ever went out with me would tell the Commission the same tale. I had no difficulty in keeping the men in good spirits, and I had a splendid party with me. They deserved success, but unfortunately we did not meet with it; but I feel assured, notwithstanding all that has been said about my manner of working, that, had I not been taken ill, we must eventually have come across the gang. Once or twice we were very near them, but they managed to escape us in the mountains; in sending parties out in search of the gang my idea was that we would compel them to be constantly on the watch; and I did not like to give them undisputed possession of the country in which they lived by keeping my men out of it. If anything, my men were too anxious to meet the outlaws, and used to implore me to let them have a fire at night, but I pointed out the danger to them of this, of the gang creeping down and firing upon them whilst they were standing round the fire. Their reply was, “One or two of us may fall, no doubt, but we shall get them notwithstanding.” The excitement kept them up, because we never lay down on a night but we might have to fight for our lives before morning; also by day, when searching the mountains, with rocks as big as this room, we might at any moment be fired on. The outlaws knew all our movements, and our party could be tracked by themselves or friends for any distance. Ned Kelly knew all our camps in the Warby ranges; and when going to Beechworth with one of the constables of my party he told him of all our movements, and described the men who used to go and look for the horses at daylight. He said there were two young men who used to go out and get the horses. Each man had his own work to do and catch the horses. One man was told to light the fire and boil the billy of tea, the others had to pack up the swags—the hardest work we had. It took a long time to pack up everything we were carrying. Ned Kelly described the men and everything we did.

1288. Then you mean it was at night you did not light fires?—I never did light a fire after dark, with but two or three exceptions.

1289. You did in the morning to make the tea?—Yes; then we squashed it over directly after the billy had been boiled. Our search parties generally consisted of seven or eight men. Some used to think it was far too many, but to make an allowance for two or three to be shot down at the first volley the remaining men would be little enough to contend against the gang. In my opinion, I think the way the trackers were used was wrong, having to carry about such a quantity of camp equipage, without any Victorian police—there was an officer, sub-officer, and six black trackers. I can only remember being out once with them, but Mr. O’Connor says twice; he is no doubt right, but I only recollect once. I did not approve of the way they were worked. I may be wrong in my ideas; Mr. Sadleir quite differed from me, and I believe Mr. Nicolson does also. I merely give my opinion, I have had a good experience at the Cape of Good Hope with blacks, tracking cattle and deer, and I imagine I know their powers as well as anyone. The New South Wales police often use them, but not in a body. One or two blackfellows go with the police, and hunt down an offender a distance of hundreds of miles. They could not do this if they were hampered with a crowd of men and baggage. I think the black most useful in a certain way, and I feel certain if I had had a blackfellow on one occasion I would have got the outlaws. This was the occasion in which Mr. O’Connor yesterday mentioned that he was sent for by Captain Standish when he had good information. If you wish I will explain the circumstances; it will be another narrative of what we had to contend against.

1290. As there is a charge against certain officers of the police of not allowing the trackers to be used, you ought to give your views?—The narrative is this:—I started away with my party—I do not know the date—but the date Mr. O’Connor refers to. I do not know whether he left Benalla before me; but I went to the place where Aaron Sherritt had told me the outlaws had been harboured after they committed the murders, and where they had been fed for three or four days by a man at Sandy Creek. That was between the Murray and the Warby ranges. We found no traces at all at this house. We searched an immense forest, known as the Ironbark country. After searching that, I worked up towards the Warby ranges; and, after a very very hard day’s work, we got on the Wangaratta side of the Warby ranges. I was looking for a camp for the evening. It was just about sunset; and we came across a place with a paddock on the one side and a very hilly country on the other, with a track running between the two up into a very steep ranges. We were then about two miles from a well-known sympathizer’s house—the man who had fed the Kellys after they left Wangaratta, about a week or so after the murders. Mr. Nicolson gave it in his evidence, they went through Wangaratta, and to this man’s place for breakfast, and were tracked by Mr. Smith with his trackers passing the door and going into these very mountains. I had untied my possum rug and laid it at the foot of a tree, and the cook had got the provisions ready—we lighted the fire and boiled the billy—and we were all sitting down at our meal (we never sat together, but sat about ten or fifteen yards apart, with out rifles by our sides). I was just at the slope of the mountain, but still I was in a little glen as it were; and while we were eating our meal instantaneously every man jumped up and ran down to a thick brush fence. I said, “What is up?” One of them replied, “There are the Kellys, coming across straight for us.” When we arrived, we saw the tracks of two horses going up the hill; the tracks could not have been more than half an hour old, because the green pieces of grass which the horses had cut up were perfectly green and lying there. I jumped up and went in the direction the men had run to behind this fence, and I saw two young men galloping straight where we were. I crouched behind the fence, and when they came between the line of men we have formed by this fence we all stood up at once, and one of my men recognized them to be the sons of the sympathizer whose house we were near, and of another sympathizer who lived near Greta, my men house the whole household came out—that is, the daughters, the father, and mother, and everybody connected with the house; they could see the men coming a long distance, four armed men and those two young fellows riding beside them, and the people stood at the door and were all talking together. When the men approached within about fifty or eighty yards, Mays thought that they recognized that they were not the outlaws but that they were police. Lawless saw a man walking down to the end of the garden, and he went down towards them. When he got near the bank—there was a creek there or a bathing place—this man called out, “Is that you, Hart?” Lawless replied, “No, what Hart do you think it is?” and his reply was “Steve,” of course meaning the outlaw. Lawless answered, “No, I am not Steve, nor yet any of the Harts.” Upon that the man looked round full at him, and turned deadly pale and said, “Oh, I thought it was some of the bushrangers coming down upon me.” Lawless took him up to Sergeant Mays, and narrated this story to him, and they consulted together what was best to be done, and decided upon sending up to me at once, and to give me this information, and to beg of me to come down. I went down, and immediately I got there I saw the dangerous duty imposed upon me and the position I was put in. I had never been into this house, but I was afraid that some of the men that I had put round the house might shoot some inoffensive individual coming in there not being an outlaw; so I took Bellis and went out a long distance away from the house, so that I could challenge anybody that came up until I got the people who might come between me and the house, and I told the other men to surround the house itself and put two of the trustworthy men on the other side where there was a road coming in. I gave them the most positive orders that not a shot was to be fired, at anybody until I had given the order or fired a shot myself. The night was bitterly cold; it was a white frost; and we lay there, out in this exposed place, until about six o’clock next morning. I consulted with my sergeant, and we considered it best to send into Wangaratta at once, which was only about eight or nine miles off, to get out four additional men. I did so, and four men came out. The party was in charge. I think, of Senior-Constable Kelly. I told him that I was certain that the outlaws were somewhere near, and to keep a watch over the place all the next day, and until I ordered him to withdraw; to allow not a soul to enter or depart from the house until he got orders from me. Directly daylight broke we returned to where we left our camp. We had some breakfast, saddled and mounted our houses, and went into the mountains. We followed the two tracks we saw the previous evening for some miles—and both Bellis and Canny were capital trackers, of course not equal to blacks, but very good for European trackers—and we went on to the tracks for a considerable time. We found the tracks first on one side and then another. The men all begged on me to let us abandon our horses, leave them behind, so that we could follow the tracks quietly, and no noise occur. I did so, and we walked on and on, and we found other tracks joining in, and they lost the tracks once or twice. When we were going on these tracks the men, all of them excellent men, called out, “Mr. Hare, do you hear any voices ahead?” running up to me. I said, “I hear no voices at all.” However, I complied with their wish, and said, “Let us run on these tracks, as far as we can;” and we went on, and about one o’clock we came to a dead standstill; they had lost all tracks, and we could go no further. We then had to return and pick up our horses. We took a long circuit. That afternoon we rode for hours, and that night we made back again to the same place where we had been the previous evening. We did not take our pack-horses; we left them in the paddock, and we went into camp. The next morning I went right through the ranges, the dense part, to get on to the Winton side of the Warby ranges. We were having some lunch, and one of the men went up to a hut; and the owner of this hut said, “You police had been camping on the top of that high mountain a night or two ago, or the night before last.” And we said we were not there at all. She said, “Nonsense, My husband and I saw the fire on the top of that sugar-loaf cone.” He said, “No;” I went up to the hut to see the woman; she described what she and her husband had seen, the fire up there, and I knew it could not have been the police, and no person would go up there for amusement. The next morning we made straight for this hill: it was a very difficult hill to ascend, nothing but sharp rocks standing on end, and when I got as far as the horses could go, I told the men to separate out and surround the hill and go to the top as quickly as they could. We got on the top, and when we got there we found some embers and some fire; the fire was not quite out; it appeared as if it was a place where the fire had been made between two rocks, and the whole place, which might have been camped on, had been set of fire by some she-oak trees that had been burning there. We searched all the ranges about there, and that night we camped where we did the previous evening, or where this woman gave us the information. Next morning we got up, and I saw another hill, not in the direction I had been, which was towards the Ovens River, apparently north. I took down the men towards Glenrowan, and there was a very high point of a hill there. We got into foot of it, and I said, “Suppose we go and search at the top here, and see what we can find.” We rode as far as we could, and I divided the men to surround the hill in the same manner as the other hill. Being a very heavy weight myself, not being active on my legs at my time of life, I made my horse do a great deal more work than the men made their horses do, and by so doing I got on the top of the hill first. I looked round me to see if I could find any traces of the outlaws, and there I saw a fresh track as if done a few minutes before I had been there, and where a man had slidden down with his heel of the rock; the moss was lying at the bottom as if he had slipped down. I did nothing; I sat there till the men came up. I said, “Look here, men, what is that?” and the man Bellis came forward and said, “That is the heel of a man.” “Well,” I said, “where is the man, can you follow it?” He said, “I will try,” and he went some distance and pulled up, and said, “I have lost the track, sir.” Then said to the men, “We must get these fellows, they are not far off from us, the country is thick no doubt.” And I made another attempt, and I got up to another high hill, the some as was done in the order. I should here state that on the top of each of those hills I found stones recently removed and standing on their edge, some of them, perhaps one or two, on top of another, some recently moved, the ground fresh under it, as you can see when a stone is moved, and other placed perhaps two or three put together. I asked Canny and Bellis, who knew the country well, “Can you inform me what is the reason of these stones being moved?” and they could give no satisfactory reason, they had had no experience of the kind. At every hill we found the same thing, the stones removed. On this other hill there was the same thing, and I found tracks on the top of it. Those were the circumstances under which I sent word to Captain Standish on the two occasions the information I had got, and about what I was doing, and upon that he wrote up to Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor. I did not ask him to do so. They were at that time up at the head of the King River.

1292-3. Was that the occasion Mr. O’Connor referred to that he was at the station?—Yes.

1294. That accounted for the fact he could not send the tracker?—Yes. That afternoon my men were very much done up, and so was I myself. I had not led my pack-horses come with me that day, because the mountains were too severe for them, and they could not travel on them, and I wanted to be very quick. While I was on the top of one of the highest hills I saw one of my constables galloping up with another person. This was a gentleman who lived in the locality. I went down the hill a little and beckoned to them to come up to me. It was on his run. He beckoned to me to come down, and at last I got him up. I pointed him to those loose stones and those tracks that I found on this hill. I said, “Can you tell me who has been up here—has anybody been up here belonging to your station today?” He said, “No, we do not go up here once a year;” “but,” he said, “if you come along with me, I will show you something that I fancy will be of some service to you.” I said, “What is that?” He said, “There is a spring, the only water in the mountains, situated up here, and there is a tent erected on it, one of my men told me so.” I collected the whole party and said, “Come and see what it is.” He led the way, and we found a tent, and in it there were some oats and general horse feed, and the full appliances of what they call in the country beemen—men who go about collecting honey in the mountains; but there was no trace of anybody at the place, and the spring was all covered over with tracks of shod horses. We waited about there for some time to see if anybody would come, and no one came. We were very careful when we went down to the tent to leave no marks of our being about, or tracks, or touch a single thing in the place. I took the men away, and said, “We will be here at daybreak to-morrow morning to see if there is anybody here.” We went some distance down towards ——— station, and camped there for the night.

1295. Had you no person with you?—My party of police.

1296. Had you no person with you who could compare those tracks, or trace them at all?—No, we could not trace them at all. The tracks of horses in the water showed they were all shod horses where they had been feeding on the swamp. The tracks of the heels were men’s footmarks, and no tracks of the horses on the top of the hills.

1297. I mean the places where you said the tracks of the horses cutting up the grass were?—That is a different story altogether; that was on the other side of the mountain.

1298. You could not make any comparison between one and the other?—There was no party there. These were on a different side of the mountain.

1299. You were on the Warby ranges on the first occasion of the tracks at the northern or Yarrawonga side?—No, on the Wangaratta side, within eight miles of Wangaratta. Then I crossed over the Warby ranges, towards the Winton side. Continuing the narrative, the next morning we got up very early and surrounded this place, and went down to it. There was still no one in it. Shall I relate the story about the boy Moses, who was with me on the occasion, and when he came upon the tracks Mr. O’Connor referred to in his evidence?

1300. Was Mr. O’Connor put on the tracks?—He was away, and it would have taken some days for him to get down to there with his men.

1301. Was Mr. O’Connor’s statement, in your view correct?—What I want to show is that this man travelled exactly as I say the men in New South Wales do. We had a party there, and we had a blacktracker, and we came across, about four o’clock in the afternoon, four tracks of horses going in the direction of the Ovens River. Moses was with us at he time, and he said to me, “Shall I follow them?” I said, “Yes.” He took the cartridge out of his pouch and stuck it into his rifle, and away he started, with his head down, first this side and then on that side—[explaining by gesture]—and kept on riding at a hand gallop, and it was as much as we could keep up with him. He went on three or four miles that way, and suddenly he came upon the road leading down to Yarrawonga from Wangaratta, the main road. There he pulled up, and said, “Lost the track here.” I said, “How so?” and he said, “Got on the road here.” That road was a well-beaten, dusty road, which lots of bullocks and drays had gone across. Before he stopped I said, “Have you been following the track all the way?” He said, “Three big horses, one small;” and I said, “Show me now where the tracks are when they got into the road,” and he got off his horse and said, “There one, there another,” pointing to the tracks of those four horses breaking on to the road. He then galloped up to see if they had broken off the road in any way and come across the other side the same way. The Ovens River was about 100 yards from us, and it was then about dusk, the sun had been down about half an hour. We had no blankets, food, or anything, and I saw nothing could be done that night. I said then to the men with me, “To-morrow, instead of going down that river to where the tracks lead to, let us work back and see where they come from.” They all agreed it was a very good idea, because we could tell whether they were the police, outlaws, or the time they were made if we knew where they came from. Moses picked up the tracks next morning, and went back again and worked them back, and when he got to a certain place, where there were two big stones, he said, “Take off saddle here,” and I said, “Where?” and he said, “Here, one fellow saddle here and one fellow there. And we all jumped off our horses, and we found first a tin empty, such as we used to have preserved meat in—it was of the same description as we had—and there I found another one, and found a police strap, a Government strap, and the men came to the conclusion that it was Senior-Constable Kellys’ party; because when I had removed him from the house where he had charge of I told him to go and form a camp in the mountain so that he could watch the house, and we gave them some of our provisions—he had none at the time. He came from Wangaratta without any provisions; and we recognized that these were the tins we had given him before. I subsequently made enquiries, and I found this was the very camp, and that he had gone down the tracks towards the Ovens and had gone up that way into Wangaratta. I tell that narrative because I think that is the way the blacks should be worked. One or two black-fellows with a party of police are very useful. We cannot undervalue their services; but in a mountainous country, for a whole cavalcade of black-fellows and white-fellows to go together, I say I do not think it would ever answer as far as catching the Kellys is concerned. I am only giving my opinion from my experience of them. I may be wrong. To resume, I do not know that I have got anything further to say with regard to that. I was removed from the district some time after this.

1302. What time did that occupy?—I arrived in the district on 12th December 1879, and I left Benalla on the 7th July 1879, and during all that time, as I have stated, I was out with search parties off and on. I used to be sometimes four or five days in Benalla recruiting men, horses, and myself. I found it very hard work upon my men. They were all young active fellows; and we found that the work of that sort told upon the men over 40, and many of them had to leave.

1303. Were most of your men experienced bushmen?—No, not in the sort of country. I have stated I had two excellent men—Bellis and Canny—but some were very bad, others fair; but you must remember this was new country to all of them except myself. I was there in 1854, 1855, and 1856—Wangaratta, Buckland, and Beechworth—and knew pretty well the whole district.

1304. Can you inform us how you carried your provisions?—On pack-horses.

1305. How did you procure then when you ran short?—We went in to get them. I have got bread and meat from some of the farmers, but we generally stayed out as long as the provisions would last, and they went in.

1306. Did you make yourselves known to the parties you got provisions from?—We were as well known as the town clock, such a large body of police mounted, our horses, and everything were as well known as if in uniform in Melbourne. We were known by everybody in the district.

1307. That you were out?—That we were out. We could not hide it from them—we must leave our tracks behind us.

1308. If you were so generally known as belonging to the police force, did not it lessen your chance of capturing the Kellys?—Not a bit. Because we were as much as possible in uninhabited country. Frequently we had to go between fences and show ourselves, but we avoided as much as possible all habitations, and only when we were compelled did we go between fences; then we were known as well as the policemen in Collin’s street.

1309. Did you go searching this place from private information received?—Information of varied character; one account being that they were in one part of the Warby ranges, and another in another part, and so I thought we would give the place a thorough searching. All those stories we heard we were obliged to enquire into, because the very one we omitted would have led onto them. Even if we did not send out a party, we would have to make some enquiries as to the truth of the report.

1310. When you were leaving the district—recalling your memory to the facts of the case—do you take upon yourself to say that you had then had more authentic information or general knowledge of the Kellys than when you went up on the 12th December?—Most undoubtedly.

1311. Do you think they were in that district all the time?—Most undoubtedly.

1312. Did you ascertain what those traces were on the Warby mountains?—No, never to this day; and I believe it was the men flying before us; but if we had had some of Mr. O’Connor’s men on that day we could have got them, I believe.

1313. That was the time you found the tent?—Yes.

1314. How far were those places, to the best of your knowledge, from the residence of the Kellys—where they had been from childhood?—I suppose about twelve miles.

1315. That is from Greta?—Yes.

1316. Would the twelve miles include all those places?—Very nearly all.

1317. There is one thing about the surrounding of Cleary’s hut—did any of your men at any time enter the hut?—I did; three of my men did. I searched it thoroughly.

1318. Do you consider the men in your force were fully armed and were well acquainted with the use of firearms?—Thoroughly—my men were. I will come to that subject hereafter as to what Mr. Nicolson has said. My men were as well acquainted as I was, and I have had a gun in my hand since six years old; and we allowed the good shots to take rifles and the indifferent shots to take double-barrelled guns which will cover so much more space—they were loaded with large pellets, sixteen to the charge.

1319. Were your plans ever interfered with by any superior officer?—Never, not in any way. Whenever any information came we used to discuss it in the office—that is, Mr. Sadleir, Mr. O’Connor, and myself; and I think, with the exception of that one instance Mr. O’Connor has mentioned, I think that was the only instance to my knowledge; that there was not an instance throughout the whole time in which everything was not told to Mr. O’Connor, and in that case I was told not to tell him by Captain Standish, and I then referred him to Captain Standish. Mr. O’Connor, Captain Standish, Mr. Sadleir, and myself were all on the most intimate terms possible all the time we were at Benalla, and all the ill-feeling that has been shown before this Commission has arisen since the capture of the Kellys.

1320. As far as you know?—No, I know everything. I know that Captain Standish, Mr. O’Connor, and myself lived together like brothers—we occupied a sitting room together.

1321. How can you speak for all like that?—Because Captain Standish was never up there afterwards.

1322. Did you not mean to say since you left the district on the first occasion, instead of saying since the capture of the Kellys?—Yes, that is what I meant.

1323. Concerning that, did not you and Captain Standish and Mr. O’Connor live in the same rooms in the hotel?—Yes.

1324. Dine together, occupy the same apartment at the hotel?—Yes; lived by ourselves, I say, I thought as much of Mr. O’Connor as any man I ever met in my life. We were on terms of more than ordinary friendship.

1325. Official?—No, private. I never cared of any man more than I did for Mr. O’Connor, and he for me. He made my house his home when he came down here, and so it remained until I left Benalla on the first occasion. I do not for a moment say that Captain Standish was apathetic. He would change the subject to other topics as we were living together. Some men are more given to “chaff” than others. Captain Standish was sometimes rather nasty in his “chaff” to Mr. O’Connor, and Mr. O’Connor would not stand it.

1326. Was that during the “friendly terms” you speak of?—Yes. And they used to have a row perhaps for half an hour, and then one would say he was sorry for it, and they would meet quite friendly next morning at breakfast. Between him and myself I do not think we had the slightest difference. Mr. O’Connor has rather a short temper, and Captain Standish used to say rather nasty things, and Mr. O’Connor would not stand it, but it was made up the next morning, and nothing came of it—and so it went on to the end of the time. As far as the official business was concerned, I am really at a loss to know how it can be said that Captain Standish did anything to prevent the Kellys being caught, through his apathy or anything else. Mr. O’Connor never, when we were on terms of friendship said, “If Captain Standish had done so and so we would have got the Kellys.” He used to remark to me the indifferent manner in which Captain Standish behaved from time to time when the subject of the Kellys was mentioned.

1327. What do you mean by indifferent—apathetic?—Yes, apathetic. He would change the subject to something else; and Mr. Sadleir has remarked the same.

1328. Mr. O’Connor said you had several times remarked to him that Captain Standish was indifferent?—I do not deny Mr. O’Connor’s statement. I dare say I may have said, “He does not take a great interest when you speak to him;” but when I have spoken to him he has always shown the utmost interest in the whole affair, and from Captain Standish down to the lowest constable I am sure that we had but one object in view during the seven months that I was up there. I do not exclude Mr. O’Connor at all. He never said a word to me at all about any chances we had thrown away, and he showed as much interest as I did.

1329. To make them amenable to justice?—Yes, just so, to catch the Kellys. It was his thought day and night—that is, Captain Standish’s—and every constable’s there; and to say now that the reason the Kellys were not captured was because of the squabbles between the officers, this I deny. As far as I was concerned, for the seven months, I declare there was no chance thrown away that I knew of; I never threw one away that I knew of, with my feeling on the subject then. I never received information without enquiring into it.

1330. Were you aware of any difference between Mr. Nicolson and Captain Standish?—No, never, not up to that time.

1331. Mr. Nicolson never said anything in your hearing?—He was not up there.

1332. At any other time?—No.

1333. Did Captain Standish take out a search party at any time?—Never. He came out to visit me when I was at the watch party one night; but I do not know that he did on any other occasion.

1334. How did Captain Standish employ his time at Benalla?—He took charge of affairs, attended to all the correspondence and all the matters at head-quarters.

1335. Was that a heavy responsibility?—Yes. It was a heavy responsibility. He had to decide between the different reports that came in—not by himself, but Mr. O’Connor and Mr. Sadleir and I assisted him.

1336. You lived at the hotel at Benalla on one side of the river?—Yes.

1337. Are the police there at the other end of the town?—Yes.
1338. After you had breakfast, Captain Standish went to his business at the barracks every morning, and remained there all day?—Yes.
1339. And at times in the telegraph office, and he did office duty there?—Yes.
1340. And he restricted himself to that?—Yes. He was not suited to take charge of a party of police, on account of his age and the character of his experience. He has been in the office thirty years, and to put him in charge of a search party on a mountain he would have to rely on his men. The men look to their leader, and he would have been most unsuitable.
1341. Do you know really in your own mind why Captain Standish went up there at all?—I do not. He went up after that affair occurred at Euroa, and he found Mr. Nicolson knocked up, and he sent for me. I do not know why he went. I think the Government insisted on his going there.
1342. Are you aware that Mr. Berry, as Chief Secretary, before he went to England, told him that if he were the head of the police (he (Mr. Berry) would go up and stay there till the Kellys were made amenable to justice?—Yes, he told me to that effect; and Captain Standish wanted to return some time before he did leave, and Sir Bryan O’Loghlen advised him to remain.
1343. Then for all practical purposes he was not required to remain in the Benalla district?—I did not say that. We required the brains of half a dozen men to decide upon the intricate matters constantly coming in. I will give one instance. The Euroa bank was stuck up by the outlaws, and they went away riding three bay horses and one grey. For months after that we used to get reports from every side of the district of three men on bay horses and one on grey. The sympathisers and the lads in the country did it on purpose. I used to get one grey and three bays reported from Shepparton one day, Wodonga another, Strathbogie the day after, and we could not allow one single iota of evidence to drop without enquiring into it when the information came saying the men had been seen.

1344. Then you believe that in the active pursuit that you were following, in going out with the search parties, it was necessary to have some responsible party in Benalla to conduct the correspondence and so on?—No doubt of it.
1345. While you were in charge in that district of the parties that were there in pursuit of the Kellys, can you say what were the instructions to the out-stations, such as Wangaratta. Could the men act on their own responsibility, and go and follow any traces when they got them; or had they to remain in till they got instructions giving permission to go out?—No; their duty was this: to report the information they received to Benalla, where we had a board of officers, and it was referred to all of us. We considered what was best to be done, and if we so decided, the men who got the information, were sent to enquire into it at once.
1346. Were the same instructions acted upon when you were there before Mr. Nicolson relieved you as apparently you gave to the men on the final occasion?—No; there was a difference because of their parties. There was no party large enough to go in pursuit of the Kellys at any place but Benalla; but I would rather you would let me go on with my statement. The first time I was out we had men at all those places, and each of them had parties.
1347. They could act independently?—Yes, but always consulting us first, it only took about five minutes.
1348. They had to consult head-quarters first?—Yes, but it only took five minutes. I could show the danger of letting the men go out without letting us know at head-quarters. We had six and eight and ten parties out at the same time, and they might meet and clash. The constables did not know each other, and might be firing into each other. We had to work the district so as to know where every man was. Say a man at Mansfield got some information from the Wombat, and he telegraphed down to Benalla, and we gave the directions “Go and look after it yourself, and see if there is anything in it,” or in like manner; we used to get information irrespective of the men and sent them out to search.
1349. You must be aware that the papers have frequently stated there was a lot of “red-tapeism,” and that officers were not allowed to take any action till they had received orders from head-quarters, and in one case there was said to be a delay of eight hours before the men could take action?—I heard all that but I defy anybody to say a delay of ten minutes elapsed when we got information.
1350. I can understand that head-quarters ought to know; but suppose the police at Wangaratta sent to Benalla saying they received information and asking whether they were to act, and you replied “Send out the search party,” and they received information at Benalla to go to a certain point, when the search party arrived at the certain point—if they were received other information, could they go on further without coming back for further authority?—Most certainly. I say that without any hesitation, and I do not think you could find a leader of a party who would come forward and say he was hampered in his instructions, notwithstanding what has been said in the press that they could not go at once.
1351. I want to draw your attention to this in your printed statement:—“I had long talks with them and their men on the state of affairs, and informed them that I intended stationing black-trackers, whom I expected from Queensland at Benalla, Wangaratta, and Beechworth.” Was that in confirmation of the opinion that you had as to having black-trackers in pursuit of the Kellys?—That is on my second occasion.
1352. You say you told them you were going to recommend that black-trackers should be stationed at Benalla, Wangaratta, and Beechworth—did you continue to have confidence in black-trackers in pursuit of the Kellys, so much so that you continued to use them on your second occasion?—Yes, but in a different way.

1353. Were those the black-trackers that were sent for by Mr. Chomley?—Yes.
1354. Are they in the district now?—Yes.
1355. Therefore you considered them useful?—Yes, to go with parties. “I also told them that at each of these towns I would have a full party of men stationed, so that, if any information was received about the Kellys, they would be in a position to go in pursuit at once.”

1356. Did that position of affairs exist upon your visit between the 12th December and the time when you were relieved by Mr. Nicolson?—It did, with the exception of the black-trackers.
1357. Were there parties at those towns who could go in pursuit at once?—There were undoubtedly; but you are touching upon matter I will go into further on more fully.

The witness withdrew.

F. A. Hare further examined.

1358. By the Commission. —Will you resume your narrative?—I was saying yesterday that I never threw away a chance anytime I was up there, to my knowledge, and spare myself in no way. I was told when I returned to Benalla, after an unsuccessful search, that I was a great fool to go out so much—that I would kill myself.

1359. Who told you that?—Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O'Connor. One day we were talking over the matter, Mr. O'Connor said, “Captain Standish ought to be ashamed of himself, sending you out so much.”

But I felt it was a disgrace to us (the police) that we could not catch the Kellys, and I strained every effort to succeed.

1360. Do you by the word “us” mean the police force of the colony generally, or yourselves individually?—The police force of the colony. So it went on, until at last the cold frosty nights did nearly kill me—sleeping without fires, and with little covering over myself and party. On several occasions our possum-rugs in the morning were hard frozen—we were obliged to put them before the fire before we could fold them up.

1361. Of course that does not refer to the time when you resumed duty, for that was on the 12th of December?—No, this was when I was doing the first work, about June.
1362. The winter of the season you were there?—Yes, I have been giving some anecdotes of the whole time I was out. I came in from my last trip about a week before I was relieved. I would draw attention to the fact that this was not an ordinary climate we were working in. We were up on the mountains, and on one occasion the men went for water in the morning to make some tea, and they found this creek frozen, running water, and we were lying within about a hundred yards of that. Mr. O'Connor in his evidence has stated something concerning a letter that was received by Aaron Sherritt from Joe Byrne—that he was to meet him at Whorouly races. I will tell the Commission the exact facts of the case. The letter was written in peculiar phraseology that none of us here could understand, and it had to be interpreted by Aaron Sherritt himself before we knew what it meant; but the purport of it was asking Aaron Sherritt to go over to Whorouly races—this is a small country racecourse on the Ovens—and to meet him—the writer—Joe Byrne—at a certain place, as he wanted him to ride his black mare in some hurdle race. I saw the letter, and beyond doubt, it was in Byrne’s handwriting, because we have seen a great many of his documents. I communicated with Captain Standish on the subject, and we (the officers) decided what was to be done. We arranged that I should take three of my best riders and pluckiest men, and go to the races myself. I selected three men unknown to the public in that part of the country, viz., Senior-Constable Johnson, Constable Lawless, and Constable Falkner. I told them what duty they would have to perform and the information that I had received, and directed them to ride singly, as if unknown to each other, on to the racecourse. Lawless I set up with an under-and-over table and dice, Johnson was got up as a bookmaker, and Falkner was to act the yokel and patronize the other two, the under-and-over place, and to make bets on the races. I myself drove on down to the course in a buggy and mixed among the people, and the ordinary police in uniform attended the races. I took all those precautions for the purpose of preventing anyone knowing.

1363. Did Sherritt know?—Of course. He was there.

1364. Did he know the three men disguised?—Yes; he knew the arrangements altogether. I mixed amongst the people; and the ordinary constables in uniform did their duty, and did not know those men I had; and none of the mounted men on duty knew me, I think—they did not recognise me.

1365. The police did not arrest your three-card trick man?—No; in little country racecourses they are not so particular about little things of that sort—there is no money made. I merely give this statement to the Commission to show them that, if we had taken black-trackers there, no secrecy of any sort could have been observed—we might as well have stayed at home. Near where those races were held Joe Byrne’s aunt resides; and one of his brothers was on the racecourse—came down from Sebastopol, where they lived; and a number of their greatest sympathizers were there also. There is another short incident with regard to this search that I want to give you. On one occasion, about the month of May, we received information from a very reliable source that the outlaws were about to visit one of their sympathisers, who lives at the foot of a very steep mountain and surrounded by mountains. A party of men was sent out by the officers, about ten o’clock, from Benalla, in a wagon, to within about two miles of this men’s hut; I think it was in charge of Senior-Constable Mays. They approached the house some time in the morning—about two or three o’clock; had to go some distance round for fear of the dogs alarming the house that there was some one about; they succeeded in avoiding the dogs, and took up a very good position, just above the house, where they could look down upon it and see everything that was going on. About sunrise in the morning, they observed two boys, sons of this sympathizer, come out with a couple of dogs. They walked about for some time, and the men thought they were looking for cows. When suddenly the dogs came upon the tracks of the police, and followed them up to hill to within about ten yards of where they were lying. The dogs, directly they saw the men, stood there and barked. The boys came up, saw the men, and returned immediately to the house. The owner of the house then came up himself, and spoke to the men. He had some words—I do not remember exactly what they were; however, he went back to his house, and immediately three shots were fired from the house, and there was a hollow trunk of a tree lying upon two logs, and an axe was taken and three distinct blows given upon this, evidently as a signal; and you could hear the echo resounding from all sides of the hills, both the three shots and the blows upon the timber.

1366. Nothing further came of that?—No, nothing further; the men left at once. Kate Kelly was there that morning at this house, and when she came out it was evident the whole thing was blown, through the shots and signals.

1367. Those signals, in your opinion, prevented the outlaws from visiting the hut?—Undoubtedly.

1368. Do you consider the object of those blows and shots was to warn them, being in the neighborhood, to clear out?—Yes. It was a signal no doubt.

1369. When Senior-Constable Mays reported to you, you came to the conclusion that he had acted wisely, as the outlaws had cleared out?—Yes; and I may say that sympathizer dogs and the dogs of the relations were a great nuisance to us. The next time I went to this spot, I appointed a man with trackers there, no secrecy of any sort could have been observed. The next time I went to this spot, I appointed a man with trackers there, no secrecy of any sort could have been observed.

1370. Baits to destroy dogs?—Yes.

1371. Strychnine on a bit of meat?—Yes; but after that many of the dogs about the place you could not poison if you tried. They always had muzzles on day and night, and used to come into Benalla with the muzzles on. I have seen Mrs. Skillian and Katey Kelly come into Benalla with dogs muzzled.

1372. What you want to convey to the Commission is this, that the Kellys were so supported by sympathizers that actually the dogs were trained so that, if strange horses came, the dogs would look out for the tracks and boys follow them up?—Yes, that is it.

1373. If, in your opinion, the signals you spoke of were the means of preventing the outlaws approaching, you must have been cognizant of the fact that you were within a very easy distance of the outlaws at this particular period?—No; you do not know the situation of this place. There is a very high mountain, almost impossible to go up on one side, and the range runs in a kind of horseshoe right round this sympathizer’s house—he is at the foot of the gully, and there is only one main entrance to the place.

1374. It struck me that you, having this information that the outlaws were there, within, say, three quarters of a mile?—Within five miles over in those mountains—a circuit of five miles. This man being in the centre, the sound would travel five miles round.

1375. But even then you would have them within a very limited distance?—No; if they were within twenty yards there you would not see them.

1376. You might not see them, but the information would be on your mind that the Kellys were within five miles radius of that spot, or less?—Yes.

1377. Did it not strike you at the time that it would be expedient to reinforce your party as quickly as possible and surround the neighbourhood, even with all its difficulties?—I could not surround these mountains with 50 men. To put the cordon round that place, I could not do with 50 men.
1378. Do I understand you to say it would be impossible?—It would have been impossible with the force at my disposal, or, in fact, any force you could have found. This house was situated in a place called the Bald Hills, and the sound would echo all round it. I have told you the terms on which I was with Mr. O’Connor, and now I wish to state with reference to Captain Standish. Captain Standish placed an immense amount of confidence in me, and, I think, by so doing, caused a good deal of jealousy throughout the force. He used to consult me upon nearly all subjects that he wanted advice on, and we were always on the most friendly terms. I do not think I ever had a dispute or row with him in my life. The same with Mr. Nicolson, I never knew that there was any ill-feeling existing between us, and always thought that we were great friends. I know that our families were on most intimate terms; and it was not until I was ordered to Benalla on a second occasion, to supersede Mr. Nicolson, that there was even any ill-feeling I was aware of. He has never brought forward one case. He says I have thwarted him in his duty. I have no idea how I have done so, and was not aware of it until he told it here. He brought forward an instance, and he stated that this showed how I thwarted him, and he thought that this was a most serious case. The fact is, I differed in opinion from him. He made a statement against a man, Constable Redding, in whom I had the utmost reliance, and my opinion was borne out by every officer under whom he served; and I, as the officer directly over the man, took this man’s part, and stated what I knew of the man. Mr. Nicolson only once inspected my district since he has been Inspecting-Superintendent.

1379. How long is that ago—when was he appointed?—Some years ago.

1380. And he inspected your district once?—Yes; and it was on this occasion that he found fault with this man.

1381. That was the man at Donnybrook?—Yes, who was subsequently killed by a young horse falling with him. We tracked where the horse had stumbled on a stone, and the man was doubled up and broke his head.

1382. You think that circumstance was purely accidental?—Entirely. I wish to state another great difficulty we had to contend with—the want of young smart intelligent officers. We have plenty of officers in the force, but I think there is not one of them five years under my age. The junior officers are older than their seniors on the list—many of them; they have only been appointed these last four or five years. I myself, for instance—I do not think I should have been sent on those parties, but I had a good knowledge of the country, and was a fair bushman, and there was no one to take my place. My experience of twenty-seven years was surely likely to be of more service than my being stuck in the bush, where perhaps a young officer would have done even better than I could do, because he was younger and had more dash in him; been left behind at head-quarters to assist and to arrange things there. I felt myself, when I was out, that I should not have been put—an that my service should have been of more value inside.

1383. Most of the officers at that time were men nearly as far advanced in age as yourself?—Yes; some older. There were some officers sent for to come up to the country; Mr. Drought was one. He was sent for by Captain Standish, who wanted to divide the district in the Kelly country into certain sub-districts, and put an officer over each. Mr. Drought was one mentioned; Mr. Twohey was another. Mr. Drought came up, and I had some conversation with him, and he told me that he had never been on a horse in his life except once, and then he fell off; and I said particularly, “You will be no use here,” and he said, “No, no use whatever.” It was not his fault, it was his misfortune.

1384. I suppose you know that Mr. Pewtress, one of the best officers in the service, is the same way?—Well, Mr. Pewtress told me he was a very good horseman—when he was a boy—but I never saw him ride. As to another weak point mentioned by Mr. O’Connor, I agree with him—that our men did not know the country. I frequently put the question to Mr. Sadleir—we had only recently taken charge of the district—and I said, “How is it so few of your men can lead us through the bush?” and he said, “Those men who know the country were shot.” But there were other men who knew the roads, as O’Connor said, but they did not know short cuts, and we had to employ men for the purpose to take us through the bush.

1385. The officer you have mentioned, Mr. Drought—do you know how long he has been in the service?—I think before I was.

1386. I see he joined in 1852?—Yes, I did not remember the dates.

1387. With regard to the unfitness of the men to use firearms, I would like to ask if your idea is the same as Mr. Nicolson’s?—No; but I will come to that bye-and-bye if you will allow me. I have already said that my own men were well acquainted with arms.

1388. They principally were Bourke men?—Yes.

1389. Would you not be able to express an opinion as to the others?—I can; but I will come to that hereafter. I now come to the eleven months that I was away from the district.

1390. Before that I want to ask one question about the district. We have heard many assertions that several of the people about the Benalla district were assisting the outlaws in one way and another. Do you know of any instance beyond the relatives?—Yes, we had reports daily of them. The people at Glenrowan, or do you mean in the town of Benalla?

1391. Yes?—Yes. There was one instance I can mention, but I had better not give the name.
1393. Then he is a near relation—a cousin of theirs?—Yes. The Kelly family are the most prolific family I ever met in my life. There was no part of the colony from which we did not receive reports of them; in every part of the colony the Kellys had a cousin, an aunt, or something. If they had not a relation, they had a sympathizer who was always talking in their favor and picking up the news; for instance, about Blackwood, Trentham, and Avenel, and over towards Gippsland, Omeo, and other places are full of their blood relations. There is no part of the colony you can mention free of them.

1394. When you left the first time, about what number of the force was there on the ground—when you left Mr. Sadleir?—I could not possibly say the number; there were large numbers of men over the place, many parties; and I could not give an estimate within thirty.

1395. In order that the question may be quite intelligible, will you explain to the Commission exactly the position you were in in regard to that North-Eastern district. Though you were in charge of the North-Eastern district for the Kelly business, you did not do duty at Mansfield?—I did not do duty, but I had supervision. The whole district was under Captain Standish, Mr. Sadleir, myself, and Mr. O’Connor joined.

1396. Did you go up to Mansfield to do duty there—at that time Mr. Pewtress was there?—I do not think I was there.

1397. Did you visit the Wombat, where the constables were shot?—No. I was within three miles of it one day.

1398. When you were with the search party at Daws’s, was that the nearest you were ever to it?—Yes.

1399. You did duty from Broken River, Daws’s, round Wangaratta, Benalla, and down to the Murray?—Yes; and down the Murray towards Kiálla.

1400. That is north-east from Benalla towards the Murray?—Yes. When Mr. Nicolson relieved me I sat with him.

1401. On which occasion?—When he relieved me; when I gave up charge, and came down to town.

1402. Is that in December?—No; I relieved him in December.

1403. You relieved Mr. Nicolson twice?—I did.

1404. When was it you are speaking of?—When Mr. Nicolson relieved me on the first occasion, I sat with him on several hours, and gave him all the information I could remember that had occurred during my stay there. I gave him the names of the agents I had in my employ; told him how they could be trusted, and my experience of them. Amongst them I gave him the name of the writer of that letter that he put in evidence here; the one who wrote about “Diseased stock.” I had visited the writer on several occasions, and he was working for me for some two or three months before I left; and I will fix the date—from the date of the sympathizer being in goal, and just about to be discharged.

1405. That was when he began?—That was when he began. That was my first interview with him. There was not a single thing I kept back from Mr. Nicolson that I remembered, and gave him full information on ______ 1406. This man specially?—Yes, I did tell him of that. I said he was one of the most reliable men I knew.

1407. And had he been previously employed by Mr. Nicolson during his time?—I cannot tell you that. At any rate, he did not give me his name; I found him out myself.

1408. Why were you relieved?—Because I was so ill.

1409. You were saying just now when you were relieved by Mr. Nicolson on that occasion you gave him all the information at your possession, as was your bounden duty, and what you were paid for by Government?—Yes, no doubt.

1410. On the matter in Mr. Nicolson’s evidence: you mentioned that you gave all the names of all the agents, and intimated to him what your course of proceeding was, and that amongst the list you gave the name of the agent whom you had employed, who wrote subsequently about the armour?—Yes.

1411. Mr. Nicolson said when he went on duty that he found the men unaccustomed to the use of arms. He has given the names of some men. Now you mentioned certain men you had with you, namely, Mays, and men from your own district, and other men; were those men left with Mr. Nicolson?—No; I think the majority of my own men returned to my district with me.

1412. That would be in accordance with orders?—Yes. We had to reduce the district, and I asked Captain Standish to let them go with me.

1413. Did Mays?—Yes, and Mills. Falkner did not leave.

1414. Did Phillips?—He was not in my party. Lawless left with me, and O’Lachlan left with me. I think that was all; and I think Falkner was the only one remaining.

1415. Mr. Nicolson gave the names of certain men, that were there when he returned to duty and relieved you, who he said were unaccustomed to the arms then given out to them—the Martini-Henry rifles and others; and he gave a list of men he had taught under his own supervision. Were any of those men in your party that you say were thoroughly accustomed to arms—was Kirkham?—Yes, I looked upon him so; he was for a short time (two or three months) in my party.

1416. Was Moore?—Never.

1417. Was Canny?—He was.

1418. Was Falkner?—He was.

1419. Was Bell?—No.

1420. Was Senior Constable Irwin?—No.

1421. Was Mounted Constable Graham in your party?—I do not know him.
1422. Was Hugger?—No.
1423. Was Arthur?—I think he was out on two or three occasions.
1424. Was this the Arthur who was at the capture?—Yes. He is one of the best shots in the colony. When he joined us and left the depôt, the drill instructor wrote up a note when he came up to Benalla, and said, “If you want a good man, pick up Arthur; he is the grandest shot I have seen in the depôt.”
1425. Was Phillips with you?—No. He is the man specially referred to that had never fired a gun.

Mr. Nicolson. I said he had never fired off a gun.
The Witness. Phillips had been acting in town as orderly to the Chief Commissioner of Police. He was removed from that duty, and a vacancy having occurred in the Benalla district, he was sent up an once, and he had never be out on a search party up to the time I left; and had only been, I think, about a few weeks at Benalla.

Mr. Nicolson. I beg to remark that it does not follow that the men mentioned as having been in the shooting class were meant by me unfit to shoot. I took all the men I could get.

The Witness. I may state, in connection with that, that during the time I was at Benalla, when I came in with search parties, that I frequently let the men go out and fire for practice. I do not think I ever came in but the men went and had some practice, both with the double-barrelled guns and also with the other weapons that were served out to each. Every man shot with his own weapon, and my men especially I used always to let practise.

1426. Were your men all good horsemen?—Well, I do not quite understand the term.
1427. Good riders?—They were not all equal to the Kellys—three were. I believe those three men, if we had come across the Kellys, would have followed them, and overtaken them. Those three men were specially mounted for the purpose. The picked horses of the district were given them. They were Canny, Falkner, and Lawless. There was also Senior-Constable Johnson, who was out with me on one or two occasions, though I did not look upon him as one of my party. You could not get better riders in the whole of Australia for bush country, or more plucky men than those.

1428. Did they all leave with you?—No, only one left with me—Lawless. Canny is up there still, and Faulkner has come down since the capture. Now I will come to the second part—the eleven months interval. Unfortunately, during this interval, Mr. O’Connor and I had a difference—“relations were strained,” as it is now called, between us, and we had some communication with each other. I wrote to him, and he wrote to me, and then it dropped, and nothing more was heard of it. On my going up to Benalla—though I suppose if we had met in the streets we should have “cut” each other—I got into the office at twelve o’clock. Mr. Nicolson, Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. O’Connor were there. I went up and shook hands with Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir, and I felt rather frightened about Mr. O’Connor, but I held out my hand to him, and he took it like a man, and we became friends immediately. From that time, I do not say we were on as friendly private terms as previously, but circumstances were altered. Mr. O’Connor had his wife there, and was not living at the hotel; he had been married in the interval, so that there could not be so much private acquaintanceship between us; but as far as official relationship went, I spoke as freely to him as I did before. I would not have mentioned this, had it not been mentioned, and I wish to explain my part in it. Many private conversations have been given before the Commission that I think it would have been far better to have avoided. If I had known all I said would have been repeated, we would no doubt have been more restrained in our intercourse. I wish now to state to the Commission the circumstances under which I went to relieve Mr. Nicolson. Captain Standish came to the depôt, and informed me that I was to proceed to Benalla to relieve Mr. Nicolson, and take charge of the whole proceedings in connection with the Kellys.

1429. What date?—On the 30th of April this conversation occurred. I protested in the strongest manner possible at my being sent up again. I pointed out that there were officers senior to me, none of whom had been called upon to undertake the hardship and the responsibility that I had during my seven months there, and I told him I thought that the responsibility should fall on the senior officers.
1430. Do you mean you pointed out you ought not to be sent up on duty or that it was unfair, passing over the senior officers?—I thought it unfair, passing over the senior officers, and making me go.
1431. Do you mean “unfair” towards them or yourself?—Towards me, and their not being asked to go, and my being sent. I stated to him that on the previous occasion I had been selected to undertake the duty that others had failed in—that my senior had failed in—and that I reaped no profit by the duty I was sent upon. I refer to the capture of Power, the bushranger.
1432. There is some significance I should think attached to the remark, “I stated that a promise was made to me when I was sent for previous to the capture of Power, the bushranger, that Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Montfort had reaped the benefit of the capture, and that I, who was directed to organize the whole affair, am still in the same position as I was then, notwithstanding the promises made by the Chief Secretary, Sir James McCulloch.” You intended to direct special attention to this for some cause or other?—Yes.
1433. During the time Mr. Nicolson was giving his evidence he said he had the management of the whole organization that led to the capture of Power—do you mean to give any further information about that?—Yes, I do, but not now.
1434. Hereafter?—Yes. I stated then that ten years had elapsed and my position in the police force... was still the same as it was then. His reply was, “It is no use saying anything about it, you will have to go.” I said to him, “Well, I will insist upon having an interview with Mr. Ramsay before I go, to point out the position I am in.” He said, “Very well, I will see Mr. Ramsay, and I will make an appointment with him to see you.” He telegraphed up to me and told me that Mr. Ramsay would see me at two o’clock. I saw Mr. Ramsay in the Executive Council Chamber. I said, “Mr. Ramsay, I want to see you on the subject of my going to Benalla. I think it unfair that I should be sent up there after all I have undergone,” and made several other statements concerning what I have gone through in the Kelly country before. Mr. Ramsay replied, “Mr. Hare, this Kelly business has been fully discussed by the Cabinet, and it is their unanimous decision that you should be sent up to take charge of affairs. I give you carte blanche to do whatever you think proper, and I leave you entirely untrammelled.” I then said to Mr. Ramsay, “Very well, Mr. Ramsay, if that is your decision, I suppose I must go. When do you wish me to go?” He said, “Immediately.” Then he said, “When will you be able to go?” and I said, “In a couple of days.” I had a subsequent interview with Mr. Ramsay concerning this business, more especially about the Queensland trackers, and I then said to him, “Suppose I make certain arrangements with certain people, will you bear me out to those arrangements?” He said, “Mr. Hare, the Government will bear you out in every arrangement you make—and you do as you please, and I will see you through.” On Monday the 3rd of May I received a note from Captain Standish, telling me that I need not go at once to Benalla, and that Mr. Nicolson had been allowed to remain there a month longer. About this time I wrote a letter to Mr. Nicolson, to which I told him I had heard that he had been saying that I had had something to do with his removal, and that I was ambitious to take his place up there. After some days he replied to my letter, and he said, “I have been informed that you have had something to do with my removal, but I am glad to find from your letter that such was not the case.”

1433. Have you that copy of the letter or the reply?—I have the reply. It is a private letter, and I do not care about putting it in.

Mr. Nicolson.—I have the original letter, but I have no desire to produce it.

The Witness.—My reason of writing to him on the subject was that Captain Standish told me that when he told Mr. Nicolson I was to relieve him, he said, “What! Be relieved by an underling!” Well, I thought the term used towards me was rather uncalled for in the position I held in the force, and the way we had always worked together, and I wrote that letter to him. I told him, if I had my own way I would stay where I was. Shortly after this, a person waited upon me in Mr. Nicolson’s interest, and discussed the matter over with me, and endeavoured to get me to use private influence to prevent my going up there. I said, “No, but I will be delighted if Mr. Nicolson can arrange it himself; but after what Mr. Ramsay has said to me, I decline to take any further steps in the matter.”

1435. Mr. Nicolson.—I do not wish to interrupt. Are you sure that that person called upon you at my instigation?

The witness.—I do not say at your instigation; I said in your interest. I received orders from Captain Standish, about the end of May, that I was to proceed at once to Benalla to relieve Mr. Nicolson. Accordingly, on the 2nd of June I went up there. I arrived at Benalla by the eleven o’clock train. I went first to the hotel, and after some time I went to the office of the superintendent of the district, Mr. Sadleir, which was also Mr. Nicolson’s office. I need hardly tell you I felt it very much being sent up there, going to relieve a senior officer to myself, and knowing also that Mr. Sadleir was strongly opposed to my coming up there. I walked into the office and shook hands with each of the officers, as I have already said. We discussed all kinds of subjects for the first half hour after I got into the office, and nothing was said in relation to the Kellys at all. I wished to receive charge of everything, and I was waiting for my senior officer to commence the conversation and the handing over. Mr. Nicolson took a letter from his pocket, of which this is a copy, dated Melbourne, 28th May 1880:

MEMO.

Mr. Nicolson being aware that the Government has decided that he should be relieved from the special duty in connection with the outlaws, on which he has been engaged since July last, I beg to inform him that Mr. Hare will proceed to Benalla on Wednesday the 2nd prox., to take charge. I beg that Mr. Nicolson will be good enough to supply Mr. Hare with all the information he is possessed of, and to give him the names of the secret-service men he has been employing of late. When Mr. Nicolson has done this, he will return to Melbourne and resume the duties of Inspecting Superintendent, which have not been carried out for upwards for a year and half. There is no doubt that the country stations are in want of a thorough inspection.

(Signed) F. C. STANDISH,
Chief Commissioner of Police.

He produced the original of that letter and commenced reading the second paragraph. He opened the drawer of the table he was sitting at, and pulled out a sheet of paper and said, “I have paid up the agents up today with one exception.” Then he went over this account of this agent and that one, and showed me that this man or the other had been overpaid a pound or so, or anything of that kind. He then referred me to some papers. He said, “Here are the papers connected with the matter.” Those papers he showed me were private letters.

sent to Mr. Nicolson from his agents, not those that the clerks had any connection with, but that he alone and, I presume, Mr. Sadleir had read, and they were all in a row in the drawer. He then said, “There are a lot of letters here from a certain agent—(naming him)—I think I will take them away with me.” I said, “Do not do that, let me have the benefit of them to read them over.” He then turned round with his hand and said, “Mr. Sadleir, will you tell the rest.” To confirm my statement in that respect, as Mr. Nicolson differs from me to a certain extent, but there are Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor to give evidence of what they saw. But I will produce a little book in which I made a minute that evening. When I went to Benalla I intended to keep a record, as far as I could, of each day’s work, a thing I had not done before to any great extent. So I commenced in this little diary—[showing a book]—and it is continued in this book, which was sent down to me by Mr. Sadleir, without my asking for it, shortly after I was shot. “June 2nd, Wednesday. Left Melbourne by the early train; found Nicolson, Sadleir, and O’Connor in the office. Nicolson gave me the names of special men engaged by him, letters from them and said Sadleir would tell me everything. He told me all in about ten minutes. Saw Senior-Constable Kelly that evening.” And then I refer to another matter. That was written that afternoon immediately after it occurred. There was an agent of Mr. Nicolson’s down at Benalla, I was told, who came down from Beechworth specially to be engaged by me. Senior-Constable Kelly told me that he had made an appointment with him to meet me at a certain spot at Benalla that evening. I went to that spot and remained for half an hour and he did not put in an appearance. I went up to the railway station as the train was going, thinking he might be going away from there, and I found him there. I had about five minutes’ conversation with him. I said, “So-and-so, why did not you keep your appointment with me?” “Oh,” he said, “I am not going to work for you.” I said, “Why not?” “Because you prevent me getting some money from the Government when you were last up here.” This agent had been working for me previous to Mr. Nicolson’s coming to the district. I said, “I had nothing to do with that, it was Mr. Sadleir. He told me he had discharged you, and subsequently you came with an account of some £30 or £40, a large sum like that, and you said you went up to the Upper Murray.” I said, “I had nothing to do with that, it was Mr. Sadleir did all this. I did not have you discharged. I did not see you when you returned.” “Yes,” he said, “But I am told it was your doing.” I said, “I can tell you it was nothing of the kind.” I said, “Mr. Nicolson has great faith in you, and I wish you would continue working for me.” He said, “I will do nothing of the kind,” and he got into the train and went away, and I have never seen him since. I sent that telegram that afternoon to Detective Ward to come down from Beechworth to Benalla. He arrived in the morning by the early train, the first thing. He said to me, “Mr. Hare, do you know that Mr. Nicolson has discharged all the agents up at Beechworth. He sent a telegram up last night to Senior-Constable Mullane, and he told me that all the agents were to be discharged.”

1437. Had you the agent that wrote about the “diseased stock” in your employ?—Yes; I will come to that. Ward said, “I thought it strange he did not telegraph to me direct, because Mullane has had nothing to do with the working of the Kelly affairs up at Beechworth; he is merely in charge of the Beechworth station.” I said, “Are you sure, did you see the telegram?” He said, “Yes.” I then left him for a moment. This conversation occurred outside of Mr. Sadleir’s office. I left him for a moment standing there, and I ran inside to the office to Mr. Sadleir, and I said to him, “Do you know anything about the telegram that Mr. Nicolson has sent to Mullane to discharge all the agents up there?” He said, “No, I never heard anything of it, and I do not think he has.” I then called to the clerk, and said, “Have you any record here, in the office, of a telegram being sent to Beechworth yesterday by Mr. Nicolson?” He said he had not.

1438. Who was the clerk?—Senior Constable Smyth. I then, believe, sent to the telegraph office to see if any telegram was sent to Beechworth from there, and the reply came back, “No, there was not.” Mind you, I am not positive of this; but it is in my belief that I did send, and then I went back to Detective Ward and said, “I can find no record whatever of that telegram;” and Detective Ward suggested perhaps Mr. Nicolson might have sent it from the railway station telegraph office. I asked him what time it came up. He said, “In the evening Mullane told me about it.” “Well,” I said, “this is a strange thing for Nicolson to do. He handed this over to me at one o’clock, and then, in the evening to send the telegram to this effect; I cannot understand it.”

1439. Did you ascertain about the railway station telegram?—No. I had no time. The Commission can send to Senior-Constable Mullane for the original telegram. I never saw it; I had no time to ask for it; but it can be sent for. And I would like to have it produced, and see where and at what hour it was sent. The agents in this district included Aaron Sherritt and a number of others. I don’t wish to mention who were then receiving pay from the Government at this time.

1440. Was this man, the “diseased stock” man, amongst the Beechworth lot?—No.

1441. He was employed at that time?—Yes; not under wages at that day, but Aaron Sherritt was. I would point out to the Commission how embarrassed I would have been if that order had been carried out without my knowing anything about it. I sent Detective Ward back to Beechworth, for fear anything would be done, to stop all proceedings. I said to him, “I give you instructions to order that no change is to be made till you hear from me. I am in charge of the district at this time.” For the first two or three days at Benalla I occupied my time in reading up the papers in the office. There were hundreds telegrams and documents, and an immense number of private letters which were lying there, which I have referred to, and I read, I think, every one of them.
1442. In what condition were they—a state of muddle?—No, beautifully tied up; each agent’s letter tied up consecutively, and orderly arranged.

1443. Mr. Nicolson.—You said they were lying about.

The Witness.—I meant lying in the drawer, in good order and all tied up carefully. I may say I have never had a word of communication with Mullane from the time I left, either by word or letter. Amongst the papers in the office were a number written by the “diseased stock” agent. I do not know for certain that the one that Mr. Nicolson has put in here was left behind, but, if not, there were a great number of a similar description; and I saw, when Mr. Nicolson was giving his evidence the other day, that he had five or six letters in his hand by the same writer, which he put by and did not put in evidence. Those letters I must ask the Commission to get him to give up. I saw them.

1444. Mr. Nicolson.—I shall be very happy to produce them. I produce that one I did as the most significant.

1445. By the Commission.—Were they official documents belonging to the Government?

Mr. Nicolson.—Well, I left them with Mr. Hare, the whole of them.

1446. The Witness.—Do you refer to documents sent to Mr. Nicolson in his official capacity?

The Commission.—Yes, of course; Government documents, for which the Government paid.

1447. Mr. Nicolson.—Do you consider they belong to the Government?

The Commission.—I do.

1448. Mr. Nicolson.—After this was all over, those documents, especially that about the armour, were very important to me, and I requested Mr. Sadleir to send them down to me for my custody; and these were very important to me.

1449. The Commission.—The originals?

Mr. Nicolson.—Yes.

1450. The Commission.—You obtained those letters through Mr. Sadleir because you thought it would be necessary to have them furnished to you in order to make your statement?

Mr. Nicolson.—Yes.

1451. The Commission.—Have you returned those papers to Mr. Sadleir?

Mr. Nicolson.—No.

1452. The Commission.—You obtained those documents from Mr. Sadleir—official documents—to assist you to make the statement to the Commission?

Mr. Nicolson.—No, to preserve them for the Commission.

1453. The Commission.—Did you ask Mr. Sadleir to supply you with special letters and documents in his possession relating to the Kelly capture?

Mr. Nicolson.—Only these in particular, not the special ones.

1454. The Commission.—Have you, since you made use of them for the purpose you obtained them for, returned them to Mr. Sadleir?

Mr. Nicolson.—No.

1455. The Commission.—You obtained them to make your statement?

Mr. Nicolson.—No, for their preservation.

1456. The Commission.—All the documents relating to the Kelly capture should have been retained by the officers as official documents.

Mr. Nicolson.—All the documents were retained there.

1457. The Commission.—They would be retained by the officer in charge?

Mr. Nicolson.—Yes; I left them with him.

Mr. Nicolson.—Entirely as a private person, because I was deeply interested in them.

1463. By the Commission (to the witness).—You now say you have read all those letters; did you see one dated 12th July 1880?

The Witness.—I don’t know.

1464. Here is a letter to Mr. Nicolson on 12th July 1880, in this; how could you have seen that?—I hope I will have an opportunity of seeing them.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday next, at Eleven o’clock.

F. A. HARE further examined.

1465. By the Commission.—I think you complained that Mr. Nicolson had withdrawn all the agents in that part of the district?—Yes; the Beechworth district. This is from the Benalla Railway Telegraph Station to Senior-Constable Armstrong:—“Benalla Railway Station, June 2/1880. Send Constable Armstrong back to his station. Withdraw the watch party, and send them to duty. Any further orders from Superintendents Hare of Sadleir. Detective Ward already instructed that no further authority for money or supplies for Tommy of his friends.—(Sd.) C. H. Nicolson, A.C.P.”

1466. Have you seen this before?—I only saw it yesterday.

Mr. Nicolson asked to give an explanation at this point.

Mr. Hare protested against such a course.

The Chairman stated he thought it would do for Mr. Nicolson to give his desired explanation later on.

1467. The Witness.—I wish to point out that I never saw this telegram till yesterday. I made a statement that Detective Ward came down to me and then said that Senior-constable Mullane had received instructions to pay off all the agents, and that Ward said he thought it was an extraordinary thing that Mr. Nicolson had communicated with Mullane on the subject, while he had the full charge of all those things.

1468. By the Commission.—Having seen the telegram, does it contain the inconvenient instructions that you gave it credit for?—Not to the extent that Detective Ward led me to believe.

1469. There is nothing in it that was damaging to you as officer in command of the force at the time?—I think when this telegram was sent after things were handed over to me, and no record of it left in the office, it was an unusual course, and of course I believed what Ward told me, that he had received those instructions from Mullane.

1470. Having seen that now, is there anything in the instructions calculated to damage your position there at the time?—Here is the thing most extraordinary for Mr. Nicolson to give instructions to withdraw the watch party that was watching that certain place.

1471. What was the watch party—where was it?—I do not know; I got no information from Mr. Nicolson, as I have already stated. You see he tells Ward to withdraw the watch party at six in the evening, whereas he handed over everything to me at one o’clock.

1472. Will you now resume your narrative?—Yes. For the first two or three days of my stay at Benalla I occupied my time reading up the papers in the office, and obtaining all the information I could possibly get on the subject of the Kellys. I had a long conversation with Mr. Sadleir the first afternoon, who assisted me in every possible way, and gave me all the information in his power. I conversed with the different non-commissioned officers and constables I came across, and obtained their views on the duty upon I was engaged. Most of Mr. Nicolson’s communications with his agents were by word of mouth and not in writing, and the information I obtained from documents in the office was very scant and of not much service to me. I now go to the letters on the “diseased stock.” Amongst the letters in the office handed over to me by Mr. Nicolson were a number of letters written by the “diseased stock” man; I cannot say for certain the number, but, as far as my recollection goes, I should fancy there were at least ten or twelve. There is one letter here I never saw. It is addressed to Mr. Nicolson after the Glenrowan affair, that is July 13th; and the other three, dated February, March, and May, I may have seen—I have no recollection of having seen them, because I went through numbers of letters and papers within those three days.

1473. What is the date of the one you did not see?—July 13th; a letter addressed to Mr. Nicolson in answer to a communication of his. There were a large number of other letters from different agents. There were some from Joe Byrne to ——, and Ned Kelly to ——, and from the outlaws to Detective Ward.

1475. Did you see them?—Yes. I saw them and read them all. I then started round the district to see the non-commissioned officers in charge of the principal stations, and I had long talks with them on the state of affairs, and informed them that I intended stationing back trackers, whom I expected from Queensland, at Benalla, Wangaratta, and Beechworth. I also told them at each of those towns that I would have a full party of men stationed, so that if any information was received about the Kellys they would be in a position to go in pursuit at once, and all I wished them to do was to communicate by telegram with me previous to their starting off, so that I might know in which direction they had gone.

1476. That was simply to communicate the information to you, not to wait for a reply?—Of course they would wait for an answer. Undoubtedly I would allow nobody to go out, or rather, if there was a telegram I would expect them to let me know, and while their horses were being saddled I could give them the necessary information. There is always an officer in Benalla, and the telegraph office is within 100 yards of the police station. For instance, there was a party at Yarrawonga and there was no telegraph station, and those men got permission to go whenever they got information. After a few days I returned to Benalla and started off two or three parties of men, who had been taken on specially in the police force in consequence of their knowledge of the country and the outlaws.

1477. Are they in the service now?—Yes, I will mention them in a minute. I directed them to obtain private horses and to go into the country they knew best, and knock amongst their friends and relatives in order to see if they could get any information concerning the outlaws; they might go where they liked and remain out as long as they thought fit. There was a man of the name of McHenry, a constable, who had been taken on especially for his knowledge of a certain part of the King River country, that is to say by Dodongadale. He had relations in that district, and I thought I would endeavor to work the district as Aaron Sherritt had worked his district when he was the agent for the Kellys. I gave this man his discharge so that he could show it to anybody that doubted he had left the service, and he went away into this country to find out what information he could get, and communicated under an assumed name to me through the post office anything that he heard. I received several communications from him, perhaps three of four. I also sent a man of the name of Constable Canny and Constable Falkner into the country that Canny was thoroughly acquainted with. They went to a squatter’s station, borrowed horses from him, left their own at the squatter’s place, and they went about the country that was known to Canny seeking for information, and from time to time they communicated with me also. About three days before Sherritt was shot, they returned to Benalla with some important information they had picked up from a Chinaman. I wanted further information on the subject, and sent Falkner back, and during the time that he was away Sherritt was murdered and the Glenrowan affair came off. He subsequently told me that he obtained full information of what I required. If you wish it I can tell you what it was. It was that a Chinaman (not aware that those men were police) they got into conversation with, and the subject of the outlaws was brought forward. The constable said, “Oh, the outlaws are out of the country, they are gone away to California.” The Chinaman said, “No fear; Kelly up at Buckland; get supplies from Chinamen.” He said, “They come down frequently from the mountains with pack horses and take their supplies. But do you not tell policemen about it. If you do, Chinaman’s store get burnt, my garden destroyed and everything, you are not to say a word about it.” These men were not quite certain as to whether it was the Buckland or some other locality he referred to, and I sent Falkner back again. I received information also that the Kellys were dependent in a great measure upon the blood relations. I should say not the Kellys, but the outlaws; I mean, when I say Kellys, the gang altogether—on their blood relations for their provisions. I sent a party of the police into Aaron Sherritt’s house; that was the first party that was put there. I sent a party of police from Wangaratta to watch Mrs. Hart’s house. They live within a mile and half of Wangaratta. And I placed four men at the Glenrowan police station to watch Kelly’s house. The orders given to the three parties were that they should never leave the houses—that is to say, Sherritt’s house and Glenrowan police station—during the day, and of a night on leaving, if they were to go away singly and meet at some appointed place, and they were not to go until an hour or so after dark, that they were to endeavor to keep at such a distance from those houses, so that they should not be observed; and on returning in the morning to the different places, they were to return singly, and at intervals between each of them, before daybreak. The four men, as you know, were in the house of Aaron Sherritt up to the time that he was shot. The Wangaratta party kept watching up to the very morning that we met the outlaws at Glenrowan. They, on returning, heard the shooting, which was nine miles away—the shooting at Glenrowan. The Glenrowan party removed the Saturday previous to the Glenrowan affair, in consequence of Constable Bracken coming in to me and telling me that the weather was so desperately cold and wet that, unless the men were taken off duty, the four of them would have to go to hospital. You see the very places that I had those watch parties were the two very places the outlaws came to. Unfortunately the police at Sherritt’s behaved as they did; and if the other party had not been removed the previous day, the outlaws would have found four more men there too.
1478. Is it not possible the Kellys came in consequence of the police not being there?—No, they were not aware, for what took place at Sherritt’s house, that the police were in the house; but when they heard people moving in the house, they asked Mrs. Sherritt, “Who are those people; is that Jack or Willie?”—I think those are the names of Sherritt’s two brothers—and she said, “No, it is a party of police in there.”

1479. You have just made use of the expression that I drew your attention to. You said, “If the police had not behaved as they did at Sherritt’s.” Captain Standish referred to that portion of the evidence?—My opinion is different to Captain Standish’s. My view is that those men ought to have either died or shot the Kellys—one or the other. By the way, I will describe the house to you when I came to it, how the house was situated.

1480. Do I understand you to say, when you say they ought to die, that, in your opinion, as police officers when they came in the face of, or near approach to, the outlaws, they should have made them amenable to justice, or failed in the attempt by death or otherwise?—May I withdraw this part of my evidence so as to bring it out fully in another place, as I intended. This is the reason that I think made the Kellys break out on that occasion; it was the cause I had always thought in my own mind, my stopping their supplies by having the parties at Skillion’s, Hart’s, and Byrne’s; and Aaron used to say, and it was a well-known fact by everybody at Glenrowan that the Sunday the Kellys were there, that Ned Kelly mentioned my name in particular over and over again. Why he should have had a down on me I do not know; he spoke of it when he first arrived. He said, “Inspector Hare,” and sometimes, “That — Hare.” He spoke the whole day about it; he spoke to Bracken about it; and when Mr. Curnow stopped the engine-driver, and he said only a few words, he said Kelly was going “to get the inspector.” In many instances he mentioned Mr. O’Connor with his black trackers; but in particular—those were his words—he would get “that inspector.” From the date of my arrival at Benalla up to Sunday 27th June, I heard nothing positive concerning the movements of the outlaws, although their agents and sympathizers were particularly active. I was privately informed that the outlaws were about to commence some outrages that would not only astonish Australia, but the whole world. I may here state that I had interviews with Aaron Sherritt about, I think, four or five days after my arrival at Benalla. I met him in Beechworth with Detective Ward, about a mile or two out in the bush; we never met in the town. I said to him—“Aaron, I am sorry to hear”—(of course, I shook hands with him first)—“that you have not worked well since I left the district; you have given some dissatisfaction.” His reply was in the presence of Detective Ward—“I could not work for that crankie Scotchman,” alluding to Mr. Nicolson. I told him he had promised before I left that he would work for him, and do what he could for him. He said—“He used to lose his temper with me sometimes, and distrusted me in everything; and I told him I did not care about working for him.” I said—“Well, what about the outlaws, where are they?” He said—“They are about still,” and he promised me that he would set to work with all his might, and endeavor to let me capture them. He said all along—“I wish you to capture them, Mr. Hare, and I am only sorry that you ever left the district.” Mind you, as to all this statement, the man is dead, but Detective Ward was present, and can corroborate every word I say or otherwise. He said—“Beyond doubt you shall have them before long, because they have been knocking about this part of the district for some time, and my mother and my sisters had seen them.” I asked his advice about the four men watching in his place. I said—“Do you think it is known that they are there?” He said—“No, I do not. I do not know any better place where they could be; nobody comes to my house, except my wife’s mother, and they are not likely to inform the outlaws of anything that I am doing.” I told him I was sorry that he had got married during my absence; that was because of his relations, father and mother, were much opposed to his marrying a Roman Catholic, as they were Protestants. I had a long conversation with him, and that is the substance of what he said, and what I said to him. He left, and returned to Beechworth. I was at Beechworth exactly a week before Aaron Sherritt was shot—the Saturday. I saw Detective Ward, and I had reason to think that the four men in Sherritt’s house were not performing their duty properly.

1481. Do you know the names of those four men?—No, I have not got hem. I telegraphed for them—[looking at a telegram].—No, I have not got them. The man in charge was Senior-constable Armstrong, and one man was named Duross, and two others I do not remember the names. I said to Ward, “Well, there is something about that party;” and I fancied from his manner he thought the same although he did not say so. I said, “Well, I will stay from here to-night, and at eight o’clock this evening have a horse round here for me, and I will go down to the place myself just to see if they are doing their duty.” We rode down, and before I was starting Ward said to me, “You need not take your gun” (I never travelled without my double-barrelled gun and my revolver): I said, “You can take your revolver if you like.” It is about twelve miles from Beechworth. I got down there a little after nine o’clock. The house was weatherboard, shingle roof, that shape—[drawing the same]. The house is about the size of this room we are in, about the same length, and perhaps not quite so wide, with a partition in the centre of weatherboard and canvas door which formed the bedroom.

1482. Thirty feet long?—About that, thirty feet by twelve, and with a fireplace at one end, and on the opposite end was the bedroom. The house is situated about fifteen or twenty yards from the Eldorado main road from Beechworth. I had never been there before, and Ward said, “That is Aaron’s house.”

1483. Is it fenced in?—No, nothing; no fence whatever, just on a hillock of rocky ground, amongst some low timber, not very large trees. I said to Ward, “Go up and see if there is anybody in the hut;” I remaining in the road myself. Ward was away longer than I thought he ought to be, and I heard some whispering. I made my horse spring forward to see what it was, and said, “What are you whispering about?” and one of the constables, one of the men whose name I do not recollect, came forward to speak to me. I heard Ward say, “There is Hare down there” in a peculiar voice, as much as to say something was wrong. As I say, I went up at once—I said, “Where is Armstrong?” He said, “He is away, sir.” I said, “Where?” He said, “With Aaron Sherritt.” I said, “Where are they?” He said, “They are watching down at Mrs. Byrne’s;” and I said, “What are you two men doing here?” One of them answered me that Aaron thought it was too light to go when he went, but I said, “Why did Armstrong leave you behind, and go by himself?” I saw at once that there was something wrong by the man’s manner and I said to him (his name I do not recollect), “Can you take me down to where these men are?” “Oh, yes,” he said, “certainly.” I jumped off my horse, and told Ward to remain at the hut with the horses, and I would go down with these men to where Aaron was. I took two with me; I left the other two behind, Duross and the other. One of the men said to me, “You cannot go down there now I come to think of it; and I said, “Why?” He said, “Because you will have to go up to your middle in sludge and water across the creek.” I said, “Lead the way, let me go the way you take up your positions every night.” I went through the creek, and got up to my waist. This man was a long time taking me to the spot; lost his way once or twice on the way. I do not know whether he did it for a purpose or not, I thought at the time he did; and at last we came to within fifty yards of Mrs. Byrne’s house. I said, “There is the house,” because I had watched there before. He said, “Yes;” and I said, “Now where shall we find Armstrong and Aaron Sherritt?” He said, “I do not know where Armstrong is, but Aaron Sherritt lies under that tree generally,” that was within thirty of forty yards of Byrne’s door. I crept down towards Sherritt, and I found him lying motionless. I called out, “Tommy.” I might here explain that I never called him Aaron when I was out, and in sending all the telegrams we invariably used the name “Tommy.” We called him sometimes “Aaron,” and sometimes “Moses,” so that the telegraph people might not know whom we alluded to. I touched him on the foot, and beckoned him to come with me; and we went up in the bush away about 10 yards. Just at this time I saw Armstrong as I was walking up; he came towards me. I said to him, “Armstrong, what is the meaning of this?” He said, “The man that spoke to you at the hut told you a lie, sir. I was collecting some wood when you were at the hut, and directly I heard you had gone down to the party I followed, and I reached the place before you did.” I called the man up, and I said, “What do you mean by telling me such a lie?” He had not a word to say for himself. I gave him a great rating at the time, and told him he ought to be ashamed of himself; and then I had a long talk with Aaron Sherritt. I said, “What sort of men have you got with you here?” He said, “The man in charge is an excellent man, Armstrong; you could not get a better man in the world.” Armstrong was there, and I said, “Well, Armstrong, what about this duty; do you think it is any good remaining here?” He said, “Yes, I do that we are sure to get them if they are in the mountains; they must come to their mother’s place to get provisions.” I said, “Suppose you saw them come into the house, what would you do; what is your plan of operations?” He said, “I would shoot them dead if I was certain they were the outlaws, if Aaron told me they were the outlaws.” I said, “That will do.” I said, “You give that man a good blowing up.”

1484. About what day was this?—Exactly the Saturday before the outlaws were at Aaron Sherritt’s house.

1485. Was the outlawry act then in operation?—Undoubtedly. Perhaps the Board are not aware how it became inoperative as soon as Parliament dissolved. The Governor gave the dissolution on the Saturday, and on the Monday morning the outlaws were shot; it was in operation up to that Saturday morning, and directly the House dissolved that Act expired.

1486. It was the following day the affray took place?—On the following Monday.

1487. You consulted Aaron Sherritt as to the qualifications of the men—did he express any opinion as to the others?—He implied as much, he did not think much of the other three, they were all equal in rank. I thought Armstrong was a good man, and I did not think much of the other two, deceiving me in the way they had done. This was the night I referred to in my former evidence. I spoke to Aaron Sherritt and subsequently to his wife about lying out in the cold without his coat. He was lying under a tree, and would lie there until four or five the next morning. The ice was on the water that morning, but still he was lying there from eight in the evening till that time. I made him (Aaron) walk back towards his house, which was about a mile or a mile and half from Mrs. Byrne’s, in an opposite direction from where you have heard so much about of the other Sherritt’s house. It was towards the Murray way, the other was towards the Beechworth way, where he lived previously—near his mother’s house. He walked back with me, and I had a long conversation about affairs, and he seemed very confident about the result if we only stuck to it, and I told him what we were doing about the other houses—Hart’s and Skillion’s. He seemed very confident of success, so much so that when he brought me up to the river in going to his house, I made him walk through the river because the river was full of holes, and he took me across. I said to him then, “You had better, Aaron, come up and get a cup of tea at your wife’s.” I told her to have some hot tea for me when I returned. I asked him to go to the house with me. He said to me, “No, Mr. Hare, this is Saturday night, and I must go back at once to the men.” I thought to myself, here is a man who has been working for the last eighteen months—is this put on or is it reality—so I sat on the bank of the creek to see whether he did return afterwards, and remained, I suppose, about a quarter of an hour just to test him, and I could hear his steps going further and further up in the direction of the ranges, and I left confident that his whole heart and soul were in the work. I went back and found Detective Ward there, and I had a cup of tea myself. As I said before, this was on the previous Saturday, the very time that Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly were at Aaron Sherritt’s house. I do not think it is known whether the four outlaws were at the murder of Sherritt. The police reported it so, but it is generally believed that Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly were the only two, because Ned Kelly and Steve Hart were at Glenrowan at three o’clock that morning. They might, of course, after they had left Aaron Sherritt’s house be at Glenrowan, galloping all the way, if they left, say at ten or eleven o’clock; the distance is, I should think, about 25 miles between Glenrowan and Aaron Sherritt’s house. I complained to Ward about the behaviour of Duross and the other constable, and he told me that immediately after I had left with the men that took me down, Armstrong appeared, and he told him to tell the truth at once, and what he was doing. Well, I took no further notice of the matter; I gave them a good blowing up, and I thought that was sufficient. When men are on that sort of duty you cannot be as severe as in the office in town here, because you have not men to replace them, you must make news of the material you have.

1488. Armstrong was not with them in the first place with Sherritt?—No, Sherritt was watching alone. As regards of shooting of this men, I have heard the evidence of Captain Standish, but I think there was a great blame attachable to those four men, and I do not think there ever was an enquiry into the matter beyond the coroner’s inquest. I was wounded the next day. I am only speaking of what I have heard and seen since. Another thing those men did. The information never reached Beechworth at twelve o’clock on the 5th April 1881.

1489. That is certain?—Is it. They got into the bedroom, a part of the building that is divided by a bit of canvas, and they remained there without doing anything.

5th April 1881.

1490. Do you know if it is true that they secreted themselves under the bed?—I do not know at all what they did; I know merely from the report they gave they were in the chamber that was used as a bedroom.

1491. Did you ever hear such a thing?—I am not certain that I did; in all probability the bed was a most rustic one, and it was probably what they would do.

1492. Is it true they were not with sufficient arms?—No.

1493. What arms had they?—Double-barrelled guns each of them, and revolvers; we allowed the men to select their own arms. They were well provided with arms in my opinion, and I fancied at one time that they could have knocked out the bark at the back of the house, but I found out afterwards, as I have stated above, that the house was weatherboard, not bark. The door was running right through like that—[indicating the same]—here is the fireplace, here is the bedroom.

1494. There would have been no difficulty in forcing their way out of the hut under those circumstances?—I should think not, under the desperate circumstances.

1495. Do you know whether the police fired at all?—I am not aware that they did; I do not think that they did.

1496. Is your own opinion of what you have read, or your memory, that Byrne did know the police were there or not?—I believe they did not know the police were there from the questions they put to Mrs. Sherritt; when they heard the noise of the guns or rattle inside they said, “Is that Jack or Willie?” If it had been them, I suppose they would have shot them also.

1497. They would not approach the hut if they knew the police were there?—No, I am sure they would not. And those four outlaws would no more have thought of approaching the hut than flying. On the 24th June I received a communication from Captain Standish that Mr. O’Connor and the black trackers were to be sent back to Queensland.

1498. Before you go from that, in your previous paragraph where you say they were particularly active, and you were “privately informed that the outlaws were about to commence some outrages which would not only astonish Australia, but the whole world”—you have not given any information as to what the nature of that information was?—The very words I have said, “The outlaws are going to do something that will not only astonish Australia, but the whole world.” The information came from Mrs. Byrne.

1499. You have no particulars of the nature of their intended outrage?—Nothing whatever, not the smallest conception of what it was to be. The next morning Mr. O’Connor started away from Benalla with his “boys.” I had but one Queensland black of our own at Benalla, that is Moses. Mr. O’Connor had sworn him into his detachment when he was here, and on leaving he gave him back to the Victorian Government, and there was another at Mansfield of the name of Spider. I telegraphed for the one at Mansfield to be sent down to Benalla at once, so that I might have two trackers in case anything happened before Mr. Chomley, who had gone to Queensland for a fresh supply of trackers for our force, returned, as I did not expect him back for the eight or ten days.

1500. You telegraphed, so that you might have the two trackers at Benalla?—Yes, at my headquarters, in case anything occurred between the departure of Mr. O’Connor and the arrival of Mr.
Chomley. On Sunday the 27th of June I was at the telegraph office at Benalla. At ten o’clock a.m. I received telegrams from all the stations in the district that everything was quiet. I made an appointment with the telegraph master to be at the office again at nine o’clock that night. About half past two that day I received the memo. from the railway telegraph office to go to the general telegraph office, as there was important information for me there, and a memo. had been sent to the same effect to the telegraph master. I lost no time in going there, and received a message from Beechworth, that Aaron Sherritt, in whose house I had the watch party, had been shot the previous evening at six o’clock. I immediately sent for Mr. Sadleir, and we consulted together as to the best course to adopt. First of all we decided to give Captain Standish all the information in our possession, and ask him to request Mr. O’Connor to return without loss of time to Benalla with his “boys,” as we considered they might have a good chance of tracking the outlaws from Sherritt’s house.

1501. What time was that?—That was about half-past two o’clock on Sunday; that was the first notice I got and we decided at once that was the first thing we would do. Mr. Sadleir suggested that Mr. O’Connor should be sent for, and I agreed to it at once; he made the suggestion. About six or eight o’clock that evening I received a telegram from Captain Standish, informing me that he had written out to Mr. O’Connor asking him if he would return to the district with his men, and saying that if he agreed to it he would send him up by the first train on Monday morning. I replied,—“If Mr. O’Connor does not come up tonight, it is no use his coming at all; and I will take my two blacks with my party, and start off to-night.” In answer to that I got a telegram from Captain Standish saying that Mr. O’Connor had agreed to return, and that he would leave town about ten o’clock. I then telegraphed back that I had made arrangements for an engine to be got ready for me at Benalla, and asking whether I might take that as a pilot engine. This Mr. Sadleir also says he suggested to me, but I do not recollect whether he did or not. If he says he has a recollection of it—he claims to have recommended that I should send for the black trackers, get the pilot, and that he also offered to go with the party to Beechworth—if he did, I do not contradict it. Captain Standish’s reply was,—“A good idea, there is no knowing what desperate deed the outlaws may now be guilty of—have a pilot.” Those were his words. The whole afternoon, Mr. Sadleir and I were engaged in the telegraph office warning all the stations to be on the alert. At places where they were no telegraph offices we sent private messengers to convey the information of the outrage at Beechworth, and to be on the alert also. I went myself to the railway station, which was about a mile or a mile and a quarter from the telegraph office, where we had been engaged the whole afternoon, and made arrangement with the station-master there about the engines, and how they were to be relieved at Wangaratta and the different places. I think there is a different style of engine used between Wangaratta and Beechworth to that between Benalla and Wangaratta. The station-master rendered me every assistance in his power, and compiled with every request that I made. I arranged to have the trucks all ready for our horses, so that we would go up by the train that brought Mr. O’Connor and his men to Beechworth. I then returned to the telegraph office, where Mr. Sadleir had remained during my absence, and made arrangements for horses, provisions, and everything we would require, to go to Beechworth, as that was the nearest point that the railway went to Aaron Sherritt’s house. My idea was that we would get to Beechworth about daybreak in the morning, get on our horses at once, and go down to the Woolshed where Aaron Sherritt’s house was situated, and endeavour to pick up what information we could there. I selected Senior-constable Kelly, and Constables Arthur, Barry, Gascoigne, Canny, Kirkham, and Phillips to accompany me, leaving a party behind us, already equipped, with two black trackers, for Mr. Sadleir, at Benalla, in case anything occurred whilst we were up at Beechworth. Having completed all my arrangements, I went and lay down to get two or three hours’ sleep before I started. At one o’clock in the morning, I was at the railway station, had the horses put in the trucks, and waited the arrival of the special, which, I think, arrived at half-past one or two o’clock. Before the truck arrived, Mr. Rawlings, a gentleman whom I had only once seen in my life before, asked me to allow him to travel in the train, as he had a free pass on the railways, and he would not be defrauding the Government. I told him I had no objections to his doing so. The train arrived shortly after this, with Mr. O’Connor, at Benalla, with his five “boys,” and I think there were four gentlemen of the press, and Mr. Rawlings and two ladies in the train also. One of the engineers at Benalla came to me before we started and told me that they wished me to put a man on the pilot engine, one of my men, to keep a look-out to see if there was anything wrong with the line. I selected Constable Barry. I did not put him, as is generally supposed, on the buffers in the front of the engine, but I put him alongside of the boiler, standing up, so that he could see at least ten or fifteen yards in advance of the engine-driver and stoker, and I fastened straps so that he could hold on with them; I did not fasten his body. After this, there was some alteration as to the engine that was to act as pilot, and the next engineer declined to let the man go upon it. He said it was very dangerous position to put a man in, and in case of anything occurring the man would be killed, and I withdrew him. The engine that brought up Mr. O’Connor’s train went as pilot, as they had broken their brake, and they attached a brake-van on to the engine. With reference to this pilot, I may state to you a bit of information that occurred not this time, but I have it in my recollection of the previous time of my being up there, and it will come in as the reason I took the pilot. About the time that the sympathizers were being remanded from week to week, we received a letter from some of the agents stating, with other information, that the outlaws intended to blow up the train with dynamite about a certain period. Just at this period alluded to, something went wrong with the telegraph wires; at a certain hour every night in Benalla the wires refused to act, they could not work them—there was no communication between Benalla and Beechworth. The Government were informed of it, and Mr. Woods, who was the Commissioner of Railways at that time, took steps to protect the line in certain dangerous places, and he had men watching them for some time—I think for three months they watched the horse-shoe bend coming down a very steep incline from Beechworth. They sent up best telegraph men, who were enquiring into the stoppage and could not find the reason of it. Generally, it was supposed every night, a piece of wire was thrown over the main wire, and a ground connection made, and they could not work the wire. Men were sent every day to examine the line and nothing could be discovered, and they sent up some of the leading telegraph men in Melbourne to try and discover what was the cause of the stoppage, but to this day it has never been explained. On Friday evening, during this week I have alluded to, we were all going up to Beechworth, the police constables, the witnesses, and the reporters from Melbourne—a number reporters were going up to Beechworth of that Friday evening, during the week the stoppage was going on, and when we heard about the dynamite. Just as we were leaving Benalla, a message was sent to me that the wires had stopped working, and that there was no communication with Beechworth—that the same stoppage that had occurred all the week occurred on that night just as we were leaving Benalla. We had the train crowded, and we consulted together what was best to be done; we were in a great fix, and we decided we would go, at all events as far as Wangaratta, to see if the line was open between Benalla and Wangaratta, or between Wangaratta and Beechworth. There was no intermediate station between Beechworth and Wangaratta, and when I got to Wangaratta, the man said, “We cannot communicate with Beechworth, but we can with Benalla.” Then Mr. Sadleir and I consulted again as to what was to be done, and we said we would go as far as Tarrawinee: we had an operator from town with us in the carriage. We got to Tarrawinee; there was no telegraph master there, and there was no communication from the wires to the station. We were very much perplexed to know what to do, to give the alarm to the passengers—it might be a false alarm—and I went up to the station-master and I said, “Will you stop the train for me for a short time?” He said, “No, I have no power to do it.” I said, “I am superintendent of police; you must, I tell you to do it.” He said, “I cannot.” I then rushed forward to the train to the engine-driver, and I said to him, “I am superintendent of police, and I want you to stop the train till I tell you to go on—there is something wrong with the line, I fear.” Everybody by this time had begun to call out in the train, especially the reporters, “What are you keeping us here for all night?” It worried me considerably, and then I consulted with the telegraph officer, who came with us from town, and he said to me, “If I can get to the wire up above there, I can tell whether the current is going through, by putting the wires between my teeth;” and we hoisted him up the best we could, at a point away from the station. This all took time, and all the people were yelling at us in every direction. When he got the wire between his teeth, he said the current was through between Tarrawinee and Beechworth. We decided to go on and to chance it; and we did chance it, and fortunately it came out all right, and the line was never stopped after that night. We subsequently got some information that the outlaws did not know how to work the dynamite; whether it was true or not I do not know; I merely give the information we received. That was the reason we decided to take precautions on this occasion, knowing they might tamper with the line. This has not been known till this moment, because we did not want to alarm the passengers on the line, they were alarmed enough. My party already mentioned joined the train at Benalla, and just as I was starting I asked the station-master to give me the key of the carriage, fearing something might occur on the line, and he did so. The pilot engine started, I think, about five minutes before our train. We went along pretty rapid—the ordinary pace, and when within about two miles of Glenrowan station, I was sitting in the carriage with the two ladies and Mr. O’Connor, and I heard the engine whistle. I thought it was a strange thing the engine should whistle here. I put my head out of the carriage and saw the three red lights at the tail of the pilot engine. I at once took my double-barrelled gun down from the rack, put a couple of cartridges in it, put my bag of cartridges round my neck, opened the door, and jumped out of the train.

I walked towards the pilot, and when I got within half-way between the pilot and out engine I met a man carrying a lamp—the guard of the pilot engine. He told me he had been stopped by a man holding up a red handkerchief with a match at the back of it. He said he was the schoolmaster at Glenrowan, and that the Kellys had taken up the line. He did not make me quite understand which side of Glenrowan was taken up. The schoolmaster had said to him that the outlaws had taken possession of the town, and that “they were going to catch the inspector”—these were the words he used that the guard told me. I took three men with me from the party I had. I do not remember who they were, but I left Senior-constable Kelly behind. I spread them out above the bank, one on each side, and I walked on the other side of the line. I told them to keep a look-out—that anything might happen at any moment. I walked towards the pilot, and I spoke to a man there, and he told me the same story—that was one of the drivers. I said to him, after consideration, “I think the best plan will be for you to go quietly along to Glenrowan, and we will follow close up to you in the train.” I have stated here in my printed report that it was the engine-driver, but he called upon me subsequently and told me it was the stoker or fireman that spoke to me—that the fireman knew me and he did not. I wish to make the correction at his own request. He said he had been branded as a coward. The man I was speaking to hesitated.
a little, and I said, “All right, I will jump on the engine with my three men, and we will go along quietly.” Then from something he said (I do not remember what it was) we decided to shunt back to the train and hitch the pilot onto it. When I got back to the train, I spoke to everybody there—the reporters, Senior-constable Kelly, and everybody. I said, “Kelly, you get with the other three men on to the other engine and I will get on this one. Put the men amongst the coals of the tender, and you yourself stand as I do, at the door of the engine.” I mentioned then, and I never remember it till it was related here by Mr. O’Connor, about the horses, whether we could get them out anywhere there, and it was decided we could not; so we went up to the platform in the manner I have described. When we got to the platform the engine-driver thought he saw some one about on the platform, so I waited for about half a minute before I gave orders to the men to jump off the engines. Just at this moment, I think, Mr. Rawlings came up to me; I said, “Look, there is a light down there at the station-master’s house.” (I do not exactly know the distance of all these places, because, I may tell you, I have never been at the place since, and had never looked at the ground before, though I had often passed the place, so I give the evidence just as the impression was left upon me at the time.) I said, “There is a light there, and we will go and see if he can give any information about what is going on here.” Mr. Rawlings walked down there with me. When we got there we did not go to the door, but to the window where we saw the light. I tapped at the window, and I could see a woman inside with some children. I said, “Where is your husband?” She would not answer, but went on weeping and crying “Oh! Oh!” I said, “My good woman, do be calm for a minute; tell me where is your husband;” and she said, “They have taken him away.” I said, “Who has taken him away?” and then there was a pause again for about eight or ten seconds. She then replied, “They have taken him away.” I then asked, “Who do you mean by ‘they’?” and she said, “The Kellys.” I said, “In what direction they have taken him?” and she led me to infer that they had taken him to the mountains. I am certain she did not say a word about Jones’s hotel.

1502. You say in the mountains, meaning the Warby Ranges?—Yes.

1503. Where are the Warby Ranges from that position?—The house of Mrs. Jones is between the station-master’s house and the Warby Ranges, and in pointing in that direction it would be in the direction of Jones’s hotel; but I feel confident she said, “Taken him to the bush.” She certainly did not say Jones’s hotel, as far as my recollection serves me. As I was walking to the station-master’s house, Mr. Rawlings then offered me his services, and on my return he said to me, “I am not armed; can any of your men lend me a rifle?” I said, “I do not think so, but I will give you my revolver, and I will stick to the double-barrelled gun.” He asked me to give him the gun, but I said, “No, I will stick to the gun myself.” He took the revolver, and I began to explain how it is worked, and he said, “If it is a Webley revolver, I know how it is worked.” We returned to the railway station, and I said, “I am going to order the horses out at once.” I wish particular notice to be taken of this, because numbers, some have given different versions of this. I am giving the version impressed on my mind that the horses were never taken out till I returned there, because I had no information to take them out till then. Before I took them out I had the information that the Kellys had been there five minutes previously. I was standing on the platform in amongst all the reporters, police and every one; and as we were all together, and a number of the horses had been taken out (say five or six of them— they were not in horse-boxes, but trucks), Constable Bracken at this time appeared. Where he came from, or how he came upon the platform, I do not know, but he said, “Mr. Hare, go quickly to Jones hotel, the outlaws are there, and I have just escaped from them; they have a number of people in the hotel.” I called up the men; I said, “Come on, men, here we have got them at last; we have got them in Jones’s hotel.” There was some delay; the delay seemed to me a long one, but I suppose it could not have been for more than four or five seconds before I again called out, “Oh, come along, we have got them in the house, and if we do not be quick they will escape from us.” Some one called out, “What are we to do with the horses, sir?” I said, “Let go the horses, and come along as quickly as you can.” With that every horse dashed out of the carriage—the remainder of the horses that had not been taken out—there was a few had been taken out. They scampered away as hard as they could in between the fences. I knew they could not escape. I then, when I saw four or five, a group of men (I cannot tell the number) standing near me, I started off towards Jones’s hotel, followed by the group of men that were there. I remember going through a little iron gate that checked me for the time, and I made straight for the left-hand side of Jones’s house. I had to turn up, I remember, to the right.

1504. How many men had you with you?—I could not possibly say. There was a group around me, there may have been four of five, there was one Queensland man among them. I ran towards the extreme left of Jones’s hotel, and whilst running up I saw a flash, and by that flash a man. He was just at the edge of the verandah, out of it.

1505. The flash of a gun?—Yes, and the report also followed, I should say, and my hand dropped beside me. I had no more pain then than if I had hit my hand like that—[illustrated his meaning]. My hand dropped just like that immediately the shot was fired on the left by a man, Ned Kelly, I heard afterwards; three flashes came simultaneously, first the one which hit me, and then three almost within half a second of the first. The second my hand dropped beside me. I fired with my gun in this position—[the witness illustrated his meaning)—with my right hand. As I told you before, I had been accustomed to fire a double-barrelled gun almost ever since I was born—even since I could walk—being born at the Cape of Good Hope. I remember distinctly firing those two shots, and, immediately after I fired, I put the gun between my legs. It is a breach-loader, with the action between the hammers, and in touching this action the barrels drop forward, and then I took the two cartridges, pulled out the old ones, and put the new ones in. I have the most distinct and positive recollection of that. The firing on my right was taken up by my men, or the men that followed me up, and it was continued for, I should think, five minutes. During this time, at intervals, I fired my gun off at the outlaws. I never moved from that one spot. I kept firing at intervals. The effect that the shot had on me was just as if I had looked at the sun. Immediately I was struck my eyesight was affected, my eyes became dim. I kept firing from time to time. The two shots, I recollect most distinctly, were the two I fired immediately my hand dropped beside me, and I know I fired several after, how many I would not like to swear. I think six.

1506. Where did the bullet enter? — [The witness showed his wrist.] — I was hit when running up, and carrying my gun in this position ready to fire, with the hammer on full cock, and my finger in this way. I generally carry my arm further advanced than most people do, and the bullet entered there—[describing the same by gesture]. In the middle of the second or third round—perhaps three or four—I heard, when we replied to the shots from the verandah, the shrieks of women and children inside—of persons inside. I cannot say women and children, perhaps the better word will be persons inside. As long as the firing continued on the verandah, I continued firing at those who were firing at us. I had but one thought, to keep firing as long as those men kept firing at us. In the middle of the firing a man called out, “Fire away, you — ; you can do us no harm.” That man was standing about, I should fancy, five or six yards from the other three. It was the man that fired at me, for, after firing at me, he retreated backwards into the verandah. One of the police (I afterwards found that his name was Gascoigne, who was in my party), called out, “That is Ned Kelly’s voice.” Suddenly the firing ceased, and I imagined that I saw the people going into the house. I am not quite certain of that; I imagine that; that is a fact not impressed on my mind.

1507. That is the firing into the verandah? — Yes. The firing ceased, and I imagined the persons had gone inside the house. I called out to Senior-constable Kelly, “Kelly, surround the house, and for God’s sake take care those fellows do not escape.” I told my men previously that I had been shot in the wrist, and I said, “Kelly, be careful that those fellows do not escape; I am going to have my arm tied up.” I left the ground then where I had stood. I declare positively I never moved from the spot until the firing had ceased. I returned to the railway station, and on my way there I saw Mr. O’Connor coming up, running from the direction of the station towards Jones’s hotel. He was in a crouching position with his head down, in that way—[describing the same]—and as I passed him I called out, “O’Connor, the beggars have shot me in the arm.” I do not remember that he made any reply to me. I got on to the platform, and I found the reporters there collected together. I said, “Will some of you gentlemen bind up my hand? I have been shot in the wrist.” I was bleeding most profusely. I felt it from the very first, from the moment I received the shot, that the blood was spurting from me as if out of a spout. One gentleman, I think it was Mr. Carrington—I had never seen any one of them before in my life—got a handkerchief and bound up my arm, assisted by some other gentleman. I felt no faintness whatever then; I felt as well as I do at the present moment; and I remember distinctly being as collected as I am at this present moment when I went on to that platform. I knew Mr. Melvin of the Argus; he came up and patted me on the back, like that—[illustrating the same]—whilst my arm was being bandaged, and he said, “Well done, Hare, you have managed this affair as you have everything else you have undertaken.” I had once before seen him, and that was on the occasion of the Lancefield robbery. The other three gentlemen of the press I had never seen before in my life. I state this in the consequence of a remark that was made when the next morning the papers came out in my favor. I never saw one of the reporters after I left the platform, to my recollection. I may have seen them when I was in bed, but I do not recollect ever seeing them. After my hand was bandaged, I started off with the intention of going round the sentries, and as I was passing a certain spot in front of the hotel, somewhere near where I had seen Mr. O’Connor running up, Senior-constable Kelly called out of me, “Mr. Hare, we are short of ammunition; please have some served out to us.” Mr. Rawlings, overhearing this, said to me, “I will take it round to them, if you like.” I said, “Yes, do if you please, you will find it in the guard’s van.”

1508. Was that on your return? — Yes. I then proceeded to do as I intended to have done, that was to post the men, commencing from where I had left the ground before, and when I had got into the open space of ground I left as if I was getting very weak, and I began to stagger. I might tell you here there is something wrong with my heart, the doctors told me at home, and I felt my heart throbbing tremendously. I determined then to go and sit quiet for a little while and keep my heart quiet, because I had been rushing about a good deal, backwards and forwards. I went up to a fence. I do not know where the fence is, but I know it has a top rail and several wires; that was to the near of the railway station. I tried to get through this wire fence. I had my gun in my right hand, and I got half my body through, and then I found my hand hanging listlessly beside me, and when I lifted it up it dropped down and I could not get it through the wire fence. I drew back again, and I sat down then for I think about ten minutes behind a tree, and I had full command of the house at this time.

1509. In view? — Yes, in view under my rifle, so that if anything turned up I could have fired. I am giving this from my recollection, I have not been there since. Whilst I was lying there my hand was hanging listlessly beside me. I saw a stream of blood running down. It struck me that this could not last very long, that the blood was flowing so freely, and I thought I had better return to the platform. I had a great difficulty in getting to the platform, and just as I got under the verandah of the station I called out to somebody, some of the people on the station, “Catch me, please;” and with that I dropped down on the top of a lot of bags or sacks; I remember dropping on something. I remained there; I do not know how long. Whether I fainted or not I do not know, but at all events the next thing I remember was sitting in a railway carriage with the ladies that were there.

1510. They had never left the carriage?—They had never left the carriage. I received some refreshments from those ladies, and I understood I was going to Benalla with them. The refreshments I received put new life into me as it were, and I jumped out of the carriage and I went to the guard of the train, the engine was in front of the carriages, and I said, "How long will it take you to run me down to Benalla and back again?" I forgot the answer, I think it was twenty minutes or half an hour, or something of that kind. I said, "All right, take me down as quickly as you can." I had great difficulty in getting into Benalla. I turned deadly cold and the engine-driver and stoker opened the furnace. The blood was still running all over the engine, right down from my arm all this time.

1511. Were you on the engine?—Yes, on the engine, in front of the furnace. I should say previous to my going I had started the engine to Benalla, but I cannot tell when—it is out of my recollection altogether—and told the guard to go and give all the news to Mr. Sadleir, and to request him to bring all the men he had at Benalla with him to Glenrowan, but I cannot say when this was; it is a blank in my mind when I did this, whether it was when I was returning on the second occasion, or whether it was upon the first occasion. I got to Benalla, and I gave instructions to the telegraph master to telegraph to Beechworth, and also to Violet Town and Wangaratta, to have all the available men to send down to Glenrowan without loss of time. I then called, I think, Mr. Lewis, the inspector of schools. He was on the Benalla platform. I said to him, "I feel very weak; I do not think I will be shot by the Kellys; would you kindly give me your arm to go to Dr. Nicholson, and from thence to the telegraph office?" He assisted me. I called at Dr. Nicholson’s house. I woke him up. This was, I should fancy, between three and four in the morning. I told him I had been shot through the arm by the Kellys; that I was anxious to go to the telegraph office, and beg him to follow me there, and come and dress my arm. When I got to the telegraph office I was terribly excited, and it was some two or three minutes before I could collect my senses. I dictated a telegram to the telegraph master to Captain Standish, telling what had occurred. Immediately after this they begged of me—I was sitting on a high stool, without any back—Mr. Saxe, the telegraph master, begged of me to lie down on the ground on the mattrass, where they intended to have slept, alongside the instrument. I took his advice, and stretched myself out on the mattrass. Just as I lay down Mr. Sadleir came into the office. I said to him. "Sadleir, I am shot in the arm, but I do not think it is anything of any consequence. I will return with you to the ground, to Glenrowan." He said, "Do not be such a fool and fancy, between three and four in the morning. I told him I had been shot through the arm by the Kellys; that I was anxious to go to the telegraph office, and beg him to follow me there, and come and dress my arm. When I got to the telegraph office I was terribly excited, and it was some two or three minutes before I could collect my senses. I dictated a telegram to the telegraph master to Captain Standish, telling what had occurred. Immediately after this they begged of me—I was sitting on a high stool, without any back—Mr. Saxe, the telegraph master, begged of me to lie down on the ground on the mattrass, where they intended to have slept, alongside the instrument. "Sadleir, I am shot in the arm, but I do not think it is anything of any consequence. I will return with you to the ground, to Glenrowan." He said, "Do not be such a fool and

The Witness.—The impression on me was that he said I had not fired a shot. Mr. O’Connor states in his evidence that he called out to the men to cease firing as there were men and women inside the house. I do not deny that Mr. O’Connor did so for a moment—I am sure if he says it, he is convinced he did do it; but I say I called out before he did, that his narrative commences at the time I saw him running up the drain. Not for a moment do I wish to say that Mr. O’Connor was not amongst the men that ran up with me. I do not say he was not; all I say is I did not see him, and that the other persons whom I have spoken to, who were with me on that occasion, that I knew were present, stated distinctly that they did not see Mr. O’Connor. I say most positively that I called out to cease firing, where I have stated in my evidence to-day. Here is a paragraph in the Age, dated Tuesday, 29th June 1880:—"Mr. Hare could be plainly seen by the light of the moon. He walked boldly towards the hotel, and when within 25 yards on the verandah the tall figure of a man came round the corner and fired. The shot took effect on Mr. Hare’s wrist, but Kelly found in him a foeman who would not shrink from him. Senior-constable Kelly and Rawlings were close to, and the former promptly returned the fire, which was taken up by Hare, although wounded, and Mr. Rawlings followed his example."

1512. Mr. O’Connor.—Who wrote that?

The Witness.—The reporter’s name was McWhirter, a gentleman I have never seen before, and not till six months after the occurrence. I will read another paragraph:—“When about 60 shots had been sent into the walls of the building the clear voice of Hare was distinguished above the screams of the terrified women and children, who were in the hotel, giving the order to stop firing. This was now repeated by Senior-constable Kelly, to the men who under cover were surrounding the house at the back, but the Kellys fired three or four more shots, after which one of them gave vent to coarse and brutal language, calling to the police,” so and so. There is another paragraph I wish to read:—“Seeing the wound, the ladies implored Mr. Hare not to return to the fight, but he did so; his re-appearance in the trenches was the signal for renewed firing, and the valley soon became filled with smoke. Mr. Hare then became faint from loss of blood, and was compelled to leave the field.” I say that these paragraphs, from a gentleman I have never seen in my life before, or not till six months after, when he stopped me in the street one day, and gave me the narrative of the proceedings, are significant. I said to him:—“I don’t know whether I have done Mr. O’Connor an injustice by omitting his name; can you assist me in the matter; did you see him go up to the front with me?” His reply was, “I did not see him; I saw him lying in the drain, and I was near him at the time you were firing at the men.” I think I have stated most positively that I did not leave the ground till I saw the outlaws in the house, and Senior-constable Kelly setting to work to surround the house.

1513. Till you saw the outlaws retreat into the house?—Till I saw the outlaws retreat into the house; then I called out “Cease firing.” I have told my intention was to have gone round the house to see the sentries after my arm was bandaged up. I remember going towards a tree on the left-hand side of the house, and seeing two men behind the tree, and that is as far as I went. I did not speak to anybody, for in my report—which was written while I was very ill—I see I stated here “I visited.” By that I mean I saw two or three of the men behind trees.

1514. Did you speak to them?—I did not. I do not think I spoke to anybody when I went back the second time, until I returned to the station, or on the way to the station. I heard it stated afterwards that some one on the platform saw me approaching, and said, “There comes Hare, as drunk as possible.” I was staggering up to the station. I heard that stated—I do not know who it was that said it—I was supposed to have been at the hotel drinking.

1515. Had you had nothing at this time?—I had not. I had not drunk a drop of liquor or any sort or kind that night. There is one remark I wish to make, with reference to an incident that I gave you this morning, about the man Aaron Sherritt. When the police were watching Mrs. Byrne’s house, I received information that they had in training a grey mare, in Mrs. Byrne’s stable, under lock and key. This is an unusual thing in a small place of that sort, to keep a horse fed on oats and hay, and every afternoon exercised by one of the Byrnes. I have stated that, because about three days after I had visited Aaron Sherritt, in the interview I mentioned when I went out to the house that Saturday, I heard that at two o’clock in the morning, the horse that had been kept in training, and was supposed to be kept for Joe Byrne, in case a raid was committed, had been removed, at two o’clock one morning, out of the stable, whilst my men were watching.

1516. From whom?—I cannot tell you; it was officially reported to me. I got a copy of the letter yesterday, and I have it here, and my memo. goes thus. Before reading that, I will read the report to which mine was a reply, namely, the following:—

(Copy.)

Report from Constable Armstrong to Paddy Byrne.

North-Eastern District,
Beechworth Police Station, June 23rd, 1880.

I beg to report that at 11.15 p.m., on the 21st inst., Paddy Byrne left his house, riding his grey mare, and keeping off the road, high up the range, going in the direction of Madden’s Gap, which is situated in the Beechworth side of Mrs. Byrne’s house.

The other constables and I, who were watching the house, did not consider it advisable to follow him, as he was riding at a half-trotting pace, and the night was so light we could be seen for several hundred yards off; besides, being confident that it was Paddy, we thought it better to let him pass on than run the risk of being found out. We remained watching the house until 3.30 a.m., at which time he had not returned home. I may further add that the dog kept barking for the greater part of the night, so we were obliged to take our position almost at the foot of the range, far away from the house.

On my return to camp, I came into Beechworth to report the matter, prior to which I requested Moses to keep a sharp look-out, and obtain all the information he could in the meantime.

F. Hare, Esq., Benalla.

Beechworth, 23rd June 1880.

I beg to report, for the information of the Superintendent, with reference to Constable Armstrong’s report, according to instructions, I proceeded to the Woolshed on yesterday afternoon. Moses (that is Aaron Sherritt) was absent on my arrival there. He returned at about 5.30 p.m.; he said he was watching to see if Paddy Byrne returned, but he could not see either Paddy or the horse; he also said he could find no tracks where they saw him riding. In my opinion Paddy must return between the hours of 3.30 a.m. and 12 o’clock noon, when Moses left to search for tracks. From the direction in which Paddy was seen riding, and from previous reports from Mrs. Sherritt, as to horsemen being heard passing by her place at night or early in the morning, Paddy must be spying about Sherritt’s house, for what purpose I cannot say. I will go down to Mrs. Sherritt’s to-day, and ascertain if they heard any noise during the night of Monday, or the morning of Tuesday.

HENRY ARMSTRONG
Const. 2475.
MEMO:

Nothing is said in this report whether “Tommy” was on watch with the men. If he was I can’t understand why he could not have followed Paddy to see the direction he had taken, or the gap in the mountain he had passed through.

I am aware our men might have been seen if they had attempted to do this, but I am sure “Tommy” could have done so without the slightest fear of being detected. In future, should anything of this kind occur, I would suggest that the following plan be adopted. That when any one takes the horse out of the stable at an unusual hour, he should be followed a short distance to see the direction he is going, and, when he has turned up any of the gaps, that the spot be marked and the man return to the watch party. At daylight “Tommy” (that is, Aaron Sherritt) should be made follow the tracks for a certain distance, to see the direction the horse is heading for, and by that means he will be able to tell whether it would be advisable to get the trackers to follow them; the man in charge of the watch party should accompany “Tommy,” and not throw the whole responsibility on him, and whilst “Tommy” is tracking he could look out and see if any person is moving about. One of the watch party should be sent on the hill to keep a look-out to see if the horsemans returns, so that the direction he came from would be known.

In a matter of this kind it would be impossible to give definite instructions, for circumstances alter cases, therefore I must leave a great deal to the discretion of the man in charge. What I wish him particularly to remember is not to leave the responsibility of the affair to “Tommy;” he is an irresponsible man, and should be, in a matter of this kind, assisted by the senior man of the party. Shortly I hope to have two trackers stationed at Beechworth, so that there may be no delay in following the tracks.

What I particularly wish to impress on Detective Ward and Senior-constable Mullane is not to take a body of men near Mr. B—’s there should be any tracking to be done; and that is my reason of wishing “Tommy” to run the tracks some distance, say a mile or so, and then, if nothing comes of it, the fact of the men watching would not be discovered.

On the 21st the whole responsibility was thrown upon “Tommy.” He was left to do the whole thing, and Constable Armstrong goes to Beechworth, instead of sending any one of his men and he remain to take the management of affairs.

I trust that on the next occasion, when anything of the kind occurs, a little better management will be shown.

(Fgd.)

FRANCIS HARE,
Superintendent.

Those are the instructions I issued, and that may be taken as showing the tenor of the instructions I usually issued. In my evidence this morning I said, on my return to Benalla on the 2nd of June, I saw all the agents. I wrote to a man known as “Diseased Stock,” and requested him to come to Benalla to see me. He came in about four or five days after I wrote the letter, and I had an interview with him in the office, in the presence of Mr. Sadleir. I had known him previous to my removal from the district, and I said, “Well, so-and-so, how have you been getting on?” He said, “All right.” I said, “Have you got any news?” He said, “There is no doubt that they are going to make a raid very shortly on some bank.” I said, “How do you know?” He said, “I know it for various reasons.” Mr. Sadleir said then, “But have you not been telling us this for the last six or seven months?” He said, “Yes, I have, I thought they would have stuck up a bank long ago.” I said, “I hear they are going to appear in armour?” He said, “Yes, no doubt of it.” I said, “How is it to be used?” His reply was, “They will wear it when they are robbing the bank.” I said, “Is it bullet proof?” He said, “Yes, at ten yards.” I said, “I do not believe that any armour ever made that man could carry would stand a Martini-Henry bullet at ten yards;” and he said, “Well, this is proof.” I asked if he had any reason to believe the direction, or position, or what bank they intended sticking up. He said, “No, he could not say anything on the subject.” I had a lot of other conversation, which I do not remember.

1517. Was he a supposed supporter of the Kellys?—Not in any way.
1518. Not by them?—Not in any way. He was not a supporter; he was, I think, one of the most respectable and reliable men that had ever been engaged in that capacity during the Kelly search. He was a little too sanguine, and after he left the office I said to Mr. Sadleir, “Well, this looks rather black for me, that these men are going to commit some outrage at once.” He said, “Oh, that man has been giving us this information for months;” besides he said, “He is the most sanguine and tantalizing man I ever saw.”
1519. Had Mr. Sadleir faith in him?—Yes, all of us had; no one doubted he was doing his best. Mr. Sadleir said on one occasion, some months ago, he wrote to Mr. Nicolson a letter not giving much information—the old thing that they were about, and he could not get any definite information; and after writing the letter and signing his name, he added a postscript, that since he had written the letter most important information had been received, and to be ready to start at a moment’s notice. He said, “We heard nothing of him for three or four weeks, and we were kept in the highest pitch of excitement, and then it turned out to be all a mistake, or the information not so good as he expected.” I think I have stated I mentioned this man’s name to Mr. Nicolson when he relieved me on the first occasion.
1520. Did you state he had been in your pay?—I do not remember whether I had paid him anything ever; at any rate he was not a paid agent on day wages.
1521. During Mr. Nicolson’s time?—I do not know. I was at his house on three occasions, and have met him.
1522. Was he following any other occupation besides acting as agent?—Yes, he was following his ordinary occupation in life. I state it for the reason to show that I did not put my faith in working by agents alone; but I formed parties, that is to say these watch parties, and also men at Benalla, Wangaratta, and Beechworth. I shifted one of Mr. Nicolson’s agents from one place to another. I believe he intended doing it himself when I relieved him. It was suggested to me by Mr. Sadleir to do so, and it was a very good move, I think. I had no increase of constables in the district when I went there (that is the second time); but in forming those parties I merely shifted the men from less important stations, so that in the event of the Kellys being seen at Beechworth or in that district, the Beechworth men could at once proceed without taking up a special train with a large body of men, and its becoming known all over the country, because I might tell you those outlaws used to use the telegraph in their way as well as we did. I will give you an instance. When the sympathizers were arrested, amongst others there was a man, Tom Lloyd you have heard of over and over again. He asked the gaoler if he could send the telegram away, and one of the warders said yes, and he sent a telegram to the following effect to somebody at Greta:—“Turn the four bullocks out of the paddock.” This was not reported to us for some weeks afterwards, and then it was reported to us. Undoubtedly it meant, turn the four outlaws out of the paddock in which they were in. Therefore, I say they were well able to tell their friends when special trains left with police along the line of railway.

1523. Had you your own, the Bourke men, with you on the second occasion?—No; I had just men that I found at Benalla. I had one man, Canny, and another of the name of Barry, who had been out with me on two trips. I wish to state the Commission that I cannot speak too highly of the assistance rendered to me by Mr. Sadleir, although he was opposed to my relieving Mr. Nicolson; and wrote and begged me not to come up. Still, when I did go up, he afforded me all the information in his power.

1524. Have you got that letter?—It is a private one. He said that it was a fatal mistake in my coming up.

1525. Did he assign any reason, that it would not be fair to Mr. Nicolson, or any reason?—Both, I think. The purport of the letter was that it was a fatal mistake of Captain Standish to relieve Mr. Nicolson, and send me up in his place; and he added that many mistakes had been made, and this was the greatest mistake of the lot in his opinion.

1526. Did he give you any reason for that?—No, he gave no reason beyond saying it was a mistake. He said—“We have gained some information during the past eleven months.” I may state to the Board that on my relieving Mr. Nicolson I was thrown into a position, and the most difficult task imposed upon me, with a far greater amount of responsibility than I can possibly explain to you. The whole affair rested on my shoulders.

1527. The whole of the responsibility of the Kelly capture?—Yes, the whole of the responsibility of the Kelly business; and one false move, I might commit the most fatal mistake, and it might end in everlasting disgrace to me. I think it right to say this, because of certain statements that I was afraid to go there, and different reasons given why I did not go, or objected to go there. My reasons were—I felt that there being other officers senior to me, it was unfair to impose such a responsibility on me when I had not the rank that entitled me to be put into such a position.

1528. What you mean by rank is that there were seniors in the service?—Yes.

1529. Two?—Four.

1530. Not subordinate in position?—No, I was their subordinate; that is to say, there is a certain way in which officers come up the list, which has not yet been explained to the Board. You see how the list stands there—{handing in a paper}.

1531. Superintendents Winch, Chomley, and Chambers are senior to you?—Yes, and Mr. Nicolson, he was senior to me. I need hardly say, for my past career in the police force, that I did not object to going up on this particular duty from any fear, or disinclination for the duty itself—in fact, the duty was of the kind which I much preferred to any other—but, as I pointed out to the then Chief Secretary Ramsay, I had on a previous occasion, namely, the capture of Power, been encouraged to undertake the duty, which would naturally have fallen on those senior to me; but he answered me that not only should I have carte blanche in regard to expenditure and the conduct of affairs generally, but in the event of the capture of the gang, I should receive some substantial recognition of my services, and I then expressed my readiness to proceed at once. Power was captured; and although I was organizer, at least in my opinion, of the party by whom he was captured, and placed by the Government in that position, I personally received no benefit from his capture; on the contrary, the benefit was received by the very officer whom I was now ordered to go up to relieve (Mr.Nicolson), and I was naturally anxious to protect myself against a recurrence of my former experience. I frequently told Captain Standish that I held a rank which entitled me to be selected on all important occasions to be sent on such duty; that I should be only to glad to carry out my orders, but that I felt it was unfair to pick me and never reward me in any way; besides which, I was not sent in the first distance, but when others failed, I was ordered up, as in the case of Power.

1532. Who was superintending officer in charge of that district when Power was captured, was it Mr. Barkly?—Mr. Wilson.

1533. He was captured in the Beechworth district?—I think it was. It was at the head of the King River. The late Mr. Lyttleton was the inspecting superintendent at the time Power was captured; and, besides Mr. Littelton, there was Mr. Furnell, Mr. Disney, and Mr. Wilson. They were all in search of Power when I was ordered up to visit the district. I will now state to the Commission the facts, as it has been mentioned from time to time, about the capture of Power.

1534. Before that I want to ask a question as to a matter which made a considerable sensation at the time: Had you any information as to what arms the bushrangers were using, so that, if you met them, you knew you would be met by men armed in a particular way?—No, I had no idea.

1535. Did you know whether they had Webley revolvers?—I knew that they had taken Webley revolvers from Sergeant Kennedy's party. They had also a Spencer rifle.

1536. Was it the one taken from Scanlan?—They had double-barrelled guns taken from Lonigan, and they had the New South Wales police rifles.

1537. What rifles are those?—I think they were new rifles and breech-loaders.

1538. All those weapons required special ammunition not obtainable in townships such as Benalla and Beechworth?—Certainly.

1539. Is there any truth, within your knowledge, that they bought ammunition during the time they were out—at any particular place?—I heard of no ammunition being bought in the district; but on two occasions, perhaps more, ammunition was bought from Rosier, in Melbourne.

1540. Did you hear of any being bought of anybody but Rosier?—I did not.

1541. Did you hear who got that ammunition?—Yes; it was got by young Tom Lloyd, I think.

1542. Bought in Melbourne?—Yes, bought in Melbourne from Rosier. Information came up they were to return next day to get more.

1543. Who?—Tom Lloyd and Kate Kelly were the party who had gone into Rosier's shop to buy some ammunition.

1544. What ammunition?—I think for Spencer rifles and Webley's revolvers, and I think some ammunition that was wanted for the rifles taken from New South Wales.

1545. Do you believe that that ammunition was taken up there?—Undoubtedly it was. I have not the smallest doubt in the world it was taken to Benalla.

1546. By Mr. O'Connor.—What was your exact position when you received the wound referred to at the house?—As far as I can recollect, that was the house—the railway station is here—[Mr. O'Connor handed a plan to the witness].

1547. By the Commission.—Have you been there since?—Never, and except in going through in the train, was I there previously. I was at the Benalla side of Jones's hotel at, I fancy, about that line [pointing to the plan].

1548. By Mr. O'Connor.—Will you state to the Commission the direction you came back?—I cannot, I am so firmly impressed that I am right with regard to that—that the man fired from my right front, and of course the bullet naturally—he standing on the verandah—would enter there and come out there—[pointing to his wrist].

1549. Can you remember the direction you came back—started back to the station?—I fancy so; I am under that impression, but I will not be certain about it, that I returned the same way as I went. I will not swear to it. I did not get over a fence.

1550. Would you state to the Commission where the reporters were at the commencement?—Do you mean when I left the train?

1551. Yes?—On the platform of the station.

1552. Are you not aware they were in the carriage of the train in the windows barricaded with cushions?—I feel confident they were on the platform when I left.

1553. If any person in the train were on the platform, could he have seen me in the drain where you saw me coming back?—No, I do not think anybody could. The position, I may mention, there was a depression in the ground, and Mr. O'Connor was running with his head down and with his rifle in the direction I was coming from.

1554. Where was this, nearer the station or the platform?—As far as my memory serves me, about midway between the two.

1555. Not near where you were wounded?—Not within twenty or thirty yards. As I passed you, I called out, "The beggars have shot me in the arm," and you continued running.

1556. In your opinion, that was a considerable time after you were wounded?—I fancy the men were firing five minutes, and I might have remained two minutes after speaking to Kelly from the time we started.

1557. By the Commission.—Did the police receive the information on the first occasion when this young fellow purchased ammunition?—Yes, the detectives did in Melbourne, and we received it up the country.
1558. Was there any action taken then?—Yes, we searched. I was out on the search party, but Mr. Sadleir went himself to the railway station on that night, and there were two or three very strong sympathizers in the train, and he searched some of them in first-class carriages, one particular person and all her goods, and she was most indignant at it. She was a well known sympathizer of the Kellys; and they searched every other carriage along the line, and no other trace was found.

1559. She is a person in business up there?—She was at that time.

1560. That was the first occasion on which this ammunition was obtained?—As far as my knowledge goes.

1561. Did the police give any information to the party who sold the ammunition as to how he was to act if those parties again visited him for the same purpose?—I cannot tell you; I was up the country at the time, and the information was given to the detective at the time.

1562. Did they buy on more than one occasion at Rosier’s?—I remember particularly, and I have an idea that there was information of a second occasion, I may say Rosier, from whom they bought the ammunition, gave information at once, as he had received instructions from the police to give information at once.

1563. Without that ammunition those weapons were valueless?—Yes.

1564. It struck me, if they did make second visit, they might have been kept confined?—Even then we could not do anything. Tom Lloyd could go and buy ammunition as well as we could. The detectives were informed half-an-hour after it occurred, but they were outwitted in some way, and found nothing.

1565. You are aware that a large quantity of New South Wales notes were taken from Jerilderie bank at Jerilderie?—Yes.

1566. When you were on duty, from December to July, had you any information on notes being passed in large quantities that were in your opinion the stolen notes?—Yes, I am quite positive a bundle of notes to the amount, I think, £30 or £40 was paid into the Wangaratta bank.

1567. Which bank?—I am not quite certain about that.

1668. Would you know it was the Bank of New South Wales?—I think it was. We got information of it—the police did—and we telegraphed over to Sydney to ascertain whether the numbers of those that were paid into the New South Wales Bank had been sent from Sydney to Jerilderie. The reply was “Yes.” We then telegraphed to Jerilderie asking them whether they could say if notes of certain numbers had been paid out of the bank at Jerilderie, or were they portion of the stolen property. The reply was, “We cannot identify them. We cannot say whether we paid them over the counter or whether they were stolen.” About a fortnight after this, I happened to go to try to get some information of the very man who paid them in. I said, “Where did you get those notes?” and he said, “Between ourselves. They accuse me of getting them from you.” I said, “What do you mean?” He said, “They think I am giving you information, and that you give me notes, and the general opinion about the district is that you gave them to you.” It knocked me over, and I said, “You know yourself I did not give them to you,” and he said, “You know.” The man had them, and he would give no other information.

1569. Did you get information, from Mr. Sadleir, that on a certain day, of notes bearing those consecutive numbers, and that those offered in Wangaratta were the very notes bearing consecutive numbers—do you remember hearing that?—I do not remember. Yes, I think I did, that they were all consecutive notes. I am somewhat mixed up in my recollection of that, I was out so much, but all those things were told me.

1570. Are you aware whether any action was taken for convincing those persons for having such notes in their possession?—No, because we could not prove that they did not pay them over the counter.

1571. Would you say the bank was desirous to go on with it, or that the police dropped it?—I most certainly think that the bank did not care about going on with it; but I think Mr. Sadleir will know more about that.

1572. As a matter of fact, do you know that—paid in Bank of New South Wales notes, similar to those of Jerilderie?—Yes.

1573. Do you know that provisions were bought to any extent, when you were on duty at Benalla, such as the Kellys would be likely to require?—Yes, from time to time, by Kate Kelly, tobacco and such things.

1574. They would be things such as would suit the outlaws?—Yes, in large quantities; and when a load of things was taken out from Benalla, we used to send a party of men, at night, to watch Mrs. Skillion’s house; and, whilst watching, they were invariably discovered by Mrs. Skillion, with the dogs. She used to take a circuit round, extending about a quarter of a mile, working round to see if there were any police secreted near the house; and many and many a night have the police been found by her. That was a frequent occurrence.

1575. Have you been to Kelly’s house?—Yes.

1576. Have you any information how many people were resident in the house?—I do not know—principally Tom Lloyd.

1577. Lloyd had a house of his own?—Not young Tom. Old Lloyd had. Young Lloyd is, I believe, living now with the Skillions.

1578. There was Mrs. Skillion, Kate Kelly, and another sister—Grace Kelly?—I have not seen Grace Kelly.

1579. And some children?—I have not seen children.
1580. Any men?—I have not seen any men of the Kelly breed.

1581. In your opinion, have you any doubt in your mind that the quantity of provisions taken from Benalla was for any other purpose than for the outlaws?—I think they got a great deal of their supplies from Benalla for the outlaws. There was one morning, this woman Skillion happened to know that the constables were watching her house, and they were not aware of it. In the morning, about daybreak, she got upon a horse, and rode up a steep gully at a walking pace. It was a great ascent, at the back of the house, and those men on foot followed, thinking they had a splendid clue. She had a bundle in front of her. When they got to the top, there was Mrs. Skillion, sitting on a log, with her fingers to her nose, making fun of them. On another occasion, something of this sort came out. They followed her, and when they got there, she was behind a rock, with one leg sticking up, and she drinking water. The great difficulty, we had to contend with, throughout the whole thing, was planting our men by day. It was all very well, we would put them on the hills by night, but of a day-time, what were we to do with the men? People were scouring the whole country, and they would look for tracks; and I really think a policeman makes a different track from any other man, for they were always found, and the men could not return to Benalla without that, it was too far. On a second occasion, I put men to watch Mrs. Skillion’s, by putting them into the police station which Mr. Nicolson had formed in the interval between then and my return.

1582. You stated at the closing scene of the tragedy you heard the cries of persons in the house?—Yes, while the men were shooting at us.

1583. Did you give orders at that time to cease firing?—Certainly not; as long as the men fired at us on the verandah we dared not move from our position; we had to return the firing, but directly the firing ceased. I called out “Stop firing.”

1584. Did you hear Mr. O’Connor call out?—No; I do not say he did not; I do not pretend to say Mr. O’Connor was not there; all I say is, I did not see him there. Of the party of men that were there I have seen four out of the seven; they also say they did not see Mr. O’Connor there, in that advanced party. Now, in reference to Power’s case, unfortunately for me there are no documents I can find in Captain Standish’s office to bear out my statement, because most of my communication of this nature, that is to say of an important nature. Captain Standish used to send up to me to come to his office and he would give me verbal instructions.

1585. Up to what time?—That was all along, up to the present time—it was so with the Kellys also. I had a good deal to do with the search for Power, previous to my being sent up there. I sent a great many of my Bourke men in search of him.

1586. You were then in charge of the Bourke district?—Yes, at the time. I was sending out parties, and I was constantly communicating with them, and after Power had been out about eighteen months, Captain Standish sent for me one day. He told me that Sir James McCulloch had decided that I was to be sent up to take charge of the Power business. I told him that there were officers senior to me in that district, two of them—they have gone now—one left the force, and the other dead; and he told me it was no use protesting against it, his orders were to send me up. He said, “I will give you carte blanche to do as you please and to take whom you please, and to spend what money you wish.” After I had left his office and received those instructions I met Mr. Nicolson. He was then superintendent of police in charge of the Kyneton district.

1587. Is that called still the Kyneton district?—No; it is the Bourke district now. Mr. Nicolson asked me if I would take him with me. He said Captain Standish told him that the Government had ordered me up there. I said, “Certainly, Mr. Nicolson, I shall only be too glad to avail myself of your services, but do not you think we will have to undergo some very great hardships in this matter, and that your health is not strong enough to carry you through them?” He said, “I will go and see Dr. Ford, and ask him whether he will let me go up.” I said, “Very well.” That afternoon he informed me that Dr. Ford had said he might go under certain conditions. At this time Sergeant Montford was a clerk in my office. I had sent him to Wangaratta some week or the days previously, to make some enquiry on the Power business, and I sent a cipher telegram to him to meet us (Mr. Nicolson and myself) at a certain spot on the following Sunday. The instructions, I think, were given me about Monday or Tuesday; I think Tuesday. I picked out five of the best men I had in my district, who had not been previously sent to the Benalla district, as it was termed then. I told two of them to go to Wangaratta and three to Benalla, and remain there until they heard from us.

1588. Who is “us”?—Mr. Nicolson and myself. On Friday, that was the 28th of May 1870—Mr. Nicolson and myself and I started away from Benalla. It was before the railway was opened. I drove Mr. Nicolson up in my buggy, and we got to the appointed spot on Saturday night.

1589. Did you relieve any officer?—Nobody. At the spot where we met Mr. Montford the following day, Sunday, we obtained a blackfellow from Benalla—there were some black stationed there then—and we consulted and made our plans. On the morning of the Sunday following we captured Power. The capture was this way: We were looking for a hollow tree with a bed in it, and we came across it about seven o’clock in the morning. There was a narrow track from this tree up to a hill on which we were told that Power would be found. Mr. Nicolson stated the previous evening, “Mind you, I am senior officer of the party, I must run up and take the lead.” We had some discussion about it, and I said, “All right.” I do not mean to say I questioned as to his leadership, I said, “All right.” We got to this tree, and there was a narrow track leading up to hill, the blackfellow was standing by the tree. He said, “Smoke up along that hill there.” I did not see it, and I do not think the other two saw it, but we all started off immediately, and rushed up this narrow track in the mountain, Mr. Nicolson first, I second, and Mr. Montford behind me. I suppose we did not cover a space of more than six feet altogether, we were so close. When we approached we saw the fire and a kind of gunyah among the trees. Just as Mr. Nicolson got within ten yards of the hut he beckoned with his hand to me to go round the back. I thought that he meant so that Power might not escape from the back, and I fixed my eyes upon the feet of the person I saw in the gunyah. We all rushed up together, and simultaneously laid hold of this man. I put my hand on his leg, and he bawled out at the top off his voice; he was asleep at the time. We handcuffed him, and took him into Wangaratta that day. I think a distance of fifty miles, and on our arrival at Wangaratta we sent a telegram to town announcing the capture of Power, Mr. Nicolson signing the telegram. That is all I wish to say in reference to that. I merely now state that I considered myself organizer of the party. I reckoned that, in case of failure or mishap, the Government would have held me responsible and no one else.

1590. Did you on that occasion believe that you superseded any officer?—I had orders from Captain Standish to do what I liked in the district. I pointed out to him that officers senior to me were there, and he wrote up to those officers to tell them the position which I held there;—this was the first conversation.

1591. Because the documents are all here?—I had never seen them from that date.

1592. Here is a letter from Captain Standish to Superintendent Nicolas; the purport of that is that he informs Mr. Nicolas that Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare would take charge. That he (Mr. Nicolas) remonstrates against the course taken, and writes as follows to Captain Standish:—“Having been superseded in the charge of this district by the officers named in margin (Superintendents Nicolson and Hare) in consequence of the alleged prevalence of bushranging (vide memo, 25th ult., attached), I have the honor most respectfully to point out that I do not consider any blame can be attributed to me as officer in charge of the district.” The date of that is 2nd June 1870; and Captain Standish’s letter is attached virtually superseding him. Attached to that again is a document giving all the account in detail which you have given commencing in this way:—“From the Police Department, Wangaratta, 6th June 1870. Sir—We have the honor to report that in accordance with your instructions we proceeded to Benalla and arrived there on Sunday, the 29th of May,” and so on, through several pages of foolscap, giving full particulars, and signed at the end C.H. Nicolson, Supt., and Francis Hare, Supt. Now in giving your evidence, you made use of a remarkable word, you said “we” did this and that, so that it would appear by the document which I have now referred to that you yourself when you wrote that considered you were equally acting with Mr. Nicolson!—Undoubtedly.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o’clock.

WEDNESDAY, 6TH APRIL 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. LONGMORE, M.L.A., in the Chair;
G. R. Fincham, Esq., M.L.A., G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A.,
E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P.

F. A. HARE further examined.

1593. By the Commission.—Will you proceed with your narrative?—Mr. Nicolson, in his evidence stated, in regard to Power, that he reaped no benefit from the capture of Power. As I stated before, he was at the time in charge of the Kyneton district, and, immediately after the capture, was transferred to Melbourne, and he received an extra hundred a year as officer in charge of the detectives. At the time we went together in the Power case I was a second-class superintendent. 1594. What was Mr. Nicolson?—At that time he was a first-class superintendent. He was receiving £375 a year, and I £350. When I have reached the top of the second-class superintendents, and was about to be promoted to the first class, the whole of the classes were amalgamated. But I was next for promotion, and a vacancy had occurred at the time. Mr.Nicolson’s pay, as inspecting superintendent, was £350 a year, and, subsequently, he was Acting Chief Commissioner, for which, I believe, he received £150 a year extra, according to the Estimates.

Mr. Nicolson.—The amount is down in the last Estimates, but I have never received it. I have never asked for it.
The Witness.—When Mr. Nicolson gave up the city police, his successor, Mr. Winch, did not receive that £100 a year as officer in charge of the detectives, but a separate officer was put to perform the duty of officer in charge. I have looked over the Police Gazette, and I find Mr. Nicolson’s position in the Gazette of 1869 that he was alone superintendent and officer in charge of detectives. In 1870 his name appears under that of Mr. Winch’s; in 1871 there is no list of officers published, that I can find; and in 1872 Mr. Nicolson’s name appears above that of Mr. Winch. That is all I have to say on that subject. Mr. O’Connor, in his statement, has claimed the credit of capturing, or being instrumental of the capture of the Lancefield bank robbers. He made his statement, and I just wish to make mine, as it occurred in my (Bourke) district, and was away from the Kelly country altogether. I will state exactly what occurred. On the 8th of August 1879, I was walking down Collins street, Melbourne, when Mr. Gilles stopped me and said, “Did you hear that the Lancefield bank has been stuck up buy the Kellys?” I said, no, I had not; and I immediately jumped into a cab and went up to Captain Standish’s office, and found he was at the telegraph office in Melbourne. I drove down there as rapidly as possible, and met Captain Standish, who decided that Mr. O’Connor and his “boys” should be telegraphed for at once to proceed to Lancefield by special train, the train taking them as far as Kilmore. This was exactly one o’clock in the day. I took a special train myself at two o’clock, and went up to the Lancefield Road station, got my buggy and horses out of the train, and drove off to Lancefield, with some men, as quickly as I could. I arrived there between four and five o’clock in the afternoon; I had to go sixteen miles by road. Immediately I got there I made all kinds of enquiries, and found that, beyond a doubt, it was not the Kellys that stuck up the bank. I took the necessary steps under the circumstances. Waiting patiently for Mr. O’Connor, I ordered food for his “boys” to be prepared, and at nine o’clock at night I sent a telegram to Kilmore, asking at what hour Mr. O’Connor left Kilmore. The reply was, “He has not left yet, and will not start before morning, staying the night at Kilmore.” The next morning, about eight o’clock, one of the men whom I had sent out returned to Lancefield with the information that the offenders had called at a hotel between Lancefield and Pyalong, had got provisions there, and had a large parcel with them, beyond a doubt the money that had been stolen from the bank. About an hour afterwards Mr. O’Connor arrived at Lancefield, and I told him the information I had received, and asked him why he had not come over the previous evening. I do not remember what his reply was, but I said, “I have got information where those men were late last night; you had better proceed at once with the man who brought me in the information.” He lost no time in going; he started off immediately, without dismounting. After a consultation in the office of ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, he started off at a rapid pace in the direction indicated. Mr. O’Connor picked up the tracks of those men from this roadside inn, and continued them till he got to Pyalong. At Pyalong, just as he approached the township, a terrific storm of rain came on, and obliterated all the tracks, and he remained that night in Pyalong with his men. The next day he proceeded towards Heathcote, but got no tracks whatever. That very day (that would be two days after the bank robbery) a constable at Kangaroo Flat, near Sandhurst—I think his name is Sainsbury—obtained information that two men answering the description of the robbers had come from the direction of Wild Duck Creek, which is a place near Heathcote. They had got out of a cart when they neared Sandhurst; the cart was sent back, and those men walked in to Sandhurst. The information was given that night to the police in Sandhurst (that would be on the Sunday). The police made enquiries; found that on Saturday men answering the description of the robbers had purchased a large quantity of supplies, clothing, &c., and the whole of the police set to work to find out where these men were. One man was seen with a bag walking across the square in Sandhurst, and the other was taken up in Eaglehawk, asleep in bed, drunk, with the notes all lying about the bed. Those are the true facts of the case.

Mr. O’Connor.—The Commission can get the full facts from Sub-Inspector Baber, who can give evidence on this matter. Mr. Hare’s evidence is only hearsay. We were told the men had gone to Melbourne, and if we had not stuck to the tracks the men might have escaped.

The Witness.—Mr. O’Connor has stated that, through jealousy, the Victorian authorities did not want him to capture the Kellys. I merely mention this to point out that on the two tangible occasions when Captain Standish and I had information, or thought we had, of where the Kellys were likely to be, we at once sent for Mr. O’Connor, namely at Lancefield and in the Kelly case at Glenrowan.

1595. You did it under the impression in both instances that they were the Kellys?—Yes.

1596. And therefore the effect was the same?—The effect was the same. We had only one object in view—to capture the Kellys. We threw away no chance. When I relieved Mr. Nicolson, on the 2nd of June 1880, he gave me no information whatever concerning the Kelly armour, and it was only in conversation with different people—Mr. Sadleir especially—that I picked up that, and found that it was supposed that when the Kellys next appeared it would be in armour.

1597. Were all the men acquainted with that?—No; not one, except Sergeant Steele, at Wangaratta; he is the only one I have heard of that knew anything at all about the armour. Mr. Nicolson first got the information about the armour on that 26th of March 1880; that is as far as I am aware.

1598. You went up in June 1880?—Yes. On one occasion, about a month before I was ordered to Benalla, a constable named Phillips came to me at the Richmond depot. He was a horse-clipper, and came to the depôt for the purpose of clipping the horses there. He is one of the men alluded to by Mr. Nicolson as never having fired a gun in his life. I said to him, “Well, Phillips, you have not caught the Kellys yet,” just in conversation, whilst I was looking at him clipping the horses. He looked up and said, “No; the Kellys have never been into the Benalla police station yet.” I said, “What do you mean?” He said, “Well, I have been up there about twelve or thirteen months, and I have never yet been two miles out of Benalla; there has not been a party out searching for the Kellys since you left.” I will not relate to you the circumstances in connection with Jack Sherritt and William Sherritt being taken into the police force. I naturally wished to do something for the Sherritt family, after all that Aaron had done for us, and I thought unless we showed some consideration for the families of those who had assisted us, that on any future occasion we would have the greatest difficulty in getting men to work for us. I had never seen Jack or Willie Sherritt in my life (when my narrative commences), and after I was convalescent about a month after I was shot, I was in my own house in the depôt, when Mr. Ramsay, then the Chief Secretary, came to see me. He said to me, “We have the two young Sherritts on our hands.” I said, “What are you going to do with them?” He said, “We intend giving them a selection of land and allowing them to settle on it.” I said to him, “Those men have no money, and it will be a great difficulty regarding them; would it not be better to let them join the force, if they behaved themselves. They can remain in the force, and if they do behave themselves they will make excellent constables.” I knew nothing about them myself, except what Aaron Sherritt used to tell me. He said that they were not like him; that they had never committed any offence, and I was to be careful not to be seen by them, as they did not wish to mix themselves up with the Kelly business at all, because he looked upon them just the same as the public, that they could not assist me or the outlaws in any way. Mr. Ramsay said, “I think it is a very good idea; will you speak to Captain Standish on the subject?” This was on Saturday night. I think on Monday I saw Captain Standish, and he told me Mr. Ramsay had been speaking to him about the Sherritts, and he (Captain Standish) thought it was a very good idea, taking them on in the force. He then wrote, and told these men to report themselves at the depôt. They were then living at Oakleigh.

1599. Where they then in the employment of the police?—No, they were paid by the Government, receiving 6s. a day. I do not know who sent them to Melbourne, or how they ever came to Melbourne. They came to the depôt and they remained there, I think, about ten days before they were sworn in. During those ten days Captain Standish communicated with different people as to whether they knew anything about these two young men. I instituted enquiries, by Captain Standish’s discretion, and the worst thing I found against Jack Sherritt was that a constable, whilst he was watching in the cave alluded to by Mr. Nicolson, had seen Sherritt killing a sheep; that would be between daylight and sunrise in the morning. I said to the man that saw him killing the sheep, “Did you examine that sheep?” He said, “No.” I said, “Whose sheep was it?” He said, “I do not know, but the squatter who lives on the run said he suspected the Sherritts of stealing his sheep,” and he naturally concluded this was one of them. I reported to Captain Standish about Willie Sherritt.

We never heard a word against him; he had never mixed himself up with the Kelly business, as far as I know. Upon that Captain Standish swore them in as constables. Those two men remained at the depôt I think about six weeks, and during the period no two men I have never seen—and I have been fifteen years at the depôt—worked so hard, or showed such an inclination to become good constables. The two sergeants over them, mounted and foot, gave them most excellent characters, and there was not anything during the time they were at the depôt that could be said against them. There was once Jack Sherritt went into Melbourne when he went and applied to the detective office for a warrant against a person; his statement was not clear, and I referred it to the head of the department, Mr. Nicolson, recommending that no further steps should be taken in the matter, as I fancied that Jack Sherritt had not given the full facts of the case; and he approved of my suggestion and said nothing more was to be done in the matter. Shortly after thus I called at Mr. Nicolson’s office and said to him, “I am going to take Jack Sherritt into my district; there is a vacancy now under a very excellent constable, who will teach him his duty, and if he misbehaves himself he will be reported immediately.” Mr. Nicolson said to me, “It is no use your taking any steps in the matter; to tell you the truth I have recommended their discharge from the service.” I said, “All right, Mr. Nicolson,” and I left his office.

1600. Did he say upon what grounds?—He did not. Subsequently I was taken ill again, and Mr. Nicolson came up to the depôt and told those men that they were discharged from the service forthwith. About three of four days after their discharge the Inspector-General of Police in New South Wales called upon me, and stated that Mr. Nicolson had requested him to take those two young men into his force. He said he declined to do so, as he did not care having our leavings. Subsequently Willie Sherritt went to Queensland, and I am informed took letters of recommendation from Mr. Nicolson to the authorities there, but they would not take him into the force there either. That is all on the subject.

1601. There was no cause given for their discharge?—No; I believe the Government gave them a gratuity, because they have purchased their uniform. I think about £50; I do not know exactly the amount, but about that sum, I will now just give a short record of the special services I have rendered the country since I joined the service. Mr. Nicolson was called upon to produce a return to the effect, and I think I may be allowed to do the same.

Mr. Nicolson.—That has not been done in my case; at the same time, I do not object to what Mr. Hare is about to do.

The Witness.—Here is a letter I received addressed to the Acting Commissioner of Police, dated 18th July 1855, the year after I joined the force:—

G.B. 55/8861—1423. Colonial Secretary’s Office, Melbourne, 13th July 1855.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, transmitting one addressed to you by the inspector of police for the Ovens district, enclosing a communication from Dr. Mackay relative to the conduct of Lieutenant Hare, on the occasion of Dr. Mackay’s having been attempted to be broken into on the night of the 23rd ultimo. The letters referred to having been submitted to the Governor, I am commanded by His Excellency to convey to you his direction that Lieutenant Hare be promoted on the first vacancy occurring.

You will also inform him that His Excellency has great pleasure in testifying the high sense he entertains of the gallant conduct evinced by him on the occasion alluded to; and I am to add that it will ever be His Excellency’s desire to mark his appreciation of the service of such officers in the force as may render themselves conspicuous by their gallantry.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

J. MOORE,

The Acting Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne. Acting Chief Secretary.

There was the following:—

GENERAL ORDER.

Police Department, Chief Commissioner’s Office, Melbourne, 23rd July 1855.

No.46.

His Excellency has been pleased to direct that, in consequence of the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Hare, of the Beechworth district, in having, unarmed and without assistance during the middle of the night on the 23rd ultimo, captured, after a deadly struggle, an armed burglar who was breaking into the house of Dr. Mackay, near Wangaratta, that officer shall be promoted on the first vacancy occurring.

(Signed) C. MAC MAHON,

Acting Chief Commissioner.

Also the following letter:—

No. 1339/55. Police Department, Chief Commissioner’s Office, Sail, Melbourne, 18th August 1855.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that, in consequence of your meritorious conduct, His Excellency has been pleased to approve of your promotion to the rank of sub-inspector, and your name has accordingly been placed at the bottom of the list of officers of that rank.

I regret, however, that the promotion will not at present carry with it any increase of pay, as on account of the number of officers of that grade being greater than that for which provision is made, several of the officers of the next lower rank.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

C. MAC MAHON,

Acting Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne.

I also now read you a letter that I received from Captain Standish many years ago, before I was acquainted with him on the intimate terms I am now, and have been for some years; I had not met him twice in my life then, but have been under him for some months:—

MY DEAR SIR,

As Williamstown is vacant by the death of poor Taylor, I should like to know if you would like to be stationed there. The duties consist in having charge of the water police, Sandridge and Williamstown, and two county Bourke stations on the line of the Geelong railway. The long and arduous service which you have performed with such credit to yourself and advantage to the service induce to give you the refusal of this station, where the duties, though not unimportant, are, I may say, of more pleasant a nature that the roughing you have had on the gold-fields.

The officer’s quarters at Williamstown are very comfortable, and the sea-air (that apparently universal panacea for the ailments of up-country constables) will, no doubt, be a pleasant change to you sand Mrs. Hare.

I certainly have my misgivings about seeing you removed from a locality sacred to new rushes, especially to highly creditable rapidity with which you formed the police camp in Babylon, Mr. Lidiard having informed me that to your assistance and energy in the matter he was indebted for this. I cannot, however, allow you to suffer for your zeal, and if the charge I propose is agreeable, pray let me know with as little delay as possible.

With kind regards to Mrs. Hare, I am,

Yours very truly,

Francis Hare, Esq., Inspector of Police, Bark Creek.

(Signed) FREDK. C. STANDISH.

1602. Did you accept that?—Yes. I will read the telegram from Mr. Fosbery, Inspector-General of the New South Wales Police:—

Telegram from E. Fosbery to F.C. Standish, 6th February 1863.

I think Hare could now obtain appointment at Maitland. I know you would not stand in his way, unless his Melbourne prospects are better. Would you confer further obligation on me by speaking to Hare on the subject, and reply by telegraph if Hare could and would come by first steamer on leave for a week.

(Signed) E. FOSBERY.
and told him that I felt inclined to accept the appointment as it was better that the one I held. He said to me, “I do not want to stay in your way, but I think you are foolish to leave this colony after the services you have rendered. The Government have a good opinion of you, and I feel sure that if anything happens to me you will get my appointment.” I consulted others on the subject and they advised me to remain as I was. About July of the year 1864, just at the time the Echuca railway was being opened (I was at the time the inspector of police in Melbourne), I was sent for by Colonel Mair, who was acting for Captain Standish as chief commissioner, Captain Standish being in Sydney on leave. He directed me to proceed with a party of fifteen or twenty armed men to Echuca. I was to go to Sandhurst by train, and from thence get on by ballast wagon or any other way I could with my men. There was a dispute between the Victorian and New South Wales Governments at the time about the Customs arrangements, and the latter Government had issued a proclamation that they would seize all boats and goods on the river Murray, that they claimed the Murray as theirs. I received no instructions, but I was told to go up; and I was given a placard written by Sir James McCulloch, the then Chief Secretary, and if necessary I was to post those notices on the trees in opposition to the New South Wales Government’s notices. When I got to Echuca I found the place in a state of great excitement, persons all expecting to have their boats seized on the following day, and I at once had those notices published that I have referred to, and considered the best plan to adopt to bring the matter to a termination at once. About three o’clock in the afternoon I told the Custom-house officer belonging to New South Wales that I intended putting dutiable articles on the river in a boat that afternoon, such as tobacco and sugar, and told him if he chose that he might come with me in the cab I had employed for the purpose, and he agreed to do so. I put the articles in the boat, and immediately I did so, the Custom-house officer came down and said, “I seize those in the name of the New South Wales Government.” I said, “You will not put your foot in this boat. If you do you must take the consequences.” He said, “Do you mean that?” and I said: “Yes,” and he left the bank. I sent those articles down the middle of the Murray, and landed them at Echuca, having put them on at Moama, that is, landed them on our side of the river. I sent a sergeant with them in the boat, and I returned to the telegraph office with the New South Wales Customer-house officer. I remained at Echuca for a fortnight longer. Nothing transpired, and then I was ordered down to town. Sir James McCulloch sent for me and expressed his approbation of the matter in which I had acted thorough the whole matter, and subsequently Mr. Tyler did the same for the Commissioner of Customs. I went back to Melbourne to my duties.

1603. What was the nature of your instructions?—I had hardly any. Colonel Mair said there was a dispute between the two colonies. I was to protect the boats, and see that the New South Wales people did not take away the boats from the Victorian people. To go and protect the boats against being seized by the New South Wales Government.

1604. If the Customs officer had come on your boat, what would you have done?—I would have pitched him into the river. Then came the Power affair, which I have already explained to you. Here is the letter I received at that time.

No. 1526. (Copy) Chief Secretary’s Office, Melbourne, 22 June, 1870.

SIR, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, noted in the margin, * reporting the capture of “Power,” the bushranger, in the ranges at the head of the King River, by a small party of police, consisting of Superintendents Nicolson and Hare and Sergt. Montford, assisted by a tracker.

I need not say that this intelligence has been received by the Government with very great satisfaction. It will afford me much pleasure to comply with your recommendation, that Sergt. Montford should be at once promoted to the rank of sub-inspector, and I shall take care, when an opportunity offers, that the services of the superintendents are suitably acknowledged.

In the meantime I have to request that you will convey to these two officers that the Government highly appreciates the perseverance they exhibited under very trying circumstances, their tact and personal courage, as well as the honorable feeling that has prompted them to decline receiving any portion of the reward offered for Power’s arrest; and that I desire to thank them for having effected the capture of a desperate criminal, whose prolonged resistance to the law and successful evasion of justice, for a period extending over many months, has become reproach to the colony.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

The Chief Commissioner of Police,
Melbourne. Your most obedient servant

JAMES McCulloCH.

Shortly after that letter was received, the matter was brought before Parliament, and Sir James McCulloch stated that he intended to promote the officers, when a suitable vacancy occurred. I am at this present moment the same rank as I was then. Then I received these letters in the Kelly business:—

80/617 Police Department, Chief Commissioner’s Office, Melbourne, 2nd July 1880.

SIR, I have the honor to enclose, for your information, a copy of a letter I have received from the private secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity of conveying to you this expression of His Excellency’s appreciation of the important services you recently rendered to the Police Department and the community generally in connection with the destruction of the Kelly band of outlaws.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Francis Hare, Esq., Superintendent of Police, Police Depot.

F. C. STANDISH, Chief Commissioner of Police.

Government House, Melbourne, 30th June 1880.
Although the Governor has already communicated to you, by telegraph, his congratulations to the police and their successful overthrow of the Kelly gang, he was not, at the time, fully aware of all the circumstances of the case; and I am now directed by His Excellency to request that you will convey to Mr. Superintendent Hare, Mr. Superintendent Sadler, Mr. O’Connor, and the members of the police force engaged on that occasion, his thanks and congratulation upon the very proper prudence and caution exercised, by which, no doubt, several valuable lives which might otherwise have been sacrificed were saved.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

FREDK. LE PATOUREL,

Private Secretary.

Telegram 5th and 20th June.

N

This is a private letter I received from a gentleman up at the Kelly capture—Mr. Carrington—whom I never saw before that day, and have never seen since. I wrote to him thanking him for his kindness to me on the morning when my arm was wounded, and expressed regret that the papers should have found fault with the way he did it. His answer was:—

Yorick Club, Melbourne, 19th July, 1880.

My dear sir,—Pardon me for not answering you letter before this, but I have been so very busy that I really have not had time. Looking back on the past, I sincerely regret that you were wounded so early in the fray, as from that moment the police were virtually without a leader, and Mr. Sadler did not take any active part outside to my knowledge.

People seem to forget that you rushed the house at night with the four outlaws inside, and, had you not been wounded, I feel certain that the end would have come short, sharp, and decisive.

The house was never rushed but the once, and in the broad daylight, with Byrne dead and Ned a prisoner. Why did not the police go for it again? Because they had no leader.

I was in that first rush that Ned was wounded, and I feel certain that had he not been wounded, he would have escaped, and Sergeant Steele would not have shot him. The pool of blood on the ranges was where Ned had fainted in the night. He could not have got away then even if he had wished. With his weight of armour, and loss of blood, he could not have mounted his horse again.

I speak impartially, and I consider it is due chiefly to you, secondly to Curnow, and thirdly to Bracken, that the Kelly gang owes its demolition. If there is any enquiry, I shall be glad to give evidence to that effect.

Mr. Webb, I should think, ought to know that a man who had fainted from loss of blood was not in a very fit state to look after ladies. I never saw any one bleed as you did.

Yours truly,

THOMAS CARRINGTON.

The next paragraph is about the ladies. Some fault was found about my leaving the ladies at the time I was wounded, but it is a matter of no importance, and I need not read it.

1605. Was he one of the reporters?—Yes; for the Sketcher.

1606. He went up with you and Mr. O’Connor in the train?—Yes. He was no friend of mine. I did not know any of them except Mr. Melvin. As to being in league with the reporters, I never spoke to them before the affair or since, except to the one who came in to me when I was wounded.

1607. He went from Melbourne in the same train with you?—Yes, and was on the scene the whole day. There were four reporters, and this was one of them.

1608. Mr. Nicolson.—Who insinuated that Mr. Hare was in league with the reporters?—

The Witness.—Mr. O’Connor said, after the report came out the next morning in the Age and Argus, that my name was given as if I had everything, and he, who was in the front of the hotel all day, had not been mentioned officially. That is why I thought it necessary to make that statement. I sent but one telegram that morning, and that was published. I was receiving telegrams of congratulation from Sydney and Victoria, and I do not think I sent but that one telegram that day. I remember saying to Captain Standish, “Here are a number of telegrams of congratulation; will you answer them for me;” for which I sent up 19s. afterwards. But if Mr. O’Connor or Mr. Nicolson is under the impression that I gave any version to any paper they are entirely mistaken.

1608a. By the Commission.—Did you inspire either of the reporters of the daily papers for the next morning?—No in any way.

1609. As a matter of fact were not the representatives of the Press the most capable of seeing the whole proceedings, not being themselves engaged in the affray, but merely observers?—I should think the Commission can easily judge of that.

Mr. O’Connor.—It was in the dark and the reporters did not leave the platform, I believe.

The Witness.—They were on the platform when I left.

1609a. By the Commission.—Is it within your knowledge that the representatives of the Press started at the time with you to go to Jones’s house?—No; I do not know what they did. When I went away they were on the platform, and when I return they were on the platform.

1610. To the best of your knowledge and belief do you think the accounts which were written by the representatives of the Press were the results of what they saw or from communication from the officers engaged?—I fancy from information obtained on the spot at the time. I cannot say from whom or what they saw.

1611. Would that information be from personal observation, or was it conveyed to them?—I should fancy from personal observation. Reporters are not generally backward, they generally push themselves pretty well forward.

1612. How could they get it from personal observation on a very dark night?—In the same way as we did. There was a moon and they saw that we left the platform, and that we returned, and the circumstances that came on, and the order in which they came.

1614. Would not that be from the lamps?—No; all lights were put out from the time we started. If Mr. O’Connor thinks I sent any telegrams of the progress of affairs except the one I have alluded to, I now wish to go over a few of the remarks in Mr. Nicolson’s evidence, which I can recall to a certain extent. He states (I am quoting the Argus report): “He found a number of the men using hired horses, and some were hiring buggies.” That was when he came up on the second occasion. Mr. Nicolson has made a mistake in this. When I left the district I feel certain that there was not a hired horse in the district; but when I reached the district on the first occasion, in December, I found several men riding hired horses, and that was, of course, by his instructions. He was in charge at the time; and I found that the hire had gone beyond their value, and when I left the district there was not a hired horse being ridden by the police. Again, he states, “There was beautiful grass that season, and I had the horses turned into a paddock with an allowance of food besides of grass.” This was done at least three months before Mr. Nicolson relieved Captain Standish and myself. I hired a paddock from Mr. McBean, and also a small paddock in the town, so that the horses could be put in there when they were not being used and brought out at a moment’s notice. Again, he says, “Have a return of police expenditure in connection of the pursuit of the Kellys.” When Captain Standish and myself arrived at Benalla in December, we found that none of the men had received any travelling allowance since they had commenced the pursuit, and they then began to send in their vouchers, and, of course, all the expenditure incurred before we came up there was paid during the time we were there.

1615. And appeared as a charge against the time you were in command?—Yes, certainly. Again, he gave in his evidence the estimates of the cost of the three different periods. And then again, the period he was in charge was paid some time during the time I was in charge, but I incurred no expense whatever, beyond a few pounds for secret service money. Continuing the system that had been in vogue prior to my going there, I had employed, I think, one new agent two or three days before the Kellys were destroyed, and if there was any expense during my time it must have been for special trains during the day of the capture of the Kellys—a good number were used on that occasion. Again, Mr. Nicolson says, “He was determined to prevent them making any raid and felt quite capable of doing so. Succeeded in that.” I now say I was most anxious that the outlaws should make a raid, because we knew they would go to townships where there were banks, and I looked upon a bank as a trap to catch the outlaws, either going in or coming away; it would give us an opportunity of finding out something about their whereabouts, which we were much in want of. Mr. Nicolson again says, “The principal and most active of these sympathizers told the outlaws they must get some more money, that they must go and ‘do a bank.’” Previous to my being removed, I suppose about three or four months after the Jerilderie robbery, every full moon we used to hear reports from the sympathizers. All their depredations were committed at full moon, and generally about Saturday and Sunday and Monday—those were their lucky days. Then he says, “Soon after I heard of Dan Kelly and Steve Hart calling at a man’s house at Chiltern. They were described to me as being in a very emaciated state and asking for food.” Now Bracken says, when he saw the outlaws at Glenrowan hotel, the night he was captured there, he said they were stout and well, and that Dan Kelly had grown into a stout man since he last saw him. Ned Kelly was described by the doctors in Melbourne as being in magnificent condition, and as one said, “Fit to run for the Melbourne Cup.” Again, Mr. Nicolson says, “When I reported this to Captain Standish he instructed me to remove the party at once. He told me that the organization of the secret cave party was known in the Richmond Police Depot and was no secret at all.” I told Captain Standish that I had been told that the men were living in the cave, by a constable stationed sixty miles from Beechworth, and than this man who knew it had it been conversing about it at the depot.

1616. How did he gain that information?—I did not ask him.

1617. By Mr. Nicolson.—Give the name of the constable?—I do not wish to give the name. He is in the position that he may be found fault with and something done to him. Of course, I will give the name if the Commission wish me to do so; but I ask for the name not to be divulged. Th told to be careful what we said as to the public knowing that we were there. He said, “After I sent in my report, it was returned to me with a memo., saying that was not what they wanted. He was let to believe further (not through the memo.) that Mr. Nicolson would be much annoyed if such a report was sent, and they were ordered by the senior constable at Beechworth to send in other reports.” He said that Ward came to him and said, “I beg of you and pray that you will not state in your report that the public knew of your being at the cave some time ago, because if Mr. Nicolson hears that he will be awfully annoyed with me.” Now, I will give the names of the constables who sent in reports that were returned to them; one was Falkner and the other—no, I am at loss, but Falkner can tell you the name.

1619. Detective Ward can give the full information about that?—No doubt he can. Falkner said to me, “Of course, if I am called upon to produce the document, I have the document in my possession, and can show it to the Commission with the minute upon it.” I did not look at it, but I said, if the Commission want it you will have to produce it.

1620. This has reference to the charge of interference with him made by Mr. Nicolson against Captain Standish?—Yes.

1621. Those constables will be able to prove that that information about the cave was known generally amongst the police?—Yes, and that Falkner told me he had a letter in his pocket which was returned to him by Mullane, and subsequently seen by Detective Ward.

1622. To Mr. Nicolson.—Will you hand in a list of the names of the eight men who were engaged in the cave?—I will do so.

The Witness.—I might throw a little further light on the subject. I wish to make one remark for the purpose; that is, that there were others besides those eight men engaged in the matter; there were men carrying food, and the whole of the Sherritt family, consisting of seven or eight daughters—Sherritt himself and the whole family knew it, and they were in constant communication with Mrs. Byrne. They used to convey the provisions up to the cave, and with seven or eight girls, ranging from eighteen to six years old in constant communication with the Byrne family, how is it possible to know who it was divulged by? Again, Mr. Nicolson says, “I kept Sherritt on my own responsibility, paying him out of my own pocket, trusting that the Government would reimburse me.” I was in the same position as Mr. Nicolson; I paid for secret service out of my own pocket; but on the second occasion I went up I told the accountant in the pay-office that I had no money and could not afford it, and he then gave me a credit of £40.

1623. I suppose when you or Mr. Nicolson advanced money you knew you would be recouped?

Mr. Nicolson.—I knew I would be recouped, except in Sherritt’s case, where I was acting in disobedience to orders, and on my own responsibility.

The Witness.—In giving secret service money I never consulted Captain Standish. I would give a man £2 at night, or £5 out in the bush, as I did on different occasions.

F. A. Hare, continued.

those men coming from flat countries—Sandhurst, Castlemaine, Belfast, and the whole colony sent men there—they came into a strange country, and would be at a loss to know where to go. Mr. Nicolson has also stated he “received a communication from the Chief Commissioner of Police that Superintendent Hare stated we were wasting ammunition, and was ordered to stop.” The circumstances were:—I, of course, being in charge of the depot, had the stores under my command there; and a requisition was one day sent up to me at the depot, approved of by Captain Standish, for a large supply of ammunition. When he was inspecting the depot I said, “I have got a requisition here for a large supply of ammunition. Are you aware that so many rounds have been expended since such and such time?” He said, “No, I was not aware of that;” and he took the requisition away. Upon that, I believe, he wrote to Mr. Nicolson to say that I complained there was no more ammunition to be supplied, or words to that effect. But I had nothing to do with it; I merely brought the matter under his notice as the head of the department. I had no control over the district at all. That is all I have to say.

1631. Your evidence is complete?—Yes; I know of nothing else I have to tell you.

1632. Did you on many occasions, with your search party, go back to the Wombat, the scene of the murders of the constables?—I never went back once; my party never did; I never saw it. I was once within three miles of it.

The Witness withdrew.

Henry Moors sworn and examined.

1633. By the Commission.—What is your position in the Police Department?—Chief clerk.

1634. We have called you for a particular purpose. It has been given in evidence here by Captain Standish that when he came back from Benalla, he found the office in a very unsatisfactory state—in a state of muddle; is it your work to have all the minutes that come into the office laid before you as well as the book-keeping?—I have the general management of the office.

1635. And you would be aware whether the office was in good order or out of order at any given time?—Yes.

1636. Do you remember the time that Mr. Nicolson had charge of all the office?—Yes.

1637. While Captain Standish was up in the North-Eastern district?—Yes.

1638. Will you tell the Commission what state Mr. Nicolson left the office in when Captain Standish came back to Benalla and took charge?—I have read Captain Standish’s evidence in the papers, and I think that he has inadvertently used words which implied a great deal more than he meant to say. The office was never in a state of confusion that I am aware of; but there was certainly a delay in getting papers off at times, arising from the difference between the two men—the two heads of the department—Captain Standish and Superintendent Nicolson.

1639. Captain Standish says (question 52)—“About the end of June, after having been upwards of six months at Benalla, finding that all the business in my office was being frightfully muddled, and that things were going wrong both in the Melbourne and the country districts, I obtained the authority of the Chief Secretary for my return to Melbourne.” Can you say whether the office was in that state or not?—There was naturally a great pressure on the office during the whole time the Kelllys were at large. Under Captain Standish of course the work took a considerable time to perform, it could not be otherwise; but Captain Standish is a man very prompt in action, quick in judgment, and remarkably ready with the pen, and papers were always got away with considerable celerity. Mr. Nicolson is slower and more careful in going through papers. I may put it that under him the machinery moves more slowly than under Captain Standish. Then again he had not the long experience that Captain Standish had, he is not so good an office man; the consequence was that there would be very generally a delay at night in getting the papers off. There would be a longer time taken between the preparation of the documents and their despatch from the office.

1640. Under Mr. Nicolson?—Under Mr. Nicolson. The clerks complained very bitterly at times about the length of time they were kept in the office; and I dare say when Captain Standish came back I mentioned that the clerks did complain; but beyond that pressure and that delay, I could not admit that the office was in a muddle or in a disorganized state. I do not think it has been so under any heard of the

The office was never in a state of confusion that I am aware of; but there was certainly a delay in getting papers off at times, arising from the difference between the two men—the two heads of the department—Captain Standish and Superintendent Nicolson.

1639. Captain Standish says (question 52)—“About the end of June, after having been upwards of six months at Benalla, finding that all the business in my office was being frightfully muddled, and that things were going wrong both in the Melbourne and the country districts, I obtained the authority of the Chief Secretary for my return to Melbourne.” Can you say whether the office was in that state or not?—There was naturally a great pressure on the office during the whole time the Kelllys were at large. Mr. Nicolson is slower and more careful in going through papers. I may put it that under him the machinery moves more slowly than under Captain Standish. Then again he had not the long experience that Captain Standish had, he is not so good an office man; the consequence was that there would be very generally a delay at night in getting the papers off. There would be a longer time taken between the preparation of the documents and their despatch from the office.

1640. Under Mr. Nicolson?—Under Mr. Nicolson. The clerks complained very bitterly at times about the length of time they were kept in the office; and I dare say when Captain Standish came back I mentioned that the clerks did complain; but beyond that pressure and that delay, I could not admit that the office was in a muddle or in a disorganized state. I do not think it has been so under any heard of the department since I had been connected with it. I do not think Captain Standish meant to imply that it has.

1641. That is an opinion of your own?—Yes; I can only say that from knowing the state the office was in.

1642. Was the office in such a state at that time that it required an active man like Captain Standish to bring it into a proper state of working?—No, it was not in that state.

1643. Were there many papers unattended to when he came back?—No.

1644. Were there many more than the usual number?—No; some few were held over designedly. I myself suggested that one or two papers should be held over, and they were.

1645. Were they of any consequence in dealing with the Kelly outrages?—Not that I am aware of.

1646. Are you aware that the office was in its usual state, except for the keeping over of a few papers?—There was a delay in the getting off of the papers. Captain Standish, from long experience in the office, would see at a glance what a file of papers contained. Mr. Nicolson had not the same familiarity with the working of the office: hence when papers went before him he necessarily took longer; he seemed painfully conscientious at times in looking into matters, and took a great deal more time. Consequently the office was kept open to a later hour at night and the clerks would have to remain to six at night; but I could not say that was confusion or being in a muddled state. The work was done and done very well.

1647. Then in reality what you say is simply that there was a longer time spent each day over the papers?—Yes.

1648. But that the papers were cleared off each day usually?—Not each day; under no head of the department would that be.

1649. But as much as they usually were?—Yes.

1650. They were not allowed to accumulate?—No, certainly not. Occasionally files, as at the present moment, are held over for days and require a great deal of consideration, and it would be folly to deal with them off-hand. A great many required consideration, but if there was any undue accumulation of that kind I was not aware of it.

1651. Then in your opinion Captain Standish was incorrect in stating that the office was in state of muddle?—Unquestionably.

1652. In question 52 he states, “About the end of June, after having been upwards of six months at Benalla, finding that all the business in my office was being frightfully muddled, and that things were going wrong both in Melbourne and the country districts, I obtained the authority of the Chief Secretary for my return to Melbourne.” You say from your own knowledge that that could not possibly be?—I do not believe Captain Standish ever meant to imply that.

1653. In the way that reads?—No, I do not.

1654. If you as chief clerk at any time on or before June communicate to Captain Standish complaining that the work in the office was delayed in consequence of Mr. Nicolson?—Nothing more that I have stated.

1555. Nothing to lead him to believe that it was necessary for him to return. By this statement one would think he received information from some other source except his own personal observation to lead him to make that statement. Have you implied to him in any way, without calling it a state of muddle, that it was necessary for some one to come on account of the delay?—No, never.

1656. You know of no circumstances through which Captain Standish could have got that information?—No, I do not. He was backwards and forwards repeatedly, and when he would come back he would naturally ask, “How have affairs been going on in the office?” and I would say, “Well, papers are not so promptly out of the office as they should be, and the clerks have complained.” I said on one occasion, “The clerks will be very glad when you come back.” That was not on personal grounds, but because of their getting away at a reasonable hour. They did not like stopping till six o’clock as they had to.

1657. With the exception of the inconvenience to the clerks, did the public interest suffer by the slower method of Mr. Nicolson as compared with Captain Standish’s method?—Not that I am aware of.

1658. Have you charge of the accounts of the department?—No.

1659. Did it appear at the office that there was a serious dispute between Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson?—No. It was obvious to me—not from anything specially that passed between them, but simply what I could see—that there was a want of sympathy between them. But any dispute between them must have taken place in Captain Standish’s room; I know nothing about it.

1660. Was that appearance of long standing?—I think I could trace it back for about a twelve-month, but it is impossible to say; you often fancy a thing, and at other times fancy you are mistaken. But that was my impression that there was a want of sympathy for about twelve months before the capture of the Kellys; but I do not say that there was that state of things. I am merely giving an impression.

1661. Captain Standish had stated there, referring to May 1880—“I only had time to hand him the telegram and to give him a bit of my mind. In fact I may say that on that occasion, and subsequently when he was relieved, he behave to me in the most discourteous, insolent, and ungentlemanly manner; and if I had not been a man who is gifted with not a very bad temper, I should not only have given him a bit of my mind, but I would have suspended him from duty; but I had no animosity against anybody in the department. Though I had a great contempt for the man, I had no ill-feeling against him.” Did any of those outbursts of bad feeling take place in the office?—Not that I am aware of. Of course, when you say in the office, it must have been in Captain Standish’s own office, not in the presence of the clerks, any of the office staff.

1662. You were never personally present when a misunderstanding arose between the two?—No.

1663. Did you see many of the letters, the correspondence, passing during that time from the head here to the up-country stations in the North-Eastern district?—I saw them all, except private letters and occasionally a confidential letter, which might have been hurried away. I may say that I saw nearly everything that passed, except private letters—all the official letters.

1664. Did you see any letter at any time sent by Captain Standish to Mr. Nicolson during the time he was at Benalla in charge of the district that led you to believe that Captain Standish was unfairly interfering with Mr. Nicholson in the matter of the Kellys?—I do not think so. There was a difference of opinion among them about the cave party.
1665. At the time of that particular letter about the cave party were you then under the impression at the time that it was an unfair interference on the part of Captain Standish with Mr. Nicolson in his duties—I mean your own impression at the time you saw that?—No, I should say not. I do not think Captain Standish ordered the discontinuance of that party, but he had a strong opinion that it was an useless party. Mr. Nicolson, who was on the spot, thought it was a necessary party; there was the difference of opinion. Captain Standish, I believe, expressed himself strongly that it was a useless measure, but he said nothing more than anyone holding an opinion as he did would say.

1666. Did any letters came under your notice whereby you could observe that the fact of this secret party in the cave was known at the time?—No, what I am saying now is the result of what came to my knowledge afterwards. I cannot be certain when that was going on that I knew anything about it. The object of having an officer of high standing in the force at Benalla was expressly to enable him to act promptly, and that relieved me of a great deal of correspondence that would have passed through the office otherwise. A great deal done in Benalla we did not know about till afterwards.

1667. Do you know of your own knowledge whether any communication was sent to your department conveying the information that the fact of the cave party under Mr. Nicolson was well known in the barracks in Richmond?—No, I think not. In the absence of papers I would not be absolutely certain, but I feel quite confident in my own mind as to its not being so.

1668. Did Captain Standish at any time complain to you of the reticence of Mr. Nicolson?—Yes; not in the way exactly of complaint, but when Mr. Nicolson was at Benalla Captain Standish would sometimes show a degree of impatience; he would say he could not make out what was going on at Benalla.

1669. Would he state any reason why he would not tell what was going on?—Because he did not hear, he could not get information.

1670. Because Mr. Nicolson had not forwarded information to him?—Yes, he seemed to be dissatisfied at not receiving fuller particulars from Benalla.

1671. Had you any correspondence with the head of the department in reference to a state school teacher in the employ of the police in the North-Eastern district?—I do not know, I might have had, but I am not quite certain; there was correspondence, I think, about the man you refer to. I think I know the matter referred to, but whether it passed through the books or not I am not certain.

1672. That correspondence is obtainable?—It is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Commission, if it is the case I refer to—if it is the case of a letter which was furnished to the department, an unsigned letter furnished by Mr. Graves.

1673. We have it in evidence that this teacher had written many letters?—They did not come through the office.

1674. A state school teacher employed by the police?—It did not come through our office. Under the circumstances, it is a kind of correspondence that would not come through.

1675. Which is the other case you refer through?—A letter referring to the information given by a state school teacher.

1676. The statement of the teacher who was there at the time of the finish-up?—Yes, I refer to that, because you said the correspondence with the Education Department.

1677. I do not mean Mr. Curnow.—No.

1678. Was it before the capture of the Kellys?—Yes, but my recollection of the whole of the affair is very vague. You could not rely on my mere impression.

1679. You have all the correspondence, if there is any?—Not that. The particular file has been furnished to the Secretary of the Commission.

1680. It is not intended by the Commission to name any names. That is why we are particular in not mentioning the names?—Yes.

1681. Do you know of your own knowledge of the papers of the office whether any sums of money have been paid to any school teacher for information?—I do not of my own knowledge.

The Chairman.—As this is a matter strictly connected with the office, and as Mr. Hare and Mr. Nicolson have both been connected with the office to some extent, the Commission will give them liberty to put any questions if they feel fit. Do you desire to do so Mr. Nicolson?

1682. By Mr. Nicolson (to the witness).—You alluded to the clerks being detained in the office during the period that I was in charge in Captain Sandish's absence up country. Has any other Acting Commissioner of Police detained them late?—There has been no other Acting Commissioner.

1683. Any Chief Commissioner?—Nor Chief Commissioner of upwards of twenty years. In the earliest days, of course, under Captain MacMahon, when the force was being brought from a chaotic state into a state of some order, it was a common thing for us to stay till seven o'clock. I have been repeatedly detained until seven o'clock with the work of the office; but you cannot compare the present time with that.

1684. Are you not aware that, at the time I was in the office, there was good reason to be careful. You said I was very careful in looking over papers; had I not good reason to be, as the circumstances were very peculiar?—Yes; I did not imply the contrary at all. The only is I drew the conclusion from the fact that Captain Standish, that you would take the longer time—constitutionally you would take a longer time in going through a file than Captain Standish would. That was the only thing I spoke of.

1685. I do not like to make invidious comparisons, but did you find any of Captain Standish’s reports about that time sent back because the were contrary to evidence or did not meet with satisfaction?—No, I think not, because who was there to send them back? He was the head of the department, and the officers at Benalla were under him.
1686. There were letters to other departments as well?—I could not say that Captain Standish’s correspondence was in any way inaccurate further than would be the case with any man at a distance from the scene of operations.

1687. Have Captain Standish’s reports been sent back from other Government offices, the Chief Secretary’s, for instance, because the memoranda did not comprehend the case exactly, or did not represent the case so well as if he had given it more attention?—No, I cannot recall any case of the kind.

1688. Did the reports sent away in my time to other departments meet the situation?—Certainly they did, so far as I could judge. In regard to the report from both there was always considerable care taken in the office; everything was sent off after scrutiny. We have a thoroughly confidential and careful staff, and if there had been any oversight we have the confidence in them that any clerk seeing anything wrong would have pointed it out. The reports in the one case as well as the other were careful, accurate, and satisfactory.

1689. In addition to the usual correspondence of the office, was there not a great addition connected with the Kelly business?—A very great addition, as everyone in the office felt.

1690. By the Commission.—Was there more correspondence and work during Mr. Nicolson’s time than during Captain Standish’s?—I think not.

1691. At the particular period at which Captain Standish complains of the muddle in the office?—No. Well, during the Kelly affair, whether Captain Standish was at the office or Mr. Nicolson, the average was much about the same.

1692. The only thing was that Mr. Nicolson took a little longer time in passing it through?—Yes.

1693. And you do not acknowledge that the office was in any state of muddle whatever?—No, further than this, if you find clerks with a heap of papers and they find they have to stay late hours, some would call that a state of muddle, but I do not.

1694. It was delay on pressure of business?—Yes.

1695. But the business was cleared up as Mr. Nicolson went along; there was no undue accumulation?—No.

1696. By Mr. Nicolson.—On other occasion when I acted for Captain Standish, which was very frequent, was there any bother of difficulty about papers, or any delay previous to the Kelly outbreak?—No, I cannot recall anything of the kind.

1697. By Mr. Hare.—Have you any account of documents that have been removed from the office by Mr. Nicolson since he has been Acting Commissioner with reference to the Kelly affair?—No.

1698. You have not kept an account of them?—No. When he called for papers, when he was in the office, of course they were brought before him; and naturally I did not think it necessary to keep a record of what were taken.

1699. You do not know what papers have been taken or what he has in his possession?—No.

1700. No record kept?—No.

1701. Have many papers been given him?—Not very many.

1702. By the Commission.—Have you got a registry?—Yes.

1703. Would not your registry book show where a paper had gone to, whether to the Acting Chief Commissioner or any other?—Not after they are filed. You see this is with reference to papers that have been done with and filed in the office. A paper or file of that kind is called for; it is turned up, and put before the Chief Commissioner. I have never thought it necessary, naturally, to keep a record against him of files he takes in that way. If a file of that kind has not been returned the matter would be lost sight of, and it would be the same with Captain Standish when he was in the office and papers were put before him.

1704. Then the Chief Commissioner of Police could take any of those papers, and you would have no record against him?—No; we have never felt the necessity for a record of that kind.

1705. That is done in the Lands Department?—Yes, but I may say that our office is a small and compact office, and there never has been felt a necessity for the record that is spoken of. In a large office like the Lands Department, with a great many subordinate heads of departments it would be absolutely necessary; but with us if that plan were adopted, or what is called the In Register, it would be absolutely necessary; but with us if that plan were, or what is called the In Register, it would lead to an increase of the staff.

1706. How many clerks have you?—Nine.

1707. Would not one clerk of papers be sufficient to give out, and take in, and keep a record?—One clerk might do it, but then the time of any clerk is fully occupied.

1708. Then you have not got a register of papers in the office?—No.

1709. Previous to the Kelly business there was not much necessity to turn up files?—Very seldom. Once a year perhaps.

1710. By Mr. Nicolson.—Could you not almost recollect the number of papers I had in this case—by considering?—Some six, or eight, or ten. I could not speak nearer than that. You asked for the papers connected with the Power capture, and those were all returned. I have got the impression that all the papers that were asked for have been returned.

1711. By Mr. Hare.—Could not one of your clerks state whether the papers have been received back for filing?—I do not think they could. During the last three weeks the clerks have been so occupied with hunting up records and papers, and arranging matters, and so on, that their recollection would not be reliable in such a matter. They could not possibly do it.

1712. I mean previous to Mr. Nicolson being relieved of the position of Acting Commissioner?—Before the present pressure of course we would. In that case of course the old file of papers was turned up. The rule is when they go into the strongroom and open up an old file they leave it roughly tied up, and it is not put away again till the paper taken out is returned.

1713. Then they could tell whether they had got all the papers up to the time of Mr. Nicolson being relieved?—Before the present pressure of course we would. In that case of course the old file of papers was turned up.

1714. By Mr. Nicolson.—If I state to you that I had only two files, that one and one the file of Mr. Winch, my name appearing under Mr. Winch’s—do you remember any other files?—No.

1715. What is your impression about the files that I ever received?—My impression is that they were returned. I am not aware that you have taken any papers away.

1716. By Mr. Hare.—Still they might be taken away without your knowledge?—They might be.

Mr. Hare.—My object in putting this question is in reference to the files produced by Mr. Nicolson, in the case of Constable Redding, where there were two different subjects at different dates attached together on the same file in an improper way.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to next day at Eleven o’clock.

“Beechworth, 6th April 1881.
Telegram for the Secretary Police Commission.

“Re names of Constables—cave party:—Alexander, 1649; Barry, 2710; Cox, 2810; Armstrong, 2475; Canny (probationer); Falkiner, 2784; McColl, 3033; McHugh, 2551; Hagger, 1979; Dixon, 3039; Alexander, 2755.”

John Sadleir sworn and examined.

1717. By the Commission.—What is your position?—Superintendent of Police, stationed at Benalla. I joined the service as a cadet in 1852, I was promoted to the rank of superintendent in 1874, and then took charge of the Mansfield district. The Mansfield district joined the present North-Eastern district, that is the Benalla district on the south.

1718. Is it a part of the district in the police management?—By the new arrangement of 1878 it is part. The present North-Eastern district (I will define the district exactly) is bounded from a line starting, say, from Wood’s Point north-east to Tintaldra, 144 miles; thence west along the course of the Murray to Barmah, 160 miles; thence south to Whroo, 56 miles, and thence south-east to Wood’s Point, the starting point, 10 miles. There are some 11,000 square miles altogether.

1719. Where is the crossing-place on the line?—I am talking the line across on from Whroo to Wood’s Point.

1720. Where does it cross the North-Eastern line?—Between Longwood and Avenel, so as to include Alexandra.

1721. Avenel is out of your district?—Yes, Wood’s Point is my most southern station. I have stated there are about 11,000 square miles; more than half of that is high mountain range. There are 49 police stations in the district and 100 police. While I was in charge of the Mansfield district the Kellys have committed an outrage upon Fitzpatrick before I left that district, and they were then in the bush. In July 1878 the Beechworth district and the Mansfield district, and part of the Kilmore district—that is, within the limits I described just now—were all run into one, and I was placed in charge, and my headquarters changed from Mansfield to Benalla.

1722. Will you fix the date?—As nearly as possible the 1st July 1878. I relieved Mr. Chomley, who had been for a short time in charge of the Beechworth district which included Benalla up to that time. Shortly after I got things straight at Benalla this Kelly business had to be attended to.
1721. Is that the Fitzpatrick portion of it?—Yes. The two Kellys were out; they were the only persons against whom there was any charge at this time. In going amongst the stations in the neighborhood I found that there was no real satisfactory evidence to be had. About August or September I proposed to the Chief Commissioner to send a detective through the district to get information.

1722. Was Kennedy aware that Ward was in the district at that time?—Yes; Detective Ward was sent about the middle, I think it was, of September. I was instructed by Captain Standish not to let any of the district police know he was there. I was anxious to let one or two of the men mostly concerned know, but he forbade it. There is some correspondence that I can put before the Commission while I speak. [producing a large thin box containing papers].

1723. What are those papers?—All the papers connected with the Kelly business, telegrams, letters, and so on. They have been in my charge ever since; they have been in my office.

1724. And you have brought them down as custodian of the papers?—Yes; there is a catalogue the Board can have for them. That catalogue includes the full names of several of our agents. I would ask the secretary to remember that, and that they are confidential communications between the Chief Commissioner and myself.

The Secretary.—No one else will have access to that, except the Commissioner.

1725. What of the same year?—The principal business was sending Ward into the district. He was at work for about five or six weeks, and the result was reported by Ward to Mr. Secretan direct, and I was then informed through Mr. Secretan. I was frequently away; and it was more convenient to report through Mr. Secretan, whose first report was on the 8th October 1878:—“I have reliable information that the Kellys have not been in Victoria for a considerable time, but are expected immediately. I believe if they do come that Detective Ward will be in a position to effect their arrest. I think your men are merely guessing that, as the trial of their mother is coming on now, they are likely to be about. I should have written you before, but really had nothing positive until yesterday. Faithfully yours, (Signed) FREDK. SECRETAN.” On the 17th October, Mr. Secretan thought it time I should make an organized search, of which I had spoken to him before, “about Greta, Fifteen-mile Creek, and thence to Mansfield, as it is now (on the 17th of October), alleged that one or both of the Kellys are about there, and, if not, this move will cause commotion in their camp.” The last letter I got from Mr. Secretan was the 24th of October, in which Mr. Secretan says:—“I have shown your note to the Chief Commissioner, and he directs me to say that he does not see the least use in your making the presence of Ward known to any of the police of the district, neither does he wish it done. I hope the move will be successful, for it begins to look rather doubtful; still, must hope for the best.” That is the whole amount of the information which the police had when going out with Sergeant Kennedy, in the 25th of October, to Greta and Mansfield. The party was—Sergeant Kennedy, Constables Lonigan, Scanlan, and McIntyre. On the same day a party of four started from Greta—Senior-constables Shoebridge and Strahan, Constables Thom and Ryan.

1726. Where was Sergeant Kennedy stationed?—Mansfield.

1727. The Witness.—Only the information I had already read. Greta is a large parish of itself, and, on to Mansfield, an uninhabited country, taking forty miles square at least.

1728. Had Ward information at that time that the Kellys were in the district?—Yes; I was told not to let him know.

1729. Was Kennedy aware that Ward was in the district at that time?—No; I was instructed not to let him know.

1730. Those men that were of the search party, at Mansfield, were they all police in the district?—Of the district, as I have stated.

1731. Where was Sergeant Kennedy stationed?—Mansfield.

1732. Lonigan?—He was brought from Violet Town; Scanlan from Mooroopna, near Shepparton.

1733. He had been in the district?—Yes; Scanlan was chosen for his knowledge of the Kellys. The next I knew of the matter is the return of McIntyre with the report of the murders. I may say the police were expected to return—Kennedy and his party, and Strahan and his party—to return on the Tuesday in three or four days. The information, I thought, was so poor that there was no chance of seeing the Kellys, and we never heard, from any source whatever, of the other two companions—Hart and Byrne—being out. When I heard of the murders I was at Cashel, twenty-five miles north and west of Benalla. I came into Benalla at once, and then started on to Mansfield, where I got that evening. I found the people all along the roads so scared that they tried to stop me, seeing me ride alone; and the people at Mansfield were very much disturbed, and were under the impression that the Kellys were still in the neighborhood, and, of course, it was very hard to get a party to go out and assist and look for body of Kennedy. The other two bodies had been found, and I was persuaded that it was not likely that the Kellys would stay in the neighborhood. The party started on the Wednesday morning. I returned to Benalla, where I expected most of the others to be, and on my way I heard of the recovery of Kennedy’s body. On my return to Benalla, I think Mr. Nicolson was absent on some duty. He had arrived at Benalla, I understood, on the 28th October 1878—that would be Monday. When I returned to Benalla, from Mansfield, on the Wednesday, I found he was away.

1734. Was he in charge of the district then?—He had come to assist on the first report of the murders on the 28th. He had nothing to do with the district before that. I was in charge of the district.

1735. Was he in charge of the district then?—I had been in charge of the district, but on the report of the murders he came up as senior officer. I was in charge of the general district all along, but he took charge of the special operations about the Kellys.
1736. Have you those arrangements in writing?—No, the instructions appear to have been verbal. As far as I understand, he was simply sent up the country with what men he could collect, and his rank gave him authority over me without any instructions. Before leaving Mansfield, I found Wild Wright, in the lock-up there. I promised him £30 if he would go and find the body of Kennedy, or bring him in alive. I put some conditions to this, which I need not explain, to prevent any mischief happening to Kennedy; but as I said, before he could do anything, the body was recovered by the search party.

1737. Was there any particular party to undertake the working of that country, without any more assistance. I might say, that the offender Kelly can be rooted from his hiding place if the arrangements proposed by the Superintendent were properly carried out.

1738. Then Wild Wright really did not start?—Yes, he started. His intention was to see Ned Kelly’s sister, and try and get through her any information he could as to Kennedy’s whereabouts. Of course we had to consider the point that they were ruffians enough; that if they could earn £30, even by shooting him after they got the information, they might do it, so we provided against that. I took a doctor’s opinion, and he said he could tell if a wound was inflicted after death or before, and the age of it; of course in any case it was a ticklish business. Mr. Nicolson was away, I think at Chiltern at this time. I will put in the instructions on which Sergeant Kennedy acted when he went out. I first wrote to him on the 10th of August 1878, as follows:—“It seems to be certain that ‘Ned Kelly’ is in the neighborhood of Greta, or from thence to Conolly’s and the bogs near the Wombat. I am very anxious to make some special efforts to have the matter set at rest, and his apprehension effected, if possible. I have consulted with the senior-constable in charge at Greta, and it appears that there is not much likelihood of him and the constable with him there doing much towards arresting Kelly, or even disturbing him from the neighborhood. It has been proposed to collect, for the purposes of a thorough search, what constables are in the district who know Kelly personally, sending say two of them to Mansfield to act with Sergeant Kennedy from that end, and the others to act with the Greta police, and to search simultaneously up and down the King River and neighboring places. I shall be glad to receive any suggestions that Sergeant Kennedy may have to offer on the subject, and whether he is of opinion that anything might be gained by his coming here for a day or so to consult with the sub-officer taking charge of the party starting from the Greta end—that is supposing this expedition should be determined on.” I may say that Sergeant Kennedy did afterwards come and consulted with the sub-officer.

1739. Before he organized his party?—Yes, a day or two before he started.

1740. Upon what charge were they seeking to arrest the Kellys at this time?—Warrants were out for the shooting of Fitzpatrick; there may have been other charges.

1741. The warrants were out for whom?—I cannot speak from memory. I believe there were warrants out against half-a-dozen, and some of them executed. On the 16th of August 1878, Sergeant Kennedy answered as follows:—“I beg to report, for the Superintendent’s information, that I am of opinion that the offender Kelly can be rooted from his hiding place if the arrangements proposed by the Superintendent were properly carried out. The distance from Mansfield to the King River is so great, and the country impenetrable, that a party of men from here would, in my opinion, require to establish a kind of depot at some distance beyond the Wombat—say Stringybark Creek—seven miles beyond Monk’s. By forming a camp there, it would enable the party to keep up a continuous search between there and the flat country towards the King River. Fifteen-mile Creek, Holland’s Creek. While the Mansfield men would be doing the ranges and creeks in that neighborhood, the men forming the Greta party could be operating on the flat country, along the rivers and creeks above mentioned. I feel sure by efficiently carrying out this plan, Kelly would soon be disturbed, if not captured. I believe Kelly has secreted himself in some isolated part of that country, lying between the Wombat and King River, in a similar way to which Power did; and seeing he was a mate of Power, I think it is reasonable to conclude he would imitate his example in this respect. It was the means of keeping Power in comparative safety so long. I am not aware if Mounted constable Michael Scanlan, 2118, of Mooroopna, is personally acquainted with Kelly, but I am sure there is no man could render more service in the proposed expedition than he could, as he knows every part of that country lying between here and the King River. I am of opinion Constable Scanlan, Constable McIntyre, and myself would be quite sufficient to undertake the working of that country, without any more assistance. I should like to have a personal interview with the sub-officer taking charge of the party starting from Greta.”

The place where Sergeant Kennedy proposed his camp was where he was murdered—Stringybark Creek. The place he mentioned as the place likely for the Kellys to be hiding was a good deal east of where they were actually found to be, and I was not satisfied with starting three, especially as none of them knew the Kellys to a certainty, and that is why I chose Constable Lonigan. The expedition was delayed through various causes. I think the mother’s trial was coming on, Sergeant Kennedy was a witness in some case in Beechworth, and I was looking for more particular information before sending them out, and I delayed it till October.

1742. What part of October?—I then revived the matter on the 18th of October. On the 18th of October I wrote to the officer in charge of Mansfield, Sub-Inspector Pewtress—“It has been decided to carry out the plan proposed by me on 10th of August last, but which has unavoidably been delayed. I wish the party to start work early on Tuesday next from each end, i.e., from Mansfield and Greta. As I have already informed Sergeant Kennedy by telegraph, he will be required here to consult with the other sub-officers in this matter;
let him come by to-morrow's coach, bringing a plain saddle with him, as I wish him to take back a horse specially fitted for this expedition. Constable Scanlan and Constable McIntyre will also form two of the party from the Mansfield end." The rest is immaterial, and then there is a postscript, "This matter must be dealt with by everyone concerned as strictly confidential." That horse that Sergeant Kennedy has to ride was a very remarkable white horse, and I did not think it was suitable for work of this sort, and I gave him another quiet handy horse—that was the horse that McIntyre afterwards escaped on. Then I gave him final instructions on the 21st October:—"A party which will consist of Sergeant Kennedy, Constables McIntyre, Scanlan, and Lonigan, will start from Mansfield on Friday next"—(there was some alteration, and I cannot remember the cause, unless it was for being wanted as witness in cases at Beechworth. I think he was a witness in some case of horse-stealing there)—"commencing the search for offenders Kelly from the Wombat end. Constable Lonigan is ordered to report at Mansfield on Wednesday next, but should he not arrive in time the party must start without him. Both Constables Scanlan and Lonigan can recognize Kelly should they be so successful as to come upon him. The other party start from this end on Friday morning; the men forming it are Sergeant Steele"—(that is a clerical error, it should have been Senior-constable Shoebridge)—"Senior-constable Strahan, Constables Baird, Thom, and Ryan." Baird's name is also inserted by mistake. 1743. Is that the original document?—Yes. I suppose I had given the clerk instructions to repeat finally previous instructions. 1744. How would those mistakes read when Sergeant Kennedy got it?—I do not know what he could have made of it; however, it did not affect him. It was merely the list of men who started from the other end, he would not concern himself about that. There was no mistake in the instructions to the men at the other side, for they went just as they were told. 1745. Was there any instruction as to how they were to act when they were out?—I had several conversations with them. Of course you could only deal with that, leaving it to their own discretion—every one was a good bushman, whom you could rely on to do his best—to do his duty. 1746. Good horsemen?—Yes. 1747. Well provided with arms and ammunition?—As Captain Standish said, the regulation weapon was a revolver, but this (Sergeant Kennedy's) party had beside that a Spencer repeating rifle, and a double shot gun. 1748. Were there any special instructions about fires?—You talk with the men for an hour or two, perhaps longer or shorter, and every one of the necessary circumstances is put before them. They had no written instructions but those I am reading now. Of course every man concerned had his own life to look after, and if I tied them down strictly to any particular line I might be responsible for the circumstances if anything happened to them in consequence. 1749. They were not cautioned about the danger of separating, knowing the character of the men?—No, for often they must separate. I would not do that. 1750. They were sent out on a special mission, and after the conversation it was left to their discretion?—Yes; if they came to a narrow defile and all tried to go together all might be shot together I left it to their discretion entirely. 1751. In both cases the officers in charge were good and reliable officers?—Yes, and every man was a good and reliable man. Perhaps there was a little difference, but they were all perfectly satisfactory. I have said also that Constables Thom and Ryan well knew the offenders. I suggested Hedi as the place where they might meet, and I will finish by reading what I said:—"I am relying on the zeal and discretion of the members of the force forming these search parties to do what is possible in the matter to effect the arrest of the offenders, and when they have satisfied themselves there is no further use for the services in this respect they should return to their respective stations, Sergeant Kennedy reporting to me the particulars of their labours. A horse for Sergeant Kennedy's use will be sent up by Constable Scanlan for this expedition. Enclosed are photos of Kellys." This file was found afterwards, after Sergeant Kennedy's death, among his papers, and sent to me. That last memo. is not marked by him, but it was Mr. Pewtress, who says, "I forward herewith a file of papers found in the iron safe this morning, no doubt placed there by the late Sergeant Kennedy." 1752. Had Constable McIntyre proved himself a courageous man before this?—He was a very respectable man; I do not think I ever saw him put to the test. 1753. He was taken at the suggestion of Sergeant Kennedy?—Yes, specially chosen by him. He was a zealous, conscientious man, and I could see no difference between them as to bravery and so on. 1754. Sergeant Kennedy must have had confidence in his courage?—Yes. 1755. Is your opinion that they acted judiciously and courageously?—I do think it; I think he (McIntyre) acted as a brave man, and as I should have acted myself, but that is only an opinion. Here are some further papers preliminary to the search, also semi-official correspondence between myself and Captain Standish. On the 16th September I wrote to Captain Standish. "Dear Captain Standish,—

Referring to my confidential note to you of the 29th" (which I cannot produce now), "also on the subject of employing a person to assist in the search for the Kellys, your telegram on the 31st having been sent here (Benalla) instead off to Mansfield as I expected, I am not able to do anything definite while at Mansfield. Rather than put the matter into any other person's hands to negotiate, I have postponed action until I have a chance of visiting Mansfield again. This is perhaps as well, as Detective Ward is now in the neighborhood, and my plans might interfere with his. I shall not lose sight of the matter.” I proposed to Captain Standish (I find I have the letter), on the 29th August, to send a private agent into that country, and he approved of it—his approval came accidentally too late, and I was not able to deal with it. This is the letter I wrote—

(handling in the same, which is as follows:—)

DEAR CAPTAIN STANDISH.

Benalla, 29/8/78.

I am in good deal exercised in mind at hearing, as I often do, of Ned Kelly being about. He is not likely to fall into our hands by ordinary means, and I think of proposing to a young acquaintance of mine, the criminal class, to spend a few weeks in the places where he is supposed to haunt, and endeavor to lay us on to him. I am sure if this trap were known to Kelly or his associates, the young fellow’s life would not be worth much. They would not be any the wiser unless the young fellow himself talks about it. It would require a few pounds to give the young fellow a start. I can only say he is bad enough, I believe, to do anything in the prospect of the reward. I should be glad to learn from you if you would like the proposition. By letter posted on Saturday, or a telegram till Monday, will find me at Mansfield, where my protégé lives.

Yrs, &c.,

J. SADLEIR.

1756. By a private agent do you mean one of the detectives?—No. As I have said, on returning to Benalla on the 30th, I found Mr. Nicolson, I think absent at Chiltern. About this time, the 1st November, the first information that I heard of them came in about the Kellys. The purport of it was that a man residing near the Murray reported that he had been stuck up by four armed men answering the description of the Kellys and their companions.

1757. What time does all this refer to?—This is the report of the 1st November, four or five days after the murders.

1758. How long was this after the murders?—The murders were on the 26th October, and this report is dated Barnawartha, which is near the Murray, on the 1st November.

1759. What steps did you take in the meantime?—I think that Mr. Nicolson stated all that was necessary about that, but I can go over the same ground if you wish.

1760. It will be necessary to have your full account of all matters?—I do not know, except from reports of Mr. Nicolson, what action he took in this matter; I know that he took action.

1761. Were you sent down to enquire into it before Mr. Nicolson went?—No, Mr. Nicolson had probably heard it while I was away, but I am not sure.

1762. Then Mr. Nicolson said there was some delay before he followed them up?—I know that Detective Kennedy went down about that report when it was first received, and Mr. Nicolson, not being satisfied as to the result, went himself.

1763. Detective Kennedy was the man sent down first?—Yes, I think he was the first. On the 6th November, that would be the Wednesday, I went to Everton and thence on to Taylor’s Gap. I met there by appointment two parties of police, and instructing them, according to arrangement with Mr. Nicolson about some further duties they had.

1764. Were those the same two parties?—No, two search parties that were out after the murderers; and, after doing my business with them, I went on to Beechworth with Senior-Constable James. We got into Beechworth about half-past ten, and found the place overrun with armed men—the camp overrun with armed men. I found there was a search party being got up by Constables Keating and Keen on some information they had.

1765. Found the place overrun with armed men; were the men constables?—No, private citizens. I think there were seven or eight men with guns and weapons of various sorts. I found a man there who said he had seen the Kellys two evenings before in the neighborhood, and though I knew the information was stale, two days old, I thought it could not be passed over.

1766. Was this man stating what he said to you privately?—No, he had observed it himself; he had seen the men himself.

1767. Was he stating that to the armed people or to you confidentially?—He was in the lock-up when I saw him; I put him in there for safety. His information was, beside seeing them two days before, that if they were not found in the place where he saw them, they would be found in some other. I forget his expression; somewhere in the rocks where it would take fifty men to get them out. He was very particular about that.

1768. Is that the matter referred to in Captain Standish’s evidence—“On 6th November 1878, I proceeded to Benalla to confer with Mr. Nicolson, arriving there about 8 p.m. While we were talking, we received an urgent dispatch from Mr. Sadleir, then at Beechworth, that the Kellys had been at Sebastopol, and that he believed that they were there then. I immediately ordered a special train, and proceeded with Mr. Nicolson, nine mounted constables, and one black tracker, to Beechworth, arriving there soon after 3 a.m. At 4 a.m. we started”—is that the same that you refer to?—Yes, it is. I find a telegram dated 6th November 1878. “Very positive information that Kellys are concealed in range near here. My informant is not quite sober, and has been talking rather openly, but I am convinced his information is genuine; but it may be to late a day or two. I have but two constables here, and the hiding place is most difficult to approach. I have endeavored with Steele’s party of thirteen men, six of which I can be sure of coming, but I think you should send all you can by special to reach here before day; mounted, and of course armed, and bring tracker. Reply.” The answer is—“We are coming as desired by special train. We shall leave about midnight. Meet us. Standish accompanies me.” That is from Mr. Nicolson. About daybreak next morning Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson arrived with about nine men.

1769. Would that be Thursday?—Yes, Thursday morning, and I think there were two or three gentlemen of the Melbourne press with them. Not only the six men that I expected from Sergeant Steele, but all his party turned up.

1770. How many would his party consist of?—Thirteen; they met us on the road as we went out, about two miles out of Beechworth, and I think the rest is described by Mr. Nicolson in his evidence.

except this, as when we approached the place where we had to search, we halted the whole party a good distance away from the place. Mr. Nicolson and myself selected any men near us that we liked for the rush, asking Captain Standish to hold the others back, because they were very anxious about it, until at last we could get quietly near the place and start into a gallop. We searched the house and found no Kellys there, found a family, and they were fast asleep when Mr. Nicolson, who was first in, arrived, so they did not hear us. We searched another place and found nothing.

1771. Will you define more clearly the places searched?—The first hut we searched was Sherritt senior’s hut. The next hut we searched, a little further on, was supposed to be Aaron Sherritt’s, but I think there was some mistake about that—at any rate, it was not the hut we expected.

1772. Did the whole of the party proceed to search the second hut?—I think we went in much the same way, cautiously. It was not of much moment—it was a mere thing done by the way.

1773. You found them asleep in the hut?—Yes; Mr. Nicolson told me so. He was the first to enter; my horse would not jump a fence that was in the way—I had to knock it down first. He was twenty-five yards away of me; he put his shoulder to the door and went in head foremost. On that day Aaron Sherritt (it was the first I saw him)—

1774. Before going to that, perhaps it would be as well for you to clear up the statement made by Mr. Nicolson as to when you met Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson at Beechworth—was Mr. Nicolson made aware of the information that you had obtained and of the mode you intended to adopt?—Well, I thought so at the time, but I found out afterwards he was not—he was away searching about a horse—there was some mistake.

1775. Will you look at Mr. Nicolson’s evidence on from question 361. He speaks about a great noise because of the great party, and so on?—You cannot take a party over a rocky hill like that without that.

1776. Who was responsible for bringing the large party together?—It was an accident. When the information was received by me, I did not know really what police there was at Benalla, and I did not know how many I could get from Taylor’s Gap. Six was what I expected, and as I thought I could make sure of six, and I thought with what they could bring from Benalla, we should have had just enough. It turned out that we got the whole of those at Taylor’s Gap.

1777. How many?—Thirteen. I think there were some more somehow. There was no account taken that morning—the men met us as we travelled—we could not stop them. We did not know of their presence till we met them in the bush.

1778. How many would there be altogether?—I think our whole party would be about thirty-five, including reporters.

1779. You do not agree with the statement that there were fifty?—No; yet it might be correct. I could find out exactly, but these things are very troublesome to find out exactly.

1780. You and Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson were with this particular party, and Mr. Nicolson states that, after starting from Beechworth, you and Captain Standish travelled on the way together, and he knew nothing about what you were going out for; and that there was a confidential conversation between you two in which he was not included until the party arrived in the front of the first hut?—I do not think Mr. Nicolson meant that.

1781. Is it a fact that Mr. Nicolson had received no information from you, who, he says, was in charge of that particular party until you arrived in sight of the first hut?—Well, in the first place, Mr. Nicolson had received a telegram. That is the foundation, and when explaining matters more fully on their arrival at the platform, I thought Mr. Nicolson was standing by—my impression was that he was standing by, and naturally would catch up what was said, and I took it for granted that he heard, as well as Captain Standish, what I said, which was simply an enlargement of the telegram I sent.

1782. If Mr. Nicolson is under the impression that he was designedly excluded from the conversation, he is mistaken?—Yes, he is. I was saying that that was the first time I met Aaron Sherritt, going down to Mrs. Byrne’s house from Sherritt’s house. Sherritt’s house is on the table-land, and we got down the gully, and at the foot of it a little way off is Mrs. Byrne’s, and there we met Aaron Sherritt for the first time.

1783. Did any of the officers in charge of that party have any conversation with Aaron Sherritt at that time?—Yes, we all had.

1784. Was Aaron Sherritt at that time asked to assist the police in the capture of the Kelly gang?—I will state what I know about it and that will cover that. I was informed who he was by one of the police, and that he was a likely man to know about the Kellys. I spoke to him and asked him just to do what he could to assist us, and made certain promises which I forget. I was a stranger to him and he was not satisfied with my authority. I then called, I think, first to Mr. Nicolson and asked him to come and speak with him, and I think he was still uncertain about whether we had any authority. I then told him of Captain Standish, and I asked captain Standish to speak with him. I think we were out of hearing of the police standing around us, but they could see all that we were doing. He seemed to promise, I expected that he would do something, in fact there was a promise to that effect from him.

1785. Did you agree on the terms then?—We came to an understanding. I do not know what the terms were.

1786. You were present and the first to speak to Aaron Sherritt?—I think I was—I am pretty sure of it.

1787. Was the conversation in the hearing of the other men?—I cannot be certain about it. I cannot understand myself talking to a man in that strain in the hearing of the men; but I cannot say for certain.

1788. You have been a long time in charge of the district, the responsible officer, and you ought to be able to say whether you would ask a man, a perfect stranger, in the hearing of others, to assist you?—I say that, from my experience, I do not think I would do such a thing; I should instinctively refrain from so doing.

1789. To the best of your recollection, you did?—To the best of my recollection, there was no person within hearing who ought not to have been.

1790. In question 405a this is the statement made by Mr. Nicolson:—“I then went and remonstrated with Captain Standish for making such proposals to a man like that in the hearing of others, of any person whatever.” Do you remember any one remonstrating with Captain Standish for making proposals to Aaron Sherritt, asking him to assist the police?—I do not recollect.

1791. Was it possible for any one to do so without your being aware of it?—Yes, quite possible.

1792. Then you had left Aaron Sherritt?—No, I did not say that.

1793. You say you, under ordinary circumstances, would not have spoken in the hearing of others; did you leave Captain Standish in conversation by himself?—No, I cannot say that.

1794. You are not in a position to say whether any one present remonstrated with him for making such proposals to a man like that in the hearing of others?—Twenty people might have done it without my hearing it, because I remember my agent was in the scrub above the house, and once or twice I had to go to him.

1795. You were not present during the whole interview?—No.

1796. Do you remember Detective Ward?—I do not remember his being there that day.

1797. Mr. Nicolson says he was?—I do not say he was not; I only speak of what I remember. We stayed at the hut where the proposal was made perhaps an hour and half. We started without our breakfast; it would be then about half-past six or seven.

1798. Did Aaron Sherritt accompany you from the time you met him to Byrne’s house?—No, we had searched Mrs. Byrne’s when he turned up. We searched to see whether any of the property of the murdered men was there; and when the whole thing was over, a light-looking high-shouldered man walked in, and Strahan said, “Here is a man that knows the Kellys well, and will be of use to you; he knows all that is going on.” And then I went and spoke to Sherritt; and as I have explained, the matter went on to the end.

1799. Then you left him with Captain Standish?—No, I did not say that.

1800. What became of this man?—He kept moving backwards and forwards. You must remember there were 35 police there, and reporters and some diggers from the flat near, and that they were scattered perhaps over two or three acres, one man had tied up his horse here and sat beside it, and another was by his horse perhaps a hundred yards off, and so the work was done.

1801. You do not think it necessary to keep anything secret about Aaron Sherritt?—No; he is dead. When you come to talk to a criminal, you have to put things wrapt up according to their disposition. Some men you may speak plainly with. Sherritt said always he would have nothing to do with Joe Byrne, and I think we said we will save Joe Byrne; we will guarantee to save Joe Byrne. That was the promise that he wanted, and he was not satisfied with my authority. Then I called the other officers one by one, and he was at last satisfied. His bargain was if we would save Joe Byrne and guarantee his life, and Captain Standish said, “No doubt the Government would set upon his recommendation in the matter.” That was about the size of what was said.

1802. Was he to go with a party of police?—No; to take his own course.

1803. Then these arrangements were then and there made by Sherritt?—Yes.

1804. Was that in the presence of more than yourself, Captain Standish, and Mr. Nicolson?—It was within sight of more, no doubt.

1805. After having had time during the adjournment of the Commission to think on this matter, are you now in a position to say whether that arrangement made with Aaron Sherritt was made in the presence of and with the personal knowledge of more than yourself and the other two officers in charge of that party?—I have not been thinking of this thing.

1806. I am determined to have your straight convictions on this subject. Can you state now whether there was any other person that yourself and the other two officers within hearing and within your knowledge?—I do not think we would have spoken in the hearing of any person else but us three and Sherritt.

1807. And if any one made a statement that this was done openly before the whole body, you would be inclined to deny it, I suppose?—It was done openly before the whole body, but not within their hearing. I wish to be very exact about that.
1808. Well, it was done within the sight of others.—Yes.
1809. You believe it was not done within the knowledge of others?—I believe it was not done within the knowledge of others.
1810. If done within the knowledge of any, will you be kind enough to indicate what member of the police force, except of the three officers?—I have a recollection of seeing Senior-constable Strahan standing, perhaps, eight or ten yards away.
1811. Was he the nearest?—According to my recollection I believe he was the nearest, and I am under the impression that his opinion was asked about it in some way afterwards.
1812. Probably he was the man likeliest outside the three who have been consulted?—I think he was the most likely. I think Sergeant Steele, a well-known man in the district, possibly may have been spoken about it.
1813. Do you think any other members of the police were likely to have been consulted, or made acquainted with the arrangements with Aaron Sherritt?—I do not think it. It was our practice at all times, when there was a confidential man near us, no matter what his rank was, to take his view of the matter, as I did with Sergeant Kennedy in the first case.
1814. You started from Beechworth at what time on this occasion?—Before daylight on the 7th November.
1815. Will you state who you took from Beechworth?—That I cannot tell.
1816. Have you got the number?—The number was 35, as near as I can remember.
1817. No, I mean only starting from Beechworth?—Three reporters, I think, and three officers, nine men from Benalla making fifteen, and probably the two men on the station. I think that was all.
1818. Then before reaching Sherritt’s hut you had the number of about 35, according to your statement?—About 35.
1819. Will you inform us under what circumstances those men were gathered together at that particular time and that particular spot?—Yes. On the evening before (the 6th), it was a quarter or twenty minutes to eleven p.m. when I telegraphed to Mr. Nicolson. The men whom I had left at Taylor’s Gap, about twelve miles from Beechworth, I knew that some of them were still there. Knowing how late it was running with the telegraph hours, and there was very little time and no one to advise with, I despatched Constable Keating, to the best of my recollection, to Taylor’s Gap, to bring in the men that were there, and if the others were there still to also bring them. The party combined would be thirteen, if they had gone it would be six. I expected six. I gave them instructions to meet the party leaving Beechworth in the morning at the Springs. That is about a mile or two miles out of Beechworth to the road we were going. My message reached the whole party at Taylor’s Gap. The combined party was thirteen, so the thirteen came; and the thirteen met us, as well as I remember, at the Springs. I remember meeting them there, and I remember their giving the signal we had agreed on. The collection of those men I am responsible for.
1820. That accounts for thirty. What other station or outlying post did you request to meet you between you between Beechworth and Sherritt’s?—There was no other.
1821. No other party of police that were likely to join you?—No, I do not think it possible; but this matter can be set right by reference to the records of the day. I would rather wait till then.
1822. You took the responsibility in the first place of communicating to Benalla from Beechworth; you then arranged with the police in the outlying districts to meet you at a certain point?—Only those I have mentioned.
1823. That was two for Beechworth, thirteen from Taylor’s Gap, and the rest from Benalla?—Yes.
1824. Were there any other police requested to meet you on that expedition?—I do not think so. I do not think there were any others within reach.
1825. So that the number of police and reporters—?—I am not responsible for them.
1826. There were thirty altogether. Were there any others except the police and reporters present with you when you came in sight of Sherritt’s hut?—Of course, the informant was there—came up with us and showed us the way.
1827. That made thirty-one. Then at what time of the day or morning was your company increased by the diggers and others?—After the whole affair was over.
1828. What time of the day?—I think about half-past seven. It might have been six or eight. I cannot tell for certain. Starting at daybreak, you fancy the day is more advanced than it really is.
1829. How long did you remain at Byrne’s place till you returned again to Beechworth?—We did not all return to Beechworth. I said only an hour and a half or two hour. We had to send right across the whole flat for refreshments, and there was some difficulty in getting them then.
1830. At the time you left after you abandoned the idea of capturing the gang in this hut, how many were present then, including the police, reporters, and those from other quarters—how many?—Very roughly guessing, forty of fifty perhaps.
1831. Not more than forty?—I do not think more than forty. I am merely guessing roughly after this lapse of time. I remember seeing several diggers. After we camped at Mrs. Byrne’s house we saw the game was up, and she and her children were about; and the diggers and different people about came down, seeing the crowd of men, and sat down, some of them amongst the police.

1832. Was the arrangement with Sherritt made before the general outside public were present or after?—Well, upon my word, I cannot tell you that. It was made the moment as soon as I heard who he was.

1833. About what time did you arrive at Sherritt’s hut?—I would have to look and see what hour daylight was on that day. The sun had not risen though there was an early dawn.

1834. Then in all probability the arrangement made with Aaron Sherritt was made before seven in the morning?—I fancy that it would be before that.

1835. Had the general public arrived before that?—The “general public” would include two women and children and perhaps three of four men.

1836. Would they be all?—I think they would be.

1837. A portion of the Byrne family would have been likely to have been amongst the spectators when you were talking to Aaron Sherritt?—It is likely they may have observed him; they were observing what the men were doing. I do not suppose Mrs. Byrne knew Captain Standish from any of the other officers.

1838. She knew Aaron Sherritt?—Yes; but he was not the only man spoken to by the police. Aaron Sherritt was not seen till we got to Mrs. Byrne’s.

1839. Were there any of the public present except the police at the time when Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson and yourself were in conversation with Aaron Sherritt?—Mrs. Byrne.

1840. And who else did you see?—Some reporters and some diggers.

1841. Would this arrangement made with Aaron Sherritt be known to the public, that is, Mrs. Byrne and the miners who were there?—No. How could they, unless they had ears to hear a long way off? Certainly not.

1842. Did you or Captain Standish to your knowledge endeavor to make any arrangements with any other individual except Aaron Sherritt?—Yes.

1843. Would it be a breach of faith to mention it?—No; I am at liberty to do so. We tried Mrs. Byrne. Whether I was the principal speaker or not, I was there when it was done. We pointed out to her that here her son had got his neck into a halter, and that she could save him if she liked; and her answer was—“He had made his own bed, let him lie on it;” and there was a good deal of persuasion of that sort used with her.

1844. Were there any of the diggers about?—I do not think so; but I would have spoken to her in that way before fifty people.

1845. Because you knew she was the mother of Byrne?—Yes; and I tried to work on her mother’s feelings.

1846. Would you have spoken so to any other person not connected with Byrne “before fifty people”?—No; certainly not.

1847. They were not outlaws then?—No; they were not proclaimed. That was not, I think, until December.

1848. Since you have given part of the arrangements entered into with this man Sherritt, I would like to know the remainder?—The substance of the understanding was this: it was proposed that he should have an understanding that Captain Standish would recommend to the Government that Joe Byrne’s life should be saved, not his liberty, and that he should be tempted through Aaron Sherritt to lead the police on to the other three.

1849. What were the terms?—Only Joseph Byrne’s life.

1850. Was there no agreement made as to his reward and so forth?—I cannot say. Of course if there was any reward out he would have got it. I believe there was at the time.

1851. Was Sherritt to be engaged as the servant of the police at any stipulated pay?—No; not at that time. I do not think he had a farthing from us.

1852. Will you go on with your narrative?—Yes. There was information coming in about that time of such a confused sort that my papers would show that it was impossible to make anything of it. I see [looking at a paper]—that we had had information that the Kellys were seen about that time at Kerang, near Echuca; that they were seen at Gaffney’s Creek; that they were seen on the Strathbogie; that they were seen at Oxley, Myrtleford, Hedi; and it is impossible to say where not.

1853. Were all those places in your district?—No, Kerang is a long way out of it.

1854. All except Kerang?—Yes; and there was a report in that they were going to South Australia somehow.

1855. Were those rumors or confidential communications?—No; those are through the police; there is no secret about them.

1856. Only general rumor?—Some of them were given in the most circumstantial manner. I cannot describe them without putting in a great many papers.

1857. It was quite impossible they could all have been reliable?—Yes; I remember also at Mount Look-out, Gippsland, it was reported they were there. It is information picked up by different police at those places.

1858. Did you act on any of these information?—We had this particular Beechworth business in hand at the time, and we had to see that through. After that, later information came in about that time that they were seen at Moon’s Pioneer Hotel, but we did not get that till it was eight days old.

1859. Where is that?—Everton. To sum it up, it was after we searched where we could, we found from information that the course that the Kellys had taken after the murders, which were committed on the 26th in the evening, was they stayed most of that night in the hut called Kelly’s stronghold; that they started that morning, the Sunday morning, and that they had gone to Greta, and hung about there part of that day, Sunday; that they had gone to Moon’s on Monday night, and one of them, or their friends, got a bottle of grog there. I believe it was Joe Byrne himself got it. On the 30th October they were seen at Marjery’s on the Murray. They were seen on the 3rd November by our informant, the bark-stripper I spoke of, and that night or next morning at Wangaratta. On the morning on the 4th or 5th—I do not think it is quite clear which—they crossed through Wangaratta in the night, and went under the One-mile bridge, the railway, and went into the Warby Ranges; but all this information came in to us too late to be of any use.

1860. That hut is in the immediate vicinity of the scene of the murders?—Yes. 1861. Then they went out to their own place, Greta?—Yes. 1862. And then their course would take them to Mrs. Byrne’s?—No, to Everton. 1863. And then they would come to the locality where the Kellys originally were?—Mr. Nicolson tracked them to Barnawartha, and from Barnawartha to Sherritt’s, where we lose sight of them until this man’s account.

1864. And then they came back to nearly their own place?—Yes, the Warby Ranges; and there our horses were got. I think the marks of the saddle showed the horses had not been worked for, perhaps, a week.

1865. Can you state, with that information, why they did not cross into New South Wales—did they not attempt it?—They certainly attempted it. They went to the Bungowanah wharf, and found the punt sunk, and the river unapproachable. The back waters were out, and it was said they were under water—that was the rumor amongst the police; I do not know whether there is any authority for it. Amongst the rumors that came in was one—it is only a matter of curiosity, perhaps not worth mentioning—that the reports of murders were received twenty miles away from the scene of the murders before McIntyre came in. I do not think the men—very respectable men—were mistaken, because I looked into the business as far as the press of business would permit. I asked an agent to look into it, and his report was that, on Saturday, the report was received at Strathbogie.

1866. Before the thing had taken place?—Yes; but as far as I could make out, the report was really received on the Sunday, when McIntyre was making his way into Mansfield. It was an ordinary traveller brought the report, passing by the place, in the neighborhood. He said, “There are two or three police shot in the country,” indicating where they were shot. It is a proof, if anything, that some person was standing by, and saw it—some person besides the police and the Kellys.

1867. Would it be possible that the Kellys could have given the information?—It does not agree with our later information. The Kellys only went to their hut, and the young man Lloyd happened to arrive at the hut knowing they were there, and he kept guard till morning while they were having a few hours’ sleep. They went straight away through the country to Greta.

1868. Do you recollect reading in the Mansfield paper at that time particulars about how Kennedy was shot, and all about the statement of his shooting?—There were a lot of details given at that time, very early.

1869. Appeared in the paper?—I remember seeing it.

1870. Have you endeavored to ascertain whether that statement in the paper about Kennedy’s being shot, and all about it, was correct. Was that from the same source as the other?—No, I think that the details of their treatment of Kennedy came to my ears very early.

1871. Did they come from the murderers’ own information?—Yes, through their family. I could trace it to that, and it came partly through Aaron Sherritt.

1872. They might have met somebody after the murders and told about it, as they did tell about how Kennedy died, otherwise it could not be known?—The information did not come in before McIntyre’s statement.

1873. Was this man a common traveller along the road?—Yes, and he has never been traced. He was a stranger to my informant who gave the information, and it was said in an indifferent sort of way. The tracks from the One-mile Creek where they crossed into the Warby Ranges were followed up by Mr. Brooke Smith and some other police, and the horses found—the police horses—first one and then another.

1874. What was the name of the constable next in command under Mr. Brooke Smith?—Probably Senior-constable Johnson.

1875. It has been stated in evidence that it was he?—I know he was about there, and he was a very likely man. On the 12th November, one of the railway officials described the men as having crossed the line at Glenrowan and ridden in towards the Warby Ranges, riding from Greta to the Warby side. I met Mr. Nicolson at Glenrowan that morning, the 12th. We had one or two trackers with us. The tracks were perfectly plain, and the trackers took us to the foot of the ranges without any trouble. It will be perhaps a mile or two altogether where the tracks were still visible. Those trackers took us clean away from them; they left the tracks. Of course, we were entirely in their hands, but I am speaking now of the judgment formed afterwards. They took us off those tracks and took us to the swampy ground, where there were thousands of tracks, where all the cattle of the neighborhood came to water, and we could not get the trackers back again to take the tracks where they left them. I am perfectly satisfied that they were simply misleading us.

1876. Who, the trackers?—Yes.

1877. The black trackers?—Yes. They were civilized blacks, some Coranderrk men. The grass was probably two feet long. We were in their hands. We were not awake to what I afterwards supposed to be their trick. They just took us in the tracks into within a short distance of cover, where an ambush might be, and led us clean away from that.

1878. Do you mean to lead the Commission to suppose that they did not care to go into danger?—Certainly, most assuredly not, and I do not blame them. It is just what you would expect.

1879. From fear?—From cunning and fear.

1880. Were they actuated by the spirit of fear or sympathy?—They were actuated of the spirit of self-preservation, because they knew they would be the first to be shot. In fact, it was too much to ask them to lead you into a place where an ambush might be and ask them to go first. Our police could not go first because they would interfere with the tracks and obliterate everything, but those men would not show us—would not follow the tracks any further. We then had to strike out for ourselves independently of the blacks, and while waiting for luncheon a small party under Sergeant Steele, through some mistake of orders, got out of sight, and we could not to pick them up again. I heard it reported afterwards as coming from Ned Kelly, that he saw us, and could have shot Mr. Nicolson and myself if he liked, of which I do not believe one word; but he must have heard we were there, for he described that we sat in a little open place where there was water; and he stated he could have shot us, that he saw the brands on the horses—recognized different men in the party. With a good party of blacks I think we would have had a very fair show. There were several search parties still going out without information. We always hoped against hope; and with many of them Mr. Nicolson himself went out. I had not quite recovered myself from rheumatic fever, and my doctor—Dr. Reynolds—told me that I dare not go out. This continued up till the beginning of December.

1881. When you said you dared not go out, do you mean you could not camp out in damp places?—Yes, not except at the risk of my life.

1882. It did not prevent your doing your ordinary duty?—No. I was told I was not fit for the other, but I found afterwards I was. While the search parties were out we had one or two very good agents at work. I am not at liberty to make public who they were, or indicate them in any way. I will put the paper before the Commission.

1883. You had an agent “diseased stock” man?—I would rather not say anything about that man.

1884. He has been referred to over and over again, and the evidence has been made public, so that it cannot matter?—The same gentleman appealed to me last evening to stop any further reference. I did not know that person at that time. We had one or two agents employed.

1885. You stated in your evidence just now that you entered the service, I think, in 1852?—Yes.

1886. Is it the fact that you and Mr. Nicolson were entering the same day?—I am not aware of it.

1887. Mr. Nicolson, I see, entered on the 1st December 1852, and I see that Mr. John Sadleir entered on the 1st December 1852?—Yes, I received pay from that day. We had an agent, his name is immaterial—we had two agents—two men who promised to work for us, and who were very near the friends of Kellys at this time, and the substance of that information was that the Kellys were near, and that the sisters were conveying provisions for them.

1888. About what date?—That was as early as the middle of November, the 11th November. The first agent kept us well informed of what was going on about the Kelly’s hold. The only information that was that the provisions were being prepared in Mrs. Skillion’s house, and being conveyed by her during the night. I am not at liberty to make public who they were, or indicate them in any way. I will put the paper before the Commission.

1889. Did you ever take steps to trace the provisions?—Yes, we did, and it is impossible to do it.

1890. When you say provisions prepared, do you mean meat cooked and bread baked?—Bread baked in such quantities that it could not have been for the ordinary family.

1891. The inference would be that the outlaws were frightened to light fires?—That is a very probable inference.

1892. Or the delay there would be in baking bread?—I do not know the object in doing it, but it was done. We tried to follow them, but any person accustomed to bush will know you cannot follow them if they are on horseback, because you have to follow on horseback, and if you let them out of sight, unless you have trackers, you have to gallop up, and the chances are you come out right on before them, and they discover you before you are awake to them. Mr. Hare described about Mrs. Skillion being discovered sitting on a log by the police. I believe that is quite true.

1893. We want to know what steps were taken to see, at that time, if the operations of Mrs. Skillion were in any way checked?—We did try, I cannot recall the particulars. I think it was only by trying to follow her that it was done, and that was found impossible. I cannot tell what steps were taken at the time. I know we expected better information of this man every day, and he did himself.

1894. Mr. Nicolson was then in the Benalla district?—Yes.

1895. I understand he took special charge of the Kelly business?—Yes.

1896. While you attended more to the general business?—Yes, and I gave them my best assistance in all matters.

1897. If you received reliable information and you now forget what steps were taken, was it in consequence of Mr. Nicolson taking a greater responsibility of the Kelly business than yourself?—No; I do 1898. This seems important. Provisions prepared at the hut and conveyed at night?—If my memory serves me, the man was so confident of getting us better information that we, after an effort or two, did not try to follow Mrs. Skillion.

1899. What were those efforts?—I think it was we tried with our police in the neighborhood if they could make anything out by following her; we did it more than once; Mr. Hare described it.

1900. That was a long time after; this is within sixteen days after the outrages at Wombat Ranges that you had this information about the provisions?—Like Mr. Nicolson, I was a great deal away, and things may have happened without my knowledge. I know Mr. Nicolson kept better notes than I did at the time.

1901. Did you give any specific instructions as to what was to be done?—I cannot remember; we did what best to be done according to our judgment.

1902. What was the nearest station?—I think Greta was broken up; it would be about an equal distance between Wangaratta and Benalla—no, nearer to Benalla.

1903. The house where the provisions were cooked—eleven miles from Benalla and fourteen from Wangaratta, those being the nearest stations?—Yes, if Greta was broken up at that time.

Mr. Nicolson.—It was not broken up at that time.

1904. By the Commission.—Was that where Thom was?—He was not there then. I have no record that any steps were taken. I am entirely speaking from memory when I say they were.

1905. Would you not keep a diary of all the events of the slightest importance that transpired at this time?—The agreement between Mr. Nicolson and myself was that he would keep a diary of details at the time. He was a very accurate man in keeping details of particulars, more so than I was, and he has kept most of the records of that time. My records are very few.

1906. But still you tell us that you had documentary evidence, which you laid upon the table, from a reliable informant, that told you from day to day this thing was being done; did you take any steps, as far as you remember, to ascertain and track the people conveying those provisions?—We did take steps, but I said I have no record of them. The man’s information was that she travelled every night so far as to bring her horse in knocked up when she returned. She had constantly to take a fresh horse, and that made any action more difficult.

1907. Did he state what time she started in the evening and what time she returned?—I have not got the record and cannot say. I think she used to start at night and came in a couple of hours after daybreak.

1908. I understood you to say it was within the knowledge of the police that those people were preparing an unusually large quantity of provisions?—Yes.

1909. For purposes other than to supply of their own families, would not the police have been justified in preventing this food being taken?—Certainly not.

1910. They were not outlaws then?—In any case we had no right without evidence; we only see a large quantity of bread baked. That is not proof of their guilt; that evidence is all guesswork.

1911. Do the police always wait for proof before they take action in any general matter which may arise which gives even the colourable shadow of evidence that it is for an unlawful purpose?—If they do anything else, they do it at their risk.

1912. Do they not in less important cases take such action, although it be at their own risk?—It is not the practice of the police force to act without evidence.

1913. Was the reason you did not because you expected the informant to give definite information?—We had every reason for cautiousness—the distance she went, the character of the people about, who would have denied anything coming from us—and we hoped daily to be in a better position. This man was very very confident that he must drop across something better, and we had to keep ourselves in readiness for that, and it would have been a pity for us to spoil, by any immature steps, what would be a better opportunity. We had that feeling guiding us through.

1914. Were you not acting under the outlawry Act at this time?—They were not outlaws at this time, I think.

1915. By Mr. Nicolson.—I think if the Commission like, I can recall it to Mr. Sadleir’s mind.—(To the witness)—Do you remember some information about a horse called White-foot?—Yes.

1916. Mrs. Skillion used to ride it?—Yes.

1917. Do you remember information coming up to Melbourne about a large hollow tree?—Yes.

1918. Do you remember the action taken about that?—Yes.

1919. The hollow tree was used for planting provisions in—that was one statement?—Yes, I have the details of that, and a drawing of the locality—those are parts of the case I refer to.

1920. By the Commission.—What did you mean by “right through” in a previous answer?—Right up to the capture of the Kellys.

1921. You were saying you were waiting for fuller information—will you follow up the narrative?—What followed was, as we supposed, he began to be suspected and could do no more.

1922. By the Kellys’ friends?—Yes. His own feeling was he began to be suspected and could do no more, and could not risk his life any more.
1923. Can you tell the date?—No.
1924. I think you ought to tax your memory for that?—I cannot. I had too much to think of.
1925. I suppose you had to think about the capture of the Kellys, if possible?—Yes.
1926. And this appears to have been valuable information, and one would suppose that your whole energy would be concentrated on the further development of that evidence from that one informant?—When we had reports coming from Kerang and a number of other places?
1927. Yes?—How many minds would a man require to do that?
1928. After waiting for two or three days, did you follow those traces?—Mr. Nicolson has reminded me of some things we did at the time, and I am endeavoring to find those things in the papers, if I can.—[The witness searched amongst his papers.]—Here is the document put in our hands, but this is one of those private documents which must not be published—I beg the Commission to insist upon that. It was from a person who had a very good knowledge of what they were about, and he gives a long account of what he thinks their haunts would be. The document reached us almost immediately after the murders—the 30th of October—and with it a drawing showing the probable places where we would find plant or indication of where their provisions were left.

1929. From our own knowledge there were no further steps taken as to this cooking business?—That brings further matter within my recollection. All this was tested and tried in connection with what I have been just speaking of, everything that this man suggested.
1930. Mr. Nicolson has refreshed your memory about the hollow log?—That is it.
1931. Did you get information subsequently of provisions being taken to the hollow tree Mr. Nicolson has mentioned?—This informant, I think, speaks about it.
1932. Did you get information that provisions were taken to any particular place?—Yes; we were told of a place where it was very likely provisions would be brought, and it is my impression we never found the hollow tree.
1933. Did you take steps to find it?—We took steps time after time to find it, and never succeeded, and that on the information of the informant I am speaking of just now.
1934. The reference to the hollow tree has nothing to do with the information given you about the 11th and the 12th of November?—We supposed the information I gave then about the 11th and 12th would all agree with this; the two things do touch.
1935. Did you take any steps between the 30th of October or 11th of November to ascertain whether there was a hollow tree in or about the locality indicated there?—I have not the slightest doubt we did. I am perfectly certain we took steps, and I am quite certain those steps would be taken as soon as it was convenient to do it, until we satisfied ourselves that it was no use carrying it further.
1936. Then on the 11th of November you got the information of the certain party about the hollow tree?—Yes.
1937. And you then took steps, you think, to ascertain the facts?—Yes; I am sure of that.
1938. Then about the 11th or 12th of November you received information from a distinct party about the cooking and conveying of provisions?—I supposed the information I gave then about the 11th of November this informant writes:—“I have the honor to inform you that I arrived (at a certain house) at 8.45 on Saturday night, and found Mrs. Skillian absent; returned to bed at 11 p.m.; heard a slight noise at 4 a.m.” I cannot read any more without compromising the writer.
1939. That is the second information?—Yes; but evidently of this he had been employed by me from the early part of the month.
1940. I have now discovered that the Outlawry Act was in existence at the time; had you not power, under that Act, in a case of that sort to have prevented those provisions being taken, you having just suspicion that they were being prepared to keep those outlaws in existence?—We could have arrested the woman, but what would have been gained by that?
1941. Would not the fact of your cutting off their sources of supplies have facilitated your chance of capturing them?—I do not think it, not taking one isolated case.
1942. Did not their very existence depend upon their being supplied with provisions?—We had this knowledge after—that there were a hundred families, or heads of families, ready to supply them. If it had been like a seaport, which we could blockade, it would have been different.
1943. But at this time you did not know of any other source of supply?—We did; we knew it before that; it is not probable they were depending on this as their sole source of supply.
1944. There were only four men to be supplied?—Yes.
1945. I understood you to say that the quantity of provisions you mention would have been more than the daily recurring wants of those men?—No; I said there were four outlaws to be supplied, and I said that what she cooked was more enough for her and her children.
1946. Well, you were more impressed with the information supplied about the cooking of provisions at the Skillian’s place?—I was more impressed with the immediate necessity of action in the bark-stripper’s case.
1947. But you treated your informant as of very little reliable value, when you did not take the steps?—No; the bark stripper's information was that he would point out where we might get the Kellys; the other man only pointed out where a person was supposed to be bringing them provisions—the direction towards where provisions, he believed, to be going—totally different information. One man brought us to a hut and we went—we could not let that get stale. The other information was daily expected to develop into something that would bring us into contact with the Kellys.

1948. Was Mrs. Skillian supposed to be taking the provisions to the hollow log?—To some place—where we could not find.

1949. Did you take steps to find the hollow log?—Yes; we could not find it.

1950. Will you tell us what steps you took to ascertain that the hollow log was in existence, and whether provisions were being conveyed there from the Skillian’s house?—The police at Greta, I suppose, were put in possession of that information.

1951. Will you name the police officer in charge at Greta?—I cannot, for they were constantly changed. As they came in fagged other men were sent out. I think Senior-Constable Strahan may probably know about it. If he was the man he was put in possession of that information and directed to go and search (he knew the place) and endeavor to find out, and to do it quietly. It was necessary to be done without any person observing, and if he had found it we could have taken further steps. He did not find it.

1952. Was he informed verbally or by letter?—I cannot say.

1953. Why?—It would depend on who was the responsible officer at that time at Benalla.

1954. He would have been informed by the responsible officer there?—Yes.

1955. I would like to know the ordinary practice of the police regulations when any party of men is selected for any mission whatever. Is any notice taken in writing of the purpose for which they are sent and the mission they are on?—Yes, in ordinary cases every detail of a man's duty is given—the hour, the places he goes to, the time he is out, and so on.

1956. If so, in every instance it would be convenient to refer to the books?—No doubt that is the proper way of doing.

1957. Was that carried out in this case?—I would have to take the books of forty-nine stations perhaps, and I would have to get information from New South Wales and other places. Unless I knew what you wanted I should fill this room with books.

1958. All diaries containing information given by yourself are important to have on the table?—There is a diary kept at every station, and I should have to get every book. It is a book 24 inches square, and it is impossible to know beforehand what book would be required.

1959. In these cases is not information given verbally?—Yes.

1960. You would have a daily notebook, would you not, in every attempt you made. Every expedition you were on you would take a note-book and jot down the most important events?—Not unless they were of special importance.

1961. Not so important an expedition as that?—No. Of course I can tell for the last twenty-eight years where I was and what I did.

1962. And what men were under you and the service they were in?—Yes.

1963. Several questions of that sort have been asked you, and you said you did not know?—I have been asked on memory. The records are very, very extensive, and I am only prepared with matters connected with the Kelly search—documents put under my care at the office, besides those there are minute books and diaries without number. If I bring them here, I will answer for it they will take twelve months to explain.

1964. Will you, between this and the next day of meeting, look through the papers and see if any instructions were given to the police at Greta respecting the food planted in the hollow log?—My papers will not show me that. I will have to consult the man.

1965. Is this the nature of your evidence—that after the murders, about the 30th of October, you got private information, which is here, from some person who told you the probable movements and action of the outlaws—certain things connected with their movements and intentions?—Yes.

1966. Then about the 11th of November information was received from a reliable agent that Mrs. Skillian, the sister of the Kellys, was preparing provisions in excess of what were the requirements of her own establishment, and that you were under the impression, from the information received from this agent, that those were cooked for and conveyed to the outlaws?—That was our supposition.

1967. And that was further confirmed by your agent informing you that Mrs. Skillian went out early in the night, returning in the morning, and your agent was under the impression that they were conveyed to or left for the outlaws in that way; can you tax your memory to say if any and what action was taken to trace those provisions or stop the supply, because, at the time, the Outlawry Act was in operation, and the 5th section provides that it is a punishable offence supplying them with provisions. I think you went on to say you did not think you went on to say you did not think there was special action taken, because you daily expected more reliable information or something more important. Is that the fact?—I amended my first statement by saying that this document (previously handed in by the witness) shows there was action taken. We searched for that log by the means I have mentioned, and this man’s presence as our agent shows there was action taken on that also. This is the way we took such action. We put an agent into a likely place. We get him in as near as we can to it. That is part of our action, and perhaps our principal action. One is the result of the other, and bears on the other. All these things act and re-act.

1968. The 11th November appears to be the date of the final work done by that agent, so that that man could not act in that other matter. You employed another man to see about it?—Yes. I see by the agent’s last letter of the 11th, he was finishing his employment with us then, so that he must have been employed during the early part of the month of November 1878.

1969. Is that the letter you received?—That is the only written communication I had from him.

1970. All the others were verbal?—Yes. The man would see me at my stable or buggy shed or any other place.

1971. That is the last letter?—Yes; That shows his work was ended then. He says he is to give up his occupation.

1972. Did he assign any reason?—Yes, he gave his reasons. His own belief was that he was suspected; the ostensible reason given by him to another on whom he was depending on was that he was not wanted by the same person any longer. About the 7th or 6th December, in the absence of Mr. Nicolson, I received the communication. This is another of those documents in which private interests are involved, but if you will allow me to alter the localities, I can read it. This letter was received, and I am not at liberty to say how it came into the possession of the police. It was forwarded to me by a member of the police force. It was to this effect. It was to a near blood relation of the Kellys and one of their most thorough assistants.—

“Sir, I have been requested by E. and D. Kelly to do what I could to assist them in crossing here.” There was no date and no other particulars about them. “I am to write to you to let you know the arrangements. They are to be at a time to be named at the junction of Indigo Creek and Murray, and there is to be a password, it is this—‘Any work to be had?’ ‘Yes.’ ‘Where?’ On the New South Wales side one shall meet you. I will have a boat ready. There must not be any horses come to the river, if you should have horses they must be led by the bridge to a safe place already prepared for them. I will have four on each side of the river to watch upper and lower side. I have a place fixed where you will be safe. If you should want horses there will some be got for you. There are two says they will join you if requested. You must mind it will want money and I have got none. When you write direct to Howlong for —— (the signer).” It is not out of sympathy I do not mention the name, but it is sent by a person well known and suspected at that neighborhood. I made a note on it at the time to this effect, amongst other matters. “The envelope showed the Bungowannah and Albury postmarks of the 3rd instant.”

1973. Howlong is the township below Bungawannah and Albury?—Yes, and the junction of the Indigo River. The place of meeting is near to Howlong. “There is no fear of any action being taken by —— (the writer) or his confederates for some days unless this a blind to cover movements already taken.” This is sent by me, dated on the 6th December 1878.

1974. Then you had not faith in that document?—I had half faith in it, and we had faith in the officer to carry it out. I was sending this to the sergeant of police near the locality. I ascertained from him that there was a person of the name of the writer there, and that he was to report about other matters, to facilitate further movements.

1975. That is the letter you received prior to the bank robbery of Euroa?—Yes.

1976. And shows why you went north about that time?—Yes.

1977. What is the post-mark of Bungowannah?—Third December.

John Sadleir,
continued,
7th April 1881.

1978. You have been continually in Benalla for how many days prior to the 10th?—I will find out that between this and next meeting.

1979. Also as to what action was taken by the police on the information you received on the 30th October and the 14th November?—Yes.

Mr. Nicolson handed in a document with reference to the comparative statement made by Mr. Hare of the expenses.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday next at Eleven o’clock

TUESDAY, 12TH APRIL, 1881.

Present:

| Wm. Anderson, Esq., M.L.A. | G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A. |

Captain Standish.—I wish to mention that I have some business engagements that will take me away from Melbourne for twelve or fourteen days—a long-standing engagement—and I wish to ask whether the Board will require my attendance. After my return I shall be available.
The Chairman.—The Commission can arrange conveniently in regard to that; you will not need to stay.

Mr. Nicolson.—The Acting Chief Commissioner of Police received the note from the Secretary of the Commission asking, amongst other things, for the key of the anonymous names of the outlaws. This is the letter—[handing in the same.] Without wishing to appear to throw any obstacle in the way of the Commission by withholding any information they may require, I would remind you of what was stated before of the danger of the real names of the witnesses getting out.

The Chairman.—We will keep that altogether private; it will be merely for the guidance of the members of the Commission.

John Sadleir further examined.

1980. Will you continue your statement?—At the close of my evidence last Thursday, in regard to the question asked then, I telegraphed as to the search made for the hollow log which was mentioned in the evidence. I have reports from the three constables who were in search of the log. They found it, but found no sign of provisions whatever.

1981. Will you give the names of the three?—Senior-constables Strahan, Flood, and Mullane.

1982. Can you say where they found it?—They failed to answer that.

1983. You said before the log could not be found?—Yes; I was speaking from memory then, and was mistaken in regard to that.

1984. What I asked for was the instructions given by you as to watching this particular log; do you remember whether you gave any special instructions?—I can see they got special instructions to examine this place.

1985. They examined this at the time you got the information?—Yes; the Commission’s instructions were to ascertain what steps were taken by the police from the 31st October to say the 14th November in the matter of the information about the log and provisions being hid there.

1986. Yes. The question was whether you had given precise instructions, and you said you were not sure, and I think your evidence will show you made rather contradictory statements; and I want you to say whether you gave any special instructions to the police, and whether you could remember what they were of your own knowledge. Who was in charge specially of the correspondence, confidential and other, from the 28th October to the 14th November?—Whatever senior officer was on the spot during those days.

1987. Who was?—Mr. Nicolson, he was senior to me; where he was not there of course I was responsible.

1988. Where was Mr. Nicolson between the 28th of October and the 14th of November?—I cannot tell you. I have no record.

1989. Was Mr. Nicolson made acquainted with the contents of the private information dated 30th October, and the letter received by you, submitted to the Board last Thursday, dated 11th of November?—I have not the slightest doubt he was. I can only give my own duties on the date you speak of from the 28th October to the 10th November 1878.

The Chairman.—We have the tabulated statement here. Mr. Nicolson was there from the 28th October to the 13th December in the district. Mr. Sadleir was there the whole time in charge of the district.

The Witness.—I was constantly away.

1990. Can you remember who was really in the office to know what correspondence was in the office during those dates—had you any clerk in the office who would file the correspondence?—I can only speak of my own, and there would be no record made of Mr. Nicolson’s attendance at the office.

1991. Would he have all the letters coming to the office, both private information, similar to the letter of the 11th?—Yes; most decidedly. I am quite sure Mr. Nicolson knew it. I remember discussing the whole subject with him.

Mr. Nicolson.—I must have been aware of it. I recollect hearing about the information, and I remember the incident. Allow me just to say this, to ask Mr. Sadleir, with reference to that agent that gave him that information, who was alluded to on the last occasion when I first saw him. Mr. Sadleir will recollect that I first saw him on that occasion he speaks of near Mr. Sadleir’s own house. Mr. Sadleir will remember that, no doubt; and it was the first time I knew he was in communication with that man, and the first time I saw him; but I admit I saw those communications. Mr. Sadleir will tell you that he was in correspondence with that agent without my knowledge until my return, when I met that agent for the first time.

1992. By the Commission (to the witness).—Will you proceed now?—Do you require a statement of my own duties from the 28th of October to 10th November?

1993. No?—I thought that was wanted.

1994. Individually we must leave it to your discretion to make what statement you choose, but afterwards I shall want to ask who was in the responsible position there. Were you solely responsible; and if any responsible act of yours took place I should ask you not to pass it over?—Certainly not, if I can remember it. I come to speak now of the 9th or 10th of November 1878. Mr. Nicolson was absent at Fern Hills with a search party. During his absence—

1995. What date?—About the 9th or 10th of November.

1996. Fern Hill is in the direction where the police were murdered from Benalla?—Yes, a little north. During his absence I received information that the gang were likely to cross the Murray. I communicated with the police at Wodonga and at Albury, and determined myself to go and see the particular place that was indicated. I thought it necessary to see this place by daylight so that we could make better arrangements for watching it at night. As I say, before the time came for my departure, Mr. Nicolson returned. I showed him the papers with the information I had got, and he determined too to come with me to Wodonga and Albury.

1997. Was that information a written communication to you?—It was.

1998. You handed it in the other day?—I think so. Mr. Nicolson telegraphed to the officer in charge at Albury asking him to meet him that evening at Albury, that was on the 10th December. He also informed the Chief Commissioner that he and I were leaving. We got to the Benalla railway station at about 8 o'clock in the evening, and were getting our tickets when Mr. Wyatt, the police magistrate, came by us in a very excited manner. I saw something under his coat. He came and spoke to Mr. Nicolson, and then rushed into the ladies' waiting-room, taking Mr. Nicolson with him. I saw something was the matter, though I could not tell what. I tried to follow into the room; Mr. Wyatt pushed the door in my face and shut me out.

1999. Prevented you?—Yes, pushed the door against me and prevented my going in. I waited outside a few minutes to get any opportunity of going in, but could not get in. However, other travellers, lady travellers, found their way in, and he came out again, and I heard his story then.

2000. He came out and related it to you?—He related it to Mr. Nicolson, still, I think, in my hearing. His manner was exceedingly excited, and did not impress me somehow on that account, I think, with any weight; certainly not with the weight that a sober-spoken man would have impressed me. However, I went up and down the platform. I knew several people there, and enquired if anything was known to be wrong along the line—that is the railway line. I found passengers who had come all the way from Melbourne. At most of the stations they had seen the police, and they told me that there was no alarm whatever along the line. We had a very short time, but a few minutes, to decide what we should do, and we went into the train and travelled on, starting towards Albury.

2001. You decided to proceed with your journey?—Yes.

2002. Would Mr. Wyatt on that occasion have come up by the train you were going by?—Yes.

2003. Coming up from Euroa by the same train by which you would proceed on to Wodonga?—Yes, he had just come from Euroa. In the short time we had to think it appeared to us impossible that anything of mischief could have happened as clearly as two o'clock that day, and nothing more be known of it at eight o'clock, when we met Mr. Wyatt. During the day we dispatched seven telegrams, and we had heard nothing about the break in the wire.

2004. From where?—From Benalla, some towards Melbourne, two to Melbourne.

2005. Along the line?—Yes.

2006. And heard nothing whatever of the break of the wires?—And heard nothing whatever of the break of the wires.

2007. What time was the last telegram sent?—I am afraid I cannot tell, but I can easily find out.

2008. Was it before you started to Albury?—Yes.

2009. How long?—I can ascertain.

2010. If the statement in the papers is correct, they broke the wires early in the day?—Yes, half-past two.

2011. Had you any information of the wires being intact from two o'clock up to the time of your starting to Albury?—I cannot say; I will find out. I may say that Mr. Nicolson was very tired at this time, and lay down and fell asleep, I think almost immediately on getting into the train. I was a little uneasy myself, I confess, on the road, but once the train started we had no chance of getting back. When at Albury about midnight, we got word of the Euroa bank robbery. I started, by Mr. Nicolson's direction, across to Wodonga, and got ready a special train. I think it was about half past two when we started, and got to Wangaratta very early in the morning. I got out at Wangaratta, leaving Mr. Nicolson to go on. This was in the morning of the 11th December 1878. I got together a party of police and struck across from Wangaratta by Glenrowan, under the Warby ranges to near Lake Rowan. I had one of the trackers with us, and we expected to get any tracks the Kellys might have made on the way from Euroa to some of their old haunts.

We did find a track which was quite fresh during the previous night on very early that morning, but the tracker just led us perhaps twenty or thirty yards, and we could not make them out. The tracks were plain before us, and yet he would not follow or could not.

2012. What was the impression on your mind with reference to the conduct of the black tracker at that time—you said he would not or could not follow the track?—We could not make them out. The tracks were plain before us, and yet he would not follow or could not.

2013. The question is, what was your impression?—That is it; we could not make out how the man could not follow out the tracks that were seen by us.

2014. That he did not wish to?—Yes, that is it, judging by knowledge gained since.
2015. Those were not Queensland men?—No, Coranderrk or any men we could pick up. On the morning of the 12th we searched this place that we went towards on the previous day, first examining all round for any tracks that might be suspicious.

2016. That was the place you could not find the previous day?—Yes; we found it in the morning at daybreak, but discovered nothing at all. Up to this time I cannot call to mind any rumor of any bank being threatened by the outlaws, or anything at all to that effect.

2017. That is prior to your interview with Mr. Wyatt?—Yes, from the time of the murders up to this time I am speaking of.

2018. Up to the 11th or 12th of October?—Yes.

2019. You want to say that as far as you are concerned that information referred to by Mr. Hare did not reach you?—Yes.

2020. You had not knowledge of it in your district?—No.

2021. Have you read this portion of Captain Standish’s evidence (question 19)—“About a fortnight before the Euroa bank was stood up, in December 1878. I received information from Mr. Nicolson that a bank would be probably stuck up in the North-Eastern district”; you gave Captain Standish no information of that?—No; I never heard of that before till I saw the evidence.

2022. Did you receive any orders from Captain Standish to take steps before the 10th November to protect banks in your district?—No; I asked for more police to carry on the work, and he (Captain Standish) refused them. As early as November 4th, I had a telegram from him to say, “Now surely you have enough,” and a letter on that or the following day to the same effect.

2023. If you notice below there the 23rd question in Captain Standish’s evidence—“That warning was simply conveyed to Superintendent Hare and Inspector Green, believing that Superintendent Nicolson, having given the information, would take the necessary steps himself?”—Yes.” You knew nothing whatever about that?—I knew nothing whatever about that information, and I am quite sure from Captain Standish’s conversation afterwards that that evidence is in error. There were over forty banks in the district, and it would have taken us 80 extra men to put on; and after the Euroa bank was robbed there were over 100 men employed searching for the Kellys.

2024. Did the banks contribute anything, to your knowledge, towards the expenses?—Not a penny that I am aware of. Some of them provided a room here and there. Captain Standish arrived at Benalla on the 12th December, that is two days after the bank robbery, and Mr. Hare on the following day. Even then there were rumors of the Kellys being seen in various different parts of the country, and this gave us no end of trouble.

2025. Before you leave that, did you ever find out whom that information came from that you went to Albury on?—Yes, I know all about that, that is before the Commission. There was a considerable increase to the police at this time, and also I think some forty artillery men. At every bank in the small towns two or three constables were placed on guard; there were three detectives sent up, the best men they could find, and search parties were started from time to time. Now I may speak particularly of my own share in the evidence. Early in December of January I provided a couple of private agents, men who I knew.

2026. Will you hand in those in writing?—Will you allow me to see the key. There is one indicated by the alias “Hill.” The other is not mentioned, I had Captain Standish’s authority.

2027. Those agents you now speak of you had full confidence in?—Yes, I had certainly, or else I should not have used them.

2028. The other one is not here?—No, I can provide it to the Commission if desired. I sent one of the scouts or agents into the upper end of the Strathbogie country, he travelled in amongst the most likely places there; the other took in about the Wombat.

2029. Which Wombat, there is one at Strathbogie and one where the men were murdered?—Where the men were murdered. They also took in the heads of the King River and Devil’s River. I paid them 10s. a day, and they provided their own horses, and their own provisions. An agent named on that list, “Sherrington,” offered himself to Captain Standish, and was employed. This man returned in about a week with a cock-and-bull story that he had met Ned Kelly and Steve Hart in the Strathbogie ranges, and Ned Kelly was neatly dressed, his boots beautifully brushed, and that he was stuck all over with revolvers; that he compared watches with Sherrington, and assured him that his watch kept excellent time or something to that effect. Well, there were two or three search parties sent out upon this statement, but not the slightest trace of anything could be found. On January 2nd, 1879, Captain Standish issued warrants for the arrest of about twenty of the sympathizers; they were all arrested on the same day and remanded to Beechworth, and they were kept, most of them, in custody there till the 2nd April following.

2030. How long is that?—Two months and half. The next authentic information of the Kellys I remember was on the 10th January. I heard then that the outlaws were near Greta on the 6th and 7th of the same month, three or four days before. It was to stale to make any use of it, but at my suggestion a party of police were put at some crossings on the Kilfера Creek.

2031. Is that Ryan’s Creek?—Yes, it is called Ryan’s Creek. That was in the hope of getting a chance at the outlaws in the night. There were other points, too, which we watched by night, one in the neighborhood of Samaria, and another place on the line or boundary between Tatong and Kilfера runs.
and we watched all night. Mr. Hare, myself, and several police, with the usual result—the Kellys did not turn up. It was at this time that the Tarranguee wires were being interrupted. This place was close to Tarranguee, and we heard that the wires were being interrupted—messages being interrupted—and no one could explain how; and this was at the time when dynamite for blowing up the railway was first talked of. On the next day we heard authentic information that, on the night we were watching, the Kellys were seen in Chiltern.

The Chairman.—The Commission desire me to interpose at this stage, if it will be convenient for Mr. Wyatt to take his evidence at this stage.

Mr. Wyatt said he could remain to-day and the rest of the weak, if desired. He could do whichever was most convenient.

2035. To the Witness.—Then you can go on?—Two of them were seen in Chiltern. A party of police were sent up to Chiltern, and I went up myself to assist them, but there was no possibility of following the trace. Captain Standish, in his evidence (question 47), alludes to some horses being offered for the use of the gang near the Upper Murray. I was sent up to confer with the officer there, and I gave him what information I had on the subject. This was the day of the Jerilderie bank robbery. Mr. Hare has described various steps taken by the Victorian police after the robbery, and I was under the impression he was not there at the time at Benalla. On the 12th February, after the robbery, a man reported at Beechworth that he saw Dan Kelly near Taylor’s Gap, but I think the report was very doubtful. Detective Ward and two constables went up, but they could make nothing of it. For weeks after this, two or three weeks, the New South Wales police kept reporting that the Kellys were still in that country, in New South Wales. Mr. Hare was out with his watch party later in this month—I cannot give the date—watching Mrs. Byrne’s house, and about this time, or a little later, Captain Standish himself employed four agents in two different parties of two each. I do not know what arrangements he made with them, and I do not know how much he paid them, but they turned out to be worthless. We were at this time entirely dependent upon rumor for information, and we were then driven to fall back upon the Queensland trackers. Mr. Hare proposed this—that we should send for them, and Captain Standish was persuaded then to do it.

2036. Did he object before to employ them?—Yes, he had the offer before that, in December I think it was, immediately after the Euroa bank robbery, an offer of black trackers from the Queensland police.

2037. By the Queensland Government?—By the Queensland Commissioner of Police.

2038. Had you not black trackers in your employment from the first?—We had odds and ends of men, such as we could pick up.

2039. And Captain Standish declined the offer in the first instance?—Yes, he did. Mr. O’Connor and his trackers arrived at Albury on the 6th March 1879, and a party with the trackers was started out on the 11th. I was anxious that they should try this line of country a spoke of a while ago, and what is known to be Power’s route. I was with the party, and we examined every place for tracks, and found some tracks and went on them for a day, the whole day until nightfall, following them down to Holland’s Creek and past Fern Hill station. All this time we began to see they were not likely to be the outlaws, and we found next morning that they were the tracks of some stockmen searching the ranges for sheep. The tracking was done very well, and it was over a very difficult ground, stony, burnt; and the tracks were pretty old. Mr. Hare returned from the watch party at Mrs. Byrne’s while we were away.

2040. After being out twenty-five nights—was that the time he stated?—Yes; I refer to the same party. I cannot give particular dates without looking at my book. Again, on Wednesday, 16th April, I started again with Mr. O’Connor and the trackers, and some white police, on some imagined good information. We left our horses within a couple of miles or more of where we expected to strike the tracks that we heard of. We came cautiously into the ground, found the tracks right enough, and the circumstances were suspicious, looked promising, but in half a mile or so, perhaps a mile, the tracks led us to the house of a man named Morphy, whom I knew, and the tracks were his. He had found himself entangled in some fences with his horse, and rather than go round he tore up the fence; and this was what gave rise to the suspicion principally.

2041. Was he the man who is an overseer there?—I do not know.—Mr. John Morphy—he was then a selector on the King. We remained out until the 27th, eleven or twelve days, chiefly exploring the country.
We went up to the head of the King, both branches, and carefully examined all about, but found nothing whatever about the Kellys. We were called in by special message from Captain Standish. This was the last search party that I went out with; but still the search parties were kept going, and I am not aware that any party had any information about the Kellys, except in the case of the man Nolan, whom Mr. Hare spoke about, Mr. Hare left, and was relieved by Mr. Nicolson on the 3rd July. He was thoroughly done up, and then he confessed himself beaten. Mr. Nicolson took charge then from that date. I remember speaking to Mr. Nicolson almost as soon as he came, and saying to him—“I hope to heaven you are not going to continue this fooling any longer with the search parties.”

2042. That is the time Mr. Nicolson relieved Mr. Hare?—Yes, and his answer was that he had had enough of it. The first information after Mr. Nicolson’s arrival, I think, was on the 11th July.

2043. I was asking you the other day to describe the way in which Mr. Hare handed over the charge of the department on that occasion?—They were both perfectly satisfied. I do not remember exactly what happened; perhaps I was not present.

2044. On the 3rd July?—On he 3rd July; but Mr. Nicolson was perfectly satisfied that he had all the information he could get from Mr. Hare, no doubt of it. I never heard him express himself to the contrary.

2045. Are you going to pass over where you made the remarkable statement—“I hope to heaven you are not going to continue this fooling any longer; are you going to make any comment as to what the fooling was with search parties?—I will answer any question on the subject.

2046. Were you not going to say anything about that?—I did not mean to say anything. I thought it explained itself, but I am quite willing to explain what I meant.

2047. I think it would be well to explain?—Well, I looked upon sending out search parties—

2048. This had been continued for six months?—Seven or eight months, from the 27th October to the 3rd July. I considered it fooling to send such parties of police without some specific information, and I was nearly all the time urging against it. It is very expensive work. It harasses the men very, very much, nothing more so—the men going out without information and coming back without say discovery; and it knock up horses also. I could see no good in it, and I called it fooling.

2049. Then your opinion with reference to that was, that it was not likely to be successful?—That it was not likely to be successful; that it might go on for twenty years and never catch the Kellys. I was very anxious to know what Mr. Nicolson’s views were; he was commanding officer, and I would have to follow any plan he adopted.

2050. Had you previous to this advise Mr. Hare to stop it?—Frequently.

2051. Without good information?—I think he stated so in his evidence.

2052. Did you gather that opinion from the men?—No; from the observation of other search parties and my own experience.

2053. Did you gather the reverse from the men—did any sergeants or competent officer of the force even indicate that it would be desirable to keep the Kellys hunted, to keep them on the move?—No. I think, as far as I understood the temper of the police, they were altogether of my way of thinking; that is what I understood of the men. I was going on to say that, on the 11th of July, information was received that the Kellys were seen—two of them—near Sebastopol. I know that Mr. Nicolson consulted with Detective Ward and Senior-Constable Mullane on the subject; and I believe it was not thought prudent to act upon it, but to guard the banks which were being threatened particularly by the outlaws—the banks at Beechworth. On the same date, it was reported positively that Dan Kelly was seen near Doon, that is near Mansfield, nearly 80 miles away from Beechworth; and it was not until the 13th that the police were able to find out that this was without foundation. During the whole of this time reports of various kinds were coming in. They were very puzzling, and gave a great deal of trouble, and nearly all of them were entirely without any foundation whatever; and I think it was in consequence of this unsatisfactory state of things that Mr. Nicolson kept almost exclusively to working by private agents. We both of us did what we could to get hold of suitable men, who knew the Kellys, and who knew the country, and were good bushmen, and who could go in and out among the sympathizers without being suspected. Of course this was a very difficult matter to get such men.

2054. Speaking about the sympathizers, before you pass away from that, had they not a very large connection in the country, near relations?—Very large indeed, near blood relations and intimate friends.

2055. You are aware that Kelly’s grandmother, Quin, lives in the Strathbogie ranges, close to Euroa?—Yes.

2056. And that an aunt of theirs lives on the same range, at the saw-mills?—Yes.

2057. And that from Mansfield all about they have first cousins, and uncles and aunts all round the country. Is not Miller their uncle by marriage; he was one of the sympathizers shut up?—Yes.

2058. I want to draw your attention to this fact, that the relations are all through that country; not one but hundreds?—I would fix them at a hundred.

2059. Near relations?—No, but as thick as relations; as loyal to them as relations.

2060. And a large number of relations?—A very large number.

2061. Are not the Farrells on the Broken River nearly related to them?—Yes, and the Quins and...
2062. Is it not an immense connection?—Yes, it is an immense connection, they are all over the country, and also in new South Wales. They are at Dookie, at Lake Rowan, and some relations near Mount Look-out; there is a man who claims to be an uncle there. I had forgotten Mrs. Quin.

2063. I wanted to draw your attention to that, because it was in the immediate neighborhood?—Yes; I think Mr. Nicolson had about eight or nine different men off and on working as agents for him, some for pay and some out of goodwill. Their work extended as far as the Upper Murray right down to Benalla, Lake Rowan, Glenrowan, King River, and Beechworth; that is about all.

2064. Did you think it was a wise step to arrest the sympathizers; did you approve of that action?—No, I was always against it from the first.

2065. Did you remonstrate against it?—Yes, I spoke to Captain Standish, and probably to Mr. Hare too; I thought it an unwise step. It would have been a very good step if it had been lawful, and if we could have kept them right enough, but it was both unlawful and we could not keep them; I knew that.

2066. Did you think it would put the outlaws doubly on their guard?—I was more afraid it would breed bad blood with those men.

2067. And you would have so many people against you; and you could not convict them?—Yes, I think it did cause the outlaws trouble, but that is a matter of conjecture; still I was against it from the very first. Those agents that I have referred to had great difficulty in getting information, but what they brought in seemed to be very sure. They satisfied us that the Kellys were still in the neighborhood within an area of say ten miles square.

2068. Is that the neighborhood of Greta?—Greta would be about the centre of it. And that they were shy beyond measure, that they were trusting only a very few. I know that some of the agents were watching sympathizers’ houses for week together, but we had no luck in finding anything about them.

2069. Was your informant then, a man who is mentioned as “Foot” on this alias list?—It was.

2070. Had you confidence in that man previously?—Well, I knew he was a very slippery man.

2071. He may have been a slippery man, but you had full confidence in him up to that time?—No, I had not; still I was quite confident of the truth of the story told on this day.

2073. Was that a note you made at the time in that book?—Yes, I made that at the time. I will read my notes of that day:—“To Wangaratta, eleven a.m. to six p.m. Saw ‘Foot’, who reported seeing the gang on a certain road (named) at eight o’clock on the previous evening. There were five armed men standing together. They were all on foot. Arrangement made for search were altered afterwards.” That is the whole of my note at the time. I will enlarge upon that a little further now. At this time it was understood between all the officers that if any informant gave particulars, and could indicate the exact spot that he spoke about, it was not considered necessary that he should come and show the police the ground. This man, to my mind, indicated the spot so that we could easily find it. I communicated with Mr. Nicolson, and just before the train started—— 2074. By Mr. Nicolson,—In what way?—I communicated all of this, word for word, as I have stated.

2075. Where were you?—I was at Wangaratta at the time.

2076. By the Commission.,—By what means did you communicate?—By telegraph.

2077. Can we obtain the copy of that telegram?—Yes, they are all here.

2078. Will you see that the telegram is handed in; also the one from Mr. Nicolson to you?—Yes. Just before the train that I wanted to go by started for Benalla, I got a message from Mr. Nicolson, asking me to bring the man to the ground, to save delay in finding the tracks.

2079. That is, to bring the informant?—Yes. I had only ten minutes or a quarter of an hour.

2080. What time did the train leave?—About four in the afternoon. I had to start for it about four. I had about ten minutes to spare, to see the man. I saw him, but I could not get to speak with him. He was being shepherded by some people who, I think, suspected him, and I had to come away without bringing him. I arrived at Benalla at about half-past five or six; saw Mr. Nicolson and Mr. O’Connor, and though the same difficulty was started about the man’s not coming, still we agreed that a trial should be made of the tracks.

2081. Did you depend on your memory for the place that he indicated where he would meet you, or did you commit it to writing?—I committed it all to writing, and I can show the map or rough pen-and-ink sketch taken at the time. We decided to make a start about 1 o’clock in the night. I went home and had a little rest, and on returning to the barracks at 1 o’clock I found that Mr. Nicolson had changed his mind without consulting me, and of course naturally I felt a little annoyed at the time. I am still of the same opinion I was then, that an attempt ought to have been made. I was able to show Mr. Nicolson on the tracing made from this man’s statement the particular place, as I understood, where we should find the spot.

2082. Since then have you ever visited the place?—I have never visited the spot.
2083. Can you say if the description was of such a character that you would have any difficulty in finding it?—I have no doubt there would have been no trouble to anybody who knew the country well. Constable Ryan, who was in, said he would have no trouble in finding it.

2084. Was Mr. Nicolson’s objection the not being able to find it?—It was one of the objections. He stated various objections.

2085. I think he stated he thought the man who gave the information was thoroughly unreliable?—That was one of the objections.

2086. By Mr. Nicolson.—State all of them?—I cannot state all. One was the difficulty and uncertainty as to finding the spot, and another the difficulty of getting there without disturbing the friends, for we had to go right through the place of one; and another was the personal character of the informant.

2087. By the Commission (to the witness).—When did you arrive at Benalla?—Half-past five or six.

2088. You had a conversation with Mr. Nicolson and Mr. O’Connor?—I met them at the train.

2089. And the arrangement was then made to start?—I think it was seven o’clock before we made the arrangement—after a long conversation.

2090. After that, and showing the sketch, it was decided to leave at one?—Yes.

2091. Did Mr. O’Connor point out the necessity of being there before seven in the morning—before daylight?—Yes, it was decided to be there before daylight.

2092. All those objections could have been seen between five and seven?—I cannot say they were mentioned.

2093. You arrived at the decision by seven to start at one?—Yes.

2095. After that it was decided to start at one?—Yes.

2096. Do you know of your own knowledge whether anything between seven and one came to the knowledge of Mr. Nicolson or Mr. O’Connor to decide them not to start at one?—No; no new facts came in. 2097. You have heard the statement made by Mr. O’Connor. You came down from Wangaratta to Benalla, believing a party would be organized and you would accompany it to try and pick up those tracks?—Yes. When I came down I did not know what was going to be done.

2098. Mr. O’Connor has stated that he considered it was a chance thrown away, and upon his advice Mr. Nicolson did not send out the party?—Yes.

2099. I understood Mr. O’Connor to say that he advised Mr. Nicolson that it would be useless going out in that way, the reason being that if they did not get there at a certain time the tracks would be obliterated—

2100. By the Commission (to the witness).—It was September and pretty early light then; if you had started at one, about what time would you have arrived at the place?—We had only about fifteen miles to go.

2101. What time would you have arrived there?—We could go four or five miles an hour—that would be about four in the morning.

2102. Would that be daylight?—Before daylight.

2103. Then had the outlaws been there, would you have been able to have seen the tracks at that time?—There is no doubt we would have been able to have seen the tracks, if we found the tracks and knew they were the Kellys’ tracks. The difficulty would be to know whether we were on their tracks or the tracks of persons who came to see them.

2104. Was it horse or foot tracks you expected?—Foot tracks, with the supposition of picking up horse tracks a little way off—that they were dismounted, away from their horses waiting communication and appointment with some friends.

2105. Will you roughly indicate the place?—You cannot indicate the place without indicating the man. I can give a sketch of it.

2106. Was it any place near a man named Jacob Wilson’s place?—No.

2107. Was it near Tom Lloyd’s?—Yes.

2108. Wilson joins on to Tom Lloyd?—My recollection of this is that it was on the north side of Tom Lloyd’s.
2109. Do you know a man named Jacob Wilson?—Yes.
2110. Did you get information from him about the Kellys that they resorted to the neighborhood of Tom Lloyd’s residence?—Yes, we had information from him to that effect.
2111. Did he tell you he had found hobbles in that neighborhood?—Yes, under the range; I think under the Quarry Hill.
2112. Is the Quarry Hill near Tom Lloyd’s residence?—Yes.
2113. How far do you think would Lloyd’s house be from Wilson’s house?—Well, I never saw them.
2114. Would you be surprised to learn that they were adjoining?—No, not at all.
2115. It is that so, how far would that be from the locality indicated by the agent “Foot” from the place you were to meet them?—Not knowing the place, I cannot say exactly; but, taking the descriptions, I should say less that half-a-mile. From Foot’s descriptions, I should say that the outlaws were on one side of Tom Lloyd’s and Wilson on the other.
2116. Do you know if this place is called Lurg or Kilferan?—I am certain it is Lurg.
2117. It is commonly known as Kilferan, as it is on the Kilferan station?—Yes.
2118. Whatever way you describe it, I want it to be now known to the Commission that the position indicated on the occasion when you gave the information, and Mr. Nicolson did not go out, is about the same locality as where you got information that the Kellys were in the habit of meeting, or between that and Tom Lloyd’s house?—I will have to turn to the plan more particularly—in fact I should have had it before me from the first. I purpose putting it before the Commission now, but with the particular request that the press will take no further notice of it than to speak of it as a map.—[The witness handed in and explained the plan referred to.]—The point A is the point indicated as where the outlaws were. What is written on that was put down by me at the time from the lips of the informant.
2119. You said in your evidence that you did not visit the place?—I never saw the place, to my knowledge, before or since.
2120. I fancy you have, perhaps without being aware of it?—No; I never was on that line of road at any time. If I was ever, I would be six or seven and twenty years ago, but never since. I can speak assuredly of that.

[At that stage it was decided by the Commission to hear Mr. Wyatt’s evidence, in order to allow him to return to his official duties.]

The witness withdrew.

Alfred Wyatt, P.M., sworn and examined.

2121. By the Commission.—You are a police magistrate?—Yes.
2122. Stationed where?—At Benalla; that is my formal head-quarters, but I am scarcely there as much as at some other places in my district; for instance, at Seymour. If the Commission will permit me, I will read Captain Standish’s, evidence, the portions that I first come to. Captain Standish says, at question 26, “Mr.
Wyatt informed me that he was returning from Seymour or some town on the line of railway the night the bank was stuck up, and that as the train approached Faithfull’s Creek, near Euroa, they pulled up and saw the telegraph lines on both sides of the railway had been smashed up a couple of hundred yards. Question 27. They stopped the train to see that?—Yes; and Mr. Wyatt informed me that he got out and picked out a bundle of broken telegraph wires, and took them up with him. On arriving at the Benalla railway station Mr. Wyatt met Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir.” The statement of facts is this: on the 10th of December 1878, I was proceeding by the luggage train from Violet Town to Euroa, to hold a licensing meeting, which started, I believe, at about three. I will ascertain exactly, if I am allowed to look at a telegram which I have here.—[The witness did so.]—
This is the telegram I sent to Captain Standish, and it enables me to remember more exactly when I refer to that. The time was 4.40, it seems, by luggage train. Well, the train is still going slowly from Violet Town, when a man came along the foot-plate and spoke to me.
2123. At what position of the line?—Within 10 yards after we had started—while it was still going slowly, and a man came along and addressed me through the open window. His name was Watt, a telegraph repairer, from Benalla, came to me as he had seen me getting into the train, and was now desirous of speaking to me. He came forward and said, “Look here, the lines are down, and the queer feature of it is that the Government telegraph lines cross our railway telegraph line.”
2124. This was 4.40 at Violet Town?—Yes, I thought he had made a mistake about the last point, but I said—“All-right, keep a bright look-out on your side, and I will do the same on my side, and we will find where the line is broken.”
2125. You mean the ordinary line—the Government block line—was the other the railway line?—Yes;
we arranged to watch from different sides of the train, as I thought he would watch on the railway side while I would watch on the Government line, which I could see from where I was sitting. He went back on the foot-plate, and resumed his position wherever it was. I do not know whereabouts on the train, but he was to watch on the other side. When we came within sight of Faithfull’s Creek station I

Alfred Wyatt,
P.M.
12th April 1881.
2126. How far was that from Violet Town?—Three miles and three-quarters from Euroa—
[examining the time table]—and eight miles from Violet Town. I saw in the distance that the line was down. I leant out of the train to telegraph to the fireman or the engine-driver; I cannot tell on which side. Oh! Yes, in Victoria it is the fireman’s side, so that it would be the stoker. He saw my look at him, but he had already seen what had happened himself, and was slowing the train. While the train was slowing, the same person Watt came along the foot-plate again to me with a small handful of telegraph splicing wires—slender thin wires, used simply to splice one wire to another. He said to me, “Look here, Mr. Wyatt, I cannot mend this line; what must I do? I wish you would send a message through Mr. Gorman, at Euroa, to Melbourne for me.”

2127. Who was Mr. Gorman?—The station-master. “I said, “All right.” He said, “I shall want”—I said to him, anticipating his reply, as I had reckoned what he would want for repairs as I went along. I finished his sentence. “Six telegraph posts, thirty-six insulators, and a corresponding quantity of line wire,” and he said, “Yes, sir.” I said, “Cannot I help you, shall I get down to help you?”

2128. Had the train stopped?—No, it had never stopped. I said, “Cannot I help you?” He said, “No, I cannot repair this, line like this,” and I said, “All right then, I will give in your message.” The train never stopped but merely slowed, and my question was put to him with the object of getting down when it did stop, as I then expected it would. The fireman was watching him to see whether he would jump off the foot-plate. At the moment I had some misgivings about letting the man get down there, because I did not know there was any place near. I did not then know of the Faithfull’s Creek station there or any other place, and did not like to let the man down “nowhere” and did not know where he was to get assistance, but instantly afterwards I saw the Faithfull’s Creek station.

2129. Was the station at Faithfull’s Creek?—Faithfull’s Creek station is an out station of Mr. Younghusband’s of Faithfull’s Creek run, three miles and three-quarters from Euroa, and about 250 yards from the line at right angles to the road running to it. I, looking obliquely across, this being opposite, saw the station there, and saw it for the first time. I said, “Oh, it is all right, you can go, and I will take your message.” He telegraphed to the fireman, jumped off, and went down to the line. I found since that this was all inspected by the Kellys, from the place where they had the people stuck up at the time, and it appears that Watt a few minutes after that was walked up to the station in Mr. Joe Byrne’s custody, and that was the end of him for the day.

2130. Mr. Joe Byrne, do you mean one of the outlaws?—Yes, he was one of the outlaws. I went on to Euroa and held my licensing meeting. I should state here for the information of the Commission that all Euroa was that day attendant on my licensing meeting and a funeral. Those things occupied the whole community, so there were few persons about, they were all gone to those two occasions.

2131. What position is the court house, where you held your sitting?—The court house is from the station about half-a-mile. The bank that was robbed was about 210 yards from and in sight of the railway station. The court house was not in sight of the railway station.

2132. You said just now, this man jumped out and he was taken charge of by Byrne, the outlaw; was that fact known to you at the time?—No. It will come in and meet another part of my statement by-and-by.

2133. In reading your evidence at this point, any one would imagine you were a witness of the transaction and might wonder whether you fled from the outlaws?—I see, but I have now made it clear I think. Well, in going to the licensing meeting I passed under the windows of the bank while the Kellys were there, as I imagine from what I heard after.

2134. Just specify hours as closely as you can, what time was the licensing meeting?—The meeting was so short, I was not a visitor of an hour at the meeting in the court, the licenses were all granted unopposed.

2135. Was it between four and five?—I should imagine it was just about five. I then started back to the railway station, and when I have got twenty yards on my journey, I began to reflect upon the telegraph wire being down, and I came to the conclusion that it was doubtful whether it was due to whirlwind as I at first thought—and as I heard two other passengers said they thought when they landed first at the station—or whether it was some other cause that should be enquered into. I resolved to hire a buggy and go and see for myself. I went to the only hotel, Mr. Hart’s, who was then, recently, a purchaser of De Boos’s hotel, and asked for a buggy and horse.

2136. How far is the De Boos’s from the bank?—A good long distance, about a mile I should think.

2137. Are there two De Boos’s?—Yes. The hotel to where I went for the horse was a mile distant from the station and the bank, and the old Sydney road. It was the only thing I could do to get a horse and trap. I asked Mr. Hart for a buggy and horse. Mr. Hart said to me, “I have got no horse, our horse is turned out in the paddock and could not be got. I have no horse at all.” He then said, “Well, there is an old sort of cart horse that takes the goods out.” “Put him in,” I said, and they did. I started with this buggy and horse, but soon found that I could not get the old horse into a continuos trot.

2138. What direction were you going?—I went first down, expecting to find a lane parallel with the railway and in sight of it, but came to a house—a farm of the elder Mr. De Boos’s abutting upon the railway, and found that there was no access that way.

2140. And in the direction of the Faithfull’s Creek Station?—And in the direction of the Faithfull’s Creek station. I went along there till at last it struck me to look at my watch. I took my watch out, and pulled up, and came to the conclusion that, with the horse I have got, it would be absolutely impossible for me to go and come back, and catch the train, and keep an appointment the next day at Avenel, which was essential to be kept. If I had not kept it, all the licenses would have been lost at that place.

2141. Avenel would be away down the line nearer to Melbourne?—Yes, further up the line towards Melbourne.

2142. And away from Euroa and Faithfull’s Creek station?—Yes. I therefore was turning my horse around in this narrow lane when the wheels locked. There was much timber about, and I could not get around that—[[illustrating the position by drawing a curve shaped like an S]]—and I then tried another branch of the “S,” and it was just getting round when the wheels locked again, and I was preparing for an upset and to jump out when a man rode up and said, “Is this the way to Faithfull’s Creek station?”

2143. Were you in the habit of carrying firearms?—I was in the habit, but I did not happen to be armed that night. I had, sometime before that thought, in the event of my meeting the Kellys, it would be more politic for me to meet them unarmed. I never looked up, for I was watching the wheel, and I said without looking up, “Cannot tell you,” and the man uttered some obscene expressions to me, and I looked up and saw him, but did not recognise him as anybody I knew.

2144. What hour was that?—I cannot tell you except by inferences; you will find presently when I give something else, a datum which will give you probably the hour of this. The man rode towards Faithfull’s Creek station, and I resumed my journey back to De Boos’s to give up the vehicle.

2145. You got round the curve then?—Yes, and without an upset, and I came back to the railway station. When there, the first question I asked Mr. Gorman was, “Is Watt come back?”

2146. You never told us whether you spoke to Mr. Gorman before you left?—No, I forgot that, and I ought here to state what I omitted to state in its due order, that when I arrived at the Euroa station with Mr. Watt’s message I delivered it to Mr. Gorman very fully. I told Mr. Gorman also that the line was down by whirlwind. I said that because I thought so myself, and because I heard two passengers discussing it, and they both agreed that that was the cause of it. I heard one of them say to the other, “No man could have pulled those wires down; it would take a bullock team to do it like that.” When I got back to the station from my ineffectual journey, I said to Mr. Gorman, “Has Watt come back?” He said to me “No.” I said, “How is that; it is only three miles and three-quarters, and he could not repair the line himself?” and I said, “What could keep him? Has he not come on to report fully to you about it?” I then said, “Mr. Gorman, there is something up; you must give me express permission to ride upon the engine, and stop the train and get down and examine the line. I do not believe it was a whirlwind now, because I recollect there was not a single tree or shrub injured anywhere about.”

2147. Will you fix the hour of that conversation?—I will come to that; but you can judge by the facts that at that time the train was nearly due from Longwood to Euroa and Benalla, which I believe started at 6.50 in the evening, that is the hour I have here in my telegram to Captain Standish [looking at a paper].—It was still good light. I particularly enjoined Mr. Gorman to tell no one of what I had suspected, and said to him, “To anybody who enquires answer, ‘It looks like and whirlwind.’”

2148. What did you suspect—you have not told us?—I suspected the Kellys were there.

2149. You said you only suspected there was something up?—Yes; I meant the Kellys. When I came back, the idea only came into my mind after I left that man in the lane. He never raised any suspicions in my mind at the time, but it occurred to me on my journey home after that man had met me. Afterwards I came to the conclusion, and remained in the conclusion for nearly a year, that the person I had met in the lane was not of the Kelly gang, but was a confederate. I thought it was not one of the gang, because I had an opportunity of seeing the photographs of all four, and concluded it was neither of them, so I felt sure it was a confederate, because I learnt that he never was arrested by the Kelly gang when he got to the Faithfull’s Creek station, and I presume he went there as he enquired. Afterwards I learned that no man of that description was arrested by the Kelly gang from Mr. McCauley, the station manager of Faithfull’s Creek, and from Mr. Scott, the banker, and others who were in the custody of the gang at Faithfull’s Creek at the time.

2150. At what particular time of the evening did it strike you about the Kellys?—I cannot fix the time. I can fix the place. I was on my journey from De Boos’s hotel, now Hart’s hotel, to the railway station, a journey which I made on foot of about a mile. I ought to explain that there are two De Boos’s hotels; one formerly kept by Mr. Boos, senior, now Hart’s, on the Sydney road; the other more lately kept by Mr. De Boos, junior, and now kept by Sutherland, opposite the railway station, and nearly next the bank.

2151. Did Hart express any surprise at your anxiety or your asking for a trap?—No; I did not express any surprise myself at that time; I thought it was whirlwind, and it was really rather a matter of scientific curiosity. I was going, I told him, to see the line which was down, to examine it, because it was such an unusual appearance for the line. I have never seen anything like it, though I had often seen wires down.

2152. At this time you had no suspicion?—No, my suspicion occurred when I was walking from De Boos’s hotel back to the railway station; and from the moment I found Watt did not come back, then my suspicions were converted into conviction. I said to myself, “It was the Kellys that did this damage,” and that is the reason I requested Gorman’s specific authority to ride on the engine and stop the train—a most strong and unusual measure—and get down and examine it. I rode on the engine, and when we came to Faithfull’s Creek station there was still good daylight. The engine was slowed and I jumped down. I rode on the fireman’s side, and that was the side on which the railway telegraph of one wire is, the Government telegraph of four wires being on the other side of the line. I got down, ran along the bank to where I thought the broken wire would be, picked it up, and saw instantly that it was cut and not broken. I instantly twisted off—that is, as “instantly” as I could with a number of twists of a very ductile and malleable wire—six inches of wire and put it into my pocket. I ran along then—I must explain the situation. There is a culvert there; the place where I found the cut wire was there—[illustrating his meaning by means of a drawing]—crinkled back by its own recoil. There is a post here, about ten or twelve yards from the culvert. I ran past that post and twenty or thirty yards towards Melbourne before I found the other end of the same wire, leading down the bank into the water that was standing in the cutting which had been made in the formation of the line to give stuff for the line. I took hold of the wire, ran it along, and fished it up to the insulator at the end of it, about twenty yards from the post. Then in a similar manner I twisted off the insulator of the wire on the Melbourne side. It showed the cut in the same way. If I had known that I was going to be examined to-day, I would have brought with me the identical wire.

2153. Those were two clean cuts?—Yes, I put that in my pocket. I then ran across this fence and underneath the culvert to go to the other line under the culvert. I found an enormous tangle of wires some distance under, and there I found the guard of the train who had got down on the other side and was come. I said, “Run out the ends of those wires immediately,” and I laid hold of the larger line and ran out four wires separately so as to come to the end. I found every one of the lines cut and not broken. “Look,” I think I said, “it is clear the line is cut. I believe the Kellys are about. Say not a word to the passengers or any one, but say as I told the driver, the fireman, and Gorman, to say that it looks like a whirlwind.” I got on to the train. The passengers looked at me, and enquired, “What is the matter?”; and I gave that answer, “The line is down, and it looks like a whirlwind.”

2154. Was the guard of the train made acquainted with the facts?—It was the guard I met under the culvert.

2155. What did you do when you came to Violet Town?—When I came to Violet Town I spoke to the station-master there, whose name I cannot remember but whose face I can. I said to him instantly, “The line is cut; do not tell anybody, the passengers or anybody else, but send them word to Melbourne.”

2156. How could he?—Very easily, as I did myself afterwards. I am not quite certain whether I told him to send round by way of Deniliquin and Albury, but I knew he could do it. I presume he knew. I do not think I told him that, but I assume he would be able to do it. They had been fiddling about in Melbourne, but never tried that expedient I refer to, to send messages.

2157. That is hearsay?—Yes; I cannot say whether I told him what way to do it, but I told him.

2158. You said, “communicate with Melbourne immediately”?—Yes.

2159. How many miles is it about to Benalla from Violet Town?—16 miles.

2160. How long was the train stopped when you were examining the wires?—Less than five minutes.
The train was stopped less than five minutes while we were examining the wires. I ran very quickly indeed. I felt really that much depended on time.

2161. What hour do you fix at that?—As nearly as possible seven.

2162. Was it seven o’clock when you examined those wires on your return to Benalla. From subsequent hearing of the Kellys’ movements, where would the Kellys have been when you were examining the wires?—Still at Faithfull’s Creek station, looking at and inspecting me while I was inspecting the wires.

2163. Would they have seen you if they left at eight o’clock?—I know they did see us; they saw us, and were very much perturbed, and thought it was “the traps,” they said. I arrived at Benalla. I immediately desired to find the policeman, and while searching about I saw Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir in the distance standing at the railway carriage door. I went to them and said, as nearly as possible, these words—“Nicolson, the line is cut, all five wires; four of the Government wires and one of the railway line are cut, not broken.
The Kellys are about. Now you know as much as I know, and what you know yourself, will it alter your plans?”

2164. How did you know about his plans?—I did not know his plans, but I was desirous he should stop. I saw them starting off, and I was desirous that one or the other should stop. From what Mr. Sadleir has stated—and his evidence is given with such exactness and good tone that where I differ from him I prefer to be corrected by him—he has supplied personal facts, which show there must have been a longer time occupied in the interview than I remember at this date, but what I have stated I am absolutely certain about.

2165. I was impressed with the idea in Captain Standish’s evidence that you did all you could to prevent those gentlemen proceeding on their journey?—I would not go so far as that. I was desirous for one of them to stop, but I felt they had more information to form a judgment on than I had, and should be naturally influenced by that, as well as by what I told them; but I expected up to the last moment that one would stay; and when they jumped into the train, and I saw that both had gone—

2166. When you gave the information to Mr. Nicolson, what remark did he make?—In answer to my words to him, he said, after reflecting a few moments—“We know what it means, Mr. Wyatt, it will not influence our plans;” and they got into the railway train.

2167. He did not say “Pooh, pooh”?:—I am glad you have mentioned that; that was a point I wanted very expressly to correct. I wish to state to you that Captain Standish’s statement in his evidence that Mr. Nicolson pooh-poohed my communication is very inaccurate. Mr. Nicolson did not at all pooh-pooh, but he seemed to reflect and weigh the facts, and then come to a conclusion upon his knowledge of all the circumstances. I knew that his knowledge was far greater than mine, and I never for a moment——

2168. How did you know that?:—His position made him infinitely more so.

2169. Did he tell you?:—Not a word.

2170. He did not say he had information?:—No, but I knew his information must be far greater than mine of the whole facts, and therefore it would have been ridiculous for me to have sat in judgments as to whether he was going or staying. I expected he had far more important information.

2171. Did you see Mr. Nicolson go to the railway guard and speak to him before he left?:—I did not, but I have no doubt he did, and the reason, why he got no information from the railway guard was possibly this, perhaps he did not know Mr. Nicolson personally, and I had expressly cautioned the railway guard, the driver, and the engineman to give no information as to what they had seen excepting to say—“It looked like a whirlwind.”

Mr Nicolson.—It was Mr. Sadleir who went to the guard.

The Witness.—I wish to make one brief remark with regard to what Mr. Sadleir said about excluding him from the room. I believe what he says is true, but there is this explanation, there was no room available but that, and there were some other persons going to come in, including some ladies from their own room, together with everybody else who may have been coming in, including, it appears, Mr. Sadleir; but I did not see Mr. Sadleir, and was quite unconscious he was amongst those I was excluding. I would, of course, have invited him gladly to give his advice if I had seen him.

2172. You say you invited Mr. Nicolson into the room?:—I had forgotten it, but I remember it now, because I remember having to exclude the ladies from their own room.

2173. Then you took Mr. Nicolson into a room at the railway station, for the purpose of conveying this information to him secretly?:—I suppose I did.

2174. Then you really felt in your mind that the information you were conveying was of very great importance?:—I did feel that it was of very great importance, and when Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir both left in the train. I felt rather nonplussed, because I expected one of them would go back with me to Benalla to my hotel, and receive full details of all the information I had to give, especially the fact so important to them, that Watt had not returned.

2175. What length of time does the train stop there?:—Fifteen minutes.

2176. But some little time would relapsed without you noticed Mr. Nicolson?:—Yes, I did not find them immediately, I think they could not be found, but I was not looking for them; I was looking for a policeman of some sort and could not see any one for a long time, and I recollect thinking of going off to Benalla proper by a trap, when I by chance saw them both standing by a railway carriage door. Whether they have only arrived just then I do not know, but I did not see them for a long time, and I imagine I was not in conversation with them for more than five minutes altogether.

2177. Did you tell Mr. Nicolson that Watt, the line repairer, had not been seen after?:—No, that is one of the facts I would have communicated if I had had the opportunity of seeing him afterwards; I am certain I did not remember to tell him that.

2178. Did not that impress you as one of the most important features of the whole case, the non-return of Watt?:—Yes, that was one of the things that let me to come to the conclusion that something was wrong, that was why I said to Gorman ”There is something up,” when I knew the man was not back, because I knew so many hours, from four to seven, he had been away, and was quite enough opportunity to walk the three and three-quarter miles, there and back to the station master’s, where it was his duty to report.

2179. Did you convey to Mr. Nicolson that you would like, if time permitted, to give fuller information?:—I cannot give you any further information as to what I said or did, and I would rather trust to Mr. Sadleir for that.

2180. But he cannot state what was in your mind?:—I can only say that the interview was too short to admit any information about surrounding circumstances; and I feel sure I did not communicate that Watt had not returned; and I am the more sure of that as I find I did not communicate it to Captain Standish after I went to Benalla proper, to my hotel, a mile and a half from the railway station.

2181. Did you walk?:—I think that one thing and another made me miss the cab, and I walked, so I do not think I got to my hotel till past eight considerably; but I cannot be certain as to time just there.

2182. Did you ask the station-master at Benalla to telegraph to Melbourne?:—No. I did not there, and I had a reason for that, nor did I send any message to Melbourne for the distinct reason. I at first thought of doing so, but afterwards thought to myself, “Well, Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir can do what they think right—they have not thought it right to do that, and I do not like to fire a shot over their heads to their superior in a manner that may look like opposing my judgment to theirs.” I remember distinctly thinking that, and that was the reason. After I got to the hotel I remained for more than an hour before I took any step; but after Sadleir both left in the train. I felt rather nonplussed, because I expected one of them would go back with me to Benalla to my hotel, and receive full details of all the information I had to give, especially the fact so important to them, that Watt had not returned.

much reflection I at last came to the conclusion that in such a case etiquette must go to—some other place. I felt it was important to communicate the information straight away to Captain Standish, therefore I resolved to do so. I went across to the telegraph station, which was within fifty or sixty yards of my hotel, a mile and a quarter from the railway station, and said to them, “You know the line is down;” and I had a conversation with Mr. Saxe, and said, “You know about it by now, can you send a message to Melbourne; I suppose you can send round by the Sydney side?” and he said, “Yes.” “Well,” I said, “can you call Captain Standish while I go up to the police and find what can be done? That will give you the time to put yourself in communication with Captain Standish in Melbourne, while I go to the police office and find what can be done in the way of sending a special train, or what.”

2183. You went to the police quarters?—Yes.

2184. How near is that?—That will come in the next moment. I therefore, leaving them with that object, went to the police quarters, which are about 30 yards from the telegraph station in old Benalla. I saw Sergeant Whelan then in charge in the absence of Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir, and told him all the facts, and asked him whether he had power to send a special train. I cannot remember what answer he made to me; but, without remembering his words, I know that I went away with the impression that I could not get a special train for some time, at least for some hours.

2185. You have informed us that you gave Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir information of the cut wires, and it was probable the Kellys were there?—Yes.

2186. And that by their action you concluded they had made other arrangements, and they went on?—Yes.

2187. Now I want to ask, when you gave the information to Whelan, was he impressed with the accuracy of your belief that the Kellys were there?—Yes, very strongly.

2188. Do you believe the same statement you made to him impressed him that the Kellys were there?—Yes; he believed all that I said, and shared in my impression.

2189. That the Kellys were there?—Not that they were there—at Faithfull’s Creek station—for I did not know that then, but that they had done that to the wires.

2190. Can you fix the hour?—The hour at which I went to the telegraph station, and thence to the police, must have been, as nearly as possible, 9.40 p.m. After the conference with Mr. Whelan I sat down, and wrote on a sheet of paper a message to take down to the railway, of which I now have a copy from the Telegraph Department; if you have not that I will read it:—“9.45 p.m.” That was the moment of its despatch. “Captain Standish, Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne. Going from Violet Town to Euroa, at about 4.40 p.m., by luggage train, was informed telegraphic lines out of order. Found both lines (Government and railway) down at 97 miles from Melbourne, Faithfull’s Creek road crossing, by bridge under the railway. On return, at 6.50, from Euroa, rode on engine, stopped train, get down and examined. Found all wires (4 of Government line and 1 of railway line) cut through with powerful nippers, and both lines dismounted, one for 300 yards, and the other for 200, Met Nicolson and Sadleir at Benalla station, going to Wangaratta. Informed them, and showed them the cut ends of one wire, which I had twisted off and put in my pocket. Nicolson said, ‘I know what it means; it won’t alter my plans.’ The line cannot be repaired before to-morrow noon.” That was the mistake of mine; the line was repaired by Mr. Gorman soon after daybreak, and very energetically. The reason why I came to the conclusion that the line was cut with nippers, and not with a tomahawk, was this—the two marks on the wires are parallel; the two cuts on the opposite sides of the wire are parallel to each other, but if the blows had been made with a tomahawk, they would not have been parallel, but would have been six inches of the insulator, that the manner of doing it was this—that the person climbed up the telegraph-post, lifted off the wire, and when it was down swagging against the post—if he cut it with a tomahawk, he cut it in this manner [explaining his meaning by gesture]—but I think that impossible, and that nippers must have been used.

2193. Then you and he must be consulting as to the desirability of starting a special train?—Yes. I asked him whether he would send a special train down by me. I said I would take one if he could send it. He found he could not, and I waited sometime to learn his answer. He also informed me he would send a message to Mr. Nicolson. After sitting in my hotel until eleven o’clock, I went to the police station again to learn what had been done. I found somewhere between eleven and twelve—and I cannot now remember exactly when—that Mr. Whelan had got authority to send a special train, I cannot now remember from whom. I asked him who would go with it, and he said he really did not know one—would I go? I said I would be most happy to go, but I said, “I cannot undertake a pursuit that will last longer than the night, because I must be at Avenel at eleven o’clock, or all the licenses will be forfeited. He said, “Will you go then?” I said, “I will." I think it was nearer to twelve than eleven, because I have some reason to believe his answers were not received from Captain Standish or Mr. Nicolson till nearly twelve.

2194. It was stated at the time, to help your memory, that accurate information arrived in Benalla by the up train, the train from Euroa, that came after you; do you know whether Sergeant Whelan had that?—A constable came up by that train.

2195. Could Whelan had known that?—I do not know. I think he got his authority and permission from Captain Standish before that.

2196. Do you know of your own knowledge that the police at Benalla got authentic information that night that the Kellys had stuck up Faithfull’s Creek?—Whelan told me. The first information he got was by Captain Standish’s telegram.

2197. What time?—A little before twelve. Captain Standish also informed me himself a long time ago that he got my message before he got Mr. Gorman’s message a few minutes; the message I sent at 9.45. Unfortunately, he was out on some occasion and did not get the message till long after it arrived in Melbourne, and he got Mr. Gorman’s message when Scott and the other captives came back, ten minutes after my message. The moment he got these two he telegraphed to Mr. Whelan, he told me, and I remember the words of the telegram, roughly speaking. They were—“Bank at Euroa stuck up. You have now a good case. Go ahead,” That was the first information he received officially. I do not know anything about the constable.

2198. Do you know that the police in Benalla did get information?—No.

2199. Did you see the constable?—No.

2200. Did Whelan say the constable came and told him?—I cannot remember that. In regard to the constable I will state this. The constable chanced to be absent on duty from Euroa at the time the robbery went on.

2201. That is hearsay?—I have learned it, not from the constable, for I never saw him, but I cannot remember from whom; but I am certain of that, that is the fact. I heard it from so many quarters.

2202. Did Whelan inform you that he had orders to despatch a special train and ask you to go by it, before or after he received the word from Captain Standish of the bank being stuck up?—After the sticking up the bank. My impression is that Whelan received the authority to send the special train somewhere about the same time, within a few minutes of the other message that I have referred to, from Captain Standish.

2203. That did not come in the same message?—No.

2204. We may suppose that Whelan’s being instructed to send a special train was in consequence of the information conveyed to Captain Standish?—By him he sought liberty to send it.

2205. Did Whelan obtain the order in consequence of the information that you had conveyed to him that he had sent to Captain Standish?—Yes, undoubtedly, and that only. I am positive of that.

2206. And it was not in consequence of the bank robbery at Euroa?—No, it was not. Perhaps it is rather too much to say that, but I feel absolutely certain in my own mind that the only thing that induced him to send that was my other information, and my own consent to go with it.

2207. At all events, he asked for the permission before he heard of the robbery?—Long before. With regard to his message to Mr. Nicolson, I should state this, that Whelan informed me that he delayed the sending of that message till nearly twelve o’clock for this reason; Mr. Nicolson could not possibly get the message till he was at Albury, and could not arrive there to get it; therefore he kept it back, after I told him, till a reasonably short time before the time when Mr. Nicolson could get to Albury. I then went back and prepared myself to go with this special train.

2208. Did you arm yourself?—I did. I then meant business, whatever it was. I went back and made all preparations, and came back with the man on to the station. I should state we were delayed a time, that provoked my indignation very much indeed, by two or three accidents. One was, as I considered, a want of rehearsal in the task of putting horses into the trucks; the other was a blunder of the part of the railway authorities. They brought up the trucks in such a manner that it made it exceedingly difficult to put horses in. It was an old-fashioned truck with a convex roof, very low indeed. The eaves of the carriages so low that there was only just space to go in, and the roof was half cut away to let them go in—[explaining the same].—There were two horses of the party that could not be got in any way at all, by pushing, hauling, or enticing, till at last this device was resorted to—Constable Johnson, a very energetic and keen man, took of the saddle, jumped on the horse’s bare back, and rode him at the thing, and lay down on its back like an acrobat, and rushed him at it, and that was the only way he was got in—we were delayed at least half-an-hour that way. I rode outside the engine, on one side.

2209. At what time did you start from Benalla?—I have a memorandum of the time [looking at a book.] No, I have no memorandum of the hour at which we started, but I can recollect as a matter of fact we did not start till half-past one. It was bright moonlight. I rode on the frame of the engine outside, with a very powerful field-glass, to keep a watch at the driver’s side that the line was not taken up, about which I had some little apprehension.

2210. Do you remember who was with you?—No one on the engine.
2211. Who were the party?—Sergeant or Constable Johnson, Detective Ward, and number of troopers—I cannot remember how many. They took a load in a large van like a goods van, or like an open horse track. When we were coming in the spot—the Faithfull’s Creek station—I changed my side, and went round the end of the engine and watched the wires. It was then becoming an imperfect light from the great haze that spread over the moon. That had made me anxious.

2212. You had travelled slowly?—No, at a very high rate. I had never travelled so high before—sixty miles an hour at some parts. I have no doubt that when we came to the spot I told the driver to slow.

2213. Let me call your attention to what you have not mentioned—did you pass Violet Town again?—

Yes.

2214. Did you get any information there?—No, we did not stop for any; we went straight through. I got off the engine, and went to where I found Detective Ward, and said to him, “Get down here, Ward, and take note of the exact spot to which you will have to return to on the line with the horses,” because we could not put down horses here. He did so, and I got up into the carriage again, expecting him after me, but there was some little delay of a minute or two, and then somebody came to me and said, “There is somebody coming across the paddock, and they are singing out.” I looked out and saw two men coming, and I thought they were in their shirts, and that they had been stripped naked, and had no other clothing; but when they came near I discovered they had white silk coats on. The light was imperfect then. I then was told it was Mr. McCauley, the manager of the station, and some other person, and that they wished me to get down. I got down and went with him up to the station with Detective Ward. I found from the time at which we arrived there and the time at which it will be daylight there would be plenty of time to take short depositions, and get back to Euroa and send the men back before daylight.

2215. You would be down by daylight?—Yes; I concluded there would be good room to take some short depositions.

2216. About what?—About the men that had been there—the Kellys. I, therefore, took the depositions of Mr. McCauley and another person, I do not know whom, to be forwarded to Captain Standish for his use.

2217. Did the train stop all this time?—The train waited; and as soon as that was done, which did not occupy more than twenty-five minutes or half-an-hour. I got back to the train, went rapidly to Euroa and put the horses out there. While that was being accomplished, something occurred which made me remember that I had noticed on the way down that it was not improbable that there might be a difficulty about the commanders of the expedition—Detective Ward and Senior-constable Johnson. What I have noticed was this, that Sergeant Johnson was very eager, and so positive in his notions of what should be done, that I feared, if Ward should not agree with him, he would not be quite subordinate.

2218. What were Johnson’s opinions?—I cannot remember what they were now.

2219. What was the eagerness—eagerness to get away and attack the Kellys or what?—I cannot say. He is a forward eager man rather.

2220. Was he eager to get away?—That would not constitute him a forward man—a difficult man to control.

2221. You are leaving us to form our own opinion?—I must do so; it is only my own opinion, for I cannot recall the facts that led me to form that opinion.

2222. Did you ever in your whole experiences find the constables or sergeants or subordinates reluctant to pursue the Kellys?—Never at any moment. I am glad that question has been asked—not one of them.

2223. Was it your opinion that Johnson was only too anxious to get at the Kellys?—Yes, too anxious.

2225. Had you either of the Victorian black trackers in your party?—I am told so; I do not remember seeing either of them. I believe he was there; but I do not remember noticing or speaking to him till a later stage. I remember the question arose in my mind.

2226. I will have to ask the question distinctly;—From the moment that you told them, and they had authentic information in Benalla, by the telegram of Captain Standish, of the Euroa bank robbery, up to the time you saw them, and had to do with them, did the police show the greatest amount of eager desire to get at them in the speediest time?—They showed the greatest possible eagerness.

2227. Did the eagerness exist in the minds of the police from the time you informed Whelan of what you had seen between Benalla and Euroa?—It always existed.

2228. At all times?—At all times. I have been a great deal with the police. I have had a great deal of confidential communication with them; but the only person I was in contact with that evening was Whelan.

2229. Mr. Whelan also showed the same desire to capture the Kellys?—Yes; certainly.

2230. Did he show an extraordinary desire to take steps on that immediate information?—He did.

2231. You brought us to the time you got out the horses at Euroa?—While they were getting those horses out, Detective Ward came to me and said something to me of a guarded nature, the exact words of which I cannot now remember, but, after some remarks, he asked me the question whether I thought it would be judicious of him to start immediately they got on the tracks, or to wait for Superintendent Nicolson. The question, put to me by Detective Ward was the first intimation to me that Mr.
Nicolson knew of our being there, and could at all be on the spot. In that manner I was struck with the development of the same impression that had arisen in my mind on the way down; that there might be some conflict between the two heads of the expedition—Ward and Johnson. At that time I did not know which was the superior authority under whose charge it might be; I thought under Ward’s charge, but I did not know; but I did know that frequently between the detective service and the other active service there is sometimes a little jealousy as to control. After reflecting, I said words of this sort to Ward—Well, it depends upon how soon you expect Mr. Nicolson down.” He said to me—“Oh, he is coming down; he has had a telegram,” and he is on the way down.” And I said—“Well, it depends upon how many hours he will delay your going in pursuit.” Ward said—“Well, I cannot tell how many hours.” Then I said—“I must put it thus: if he will delay you only a few hours, say two, perhaps only three, I think you would be wise to stay for these reasons, viz., three of those men (meaning the Kellys) are upon grass-fed horses”—I had learned that from the people of the station—“and only one of them is shod; on the other hand, your horses are all corn-fed, and in fine stable condition, and they are all shod, and in a twelve or twenty—four hours’ pursuit, I do not think it signifies much, if you get well on the tracks, if you are two or three hours behind, compared with having your superior officer with you.” Also looking to what I felt, fearing there might be jars between the two men.

2232. At what time did you get back to Euroa?—I can give you the means of finding it; it was before daylight, because my object was, and I remember feeling very pleased indeed that I had got down before daylight, while it was only a hazy moon, so that the men would be able to get on the tracks the moment they could see them. I remember it was before daylight from that. I think we stayed at Faithfull’s Creek station about twenty-five minutes or half-an-hour. I do not think more than ten or twelve minutes in running from Faithfull’s Creek to Euroa.

2233. Then you would be there at three in the morning?—That is just about where we were, I think, and I imagine that is when it began daylight. That is the advice I gave Ward, and feeling it was rather grave advice to give, I then said—“Whatever you resolve, I will now go back by this train to Benalla, wait there for Mr. Nicolson, come with him in our special, and possess him of all the information that I have to enable him to get straight on to the horse that you must have waiting at the fence of the Faithfull’s Creek station and join in the pursuit the moment he comes down.” My impression was we should have him there between five and six.

2234. You stated when you got to Faithfull’s Creek you took depositions which did not occupy more than half-an-hour. In those depositions did you take down in writing, or were you told how long prior to that the Kellys had gone?—Yes, I was told that, but I forgot now; those depositions are in Captain Standish’s department.

2235. How many hours before you got there were the Kellys gone?—My impression is that I was told what harmonized with what was in the papers after that, that they left about seven or eight o’clock, but my impression is not clear.

2236. That would be four or five hours?—From seven or eight o’clock to twelve o’clock, and on to three o’clock. Having given that advice, I started back, I believe, immediately by the special train to Benalla. At Benalla I found, in some way I now cannot remember, I suppose from some enquiry at the station, the telegraph office, that Mr. Nicolson would not be down as soon as I expected. I found I would have an hour and half to go back to my hotel and lie down or do anything I could. I did that, and came back in good early time before the train arrived.

2237. What train?—With Mr. Nicolson, and I believe, but cannot now remember certainly, that Mr. Nicolson went back into Benalla proper for some time. Either then, or on the subsequent journey down with him from Benalla to Euroa I told him all I knew. We sent together in the second special train. Oh, I find—[looking at a diary]—that Mr. Nicolson arrived from Wodonga at Benalla at 6.30. I started with him after some delay, but we were again detained at Violet Town. That reminds me that the enquiries I made made me understand that the delay at Violet Town was owing something due to the block system that we could not get the line between Violet Town and Euroa. We had to wait a very exasperatingly long time—I am not sure an hour. The result was we did not get down to Euroa till nine o’clock, though we started at 6.30. When we arrived we found the black trackers had run the track back towards Strathbogie for a mile and a half, then round westward.

2239. Whom did you see when you arrived?—When we arrived, the first thing I noticed standing at the side of the railway, was a black man, who, I suppose, was a black tracker; and I remember thinking to myself, “How did that man come—did he come with us or since?”

2240. You said when you arrived at nine o’clock they had run the tracks?—The one who told me was, I think, Mr. McCauley, the station manager.

2241. Had the police gone out?—Yes.

2242. They had come back at nine?—Yes, a black tracker with the police party.
2243. They did not await the arrival of the superintendent?—No, they had made that preliminary expedition; they had gone up to Faithfull’s Creek and had picked up the track there. The police party, with the black tracker, had gone from Euroa back to Faithfull’s Creek and had picked up the track and run it in the manner I have described. They were found to be at fault near the railway station, and were searching for the lost track again when we arrived again, so that no time was really lost.

2244. Was Constable Johnson at the railway station when you arrived?—I do not think I saw any of the police there.

The witness withdrew.

WEDNESDAY, 13TH APRIL 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
J. Gibb, Esq., M.L.A.

Alfred Wyatt, P.M., further examined.

The Witness.—I found yesterday night in a pocket-book of 1878, at the end of the pocket-book, a separate memorandum, by myself, which I have no doubt was made about the time of the Kelly bank robbery at Euroa—“Luggage train from Violet Town to Euroa at 4.4—from Euroa at 4.37.” I find also this memorandum added to the end, in pencil—“Watt dropped about 4.30.—had not appeared at Euroa at 6.50.” That gives the accurate times, no doubt, taken from the time-table at the time.

2245. The 6.50 would be the time you came back to the railway station from Hart’s hotel?—Yes.
2246. After being in the lane?—Yes; when I got back to the railway station. I find I have a little correction to make there. I think I stated yesterday the train was due. That might lead to a misapprehension. I meant “overdue.”—I remember speaking to Mr. Gorman for a quarter of an hour, and it was during that time that Mr. Benjamin Gould made that threat, of which you are no doubt aware, to Mr. Scott, the bank manager.

Mr. Gorman at the interview informed me that he knew that Gould was supplying sausages and food on permanent character to the outlaws, but he did not know where the outlaws were.

2247. Did you communicate that to the police officers?—Yes. I did.
2248. That Gould at this time, prior to the bank robbery at Euroa, was supplying provisions to the outlaws?—That he was said to be buying up large quantities of sausage, and supplying it to the outlaws, that is, I believe, one of the reasons why the police preferred the information against Gould of having harboured— I forget the exact charge, but it was under the Outlawry Act that has expired.

2249. I thought it was for threatening Scott, this bank manager?—No. I will now refer to question No. 494 to same witness.—“Captain Standish stated that Mr. Wyatt told you a bank was to be stuck up, and so on?”—The witness answered, “I do not know on what ground Captain Standish says that.” I did not give any such information as that to Captain Standish; and upon looking back to the questions—reading all the questions before it on which that is based, with great deference to the Commission, I do not think that Captain Standish said that exactly; but, whether he did or not, I never gave such information, for I never had such information to give. I now have to refer to two matters, one with reference to the inquest on Byrne’s body. When I left Benalla, in the same train which brought Edward Kelly down, whom I had committed, and resolved to see delivered into gaol safely myself, I arranged with Mr. Sadleir and Captain Standish that the day after to-morrow (on the Thursday) I would return again and hold the inquest on the body of Byrne.

2250. Where was the body then?—Lying in a police cell in Benalla, next to the same cell in which Edward Kelly had been imprisoned. On the following day, Wednesday, when conversing with Mr. Harriman in the Crown Law Offices on these matters, he received and put into my hands a telegram, I think from Mr. Sadleir (I may be wrong in that), to this effect—that it had been arranged to hold a magisterial enquiry upon Byrne’s body, and it was then proceeding at the time that telegram came.

2251. On the Wednesday?—Yes. I was vexed that the arrangement I had made had been overruled. I did not know by whom or for what reasons. I may state that, since that, Mr. Sadleir has told me what I deem quite sufficient reasons for the course he took; but at the time I was vexed, and contemplated reversing the proceedings, and ordering that the body should not be buried till I came up, when I would hold the inquest instead of the magisterial enquiry.

2252. Were you a coroner?—Yes.
2253. You were the coroner of the district?—Yes.
2254. Where the coroner is available, it is not against the usage and law for a magisterial enquiry to be held?—That is too wide a proposition.

2255. Do you consider there was anything improper in a magisterial enquiry being held in the matter?—In that case I did; I thought it so important.
2256. Are not coronial enquiries held in preference to magisterial, where the coroner is present, and it is only when the coroner is not present that a magisterial enquiry is held?—I cannot go so far as that. With regard to the arrest of the sympathizers—with reference to what I deem an error in that, I wish to refer to one thing. I can give reasons why I consider it an error, both general and specific reasons with regard to their arrest.

2257. Were they before you?—Yes.
2258. One of the remands was before you?—Five, or six, or seven, or eight were before me.
2259. You were not the police magistrate at Beechworth?—No.

2260. You did duty for Mr. Foster; how was that?—It was the sheer accident of contiguity. I was there, and Mr. Foster's family were at Sale, Gippsland, and he wished to bring them to Beechworth, and he obtained leave to go to Sale to see about removing to Beechworth; and it was because of my being on friendly terms with him that I took his work. My view was then that the arrest was a mistake—all those arrests—and it prolonged itself as a mistake. It caused bad feeling, alienated a number of persons who were hovering between a disposition to help the police and a disposition to befriend their fellows, so that we lost their help—the opportunity of getting their help—and of a few persons whom I had reason to believe might have been relied upon for help before the murders, and up to the time of the murders.

2261. You are now expressing an opinion. Would it not be better to keep to facts you are acquainted with?—I am entirely in the hands of the Commission in the matter. I am going to give facts, I am coming to them. I am going to mention two individuals.

2262. Can we examine them ourselves?—I do not know whether you will get anything from them. They are two of the sympathizers themselves—men who were arrested. I have reason to believe that two of these men, namely, one of the Quinns—

---

2263. Which Quinn?—The one that was arrested. There was only one before me.
2264. Mr. Hare.—There were two arrested.

The Witness.—I cannot identify him further than that he was one of the men brought before me, and who was also some years before prosecuted for assaulting a policeman.

2265. What relation was he to the Kellys?—I do not know. Besides one of the Quinns there was Isaiah Wright. I have reason to believe those two men would have assisted to bring the Kellys in before the murders of Scanlan, Lonigan, and Kennedy.

2266. Will you tell us why you have arrived at that conclusion?—My reason is this, that an informal offer was made to me.

2267. In writing?—No, not in writing—from Quinn.
2268. Of what nature?—Of this nature—offering to bring the Kellys in if the Government would liberate Kelly's mother.

2269. That was before they were apprehended?—Before the murders of Lonigan, Scanlon, and Kennedy.
2270. Did you make that known to the police authorities?—I did.
2271. To Mr. Sadleir?—I cannot remember to whom I told it.
2272. To one of them?—Yes.

2273. Would it be Captain Standish?—Certainly not. He was not in the neighborhood at that time. I am not sure Mr. Sadleir was. I think most probably, and I have thought repeatedly about it, that the person was Sergeant Whelan, who is now in charge there, but if he cannot remember it I am at a loss to remember who.

2274. It appeared in the press at the time?—I was not aware of that. I must answer further that I am not sure even that an offer was not made to me through a policeman, but I cannot remember at all clearly.

2275. This verbal proposition?—Yes, by the policeman who told me he had received that information, and asked me what I thought of it, or something of that sort. However, it did come to me, and I made answer thus—That I could not make a shadow of a stipulation on behalf of the Government, but if any such efforts were made, and were successful, I would use my most strenuous endeavors to carry out the condition they wished to impose. I said that the more readily because I thought the sentence upon such efforts were made, and were successful, I would use my most strenuous endeavors to carry out the 2276. The condition was that Mrs. Kelly, Edward Kelly's mother, should be liberated?—Yes.

2277. Have you any other information you desire to give?—There was a special reason also for making the proposition to me by Quinn. It was that Quinn had expressed himself that I had treated him with great fairness on two occasions that he had been before me—once as the prosecutor and the other time as a magistrate. With regard to Isaiah Wright, he had been before me as a magistrate several times, and had received punishments, and had sent a message to me through Sergeant Kennedy once, who is now dead, stating that, at all events, Mr. Wyatt gave him fair play.

2278. Was that the man known as “Wild Wright”?—The same man. That man never made any proposition to me; but I heard things that made me sure that he was similarly inclined to help to bring in those men before the murders. In each instance, Quinn's and Wright's feeling was that it would be better for the men themselves to be brought in. It was not a feeling of treachery towards them, but that they could not hold out, and that it was better for themselves to bring them in. That is all that I have to say as to facts. I was desirous to add more in regard to what occurred at Beechworth, but I cannot say it comes expressly within that limitation suggested by the Commission, therefore I will not refer to it. The last thing I wish to say is this; there was evidence before me that there was a want of concert between the police and the telegraph office at the time of the Euroa bank robbery. That applied not only to the Benalla district, or the Bourke district, but to the Melbourne district. No arrangements had been made between the police and the telegraph office to take care that the earliest information should be given to the police of any breakage on the line. I have good reason to believe that all the lines were broken down at the Faithfull’s Creek station, before two o’clock I think, but I would not venture to say this. I have heard from the telegraph gentlemen that it was as early as twelve, but that can be learned from the telegraph clerks.

2279. You mean that the telegraph officers had not informed the police?—If they had been instructed the moment there was a breakage in the lines, particularly the peculiar simultaneous breakage of the wires on both sides of the line. I think the police would have put them on means of ascertaining the modes of the breakage long before they did, because they proceeded merely in the usual way, by sending a telegraph repairer down by the first train, 4.40, in the day.

2280. Do you attach the blame to any special officer?—No, I do not venture to do that. I would scarcely call it “blame.”

2281. Say “oversight?”—Yes; that perhaps is the proper way to speak of it.

2282. From your knowledge of police discipline, would you be kind enough to indicate what special officer was responsible for that?—That is beyond my knowledge; but I will tell you what occurred to me; but your question deals with the matter of the government of the police, which I am not cognizant of.

2283. I understood you to say that the information of the breakage of the wires was withheld from the police hours after it was known by the Telegraph Department?—Not “withheld,” but not given. “Withheld” means actively, intentionally, but it was not that. I will give you the facts connected with that. I have been lately informed that Mr. John Woods, the Commissioner of Railways at that time, when he heard of the breakage of the line tolerably early in the day, exclaimed, “It is the Kellys;” and that was his opinion, I believe. I have been also informed by a telegraph gentleman that they were testing the lines, and applying the usual means to find out where the fault was some hours before. I discovered what the fault was, but up to that time only the usual means had been used which will allow the department to discover instantly, or very speedily, between which stations the stoppage has occurred; but only by the application of particular tests can they find out at what exact distance between any two places. What I think is that if the police had been instructed of it, the moment all the wires had been found down, Mr. Gorman might have sent his own policeman, or some one, to enquire what was the cause of it, or the police themselves might have sent from Benalla, Violet Town, or Euroa.

2284. You are quite sure that several hours were lost?—I am quite sure of that.

2285. Before the information was communicated to the police?—The information was first communicated to the police by myself at the hour I have given, and they might have learned the state of the line moderately soon after the breakage.

2286. How do you know. You say of your own knowledge this matter occurred as you have related. By what means did you arrive at that information you have given?—I have told all I can recollect which is to the point.

2287. I know the mode by which you discovered the breakage in the line, but I want to know how you personally became possessed of the knowledge that hours of delay took place before the fact took place before the fact was communicated to the police?—I believe I learned it from Mr. Challen and from Mr. Saxe, the two telegraph gentlemen at Benalla telegraph station in the old town. Mr. Saxe, the permanent telegraph gentleman there, and Mr. Challen, a skilled gentleman sent up to assist him at the crisis. I believe I learned from them; I am not absolutely certain, but I believe it was from them how soon the evil acting of the wires was discovered.

2288. Are you done with your facts?—I think I have.

2289. It was stated, I think by Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir, that you were in a very exciting state when they saw you at the railway station. That excitement I know was due simply to excitement about the Kelly business, but some people have said was there any cause for excitement?—You mean might I be under the influence of drink?

2290. The impression of the evidence conveyed that at the time?—I do not know how to answer that.

2291. I put it in that form for your own sake?—I do not know how to put it. Such a construction had never occurred to me. I am not a teetotaller, but I may probably not drink a pint of spirit in the year.

2292. Mr. Sadleir.—I would not have thought of such a thing, as I know Mr. Wyatt to be almost a teetotaller.

2293. The Witness.—When I heard Mr. Sadleir say it, it excited a smile on my part, but what I thought he meant was that I lost my head a little bit, and I was going to say, “No, I was not excited, but I was urgent.” Mr. Nicolson knows I am a man who does not get excited in time of danger; that is my best time.

2294. But at the time you gave the information to the police, after having discovered the break in the wire, how long an interval elapsed between the time of your discovering it and the information you gave to the officers you have spoken of?—The interval that would be occupied by the usual main train running from Faithfull’s Creek station, stopping there is usual time, and arriving at Benalla, I can approximate it. It is twenty-six miles, and taking the running rate on Victorian Railways it would be, I should say, from one hour to one hour and ten or fifteen minutes.

2295. In your opinion, do you think that if the information you gave then to the officers had been acted on immediate pursuit, would there have been a probability of speedily arresting them?—As facts have turned out, I do not think any different result would have followed, because I do not think they could have got upon the track before daylight, even if they had gone before.

2296. I understood you to say, after your return to the spot where you discovered that breach in the wires, that you subsequently learned that the outlaws were so near that they were positively watching you?—That is true, and you can learn from Mr. McCauley; he will tell you they did watch me on both occasions.

2297. Was this subsequent to information being given to the police?—Oh, no; the information was given by me to the police after dark, somewhere about eight o’clock—I imagine a little after eight o’clock, whereas the outlaws saw us first when I put down Watt, and when I got down to examine the lines from the engine. Those would both be by daylight.

2299. With regard to this telegraph business, the impression on my mind by your narration is this, that the withholding the information from the police arose entirely through the want of harmony that should have existed between the officers in the various different Government departments?—No, I don’t say want of harmony, but want of prevision on the part of police officers to make an arrangement with the telegraph office to be in special communication with them on those special occasions.

2300. Was there any feeling of jealousy?—Not the least. I never heard of any such feeling, I believe the most active assistance given to the police was given by the Telegraph Department, that could have been of advantage as to the outlaws, and there was good feeling between all the departments, universal good feeling in the working.

2301. Might not the delay have occurred through the idea that the cause of breakage was natural causes?—If it was, I did no know of it. It might be. It was not from any want of harmony but want of prevision for making special provisions for the special crisis by the police and the local officers, And by the superior officers in Melbourne, who should have foreseen that as much as any, as the Melbourne office is where they would have given orders from.

2302. Were the officers under the impression that the break on the line occurred from natural causes as far as any information you have since obtained. Are you aware whether or not the information of the officers who had charge of the telegraph office was that the break in the wires took place from natural causes or what?—No, they had no suspicion of anything else. They merely thought it was more extensive breakage than usual, but still of the usual sort; but to my mind, the two lines down on both sides, I think, should have suggested some very unusual cause beyond such ordinary ones as they deal with from day to day.

2303. As far as you know, the impression never entered their minds?—No, I believe they were applying their tests all the morning to find out what was the matter.

2304. If the telegraph had informed Mr. Nicolson at once, what time would it have given Mr. Nicolson before he departed from Albury?—Many hours.

2305. How many?—From two to eight o’clock. The department knew of there being an accident to the line at two o’clock at the latest. And Mr. Nicolson departed at eight o’clock; therefore, if he had known earlier, he might have sent a party with trackers down earlier.
2313. Can you give an opinion as to how soon at either side of the breakage it was known that an interruption existed on the railway line?—No, I cannot. I should think any fireman, guard, or railway driver could scarcely pass without seeing it.

2314. That is not the question—there is a railway operator at Euroa?—There was.

2315. Is there a railway operator at Benalla?—Yes, there is.

2316. That is, the station-master, Mr. Gorman does the duty of railway operator?—He did at Euroa.

2317. From your knowledge of the matter, and without referring to the guard at all, would it not be known at either of those stations almost immediately when an interruption took place?—Very immediately, indeed, and the same thing applies to the Government lines.

2318. It would be with regard to the railway line, there being no station between those two?—I know, as a matter of fact, from Mr. Gorman, that he was very early made acquainted with the breakage at Euroa.

2319. With regard to the public line, the one with the four wires, would it not be known at either side very shortly after it was interrupted?—I do not think there is a Government line of any sort at Euroa; but I know, as a matter of fact, that the station-masters are always communicating with each other, and I know Mr. Gorman knew that the Government line was down as well as his own line.

2320. You mentioned yesterday that when you came to Faithfull’s Creek station you went up to the station and took the depositions of the persons there—can you recollect from memory, what time was mentioned that will fix us the hour that the Kellys had destroyed the telegraphic communication?—No, I cannot remember from that. I am not even sure that it was told me, but the depositions are preserved, and can be obtained. I took them very rapidly.

2321. You said just now that you thought the mother of Ned Kelly was severely sentenced?—I did.

2322. Why do you come to that conclusion—what was she tried for?—She was tried for being present at a serious assault on a policeman in the exercise of his duty.

2323. What was her sentence?—I do not remember exactly, but I know it must have been at least three years, because she has been in two years, and if she was to get out at the very earliest period, she would not be out, but I cannot recollect what it was.

2324. She is out now?—I was not aware of that. It cannot have been till very recently, at any rate.

2325. You stated that Quinn came to you?—Not came to me.

2326. Spoke to you?—Not spoke to me.

2327. You received some information from Quinn?—No; a proposition from Quinn that, if the Kellys’ mother was liberated, some promise or some arrangement would be made by which the Kellys, Ned and Dan, against whom there were warrants, would give themselves up. The words were, I think—“They shall be brought in if the old woman is let out.”

2328. Was she sentenced at the time this proposition was made, or only returned for trial?—That I cannot remember.

2329. Are you the police magistrate for the immediate district, Benalla being your headquarters, and where does your district end?—At some unknown spot, probably half-way between myself and the next court of petty sessions on the North-Eastern Railway, namely, Wangaratta to the north-east, and at Mansfield to the south.

2330. Is Wangaratta in your district?—No, in Mr. Foster’s.

2331. Is Glenrowan in your district?—That is a point of measurement that I cannot remember. I think it is. I can tell you in a few minutes by the railway time-table.

2332. Never mind?—It is not in my district, it is just outside. Fourteen miles from me, and ten from Wangaratta.

2333. Were not the greater portion of those outrages committed within your district?—That is also, I believe, a matter of question.

2334. Is Euroa in your district?—It was—I meant the murders of the men. The Euroa robbery was in my district.

2335. Did you hear Mr. Sadleir say yesterday, in giving his evidence, that the outlaws were traced to be continuously, or almost continuously, in the immediate districts round Benalla, Greta, and round there?—I cannot say I did.

2336. How many years have you been a police magistrate?—About nine.

2337. You are brought into connection with police offences, and deal with cases under the criminal law, and others?—Yes.

2338. And you took an interest personally in the maintenance of peace in your district, and therefore desired those men should be made amenable to justice?—A very strong interest.
more exactly. The period was from April 1878 down to June 1880.
  2342. They were at large all that time?—Yes, a year and ten months.
  2343. Do you consider that all was done that could have been done to make them amenable to justice during that time?—I speak with hesitation because of the difficulty I had with forming an opinion, but according to the best of my means of forming an opinion I think all was done.
  2344. In your opinion—you recollect you have been nine years a police magistrate, you have had two years’ service in the immediate locality of the police there—do you consider the police, under all the circumstances of the case, did all that men could do to make those murderers amenable to justice?—I do, I repeatedly expressed the opinion after the Euroa outrage, and from my personal knowledge of the country all the way—100 miles across in one direction, and up to the New South Wales border in another direction—I was always of opinion that the men never would be caught by mere pursuit. I said I can reckon myself seven or eight or nine flukes on the occasion of their Euroa robbery, all of which turned out in their favor accidentally, and which could not have been calculated on, but which turned out in their favor; and I said no doubt in the ignorant rashness of these men they would think those favourable circumstances due to their skill. I said “Those men will go on with the same rashness and ignorance, and thinking they are winning by their skill, till some day they will play the game, depending once too often on those flukes which will then be against them, and they will be caught; and that was what happened at the last when they were caught.
  2345. How many petty sessions courts do you attend within that district?—About sixteen places.
  2346. At all those courts are you brought almost daily in correspondence and conversation with, and your observation attracted to, the conduct of the police at those courts?—It is.
  2347. From your knowledge of that district for the two years, do you believe that there was the slightest reluctance at any time of the part of any of the police to meet the murderers?—I am absolutely certain there was none, there was nothing but eagerness to do so.
  2348. Do you say that, meaning without exception?—Without a solitary exception.
  2349. Are you aware of the expenditure of public money in connection with this district?—No, I am not. I merely saw Mr Nicolson’s returns produced here.
  2350. Do you remember reading at the papers that the Chief Secretary stated in the House that the amount would reach nearly £50,000?—I think I remember that.
  2351. You expressed the opinion just now that in your opinion they would never be taken by continuous pursuit—why did you think that?—Because of my knowledge of the country and of the people. A gentleman stated before this Commission that the connections of the Kellys were exceedingly numerous. I myself have, with a person who personally know them, counted up seventy-seven relatives, more than a year ago.
  2352. Is that within your own district?—I can mention the various places from Mansfield on the south of Aberfeldy, known as Mount Lofty, to somewhere in New South Wales in the north, Table Top, Mitchell’s run, I think, and from Wallan and Kilmore, and Kyneton on the west, right away up as far as Tallangatta on the east—that they had relatives, I am not speaking of connections. I was told blood relations, but upon cross-examination of the individual who told me I found I could not believe that—it would not be judicious to mention persons.
  2353. It has been stated that they owed a great deal of their freedom to the assistance they got in food and so on from the number of sympathizers. Would it be true to say they received the general sympathy of the inhabitants of that district?—No, the district was to my knowledge considerably terrorized, but there was always a very large core of hearty disposition to help the police and of horror at the acts of those men. I am strongly inclined to think that for that reason the mode that Mr. Nicolson adopted was likely to produce the best results, rather than that adopted by Mr. Hare.
  2354. You think that, though they had sympathizers and blood relations, the general inhabitants of that district were thoroughly horrified at the murders, and would, as far as they could, give the police assistance in making them amenable to justice?—As far as they safely could; but it was a matter of safety.
  2355. Are you aware that those men were particularly qualified for evading the police?—I am. I knew three of them personally.
  2356. Which of them?—The two Kellys and Joseph Byrne.
  2357. You did not know Hart?—No.
  2358. It is within your knowledge that they were reared in the immediate district, though not born there?—I think they spent a long series of years there; but their youth was spent at Wallan, and Donnybrook, and that neighborhood—I mean the two Kellys.
  2359. You knew they were thoroughly good horsemen?—I am aware that Ned Kelly was a splendid horseman.
  2360. Would it have been possible for the police, supposing they got on their tracks, and were well mounted, to overtake them?—I am sure they would not ride them down in a day; they would have to hunt them down, but not ride them down—the men were well mounted. I saw Steve Hart in that lane, and his horse was a fine upstanding well-conditioned horse, capable of speed and endurance.
  2361. Do you mean where your wheels got locked?—Yes. I never knew it was Hart till Mr. McCauley informed me.
  2362. You never told us before it was Hart—now do you say so?—I know it was from Mr. McCauley telling me. I was speaking to him about the sale of some land, two or three weeks before the Glenrowan outrage. I had met him for the first time in my life at the Killeen station one evening, and was conversing with him about the sale of some runs near Faithfull’s Creek station; and he, to identify it, said, “Just about where you met Steve Hart;” and I said, “I never met Steve Hart.” And he said, “Do not you remember when you met him;” and I gave my reasons for not thinking it. And he said it was Steve Hart, and he knew it because Hart himself said so, and I said, “God bless me, what did he tell you?”

He said, “When the party came back with the Scotts from the bank we were yarning, and Steve Hart said to...

2363. Alluding to you?—Alluding to me, I presume. Nobody could tell at the time, but at last somebody recollected that it was my day at Euroa; then they said immediately that was Mr. Wyatt, the police magistrate, when Steve Hart said, “By God, if I had known that I would have popped him.”

2364. I would now call your attention to the day of the bank robbery at Euroa. It is stated that Mr. Scott was taken prisoner and conveyed to Faithfull’s Creek station—it is stated that the wires were broken, of which you cannot fix the hour, and you stated by your evidence that between eleven and twelve o’clock of that night you saw Johnson and party without the horses in the train at Benalla?—Much later than that.

2365. What hour?—Much after twelve. I imagine we got to the train, and they began to put the horses in about a quarter to one, but we did not start through delay in getting the horses in till half-past one.

2366. You then stated you came down with those men to Euroa, after you took the twenty-five minutes taking depositions?—Yes.

2367. After you came to Euroa the constables took the horses out again, and went out as you stated in your evidence, in the morning and came back and told where the tracks led to, namely, they had gone up to Strathbogie and crossed the line again, and there they lost them—do you consider the police showed any want of efficiency in delaying the following up of the Kellys from the time of their arrival at Euroa until they really did follow them?—On the contrary, they acted more efficiently than I expected. They varied from my advice, and by so doing saved time. I advised them to stay for Mr. Nicolson, but they filled up the time judiciously and properly in looking for the tracks as they did.

2368. Did you advise the police, or say that in your opinion it would be desirable to wait for their superior officer before they followed up the tracks?—I said, “I think, under the circumstances you will not do unwisely in waiting for your officer, provided the time is not too long,” but I then expected Mr. Nicolson to arrive some hours earlier than he did.

2369. You stated that Ward and Johnson were with the party, both of them apparently having a certain amount of charge?—Yes.

2370. You stated, I think, that ward came to you and asked you—consulted with you as to whether it would be desirable to have an immediate pursuit, or whether he had better wait for his officer; and you gave us to understand that Ward had intimated to you that it was the desire of the officer that they should not go till he came?—I am not certain whether it would answer to those very words. I am not quite certain that Ward said those words to me—whether he said, “I am to stop,” or whether he said some such words as these, “Mr. Nicolson will be here”; but whether he expected him, or was absolutely enjoined to stay, I cannot be certain.

2371. You stated on your own accord just now that you considered the plan adopted by Mr. Nicolson for making the Kellys amenable to justice was better than the other course—what did you mean by the other course?—I mean the system of pursuits. I think it was better to lull them into a sense of security, to be spreading your bands in every direction, to secure information, and gradually, without making a cordon round them, which was impossible, to get the power to seize them as Power was seized.

2372. Who adopted any other course?—I understand Mr. Hare adopted a course of raids, a process which I do not think was likely to be of any use in that country, and with that class of men, as they were capable of evading pursuit.

2373. It has been stated in the papers that it is a better course in pursuing criminals of this class never to leave them at ease—to keep them continually on the move, and so that they may never be certain of the movements of the police?—I may say that that was the plan in New South Wales in the pursuit of Ben Hall and Morgan—they followed them night and day.

2374. Do you consider that is the wiser course, or to spread detectives round them, and make them amenable to justice in that way?—I should think that the pursuit course is not so advisable as the other course. I should think with men so well qualified to evade pursuit, and with such special means of supply and assistance, and such large pecuniary means as they had at that time, there would be a certain time which must expire during which they would be pursued in vain; and then, when the Government rewards were announced, they would have had some effect. I felt since the Government rewards would act in this way; I did not think it would make any of those men untrue to each other, but some of those sympathisers would at some time draw distinctions between the two men who committed the murders and the other two. Some of the relatives of Joe Byrne and Steve Hart would say—“you have not shed blood, why should you stand out?” Their relatives would say that, and there would be jealousy arise, and want of trust, of which at last the police would avail themselves.

2375. Do you know the position of Glenrowan, where the men were shot?—I only know from recollection. I was there repeatedly while the line was being constructed.
2376. Do you know where Morgan was captured?—I know Morgan’s look-out well. I do not know the exact spot.

2377. You know he was captured near Peechelba?—Yes, but that is not near there.

2378. Do you remember when Morgan was there that he said that he would sooner give himself up than be kept continually pursued by the police?—Yes, I did hear that.

2379. That it was worse than death to him to be continually on the move?—I believe it was, but he was a single man and had not the large number of co-operators that these men had.

2380. Therefore the use of continually hunting him down had a strong effect with him?—It would operate well with some men, but not with these, for the reasons I have stated.

2381. Are you aware of your own knowledge, from conversation with your brother magistrates and residents of the district, that every assistance was given by the magistrate and the residents of any responsibility in the district to aid the police in the capture of these men?—I know no specific instance of special exertion, but I am certain of the general feeling of the inhabitants and the magistrates throughout the district.

2382. Do you know whether the outlaws had always horses available or not?—I have good reason to believe they had. I have one special reason to believe so.

2383. Do you think they were better than the police horses?—At first they were better than the police horses. I have two special reasons to know. I met a party on one occasion that I have no doubt was a relief party of four horses, being taken to these men—fresh horses for the Kellys.

2384. Do you know where the horses captured at Glenrowan were taken from?—I know one was brought from Ryan’s, of Cashel. That particular horse I was in treaty to purchase. He had offered it for £50, and I offered £45.

3485. Was he a stable-fed horse?—She was a stable-fed mare, a fine jumper and hunter.

3486. Do you know the other horses that were captured?—No, I do not.

3487. Do you know who claimed them?—No.

3488. That one you did know?—I saw a party of three men with four horses going under circumstances that made me confident they were a relief party. I reported it at Lake Rowan, and found they had not passed through Lake Rowan, and so I knew they must have come from some relative of Edward Kelly’s living in that neighborhood—that is the place where the hut was inspected by Mr. Nicolson.

3489. Have you any knowledge that they had any amount of horses in the Upper King district?—I have heard that they had horses in the neighborhood of Tallangatta once.

3490. Do you know they had relatives close at the bank robbery at Euroa?—I do not know that, that was not one of the places mentioned that contained relatives. Ben Gould lived there, a strong sympathizer.

3491. You still continue to say, in your opinion, every effort was made by the police during the two years they were out there?—I do say that, very emphatically, principally the officers.

3492. Were you not, as the police magistrate of the district, responsible to a certain extent, for the state of the district?—All through I felt they were acting in a very fine, spirited, admirable manner. I say that in regard to every one—Captain Standish, Mr. Nicolson, Mr. Hare, every one as far as it appeared to me showed a strong desire to do his duty, and as far as I knew, they were in perfect harmony together.

3493. Did you considered it as being your duty, to maintain the peace of the district, to write to your Government, or head of your department, to say that steps were not taken properly or the reverse?—I did once remonstrate with the Government on what I thought was a mistake.

3494. It would be your absolute duty if you saw inefficiency on the part of the police to take such a step for the maintenance of the peace?—Yes.

3495. At once to draw the attention of the Government to any maladministration of the department of police?—It would, I should have done it.

3496. Whom would you communicate with?—The head of the department—the Attorney General or Minister of Justice, whoever might be the head.

3497. What department are the police under—I think the Chief Secretary?—Yes.

3498. Would you have considered it your duty, if you saw anything wrong on the part of the police, such as want of duty, or want of efficiency, to at once communicate with the head of the department as to facts?—No, I would first communicate it to the subordinate officers, and try to effect a remedy through them.

3499. Who?—The person under the head—Mr. Nicolson, or whoever it might be.

3500. You would communicate with an officer in your district first?—Yes.

3501. Had you any occasion to do so?—Never.

3502. That I assume, if it was your duty, and you did not do it, that nothing occurred?—Nothing occurred but one thing.

3503. What was that?—It was in the matter of the arrests. I felt so strongly the course the police took was wrong and totally indefensible in a British community, in keeping those men in custody in Beechworth on what proved ultimately to be no charges at all, that at last I came and said to Sir Brian O’Loghlen, the then Acting Chief Secretary—“You are doing a great deal of harm to your own cause there, and I beseech you to take some confidential officer from your own department and send him there to enquire into the cases against every man, and discharge every one against whom there is not a case.” As a matter of fact, seven or eleven men were discharged.

2404. Was not the action taken by the then Acting Chief Secretary and Attorney-General such as legally could only be taken under the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act?—There was no suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act.

2405. But it would be solely legal if that was suspended?—It was not legal as it was.

2406. It would be legal under the Habeas Corpus Act?—No.

2407. Was the action of the Attorney-General illegal in the way that it was done?—No, contrary-wise; his action was the rectifying of illegality—to arrest a man without a charge was illegal.

2408. Under whose direction were those men arrested?—Captain Standish’s, I believe.

2409. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—I cannot say to what extent I know it.

2410. You have stated now that you went and remonstrated with the Chief Secretary?—Yes.

2411. Did you with Captain Standish?—Yes, and Mr. Sadleir.

2412. Did you hear Mr. Sadleir say, in his evidence here, it was done contrary to his opinion?—I did, and I was much struck with that, for with proper official reticence he had never said so to me before.

2413. He could not have expressed that opinion upon his officer’s action?—No, and I would not have asked him. I used to say to the officers in speaking of these matters, “Do not tell me anything if you do not feel at liberty.”

2414. It has been stated in the public prints repeatedly that the police of the district—that is the subordinate police and sergeants, and so on—all seemed desirous that they should be led by Mr. Hare?—I never heard that.

2415. Did you read it in the paper?—I never read it.

2416. Do you get the papers in the district?—I do, but although I feel it my duty to subscribe to all the papers in my district, I fall in arrear in the reading sometimes. I may have a hundred papers in my room to read through, and cannot get through all. I feel it my duty to know all that is in the papers, although they call me over the coals sometimes, and very rightly.

2417. There is a paragraph here in the Rutherglen and Wahgunyah News, 14th May 1880, which says that in Superintendent Frank Hare the men had the most perfect confidence, and so on—[reading the paragraph].—Are you aware, from being two years in almost daily communication with the police, that they wanted to be led by Mr. Hare?—No, I cannot say that.

2418. You have no knowledge of that?—No. I am sure there is a very enthusiastic liking for him for his dash and frank manner. Altogether he is universally liked in the force, and without saying that the others are not, I think it is true that there is more partiality for him amongst the men.

2419. You are firmly convinced that the plan adopted by Mr. Nicolson when he was in charge was, in your opinion from your knowledge of the district and particulars of the case, the most likely to be efficient in the end?—I am firmly convinced of that. I think it would have led to their being apprehended—no man can say how soon; but I think it was a fortunate accident for Mr. Hare that they committed themselves shortly after he went there. I think they would have been bound to commit themselves shortly after that, even if Mr. Hare had not been there.

2420. It is not the fact that you sent a communication to Captain Standish complaining that Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir did not take the steps necessary at the time of your meeting them at the railway?—No. I have stated that Captain Standish is wrong in saying that.

2421. Did you write a letter?—No. All my communications with this gentleman were verbal, and I merely wished to correct that; and when I said yesterday, in this room, that Captain Standish was inaccurate, owing to the bad light I was under the impression that he was sitting behind me and was present at the time.

2422. You stated just now you had information that the Kellys were getting sausages and other provisions from Gould. Is it within your knowledge that they got maintenance of that character in any other portions of the district—Benalla for instance?—I do not know of my own knowledge. I was not told by any individual. I know it merely from seeing it in newspapers, and general talk, that Kate Kelly was there, and at the shops. I did hear there were a vast number of threepenny pieces in circulation, which were supposed to be from the bank robbery.

2423. Did you hear from New South Wales notes?—No.

2424. Are you aware how the Kellys were armed—do you know they had police firearms?—I know that from what I have read.

2425. Did you receive any information, as being magistrate of the district, of the purchase of ammunition from Melbourne?—I did.

Alfred Wyatt,
P.M.,
continued,
12th April 1881.
2427. Did you hear whether the ammunition got up to them?—No; I never heard of any particular fact of that sort.

2428. Do you consider that the black trackers would be utterly useless in following these men, supposing they got on the tracks?—No; but I thought it useless for them to go out without definite information; to go out with a definitive information is a different thing. I have no doubt, from my observation of these men, in particular in the one case that came under my knowledge, that those Queensland trackers were highly efficient men, and that if a track were picked up by them, they would follow it as long as the most skilful man could; but to go out without knowledge of something definite in that country is like looking for a needle in a bundle of hay.

2429. But you say the men were so well mounted?—Those men could ride 70 miles in the day, but they could not go 70 mile a day straight on end. There is not room in the country, and therefore they could be followed up, even though a day had been lost in starting after them.

2430. I suppose you know a man on foot, if he got on a horse track he will follow the horse, and the horse has to give in first?—Well, that depends on various things.

2431. It is a matter of positive fact?—I have had a good deal of experience myself for a white man in tracking.

2432. By Mr. Sadleir.—Was there a railway telegraph office at Violet Town at the time of the Euroa robbery?—There was.

2433. Are you sure of that?—I am sure of that. I mean to say that the railway telegraph station man had his own line and his own means of communicating with his own authorities at Violet Town. I feel certain of that, but I will admit that there is no subject on earth on which I may not be a blunderer; but I believe there was a telegraph office there.

2434. By the Commission.—Is Violet Town nearer to Benalla than Euroa?—No; nearer to Euroa. It is 16 miles from Benalla to Violet Town; 11 miles, I think, from Violet Town to Euroa.

2435. Was the line interrupted between Violet Town and Benalla?—No.

2436. By Mr. Sadleir.—At what hour did you first reach Violet Town after learning about the breaking of the wires?—At about 7.20 or 7.30.

2437. Why did you not send a message on to Benalla?—From where?

2438. From Violet Town?—I told the station-master to communicate with Melbourne, and that is all that I had an opportunity of doing.

2439. By the Commission.—How could he?—Around by New South Wales.

2440. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you tell him to do so that way?—I am not certain of that.

2441. Or why did you not inform the police at that time in Violet Town itself?—If I had seen a policeman I would have done that, but I thought telling the station-master was all I could do, and communicating to Melbourne was all that could be done.

2442. How long did the train stop then?—Two or three minutes.

2443. By Mr. Hare.—You have said you think the plan adopted by Mr. Nicolson was preferable to that by me?—Yes.

2444. Are you aware that I had as many agents nearly in my employ as ever Mr. Nicolson had?—No.

2445. Are you aware that those men were working for me in addition to our going about the country harassing those men—that I had men working in every part of the district privately?—My opinion is that the two systems are somewhat inconsistent.

2446. Were you aware of that fact—I had those two systems at work?—I was not.

2447. By the Commission.—You have stated that the two systems, namely, surrounding the Kellys with spies so as to get information, and the other system of hunting them, are somewhat inconsistent?—Yes.
telegrams despatched from the Benalla office (my office and Mr. Nicolson’s) from two p.m. that day, on the 10th of December, the day of the bank robbery. One of those was to the Chief Commissioner of Police. It was sent to the telegraph office at Benalla, which is not more than 150 yards from our office, at 5.45 p.m., and it was held there until half-past nine: The other telegrams were on lines that were not interfered with.

2454. You say you sent eight telegrams, and the only one between Benalla and Melbourne was this one to Captain Standish?—To Captain Standish.

2455. The others were away?—On the Beechworth end and other places.

2456. Were you informed that the line was interrupted?—No, we heard nothing of that. This is the telegram, showing the hour of which I speak; the substance of the telegram is of no importance, only the date. You will see that it was received at 5.45 p.m., and despatched at 9.30 p.m.—[handing in a telegram.]

2457. That is simply to show that you had no information about the wires being cut before you started?—No, and not hearing of that telegram being delayed gave us reason to believe that everything was right on the wires.

2458. This telegram shows that clearly?—Yes.

2459. Was there any understanding between the police authorities and the officers of the Telegraph Department with regard to the action to be taken on any alarm or any suspicious circumstance arising?—I think there was not then.

2460. There was afterwards?—There was afterwards.

2461. But up to that time not?—Up to that time not, so far as I know of, but I am not absolutely positive about it.

2462. At some time during the pursuit of the Kellys by the police, was there not some understanding with the Telegraph Department that if any line was interrupted you would be communicated with?—Yes, after the experience of this, it was made an order that every interruption was to be reported to us at once.

2463. Was there not a test made at a regular time—ten o’clock or some time?—Yes, they were constantly tested by the operators—I do not know the hour. After the time spoken of in my evidence yesterday, there were many things that occurred outside of my own knowledge. Since my statement was begun before the Commission, I have made a calculation, as best I could—I am sure it is not quite complete, but nearly so—of the number of reported appearances of the Kellys from the time of the murders up to their capture at Glenrowan.

2464. Consecutively?—Yes; and I have divided them into periods on which different officers were in charge of operations. From October 26th—that was the date of the murders—to December 12th 1878, I find there were four reported appearances of the Kellys. From December 12th 1878 to July 3rd 1879, when Captain Standish and Mr. Hare were the senior officers, there were 40 reported appearances. From July 3rd 1879, when Mr. Nicolson again took charge, to June 2nd 1880, there were 18 reported appearances; and from June 2nd, when Mr. Hare finally took charge, to June 28th 1880, there were two reported appearances. One of these includes the final appearance at Glenrowan.

2465. And the other would be Sherritt’s murder?—Yes, at Sherritt’s murder. Then I have again subdivided the second division that I have given you, that is from December 12th 1878—that is the Euroa bank robbery—to March 6th, when the trackers came from Queensland, occurred 35 of the 40 appearances I have mentioned; and from March 1879 to July 3rd of the same year there were only five reported appearances, and none of those were authentic. That shows that the Kellys ceased at once to show themselves after the trackers arrived in Victoria.

2466. As you said five were not authentic, can you tell us whether any of the 35 were authentic, from 10th December 1878 to March 1879?—Yes, some of them were certainly authentic. The Jerilderie bank robbery occurred during that time, and there were others.

2467. Touching that—after the Jerilderie robbery, is there no authentic account of their return to Victoria after the robbery in New South Wales?—Yes, I am sure there was. I propose, if the Commission take any interest in this, to put it all into detailed table showing the informants and places where the things were said to have taken place and the steps taken, or such references to the papers that will explain.

2468. And the officers?—Yes; that will take several days.

2469. That will be most important?—Then I will do it, giving the names as mentioned in the key. Then I need not refer to those as I go along.

2470. Then from your own knowledge of the Kellys did they remain in the district all the time except when at Jerilderie?—I have no doubt they did, within the limits I spoke of in my previous evidence.

2471. There was a statement made in the papers, amongst the other untrue statements, that they paid a visit to the Western district, and that some information got into the papers, and they came back;
2473. You do not know whether it was authentic?—No, we were not interested in it at that distance; we knew they were too near for that. I was a good deal engaged about my own district duties all the time I have been speaking of, and to the end of this business. I think it has been stated there were a number of reductions made in the police, very considerable reductions. The last reductions were of the Artillery; they were finally withdrawn at the beginning of the year 1880, 1st January or thereabouts.

2474. Were the Artillery of any value whatever towards the capture of the Kellys?—No; except only rendering the banks safe and giving more police at our disposal. About May 1880 I heard that Mr. Hare was coming again to relieve Mr. Nicolson. I wrote to him about it privately as a friend, and tried to dissuade him from coming. I think I spoke to Captain Standish to the same effect; and I know for a certainty that I had spoken to Captain Standish as soon as I heard that he contemplated removing the Queensland black trackers.

2475. You protested against the removal?—I urged and advised him not to remove them.

2476. What time was that?—It was somewhere about the beginning or end of March of that year that I spoke about the trackers. I was on my way either to or from Tasmania where I had a few weeks’ leave that year. I urged all I knew to dissuade him from removing them.

2477. Did you know at that time that other black trackers were to take their place?—I knew that was contemplated—yes.

2478. Had Mr. Chomley then gone to recruit?—No, not for months afterwards.

2479. Why did you try to dissuade Mr. Hare from coming to the district?—I disapproved of Mr. Hare’s way of searching for the Kellys.

2480. Was that the reason you assigned to him?—Yes, in the private letter—there is a letter I dare say. At any rate I had so fully explained at all times to Mr. Hare my disapproval of his operations as they were taking place that he must have understood what I meant.

2481 Then your letter was dictated altogether by your desire for the public interest?—Solely and entirely.

2482. Not as a matter of feeling between two officers?—No, that had nothing to do with it.

2483. You thought it would be more efficient if the arrangements then going on were carried through?—I was perfectly satisfied that the arrangements then going on under Mr. Nicolson, myself, and Mr. O’Connor, who were all in perfect confidence with each other, were leading steadily to a good result at very little expense, no noise or trouble, and that we were stepping forward most surely towards the capture of the Kellys—that is a matter of opinion only.

2484. Is this a matter of opinion:—I think Captain Standish stated that when Mr. Hare went away from duty about the previous July and Mr. Nicolson came back, he (Mr. Nicolson) gave in evidence the way he found the police and what he did about it. I think he said that he found the force very much reduced in numbers, that the force was weakened about the time he received charge?—It was very much reduced.

2485. Did you ever think it was too weakened, or were they withdrawn with your full consent. In other words did Captain Standish take upon himself to withdraw the men without your advice, or contrary to your advice, as the responsible officer (as you were then, the same as now)—did you think that that weakening damaged the efficiency of the force of the district, and was it with your sanction, or did you advise it, or the reverse?—I did not advise it, I was against it. I thought it very dangerous.

2486. Did you inform Captain Standish of that?—Yes. I had several conferences with him on the subject for the purpose—he asked me to come to Melbourne.

2487. Did you inform your superior officer on the ground—Mr. Nicolson—did you say to him that the men had been weakened during this short interval?—Mr. Nicolson understood perfectly what I was doing I do not think the actual reductions took place until immediately after he came up.

2488. There was a full body with Mr. Hare?—There had been odd drafts away while Mr. Hare was there—about May or June.

2489. Up to this time those were extra men drafted from other districts?—Mostly.

2490. Were they drawing extra pay besides their police allowance?—They were drawing 5s. a day for travelling allowance.

2491. What is the pay per day?—Seven shillings and eight shillings.

2492. What extra pay would the eight shillings mean?—It was five shillings only towards their travelling expenses.

2493. Did they get 5s. up to a certain date?—Yes.

2494. And when was it stopped?—I can find that out.

2495. Were the officers getting extra pay?—The officers get the same allowance at their scale.

2496. What is that?—Twelve shillings.

2497. That is the extra officers that came to your district under you?—I drew none.

2498. It was your station and the others would be entitled to it?—Yes, the others received 12s. a day.

2500. Nor the constables?—They all stopped at a certain period about the middle of that year.

2501. Though they were not permanently stationed there?—There was a formal order for their transfer, which would have the effect of bringing them outside the regulations in regard to extra allowance.

2502. Still they were doing duty out from their homes?—Yes.

2503. And that pay was stopped?—Yes.

2504. On whose recommendation was that stopped?—That came from the Chief Commissioner. himself. I never heard of his consulting anybody else about it. I knew it was coming, but I am sure he never consulted anybody else about it.

2505. When Mr. Nicolson was giving the statement here as to the comparative expenses during Mr. Hare’s time and his time, when that was a very much lower scale, will that be after the reductions were made of the extra pay?—I cannot say unless you show me the return.

2506. Under your system it was not necessary to have so many men as under the system carried out by Mr. Hare?—No.

2507. Then why did you disapprove of men being taken away?—I think the reduction was carried further than safety, even with that consideration.

2508. In fact the service was weakened?—The service was weakened. We were often at a difficulty for men.—[A return was handed to the witness.]

2509. That is the expenditure?—You are asking. I suppose, now from July 1879 to May 1880. This return does not show expressly when the travelling expenses to constables ceased.

2510. Do you remember Mr. Brook Smith being out with a party from Wangaratta?—I remember hearing of it.

2511. I think the evidence given here is rather against him—that is, he came in against orders. Do you remember whether he did?—I know nothing of it, except from Mr. Nicolson afterwards. I was at Benalla at the time.

2512. Then you do not know anything at all about that circumstance, except what you have heard?—Nothing whatever.

2513. Were you present?—I was present when Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson in the early part of June 1880.

Mr. Hare.—2nd June.

The Witness.—Mr. Nicolson and Mr. O’Connor and myself were in my office when Mr. Hare came in. After a little preliminary conversation, Mr. Hare stated what we knew already—that he had come with authority to take over charge from Mr. Nicolson. Mr. Nicolson handed him over—2514. Was the authority verbal or written?—Written authority had passed.

2515. Such things are always done by correspondence?—I know Mr. Nicolson had his orders in writing, but whether Mr. Hare had with him I do not know. The orders are generally sent ahead.

2516. There are written instructions in all such cases?—Yes; Mr. Nicolson had his orders at this time.

Mr. Nicolson.—A copy is in the hands of the Commission.

The Witness.—I saw Mr. Nicolson, and heard him hand over and explain about papers relating to the Kelly business. I knew the business exactly as it stood at the time. Mr. Nicolson, after the conclusion of his words to Mr. Hare, asked me if I thought that was all.

2517. Meaning if the information was complete?—Yes; had he forgotten anything.

2518. “Is the information complete, is that all?”—Yes. “Have I forgotten anything,” he asked me—if I knew anything, or remembered anything, he had forgotten. He did not close his communication with Mr. Hare until he had mentioned everything that was essential, bearing on the case at all, that would be of any use to Mr. Hare. I think in Mr. Hare’s presence; I am not quite sure of this. He asked me also to give all information to Mr. Hare. I had already told him I would do so. I did do so. There were a large number of documents, some old, some were recent, and I understood everything essential to the case was passed over to Mr. Hare.

2519. Had you authentic information as to the whereabouts of the Kellys?—I think there was very late information about them at that time.

2520. You had seen the “stock inspector’s” letters?—I had seen them.

2521. Was Mr. Hare made aware of all this?—This person referred to had several communications before this time, and after. Some of them were very long dated, and I do not suppose those were brought under Mr. Hare’s special notice. They had passed and gone, and were out of date, several of his communications. Mr. Nicolson left Benalla that evening by train, and that was his last appearance in the district.

2522. What time was this?—The first interview between Mr. Hare and Mr. Nicolson was about half-past eleven or twelve.

2523. What was the latest time at this particular interview—was Mr. Nicolson at the office?—I think they were both in and out of the office until luncheon time—until one.

2524. What time did Mr. Nicolson leave?—By the six o’clock train.

2525. What time was the last official communication?—The communications did not last long; they were over before that time.

2526. What do you mean long?—Perhaps half-an-hour or twenty minutes’ talk between them, more or less. It took about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes to relate the different matters between them.

2527. Were the documents all there?—Some of the most important of the secret ones were in the drawer, and that was drawn open by Mr. Nicolson. They were filed together and handed to Mr. Hare just as they were, as all the contents were named, as you would form an index or catalogue.
2328. The contents would be on the back of the letter?—Well, I found them later so. I think they were endorsed with the informant’s name—“Communication from So-and-so and So-and-so”—but the contents were not shown on the back. There was a much larger correspondence on the shelf in the corner of the room. That was what had been mostly dealt with in the past, and extended over the whole time from October 1878 to this date.

2529. Whose office was that?—Mine, but it was used by them.

2530. Is it your office now?—Yes.

2531. Was it used by Captain Standish?—Yes.

2532. It was the Superintendent’s office?—Yes, and is now, but it was used by all those officers in charge at the different times.

2533. Did Mr. Nicolson explain the whole matter to Mr. Hare so as to give him an idea how to go to work?—Mr. Nicolson, without any reserve that I could see (and I knowing the whole business and looking on), explained the whole matter to Mr. Hare.

2534. In about 25 minutes?—A quarter of an hour to twenty minutes.

2535. That is what you may call the salient points of the matter, and he asked had he forgotten anything?—Mr. Nicolson asked me if I remembered anything else, if he had forgotten anything.

2536. Did he say if he had forgotten you were to tell him?—I would have told him, no doubt, if he had forgotten anything. I should not have allowed Mr. Nicolson to go away without giving Mr. Hare all the information that was necessary.

2537. Do you believe you had as much information as Mr. Nicolson of what was passing?—Yes.

2538. Had you access to all the papers?—Yes, I had access to all the papers.

2539. Did Mr. Nicolson keep any document from you?—I have not the slightest suspicion he ever did.

2540. Did he give full information of everything?—I am sure he did, he has always assured me he gave me everything.

2541. Did you actually know where the Kellys were at that time?—I am pretty sure we had information that they had appeared a week before that in the neighborhood of Beechworth, but I am speaking from recollection. If you like I will refer and make it sure—[the witness referred to his papers].—Yes, we had information that they had appeared in the Beechworth neighborhood. I mean somewhere near Sheep Station Creek.

2542. About Byrne’s house?—Yes, Byrne’s or Sherritt’s; I forget which now.

2543. How far is that from Beechworth?—Four to six miles, taking the shortest way, somewhere near Sheep Station Creek; four to six miles from Beechworth.

2544. I suppose that information caused you to send out that watch party to Sherritt’s hut?—I am afraid to speak without book, but I can find out in ten minutes—that would be under Mr. Nicolson, a week before Mr. Hare’s arrival, I am speaking of.

2545. In the interview of a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, did Mr. Nicolson inform Mr. Hare of the detailed arrangements he had under his control, such as the watch party at Beechworth?—I do not remember about that.

2546. Did he tell him the supply of money had been stopped and he would have to dismiss the agents?—No.

2547. Did you?—I do not think there was any allusion to that.

2548. Did Mr. Nicolson tell Mr. Hare that he proposed to call in all his agents at that time?—I think there was an understanding that if they were to be maintained, Mr. Hare would have to see to it, and act upon his own responsibility about it.

2549. Between Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare?—That Mr. Nicolson would be fully relieved of all responsibility, and if they were to be kept on, Mr. Hare would have to keep them on, on his responsibility.

2550. Was that a matter of conversation between Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare?—I think it must have been, because it was only then I could have had an opportunity of understanding that.

2551. Did Mr. Nicolson say, “There are certain parties in the pay of the police, you had better communicate to them what you intend to do in the future”?—That brings to my mind that there were some of those parties that we were not authorized, without their consent, to hand over to Mr. Hare. I undertook to get their consent and inform Mr. Hare, and rather than discharge them, I was to arrange, knowing them all, to ascertain their wishes upon the subject and then report to Mr. Hare.

2552. Do you remember if at this time the agent going by the alias “Hunter” was employed at this time?—At that time, I think not.

2553. Or “Bruce”?—Yes, I think he was got rid of at that time.

2554. Can you give any reason why he was got rid of?—I think he was trying to swindle the police out of money—that is, he was trying to get money for false information; I never saw the man.

2555. What was the false information?—I never had any communication with him, and all I have is by hearsay.

2556. Who is the officer who communicated with that man “Bruce”?—Captain Standish or Mr.
Nicolson, I think.

2557. They only could give him information?—They were the people in communication with “Bruce.” I do not think I ever saw him.

2558. By Mr. Nicolson.—Do you recollect the interview after lunch time with Mr. Hare?—I remember Mr. Nicolson asking Mr. Hare to dinner, but that is all I remember.

2559. By the Commission.—You were not at dinner with them?—No. My recollection goes this far, that Mr. Nicolson asked Mr. Hare to dine with him at his hotel that day.

2560. How long was that after the interview you spoke of?—I really cannot say.

2561. Was it in the afternoon?—My impression is it was after luncheon—the dinner hour is six o’clock. I heard them talking no business during that time.

2562. Were they both stopping at the same hotel—Craven’s?—Yes, I believe so.

2563. Were you present the whole time they were together in the afternoon?—No, I did not see them together in the afternoon, except during this little interview. I am sure Mr. Nicolson went away immediately.

2564. By Mr. Nicolson.—In what order did we leave the office on the first interview?—I cannot tell you. I fancy Mr. O’Connor left first—my recollection of it is imperfect. I was busy writing with my back turned a great deal of the time to the other officers, and I do not remember who left the room first.

2565. What time did the train come in that day?—A quarter past eleven.

2566. What time did Mr. Hare arrive at your office?—Perhaps twenty minutes or half-an-hour after that.

2567. That would be before twelve?—Yes.

2568. Who met Mr. Hare first when he arrived?—He walked into the office and found us all there.

2569. Who first got up and shook hands with him?—I thought I did.

2570. Then we had some preliminary conversation?—Yes.

2571. How long did that last?—We asked several questions about things—I did—and Mr. Hare talked of some indifferent matters perhaps five or ten minutes before business began.

2572. That would bring us up to twelve, and you say we did not leave the office till one?—No, I did not say that.

2573. When did we leave the office then?—Some of you left the office as soon as the business part of the conversation was over and came in again.

2574. Came again?—I think so.

2575. Who did that?—You must understand I am only speaking from recollection of matters that seemed to me then, and even now, very unimportant. I am quite sure they all left the office at intervals after the business conversation was over. I have a recollection of seeing Mr. Hare speaking outside the office, I think to Mr. O’Connor. I have the recollection of being outside the office myself, and I have a recollection of Mr. Nicolson leaving the office, but this was all after the business part of the conversation was over.

2576. And before lunch time?—And before lunch time.

2577. Do you not remember that Mr. O’Connor went out first?—That is my impression decidedly.

2578. Who went out after and was talking outside with him. Do you not remember my talking to you after they had gone out of the room, and turning to you, and saying, “Is there anything I have forgotten?”—Yes.

2579. Who was in the room then?—Only us two. That was after the business was over.

2580. What was your reply?—I said, “Yes, you have told everything that I know to bear on the case.” You had made that appeal in Mr. Hare’s presence also.

2581. Yes, but at last, when we were alone together, I turned towards you, and I asked you if there was anything I had forgotten?—Yes.

2582. What was your reply?—To the effect that you had told him everything.

2583. By the Commission.—And that is your opinion now as then?—Yes.

2584. By Mr. Nicolson.—You spoke of a large heap of papers on the left of the table containing the whole correspondence from the very beginning—a lot of old correspondence from the beginning of the outbreak to that date—was that alluded to at all?—I think that was pointed out by you to Mr. Hare.

2585. Were they handled or interfered with?—No.

2586. Do you remember that drawer in the table where I was seated—you know my usual seat?—Yes.

2587. Are there not two drawers?—Yes.

2588. Do you remember the drawer being open?—Yes.

2589. Were those particular papers in question connected with this enquiry, all the particular matters and special matters in that table?—Yes, they were all there.

2590. By the Commission.—You had specially confidential letters in that drawer—is that one—\[handed a letter]\?—Yes.

2591. Is there another drawer?—Yes, on the right-hand side.

2592. By Mr. Nicolson.—Was that interfered with?—No, that drawer was placed under Mr. Hare directly you left.
2593. Did not this small drawer contain all—describe the size of the drawer?—An ordinary small table drawer.
2594. How many packages—do you remember a large packet of papers, and that I said to Mr. Hare I had a particular reason I would like to keep them; they were of no use to him, and I would like to take them with me?—I remember an allusion of that sort for “Bruce’s” papers.
2595. You know the reason, I dare say?—I do not know that I do.
2596. Do you remember those papers about the armour. How many letters did you find in that drawer—you sent them down to me?—On the 20th November you asked me for two letters.
2597. The letters connected with the armour?—You telegraphed me on the 18th, asking for the letters of this individual known as the “diseased stock” man. I said, “Your telegram of the 18th November, asking for this man’s letter, came in my absence, and it had to wait my return. I send now three letters, February 26th, May 14th, and May 20th, and some memoranda, some notes made by you undated. I suppose these are what you refer to, as I can find no others.”
2598. By the Commission.—That was in answer to the telegram?—Yes, he asked for those papers by telegram, and I sent them.
2599. Did he ask for these papers as Acting Commissioner of Police?—Yes.
2600. Not as a private individual?—No, as Acting Chief Commissioner of Police.
2601. In November?—I think his telegram, asking for them, is in the hands of the Secretary of the Commission.
2602. Mr. Nicolson said he wrote for them in a private character?—I wrote to him as Chief Commissioner of Police, and responded to his telegram, and would not have sent them if he had not telegraphed as Acting Chief Commissioner of Police. I attached the papers to the telegram. The practice is, when you get the telegram ordering certain information, you attach your return to the telegram, and turn it up and say “Forwarded herewith.” 20th November was my reply to his telegram of the 18th.
2603. He was head of the Police Department then?—Yes.
2604. By Mr. Nicolson.—Coming back to that day, do you remember my handing an envelope with those letters to Mr. Hare?—I do not remember those papers particularly. I found them in the other drawer when I sent them to you.
2605. How were they in the other drawer?—All together.
2606. Were they not in the envelope?—Yes, with one enclosure.
2607. Were they not in one envelope when I handed them to Mr. Hare?—I cannot speak so well of your papers, because your drawer was private and under your control, and I cannot well say how you kept your papers. You had the key of both those drawers, and though I often saw documents in them, still they were not under my daily observation, as my own were.
2608. Had you not access to them?—Not unless I went for the key.
2609. You do not suppose any one would keep our documents unlocked?—Certainly not; but the drawer was under your control.
2610. You were speaking about some expedition, the last information about the Kelly gang where there was an expedition—had I not come in from the expedition the day previous?—Yes, from the place I named, Sheep Station Creek; from the reported appearance of the Kellys there.
2611. After that, up to the time that Mr. Hare left, from that date to then, did Mr. Hare ever utter any complaint to you about not having received information?—The only complaint he made was about the discharge of those agents, no other about the want of information. He had all the information I could possibly give him, and that was all he could possibly obtain from anybody else.

2612. You say, as I handed the papers to him, I explained the contents?—You explained without reserve, to my mind, all that an officer relieving you would require to know.
2613. Do you recollect Mr. Hare interrupting, “What was your last news, when did you receive it?”—I think that was said.
2614. Do you recollect, in reply, my referring to their recent appearance at Chiltern, two of them at a certain person’s place?—Yes, I do. I was not aware it was Chiltern.
2615. Did I not then go on to explain to Mr. Hare from there right down to their appearance at Sheep Station Creek, when I had been out on an expedition the day before?—Well, I was only observant of this as to whether you gave him all the information that we then knew of the Kellys without noticing details. I remember distinctly you told him everything—all information that I knew to be in existence. I do not remember those details. I was occupied a good deal myself with my own business in the office, and I cannot give you an answer to each of those questions as you put them.
2616. By the Commission.—What time did Mr. Nicolson leave at night?—Six o’clock.
2617. Then he must have been there about seven hours while Mr. Hare was there?—About seven hours—Yes.
2618. You and Mr. Nicolson occupied the same office?—Yes.
2619. And there were two tables in that office?—Yes.
2620. Who attended to the discipline of the ordinary men. Supposing a change of men from Wood’s...
Point to Jamieson, who would do that?—They were all under my discretion.

2621. You would specially deal with those?—Yes.

2622. You say there was another table, that Mr. Nicolson occupied?—Yes.

2623. You stated also that a bundle of papers connected with the ordinary correspondence was on the shelf?—No, that had relation only to the Kelly business.

2624. Close to Mr. Nicolson’s table there was a lot of papers connected with the Kelly business?—Yes.

2625. There were two drawers in the table that Mr. Nicolson sat at?—Yes.

2626. Did I understand you to say he opened the drawer, and said to Mr. Hare—“There are all the papers containing the circumstances relating to the case”?—Yes.

2627. We have heard that there was a special lot of letters in the envelope?—Yes.

2628. Do you know that man’s writing—[handing a letter to the witness]?—That is disguised writing.

2629. You know the agent?—I think so.

2630. Can you say, now, of your own knowledge, amongst the papers in one of those drawers where Mr. Nicolson had the letters, that there were letters from this person?—All I can say about this letter is that after the Glenrowan business, and when Mr. Nicolson wrote to me for this man’s letters, I found this.

2631. Is that the letter you refer to, written in November, asking for this special letter?—Yes and that was one I sent down.

2632. Where did you find that?—In the right-hand drawer.

2633. Was that drawer handed over to Mr. Hare?—Yes, both were handed over to Mr. Hare.

2634. Had you any reason to remove it, after giving over the papers to Mr. Hare, and your finally sending it down?—No; I knew it was in one of two drawers at the time Mr. Hare took over.

2635. Who kept the key after Mr. Nicolson took charge?—Mr. Hare.

2636. Therefore if Mr. Nicolson gave that letter over to Mr. Hare, and you found it there finally, it must have been there in Mr. Hare’s room at the time, and under his control?—Yes; that stands to reason.

2637. And he had the key of it?—Yes.

2638. How many agents, paid or otherwise, had you supplying you with information at the time Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson, on the 3rd of July?—Five.

2639. Including the “diseased stock” man?—Yes.

2640. Did Mr. Nicolson convey to Mr. Hare, at that interview, the value of those five persons and their evidence, or of their information, rather?—He gave him the substance of all information.

2641. Did he say, “I have so many agents now supplying me with information, and I attach such and such importance to this man and that man”?—I cannot remember that particularly.

2642. Would Mr. Hare be able to judge only from letters he found in the drawers, as to the value of the agents?—I think Mr. Hare knew all of them.

2643. But Mr. Nicolson had been in charge?—Mr. Hare had all the recent information sent in by this man.

2644. In the drawer?—He had them from the drawer and by word of mouth from Mr. Nicolson.

2645. He gave it all by word of mouth in ten minutes?—There was more than that.

2646. Mr. Hare says ten minutes?—Ten minutes would have told all that was to be told.

2647. Did Mr. Nicolson tell that these were the persons he had engaged, and he would have now to make arrangements because supplies were stopped?—I do not think anything was said about supplies being stopped. When an officer gives over the charge of business like this, he would name his agents and say, “If you continue, you must make your own agreement.”

2648. Would an officer going out communicate the fact to the agents that, as far as he had done, he had finished with them?—He ought to, to protect himself—most assuredly.

2649. At the time Mr. Nicolson relieved Mr. Hare on the previous occasion do you remember what steps were taken by Mr. Hare?—There were no agents I remember then—we had no systematic agents except the one man, Sherritt.

2650. In the case of Sherritt did Mr. Hare, of your own knowledge, communicate to Sherritt and say, “Now you will have to make terms with Mr. Nicolson”—I do not know that.

2651. It would be his duty?—No, it would be simply for his own protection, or else he might be held answerable for expenses incurred by these agents.

2652. By Mr. Hare—Do you think that Mr. Nicolson, having been there eleven months, could, in ten or fifteen minutes, give all the information respecting the pursuit of the outlaws?—No, it has taken me three days to tell that to the Commission.

John Sadleir, continued, 13th April 1881.
2656. With reference to those agents being paid up to date, and that one was over-paid?—Yes.

2657. How long did it take going over those accounts?—I think that would take a very small part of the time, because I think he gave you a statement of them in writing.

2658. He went over each account that could be due to each man?—That account would want no explanation; that would explain itself.

2659. Do you remember one subject that he told me in connexion with this, beyond the accounts?—He told you what the agents had been doing, and everything that was important.

2660. In fifteen minutes, over eleven months’ experience?—He did not go further than the last few months.

2661. Did he give any other information, beyond stating that Mrs. Sherritt had seen Joe Byrne in the shed?—That was the very latest information.

2662. Did he give anything later than that?—No; I do not remember that he did.

2663. This man, “Diseased Stock,” had been in the employ of Mr. Nicolson for eleven months?—He had been in communication with us for a long time.

2664. After I left I gave his name to Mr. Nicolson?—I know this man was in communication with the officers of police before Mr. Nicolson came up a second time.

2665. He was with Mr. Nicolson for eleven months?—I know that he was in communication as far back as April.

2666. Do you know how many letters were written from that agent to Mr. Nicolson?—I could only find three.

2667. Were there not more than that?—I think his communications were verbal, mostly.

2668. Were there not more than three letters?—I do not think it; I have no recollection. I found three, and sent them to Mr. Nicolson.

2669. Do you mean to say only three for the eleven months?—I have no recollection of it, I could not speak distinctly about them if I had not seen them.

2670. Were there any other letters removed from the office about the Glenrowan affair besides those three?—No.

2671. Was not Mr. Nicolson in the office between the Glenrowan affair and the time you sent the letters down; did he not visit the office?—I know that Mr. Nicolson came up with his wife to Benalla; I am not quite sure he came to the office, I think he did—yes.

2672. Were there any papers connected with this matter referred to out of that private drawer?—There was nothing taken unless Mr. Nicolson were to steal them, nothing removed by him or anybody else.

2673. Was that drawer opened and any reference made to letters?—No, after he left I took the key and kept the drawer myself.

2674. By the Commission. Where did you get the keys?—I think Mr. Hare sent them to me after the day he was wounded.

2675. By Mr. Hare. Were they referred to on that occasion that Mr. Nicolson visited Benalla?—I do not think so. Mr. Nicolson may have asked for information, but I am certain there was nothing taken unless it was stolen without my knowledge.

2676. Where are the letters now that Mr. Nicolson wanted to take on that occasion, when I asked for them to be left to read?—They are amongst the papers catalogued, you will find it on the file.

2677. You say you do not recollect any other subject being touched upon except the one of Joe Byrne’s being seen up by Mrs. Sherritt’s on that occasion?—I know Mr. Nicolson, in talking the matter over to you, talked about every point that I thought would have been of any use to you or that you would desire to know.

2678. But eleven months’ work could not be told in that time?—He did not talk about eleven months’ work.

2679. Was it only one week?—He gave you all the information that was in our own minds at that time.

2680. With regard to “Renwick” alias, do you remember his coming down from Beechworth?—Yes.

2681. Do you remember his making an appointment to meet me that night?—Yes, you told me of it.

2682. Do you know whether he did meet me?—I remember you told me afterwards he would not work for you.

2683. That he had left the place?—That he would not work for you. He was at no particular place at the time.

2684. He came down from Beechworth to Benalla to see me?—Yes.

2685. Did not Mr. Nicolson tell him that he was going to Melbourne, and that he was to come down to see me at Benalla?—I think we told that to our different agents. I told that to the “diseased stock” man myself.

2686. With regard to that telegram and the information I received from Detective Ward, were you aware that those agents were to be dismissed that day?—I have not seen the telegram yet.

2687. You know there was a telegram to that effect?—I never knew of it till you told me next morning, nor am I aware of the purport of it now, except from hearsay. - [The telegram was produced.]—This is the first time I have seen this.

2688. Were you aware of that telegram being sent?—No.

2689. Or any subject connected with it, that those agents were to be discharged?—No. I knew nothing at all about it.
2690. By Mr. Nicolson.—Do you understand that telegram?—“To send Constable Armstrong back to his station and withdraw the watch party.”

2691. By Mr. Hare.—Where were they staying?—I do not know exactly.

2692. Where was that watch party?—No. I never gave them any instructions.

145

2693. Well, you could not afford that information to me?—No.

2694. Did he say anything about it when I relieved him—about his purpose to remove them?—No, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Hare.—I never spoke to Mr. Nicolson, after I left the office, on the subject of the Kelly business, after I left Mr. Sadleir’s presence. I may explain to the Commission. Mr. Sadleir and I were conversing on the subject of the Kelly business that evening, and about three that evening Mr. Nicolson put his head in and said, “Mr. Hare, will you dine with me to-night?” and I said I would be very glad; and he had to go to town, and I did not dine with him, and I never saw him after that.

2694a (To the Witness).—With regard to that, will you read on?—“And send them to duty; any further orders from Superintendents Hare or Sadleir.” I suppose that to mean any further orders you will receive will come from those two officers.

2696. So that you could not possibly know anything of that, except Mr. Nicolson had told you?—No; I did not see him again after this.

2697. By Mr. Hare.—Will you read on to the end?—“Detective Ward already instructed that no further authority for money or supplies to Tommy or his friend.”

2698. By the Commission.—Do you know what that refers to?—That means that any authority that did exist no longer existed for Tommy and his friends; that they were to be discharged; that Mr. Nicolson’s authority ceased for their employment. That is for the constable in charge at Beechworth.

2699. By Mr. Hare.—You see that is dated six hours after he handed over to me?—Yes.

2700. By the Commission.—There is some feeling with reference to this, Mr. Nicolson. I would like to ask you now, why did you send that telegram?

Mr. Nicolson.—I had forgotten to send it during the forenoon from the office in the bustle of business. At the railway office, just starting, I only remembered that those men were left stuck in that house without giving them any orders.

2701. That you were still responsible for them?—Yes. I rushed back to the telegraph office, wrote that telegram, and despatched it. Those men had been sent there the previous week, when we heard the information about Joe Byrne, the outlaw, being there, and from the expedition I had returned the day before. Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor went up with me in the first instance, and then I made arrangements to send those men out temporarily for a few days whilst we went down, and I made further arrangements, and came up with another party. (To Mr. Sadleir)—Here is the telegram which I understood you to say you never saw till now?

Mr. Sadleir.—Never.

2702. By the Commission.—Had you any knowledge on the interview, or during the interview between Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare, on the day that Mr. Hare took charge from Mr. Nicolson, that a statement of this purport or anything like it would be sent?—No.

2703. Is Constable Armstrong the one who was in Sherritt’s house when he was shot?—Yes.

2704. Was he specially selected for the Kelly business to go, or was he a constable of your district?—A constable belonging to the district.

2705. “Send Constable Armstrong back to his station”—where was his station?—Beechworth then.

2706. Where was he to be sent from—where was he at the date of this?—Out watching at Mrs. Byrne’s.

2707. Did Mr. Nicolson communicate to Mr. Hare in your presence, or were you aware that it was Mr. Nicolson’s intention the day he gave up duty there to order Senior-constable Armstrong from that place. Was that amongst the particulars he gave Mr. Hare?—I do not think that was mentioned at all to Mr. Hare.

2708. Had you any knowledge from what you heard Mr. Nicolson say to Mr. Hare, or from conversation with Mr. Nicolson, that it was Mr. Nicolson’s intention to issue this order after he had given up the charge of the district to Mr. Hare to that effect?—I knew nothing at all of Mr. Nicolson’s intentions of that kind.

2709. You have been in a great number of stations in the colony?—Yes.

2710. And have taken up charge from officers in the usual way?—Yes.

2711. Is it usual for officers to give an order over men they have been in charge of, after they have left charge?—No, it is not usual for a man to forget anything, but I can quite understand that being done—there is nothing irregular in that.

2712. Would it not be usual that if a man did forget he would write to his successor, telling about it?—Yes, it would be more courteous.
2713. Not courteous, but more official?—More in accordance with strict official courtesy.
2714. Then it says, “Withdraw the watch party”—was that under Armstrong?—Yes.
2715. Had you any knowledge that that was going to be done on that day at all?—No; I do not know that I had knowledge it was there at the time. I knew that Mr. Nicolson contemplated sending a party into that part of the country then, and I had spoken to him about it.
2716. “Send Constable Armstrong back to his station, withdraw the watch party, and send them to duty”—that would mean duty at their own stations?—Yes.
2717. “Any further orders from Superintendents Hare and Sadleir”—that would be that Mullane, to whom this was directed, was to receive further orders from Mr. Hare and Mr. Sadleir?—Certainly.
2718. Then the next paragraph, “Detective Ward already instructed that no further authority for money or supplies to Tommy or his friend”—did you know prior to Mr. Hare’s telling you, on the morning after Mr. Nicolson left, that Ward had been instructed that there was no further money or supplies to be paid to those agents?—I knew nothing at all about this.
2719. Did you hear Mr. Nicolson tell anything to that purport to Mr. Hare when he was giving up charge of the place?—Mr. Nicolson gave Mr. Hare to understand that any future special services must be upon his authority, and not on Mr. Nicolson’s; that was, as a matter of course, that Mr. Hare could please himself and not be bound by Mr. Nicolson’s authority; that Mr. Nicolson was relieved from all further authority after giving over charge.

John Sadleir,
13th April 1881.

2720. Do you know whether Detective Ward, in consequence of some instructions, saw Mr. Hare?—I think Mr. Hare sent for him.
2721. To come to where?—Benalla.
2722. Did you see Ward?—No. Probably I did see him, yet I do not remember.
2723. Did Mr. Hare tell you he had conversation with him?—Mr. Hare told me that Mr. Nicolson had discharged his agents the evening before, and asked me if I could not tell him anything about it. I knew nothing about it.
2724. By Mr. Nicolson.—Is there anything about discharging agents?—Something about supplies. I may explain then it was left to Mr. Hare’s discretion whether he would keep up the supplies still to those people.
2725. What was the impression conveyed to you the following morning by Mr. Hare?—That all the people should be discharged.
2726. Was he annoyed?—Yes, he was puzzled, and so was I, but the telegram does not bear that out.
2727. If it did bear that out you would be surprised?—Yes.
2728. Had Mr. Hare the means of finding out who the agents were?—He knew all about them, but there were some of them that it was agreed I should see and ask whether they were willing to assist Mr. Hare as they had been assisting Mr. Nicolson.
2729. “Tommy” and his friends were well known to Mr. Hare?—Yes. “Tommy” was chiefly his friend. “Tommy” was selected by Detective Ward.
2730. Under Mr. Hare?—Yes.
2731. After the Sebastopol affair?—Yes, and I think we did nothing with him till afterwards Mr. Hare picked him up and made use of him.
2732. By Mr. Hare.—Who were the agents you were to see—I never heard of it till this present moment?—That is a mistake—for instance, the "diseased stock" man I was to see. The point is that you heard nothing about the arrangement about seeing the agents.
2733. Did you see them?—Yes.
2734. By the Commission (to Mr. Hare).—You said in your direct evidence there was a man who said he would not work for you?—Yes, that was the man I met in Benalla, mentioned just now.
2735. The Witness.—The other principal agent I was to have seen and asked him to work for Mr.
Hare. We had not his authority at the time to say he would do so.
2736. In fact you did not know what mode of procedure Mr. Hare would follow?—No, I could not tell what was in his mind at the time.
2737. You say you had authentic information when Mr. Hare came of the outlaws being seen at Mrs.
Byrne’s house. Did Mr. Nicolson give Mr. Hare all the information about the watch party and so on?—Yes, when the outlaws are supposed to visit a place, and a search party went to visit the place there was an end of them.
2738. Mr. Hare knew all about this watch party?—No, I cannot say that.
2739. Would it not have been one of the most important points to have given him information on, as to what steps had been taken recently to watch the Kellys?—My impression is that the watch part was put there to meet the contingency of Mr. Nicolson going out, and making search and driving the outlaws across the other search party.
2740. When Mr. Nicolson was informing Mr. Hare that the Kellys had been seen at Byrne’s place and he had a watch party there, was not that the time really to have reported that Armstrong had a party there watching?—My impression is that the party would then have been left watching for nothing.

2741. But they were withdrawn by a telegram from Mr. Nicolson?—Suppose this watch party, as I believe was the case, was put at a certain place to meet the Kelly’s in case they were running away from another search party on their tracks, that watch party’s use ended as soon as the pursuit party was called in, and that is what was the case.

2742. Why were they continued there afterwards?—I do not know; Mr. Nicolson says through forgetfulness on his part.

2743. Do you not think that at the time Mr. Nicolson was informing Mr. Hare that the Kellys had been seen at Byrne’s place within a week before that date, that that was the time Mr. Nicolson would have naturally thought to have told Mr. Hare he had a watch party there?—Mr. Nicolson did not speak to Mr. Hare about that watch party.

2744. Does not it appear strange that an officer giving over charge should have forgotten that information so recent?—I think it more strange his forgetting the watch party altogether, and that they ought to be withdrawn.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Eleven o’clock.

John Sadleir further examined.

2745. By the Commission.—Will you resume?—After Mr. Nicolson left Benalla on the 2nd of June, Mr. Hare and myself went over all the particulars of the Kelly business.

2746. The documentary particulars?—Everything in relation to them—documents and all that I could tell him by word of mouth.

2747. Was that on the 2nd?—No, those are the following days—following the 2nd. I made no concealment from Mr. Hare of anything. I told him I was not so willing to work with him con amore as I was on the first occasion, and he expressed himself as very anxious that I should give him all possible advice and help, and he said he was desirous of not doing anything without consulting me. Then I promised to assist him as far as I could, and I did so. On the afternoon of the 27th June, about between two and three o’clock, Mr. Hare sent for me. I found him near the post office. He then informed me of the murder of Aaron Sherritt and of the police in his hut being bailed up by the gang on the previous night. After some consultation, I advised him to get the trackers with Mr. O’Connor back again. We had some difficulty in getting Captain Standish, either in finding him or in getting him to carry out what was required. I think the difficulty at first was in finding him.

2748. Do you mean you had a difficulty in finding him?—In communicating with him by telegram. I do not know whether finding him was our first difficulty, or getting him to carry out some arrangements that were necessary.

2749. That is, there was not an early reply to your telegram?—There was some hitch; I forget what it was.

2750. You do not mean to say that he objected to carry out your recommendations?—No; there was a difficulty either in finding him or in getting him to carry out some of the arrangements. As we went on arranging, I advised Mr. Hare not to do as he first intended, that, was to start with his party from Benalla to Beechworth without waiting for the trackers; and later on, when he came to agree to this, I recommended him to take an engine he intended for his own use as a pilot engine to Beechworth. I see Mr. Hare, in his evidence, says he has forgotten that.

2751. I think he qualified it by saying he thought you suggested it?—I have not seen that. How ever I mentioned the matter to Captain Standish a day or two afterwards, in speaking to him after all was arranged for the night, and messengers were despatched in accordance with an arrangement of some months’ standing in anticipation of an outbreak of this sort. I undertook to see everything arranged for the start, so that Mr. Hare might have whatever rest he could. I will put in the papers. This is the 2nd of June. I will put in the document marked in my catalogue C 43.

2752. That was made nine months before this date?—Yes, sealed and marked on the outside, “To be opened only on instructions from head-quarters.” They were handed to the various stations, and kept there to be acted on in case of an outbreak.

2753. What do you mean by “head-quarters”?—Benalla, the district head-quarters.
2754. Were those your own instructions?—Those were instructions prepared and signed, I see, by me, arranged in conference with Mr. Nicolson, who was then in charge, and were to the effect that the police in different localities were, on the report of an outbreak, to send other constables and assistants to different crossings, townships, bridges, and points where the Kellys would be likely to pass in case of a pursuit, either by the ordinary police or the trackers.

2755. Were the places stated in the sealed orders?—The places were stated in the sealed orders. Of course the orders varied for each different district. For instance, at Millewa, Bright, Beechworth, Wangaratta.

2756. North of Wangaratta would be nearer the scene of the outbreak?—Yes, north of Wangaratta would be nearer the scene of the outbreak, and steps were taken from Wangaratta in pursuance of those instructions.

2757. Were the New South Wales police in possession of those instructions?—No.

2758. You had no concerted arrangements with them?—We had agreed to work with them as well as we possibly could. Those only referred to places in the North-Eastern district.

2759. Was it after the outbreak occurred at Wangaratta instructions would go there, and your men would go where an outbreak was; the others would know where to go to cut off the retreat, if you did not make them amenable to justice?—I will read the instruction to the police at Millewa:—“Benalla, 24th September 1879. Strictly confidential. Memo.—On receipt of instructions to carry these arrangements into effect, Constable Arthur” (the man in charge) “will first have the township of Millewa patrolled by a constable, for the purpose of watching for the appearance of the outlaws; and should they pass through, it will be the duty of the constable simply to note carefully the direction by which they leave, preserve the tracks, and report without delay to Constable Arthur, who will immediately pass on the information to Sergeant Steele. This duty must be maintained from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. 2ndly. Have the—bridge carefully watched by a constable, and, if necessary, a reliable hired assistant, whose wages must not exceed 10s. per diem, chargeable only for the time actually employed, it will be the duty of these men to watch carefully—and, above all, silently—the bridge, and should the outlaws pass, they will note carefully the direction they take and preserve the tracks, so as to enable the trackers to pick up the trail when they arrive. It is not intended to dispute the passage of the river with the outlaws, there being only one man at each point of observation—that is if the whole party of outlaws should pass together; if but one or two pass, and the constable or his assistant should clearly recognise them, then he should certainly capture them, if an opportunity offers—J. S., Superintendent)—but simply to watch and afterwards indicate the direction taken by them. Too much care cannot be taken whilst on this duty, as the slightest indiscretion might spoil all our plans. These duties require coolness and sagacity, and as very important results may follow the efficient performance of them. I hope no pains will be spared by the men entrusted with them. Should the outlaws pass over the bridge, the watchers must keep them in view as long as possible from their post of observation, but keep themselves carefully concealed from view; and when the offenders have gone out of hearing, they will proceed quietly for a time towards the place where they will have to report to Constable Arthur; but as soon as they consider it safe, they must mend their pace, and make their report as soon as possible. Every care must be taken to guard against giving a false alarm, the result of which might be fatal to our arrangements. The bridge must be carefully and constantly watched, day and night, until orders countermanding these are given.—bridge will be watched by the constable from Beechworth, who will receive his instructions there.—(Signed) J. Sadleir, Superintendent.” I will ask the Press not to mention those localities by name. The object of those instructions was to hasten the work of the trackers—that is, for instance, if the trackers were put on the tracks of the outlaws at Beechworth, we could, on receiving information of the outlaws passing ahead at another point, lift them, as you would hounds, and carry them on with fresh tracks from the last point they were seen at. Those instructions, as regards one of the bridges, were carried out. Two of the outlaws were observed to pass after the murder of Sherritt, which was proof to us of the effects of the order.

2760. Would you argue from that that there were only two at the murder of Sherritt?—I think that is certain. I attended at the Benalla railway station when Mr. Hare met Mr. O’Connor on the morning of the 28th. I saw them start for Glenrowan, the combined parties, by special train, and then I returned and got to bed again about half-past three. I was called by a constable. I cannot say the hour. I was very fast asleep, and took some time before I was quite aware what he was talking about.

2761. Was it before daylight?—Yes, long before. I think about four o’clock on the morning of the 28th June. He brought various messages; the first message, I think, was, that the engine Mr. Hare was travelling on had not arrived at Wangaratta. The next was, that it had arrived at Wangaratta. Then the next message was, that that last one was a mistake; it had not arrived, and that firing was heard near Glenrowan; and I got a final message that Mr. Hare was wounded, and that the Kellys were shut up, surrounded at Glenrowan. I should say that those messages all came from Wangaratta, arrangements having been made to keep the telegraph going between the two places until Mr. Hare had safely passed up with this party.

2762. That was because the party meant to go beyond Wangaratta?—Yes; and the same arrangement was made with the Beechworth telegraph station—it was kept open. I think Mr. Hare made some other arrangement that all other stations were to report at two o'clock that morning, or half-past two, all the stations in which we were interested, as to whether things were all right there. As soon as I got the last message I have referred to, I jumped out of bed and dressed, saddled my horse, and started. In the meantime I had heard further, that Mr. Hare was coming to the Benalla post office, and wished to see me. I got to the post office between four and five.

2763. That is the telegraph office?—And telegraph office; they are both the same. I found Mr. Hare there. He was sitting down, dictating to Mr. Saxe the operator. He spoke of going back to Glenrowan. I told him it would be foolish to do so. He was badly wounded, and he was then growing faint as I spoke to him; and he fainted, I believe, before I left the yard. While I was speaking it was only a very few moments.

2764. What did he say to you?—He told me that the Kellys were at Mrs. Jones's and to hurry on; I forget his words beyond that. Of course I wanted no orders after that; he told me to hurry on and to take all the police with me that I had. Those were all collecting at this moment, and running on foot by the post office to the railway station. I do not think he said anything else. Before I had done speaking with him he asked for water; he was growing faint, and I do not think there were many more words passed between us. I rode then—galloped down on horseback—to the railway station. I found the engine ready to start, but was delayed for about ten minutes, waiting for Dr. Nicholson. It was reported at this time that there were others wounded. We were delayed until a few minutes past five, as far as I remember, and we reached Glenrowan, myself and several police, a list of whom I will give presently.

2765. Was it dark then?—Yes, it was dark; there was a moon—there was no daylight. They landed at Glenrowan—

2766. About what time?—It is fifteen miles and we travelled fast—I should say it would be after half-past five. The first thing on landing I asked for Mr. O'Connor. The whole of the men who had come with me and myself were standing in a cluster for a moment.

2767. Your own men?—My own men. It was pointed out to me that we were being fired upon, and then I could hear the bullets striking close near us from the house—Jones's. Senior-Constable Kelly appeared about this time, and I ascertained from him how the men were placed—the first question I asked him—and he represented some point, I forget now particularly, that was weak, and I gave him all of my own men to strengthen the different points all round while I should go and see Mr. O'Connor. I saw Mr. O'Connor immediately. I ascertained from him what he knew of the position of affairs. I was informed that the outlaws and their prisoners had barricaded the place with the furniture and bags of grain or chaff, and something of that sort.

2767a. Where was the point you met Mr. O'Connor—where was he at this time?—He was in the watercourse in cover, about forty-five yards from the front door of Jones's.

2768. Was he with his men—did you see his men round him?—There were only two of his men and Constable Kirkham, two trackers, Jack and Jimmy.

2769. Is Kirkham a colored man?—No, one of our ordinary men; he was attached to the trackers.

2770. Did Senior-Constable Kelly seem to have charge of all arrangements?—He was the first man I saw who knew what was going on. He was the only sub-officer on the ground, I think, and it was he who told me where Mr. O'Connor was. I spoke with Mr. O'Connor for some time, during which the outlaws came out and challenged the police, making the noise upon their armour.

2771. Did you see them come out?—I could see the figures and hear the sound most distinctly.

2772. What light was there then?—The light was not sufficient to distinguish.

2773. Could you see figures forty-five yards off?—I do not know that I could. I thought I saw them. I heard the noise.

2774. Was the moon very bright?—No, the moon was not bright; there was a hazy sky. You could not see the moon’s edges clearly, though you could see the moon itself; it shone through a fog, as it were, or through a cloud, not enough to hide the moon; and the moon stood behind the building, was descending towards the west. The building faced the east.

2775. Going down towards the Warby ranges?—Yes, and the house is with its back to the Warby ranges. In fact, to judge by the calls of the police in different points, the outlaws were frequently coming out in that way.

2776. What were the calls of the police?—Challenging.

2777. To show the place was surrounded?—No; the outlaws, to judge from the noise of the police about, appeared to come out frequently, even oftener than I saw.

2778. That intimated that the police were surrounding the place?—I knew the police were round the place.

2779. For the means of escape did they come?—No, at first to defy the police.

2780. Did all four come out?—That I could not tell. I could see one with certainty. Whenever the outlaws showed they were fired upon, and so all through the morning, whenever they showed either at the door or the window or on the open ground they were fired upon by the police.

2781. Was that fire returned?—They were constantly firing from the house.
2783. Was the fire returned by the outlaws?—Frequently. I did not see them firing from the open ground, but there were frequent shots came from the house all the morning.

2784. Can you fix the time “all the morning”?—They were firing from the house I think up to one or two o’clock in the afternoon.

2785. They did not show themselves outside after daylight?—They showed themselves at the windows, and were reported as being seen up to two or three in the afternoon, showing themselves at the windows. Now, to return to the time before daylight. After considering with Mr. O’Connor what was best to be done I went around to see the outposts.

2786. That was before daylight?—Yes. The first man I saw was a young constable named Gascoigne. He was on the south-east end of the building, quite close in at a tree.

2787. That would be more towards Benalla?—In the direction of the schoolhouse.

2788. Then you passed right in front of the house in going to him?—No, I went down a continuation of this gully where it breaks into the railway and crossed. I was under cover the whole time up to that point. He informed me that he was certain he had hit one of the outlaws several times, and that he was sure he was in armour, otherwise he would have killed him.

2789. Can you tell about how far that was from the front of the hotel?—About 25 or 30 yards. I did not believe this. I thought Gascoigne, being a young man, he was rather scared; and I did not wish to encourage the supposition that they were invulnerable. He also told me that he had seen one of the outlaws (it must have been Ned Kelly, if his supposition was at all correct), after the first fire when Mr. Hare was wounded, going into the yard amongst the horses, trying apparently to catch a horse, but the horses moved away as he approached them; and that he called out then to the police on the other side to look out for them, that they were trying to escape; and I think it followed on that that those police who heard Gascoigne say that shot the horses. At this time, that is, going on towards daybreak, I was anxious about seeing every point. He informed me that he was certain he had hit one of the outlaws several times, and that he was sure he was in armour, otherwise he would have killed him.

2790. Did he intimate how long it was that this had occurred and the horses were shot before you had seen him?—I think he meant it was soon after Mr. Hare’s accident.

2791. Shortly after the commencement of the fight?—I think so. I would not be sure about that.

2792. It has been stated that Kelly escaped immediately after that—got away?—According to Gascoigne’s account Kelly, instead of going straight into the bush, went to the horses in the yard. Gascoigne at that time could not be sure it was Kelly, but he described the figure as Kelly was afterwards found, with a loose cloak on, and I believe he was the only one dressed in that way. It was a very difficult matter, I found, to get round myself from post to post. You had to run the gauntlet of the outlaws’ fire from the building, and there was danger too from the cross fire of the police. Constable Dwyer, an active zealous fellow, seeing me going round myself, asked for any messages I had to give, and I gave him some messages to the different points, and to ascertain for me particulars of how the thing stood at all sides, and he ran round from place to place where I directed. As he went along I saw him jumping and skipping as sheep will, apparently over nothing. These were the bullets passing, as he reported afterwards.

2793. Did he mean when the bullets impinged in the timber?—No, as they passed him as he was going round with my messages.

2794. Probably as they were firing he thought it would be safer to jump?—I understood he jumped when he heard a bullet coming.

2795. Was he one of the party that you took up, or was he there before you arrived?—I think he was a Wangaratta man.

2796. Would he be one of the men who came to the relief. I want to fix the time of the Wangaratta men coming down—was it before you?—I do not think we knew which of us were coming. The Wangaratta men were on the ground as soon as we were, if not a little sooner. It is very uncertain there are different versions, and I do not know from my own observations, because the Wangaratta men got out of the train in the break of the line, and came in quietly through the timber and bush without my observation. About half-past seven, I believe, I was again with Mr. O’Connor. We heard an unusual noise around somewhere on the other side of the building.

2797. Was that the striking on the armour?—No; I do not mean that, but an unusual shouting and calling of the police to one another as I took it, an indistinct sound that I could not make out. I took it from the tone to be an alarm that the Kellys were showing again outside the building, and I looked steadily to the building for their appearance, and I think Mr. O’Connor’s party was with me at the time. Presently a constable came and explained that this was the capture of Kelly, this noise that we had heard. That was the first I had heard of it.

2798. What was your position at this time?—I think I had returned to where O’Connor was, and was speaking to him when this news came to me.

2799. Do you know the name of the man; I think it was the same constable—Constable Dwyer. I had heard before this of the finding of the rifle with the blood on it by Senior-Constable Kelly and Constable Arthur, and of the skull cap. The prisoners with the Kellys had been several times called upon to come out., and at ten o’clock I came close up by the building.

2800. Kelly was captured then?—Yes.

2801. You have not said anything about seeing him captured?—I did not see him till after he was captured.

2802. Did you see him?—Yes; immediately after he was captured. I will come to that.

2803. It had been reported to you that the rifle and cap had been found before the report of the capture?—Yes.
2804. And before you heard the noise and what turned out to be the capture?—Yes. After hearing that Kelly was captured, I went up to see him at the station. He was very weak, and it was not certain at the time whether he would not die straight away. He was supplied with stimulants, and Dr. Nicholson was attending upon him, and doing all he could. He was first brought and laid in one of the vans. There was an engine and van standing at the station. He was carried into the van of one of the engines that were there. The outlaws from the house were firing on us.
2805. Firing still?—Firing still into where we were looking on and attending to Kelly. He was then immediately removed across the platform into the station-master’s, one of his rooms, not his dwelling-house, but one of the rooms belonging to the station.

2806. Was there a pretty good light then?—It was a small room, but had a pretty good light.
2807. But I mean was it nearly daylight then?—It was daylight then, it cleared into daylight very quickly about that time. I saw that he was being attended to, and I went back to the ground again. As Kelly grew stronger I spoke to him to this effect, “We are bound to have those fellows out, can you do anything to help?”
2808. That is as to a surrender?—Yes. I said, “There is no use in wasting life over it if you can help in the matter.” He considered for a few moments seriously, took it evidently into his full consideration, and he said it would be no use, he could do nothing, they would not mind him; and I think it was in this connection he said they were “too great curs, or too great cowards.”
2809. That his mates were?—Yes. He also said, “Their armour is different to mine, and you can’t get at them.” He gave me to understand that they were quite independent of all our firing. I spoke to him no more upon the subject.
2810. Was it your impression from his reply that they were two great curs?—That they were took great curs.
2811. I mean did you infer that they would not come out of the place?—That they would not venture out, or do anything bold like ordinary men.
2812. You had seen his armour at that time?—I had seen his armour at that time, but I had not time to study it.
2813. You knew they were armed; you had formed the opinion they were?—He told me so, he said their armour was altogether better than his.
2814. Long previous to this you knew they were to appear in armour?—I had heard of armour for months.
2815. Did you believe Gascoigne when he said so?—No; I could not believe it then.
2816. You stated when you went to Gascoigne that he told you, “Well, sir, I fired at him, and I am sure that I hit him; but I am satisfied they were in armour”?—Yes; that is true.
2817. Did you think then that that statement of Gascoigne’s was true?—No I did not think it.
2818. Though you had that previous knowledge?—Though I had the knowledge I had been informed for months before that the armour was preparing; I never thoroughly believed it, I looked upon it as an impossibility.
2819. Kelly did not tell you his comrades had escaped at that time?—We knew they had not; they were firing from time to time.
2820. Till you saw the armour of Kelly captured you did not believe that your men were firing upon men armed?—I did not. I never thoroughly believed it till I saw it.
2821. In answering that question in regard to Gascoigne I understood you to say, “I replied to him in this manner because I did not wish him to think them invulnerable”?—I would, if I had thoroughly believed it, have taken his word and said they were, but I was not impressed then. It is a sort of mistaken wisdom you sometimes fall into; you think you know better than your informants. Mr. Nicolson was the only man who believed it, I believe, except his informant. Of course there were a great number of people on the platform all the morning, and some of them my own friends and acquaintances, and the general feeling then was—”How are those men to be got at?”
2822. What o’clock?—All through the morning, up till seven or eight o’clock; and I confess I, for one, did not see how to get at them. There were several, I think, of the reporters of the press who urged sending for a gun—a heavy gun.
2823. A cannon?—Yes; and this thing was pressed upon me by frequent repetition, by different persons frequently saying it; and I yielded to their persuasion, and telegraphed to Captain Standish, asking him if we could have a gun. That was the first mention of a gun, and I am responsible for it; it was entirely upon my own motion.
2824. Then you meant at that time you had formed the opinion that the men were armed in the house—protected by the use of armour?—Of course, if I had determined upon this—— 2825. Under those circumstances there would be a great loss of life of your men by rushing?—Of course; that was my feeling all through the day.
2826. Had you not a consultation about the best means of getting the prisoners out of the house before this?—No; we felt the prisoners had to get themselves out; we could not help them. We wished them to come out, and called on them to come out.

2827. When did you call out to them first?—I could not really say; it seemed to be from the first there was an urging; in fact, I know from later knowledge that they were called upon to come out almost immediately after the Wangaratta police came there.

2828. What time were they liberated?—I was going on to say about that, that about 10 o'clock I got into a closer position on the north-east end of the building. I took out my watch, and I sang out, called out loud, "We will give you ten minutes—all innocent persons to come out." Mr. Rawlins was standing beside me; he said, "I have a very big voice, let me call." I desired him not to call; but the constable immediately in front, Constable Armstrong, straight in front of the windows and door, called out.

2829. Was that the Armstrong of the watch party mentioned before?—Yes; he called out as a bellman would call out at a sale. He called out, "All you innocent persons come out, or you will be shot." Then Mr. Rawlins called out to the same effect from my side; then the prisoners came buzzing out like bees; running out from the front door in great confusion, some of them towards where Gascoigne was, some to the front, straight out from the building. I called out to them to come in my direction. After some little confusion and delay on their part they came up to where I was standing.

2830. That is the north-east point?—That is the north-east point.

2831. There was no firing at this time?—No firing.

2832. What time was it?—Ten o'clock. Not a shot was fired at this time. They came by me. We sorted them, and retained two of them, whom we took to be sympathizers; the rest we let go.

2833. Who were those two?—The two young McAuliffe.

2834. At this time were you aware of any wounded parties—I mean, did you know that Riordan’s son and Mrs. Jones’s child were wounded?—I know that there were two of Mrs. Jones’s children wounded.

2835 In other words, I want to fix the time (if any) that the children that were shot in this attack came out of the house, because it is stated that they were brought out by one of the détenus—the prisoners in the house?—I think both Mrs. Jones’s children, who were wounded, had left the house long before this.

2836. Can you fix the time?—It would be before my arrival if they had left it before. The only one I remember coming out was young Riordan; he came out, wounded in the shoulder, with the other prisoners.

2837. Do you know that one of the prisoners carried out one of the wounded children before that?—I know it was the fact; I did not see it myself. I did not see the man. All those wounded children and the women had escaped before I came to the ground (and Mrs. Jones’s two children), before my arrival from Benalla at all. I think it was ten minutes past ten, and they came in about three minutes.

2838. Where was Mr. O'Conor at this time?—Standing beside me, I think. He had been a few minutes before, if not then.

2839. Did you see those that came out?—I sorted them, and retained two prisoners.

2840. Did you see some of those that made their escape before your arrival at Glenrowan?—I think not at this time.

2841. Did you see a man named McHugh?—No; never, to my knowledge.

2842. It is said that after the shooting of Kelly one of the children was shot, and a man called Neil McHugh took it up in his arms, and brought it out to the police, and informed the police of the position inside?—Which shooting of Kelly? He was shot twice.

2843. After the capture of Ned Kelly the statement is?—That cannot be true.

2844. Would it have been before the capture?—It must have been.

2846. Did you hear about his having told the police of the position of prisoners in the house, and the position of the outlaws?—I did not know at that time; McHugh I never saw. I have sent since to see him, to ask some questions, but I have never seen him. We had to guard against the outlaws escaping, and we had to watch for a fair shot at them whenever they shot; that was all I concerned myself about at this time. When the prisoners came out we first heard of the death of Byrne from them, and the wounding of Cherry. We ascertained from Riordan, one of the prisoners, that Cherry was lying in a back detached building, which we could see before us. After these prisoners escaped there were several very hot volleys fired into the building. It was supposed the outlaws were fixed inside the breastwork of the chimney at one time; there were all sorts of conjectures, and we tried to break down the chimney by firing with bullets. The men saw they had no effect, and stopped it.

2847. Did you give the orders for the volley—the first after the prisoners came out?—Yes.

2848. Had you satisfied yourself that there were no persons in the place but the outlaws?—Yes, except Cherry.

2849. He was in the detached building?—Yes; and this was made known to all the police, particularly about the wounded man being there and where he was.

2850. Was the volley all round the place, or only from the front?—From the ends more. There were only one or two men in front. From both ends and the back. I saw that our shooting had no effect upon the building, and was still somewhat puzzled what to do.
2851. There was no answer of fire then?—Yes, there were answers of fire long after this.

2852. Up to what time—how long after that volley, after the prisoners had cleared out; how long after that can you say that there was any answer of shot from the building?—I could not say. I had lost count of the time starting so early in the day. When I thought it was five in the afternoon I found by my watch it was only twelve, so I could not guess.

2853. You saw the police fire had no effect?—We put it down that they could not stand against our fire, in spite of armour and all, unless they had got behind the breastwork of the chimney.

2854. You thought they were alive and there?—We thought they were alive and there; and we knew for a fact that they were alive, except Byrne, one of them.

2855. The outlaws did not show themselves while the prisoners were escaping?—No.

2856. Or interfere in any way with them?—No.

2857. You say the police were firing at the two ends and back—now, if they were firing at the back the people at the station would be in the way of that fire—are you not slightly mistaken there?—The wonder has always been that some of the people at the station were not hit by our men, the shot going right through the building, raking the building, and going on in the direction of where the crowd was; but we left the people to take care of themselves; if they felt themselves in danger they could shift. I do not think we took much notice of them. The men who were firing from the back did not consider their bullets were going through. The chances are, the bullets would hit the ground, and then rebound again. I saw the people at the station spread out several times, as if alarmed.

2858. One bullet came on the station and struck a shed on the opposite side?—Two did; and one struck the building where Kelly was, it was said, but I never could find it.

2859. You saw those volleys had no effect?—We tried then to fire through the woodwork, so as to reach the inner breastwork of the chimney at the other end. The chimneys were on the end. We hoped to reach that through this end of the building, and the inner breastwork at the other end, and so fired the same way from the other side—fired a great many shots for that purpose.

2860. To rake the house?—To reach this particular spot.

2861. Had you heard from the prisoners that the outlaws were keeping in the chimneys?—I suppose it to have come from them. The report came to me they were stuck in the chimneys. I think it was after two o’clock.

2862. You state you knew the two outlaws were still inside after the volleys were fired—what means had you of knowing that?—I thought it was about two o’clock that Constable Armstrong, or a man standing with him, told me, “That last volley has brought down one of them.” There was a volley shortly before he spoke from the back. I went round amongst the police standing at the back.

2863. Were the volleys given by order?—Not at this time. There were volleys by order, and the men had instructions to shoot whenever they saw the outlaws. I went round to the back, and asked them what they had fired at, and they said at a person showing at the window at the back, one of the outlaws. Then I said, “You have shot him”; and they answered, “No, we do not think so, he seemed to turn round and go away quietly.” I spoke to Armstrong about it, and he was very decided about it; that one of them was shot at that time, and that he fell down in the chimney, he said, judging from the noise of the crash of the armour upon the floor, but the men who fired the volley were equally positive that they had not shot him. Senior-Constable Johnson came to me about a quarter or half-past two, and said, “I will fire the building for you.” I did not think it was possible at this time to fire a dwelling-house which was made of smooth, well-formed hardwood weatherboards, that did not offer a good surface to set fire to; and we dare not fire the outbuilding, on account of the wounded man Cherry; and I also considered the difficulty of getting Johnson up to the building without being seen, as the walls were all perforated by bullet marks at every square foot. I objected to sending Johnson too, personally, because I knew he was a man with a wife and children, and I told him so. I said, “I will find a single man to do it, I will not send you”; and he insisted that he had the right, being the first to volunteer, and then I said, “Yes, very well, you can do it.” I spoke at this time about the matter only to Mr. O’Connor, Sergeant Whelan, and Senior-Constable Mullane. They were the officers; and there was Senior-Constable Kelly. I knew all those men very well, and had reliance upon their judgment. I looked upon it as a very dangerous undertaking for Johnson, but as the only thing we could do.

2864. Just previous to this do you remember that any man came to you to ask to get Cherry out?—I remember a man doing so. I said, “Better finish first.” I told Johnson then to go and get an armful of straw, at the building the other side of the railway line, and some kerosene. He could only get the straw there, and had to come back to the railway station, amongst the crowd, for the kerosene. When he got the kerosene he was starting straight for Mrs. Jones’s, and I sang out to him, “Oh! Johnson, the horses are up this way”; and he understood the hint at once, and turned round and said, “Oh! are they, sir,” and reversed his course, and went round the other way, as if going down the line towards Wombat, where the horses were. He carried the bundle of straw openly through the crowd—there were 400 people perhaps on the platform and all about—and no one observed what he was about. I went across into the timber and met him as he went on his course round. He circled right round by my directions. I pointed out explicitly it would be round the north and west, and to approach the building from the south up the creek running down, a continuation of the watercourse running... through the railway yard.

2865. Of that gully we have heard of?—Yes, while he was going round I made arrangements for a firing party to cover his approach to the house.

2866. From what position?—To fire from the reserve, the railway reserve, almost to where he would reach just keeping, say, half the length of this room, at which he was to set fire to it, to keep their fire just that distance from him. I had another party immediately under my own direction firing at his side as it were, as he went along the building. We kept a very warm fire for just the few minutes while he was approaching the building. He walked up quite coolly, got behind the chimney, he was protected so far, lay down his bundle of straw and set fire to the south end, saturated the straw and dashed kerosene on to the wood work. I think his first match missed fire; the second match he set fire to the bundle of straw and got easily back again to cover without a shot. There was no firing that I could hear from the building at him while the fire was going on. I thought it had failed to catch the building; Mrs. Skillion, sister of Ned Kelly, approached just about this time, before I was certain whether the fire had taken, and I had her stopped as she came; she wanted to go to the building and enter it; and Father Gibney also came on in the same line that Mrs. Skillion was coming from, the railway gates, urged on by the crowd, and I called upon him to go back; he stopped, then the crowd urged him again and he went on, and the police still tried further to stop him; and then I saw him make the religious sign of the cross on his face, and I knew he was going for the building. Then, at this time, while what I am speaking of was occurring, the smoke began to come through the roof, and I saw the building was then taking; he rushed into the building, the police near, myself and all, rushed after him. My intention first was to stop him, but he was first in and out again—the whole thing then took but a moment. When he came out he repeated that there were three men dead lying on the floor, one in the passage and two in another room. I ran round the end of the building to save Cherry. That was arranged I should have said at first—the first thing that was to be done was to save Cherry.

2867. Before that what distance was it between the police and Father Gibney?—The nearest police about ten yards; the men crossing Armstrong, the police would almost pass him; they were, as I said, about ten yards, and some followed him from behind, and some rushed from where I stood. There was a general rush of all those in sight as soon as the priest went for the building. He was very nearly unable to get out again through the fire.

2868. This was Dean Gibney?—Yes.

2869. Nearly smothered?—Yes. I was on the verandah with him in half a minute; and the heat and the smoke had descended from the roof in a cloud of fire and smoke down close to the floor. The iron roof of the building was lined with paper and canvas, the fire ran up along the sides and caught the ceilings, if there were ceilings; and when I went up the fire was descending like a cloud, there was no getting into the building. If he had stayed a few minutes more he would have been burnt; there was no getting in. I got round to the back of the building and found a man named Dixon, a private citizen of Benalla, and, I think, three others lifting out Cherry.

2870. Dixon the bootmaker?—Yes; the others were lifting out Joe Byrne who was perfectly cold and stiff at this time, the corpse, and his armour on, part of the armour. His helmet was outside the building altogether. I believe, at that time. Cherry merely gasped a few dying gasps and died within three minutes; he was perhaps dead almost immediately. There was no sign of fire on Cherry or in the building where he was. There was a sign of fire on Byrne’s knuckles. His hands were clenched and lying somewhat in this fashion—[illustrating his meaning]. The very point of his knuckles were cracked with the heat of the fire, scorched. It took some time before the remains of the others could be seen, and still longer before we could get them out. It was, perhaps, close upon half-past four when we got the charred remains of Hart and Dan Kelly out on the platform.

2871. Were they in armour?—No, their armour was lying immediately beside them. I think they died in armour. It is only my impression, and from reflection on the subject since. The armour being beside them was simply that the thongs that held them were burned, and the armour fell off.

2872. Then a portion must have been on the body?—It depends upon how they lay; they would lie on the side, and it might fall off. They were altogether in a lump; the armour and the two bodies were as close as this—[describing by spreading his hands]. I saw the bodies as soon as they were to be observed by anybody. The smoke rose again for a moment I was with Senior Constable Johnson, and he said, “Those they are,” and we could see them, and my impression was that the armour was on them then, but I found that was a mistake—the armour was lying close to them.

2873. Do you think they shot themselves or shot each other?—You have all I know of the matter. When I came again the bodies were being removed.

2874. Who removed the bodies?—Any one of the 50 constables there, or several of them. It was done by the police; that was from the charred position in which they were found.

2875. Who did it?—I do not know who did it. The bodies were brought down to the platform. After the bodies were removed on to the Glenrowan platform, I offered to Isaiah Wright, if the friends wished it, to give them over the bodies of Steve Hart and Dan Kelly. This seemed to please them very much, as an unexpected favor.

2876. Who?—The friends. They all began to come up at this moment, Mrs. Skillian, Kate Kelly, Dick Hart, and several of the friends. They seemed pleased at my doing this, and afterwards, when Captain Standish arrived—

2877. What time did he arrive?—It is a great question. Perhaps within half-an-hour of this, between four and five o’clock. I told Captain Standish what I had done about the bodies. I said, “Please do not interfere now; leave the matter as it stands,” and he never interfered—never said another word about it. He did not interfere at all. I was afraid that he would. Strangers in authority are so apt to fear responsibility that I preferred taking the responsibility upon myself, and not being interfered with. To return now. Before the place was set on fire there were several constables—

2878. Before you pass from that, you seem to throw stress on delivering the bodies up—had you satisfied yourself they were the outlawed men?—There was no question about that. There was no absolute proof. I do not think the sisters could have recognized their brother. You could see they were males; that was all any human being could tell. Before setting fire to the building, there were several of the police who wanted to rush into the building upon the outlaws. The only three I can remember are Dixon, Armstrong, and a constable named Montifort. I believe there were others, but I cannot recall them to mind. I had the same answer for them all.

2879. Was Johnson one of them that offered?—No. The same answer for all—“It is not time to rush yet; stand back and keep your ground.” At this time the crowd of people near the platform were urging the police to make a rush, and remarking upon their not doing it, and it made my men a little unsteady at times, and made it more difficult to keep them quietly to work as I had laid it out for myself and for them.

2880. How long before the firing was this request made to you by the constables?—Almost immediately after the prisoners escaped, early in the forenoon some time. I put in my report of that day of the whole proceedings, mentioning every person. In printing that, it was put as if we (myself and party) had started at five minutes past ten, instead of ten minutes past five, in the morning. I have corrected that. —[The report was handed in as follows:—]

Superintendent Sadleir’s Report.

Police Department, Superintendent’s Office, Benalla, 1st July 1880.

Sir,—I have the honor to furnish the following report, for your information, of such of the proceedings of 28th ult., in relation to the capture of the Kelly gang, as occurred whilst I was in command of the party of police carrying on the attack.

I was first made aware of the encounter with the gang by Superintendent Hare’s return, at about 4 a.m.; and after exchanging a few words with him as to the position of affairs, proceeded to Glenrowan by train, accompanied by the whole of the reserve on the Benalla station.

Immediately on reaching Glenrowan, and on dispersing to take up the best positions we could find around the building, numerous shots were fired from the direction of the house, striking the ground and fences close to us. After finding Mr. O’Connor and learning what I could from him of the positions of the men, I made myself assured that the buildings were surrounded by the police, and in this I was greatly assisted by Constable Dwyer, 2,507, who was always willing to run the gauntlet under fire from one post to another.

It was not, however, until the capture of Ned Kelly, and then on from his statements, that there was any assurance that some of the gang had not passed through our lines, as the prisoner himself had done. We had occasional firing from the outlaws within the house, and could hear them calling out and rapping on their armour, but after this arrest the remainder of the gang slackened their fire greatly, and only a shot at intervals was heard.

About 10 a.m. I called on the persons kept prisoners by the gang to make their escape, and allowed ten minutes’ grace before recommencing firing, and soon after the word was passed on by the posts nearest to the front of the building a general rush was made by those persons, and no further shot was fired by the police until they had all been examined and passed out of the lines.

We had ascertained from these prisoners that the two outlaws, Dan Kelly and Hart, were still alive, and that Byrne was dead. These two survivors were called on several times to surrender, and, on their failing to do so, several of the police repeatedly appealed to me to let them rush the building. This I would not permit for various reasons, chiefly that the party rushing in could not be supported by those outside; that a long narrow passage through the house had to be traversed before the outlaws—whose exact position in the buildings was not known—could be reached; that they could not be knocked over, on account of the armour, until the police actually had their hands on them; that I knew they still had large supplies of ammunition; that there were yet several hours’ daylight; and that the final capture or destruction of the two outlaws was a matter of certainty. I therefore held to the determination, though under considerable difficulties, to sacrifice no life in this way if it could be avoided.

I think it was about 3 p.m. when Senior-constable Johnston, 764, volunteered to set fire to the building, and after a short consultation with Mr. O’Connor and some of the senior members of the force present, arrangements were made accordingly. A strong firing party was placed under cover in front of the building, and another at the end to be fired, and protected by their fire the senior-constable was able to carry out his work and return in safety. This precaution was considered necessary, as a few minutes before it was reported that the two outlaws were seen at one of the windows.

It was known at this time that Martin Cherry was lying wounded in a detached building, shot by Ned Kelly early in the day, as it has since been ascertained, because he would not hold aside one of the window-blinds; and arrangements were made to rescue him before the flames could approach him. This was subsequently done.

When the fire had taken, the Rev. Mr. Gibney, a clergyman of the Church of Rome, with great bravery passed towards the building, in spite of all remonstrance, and the constables and myself, with a view of stopping him, rushed forward, and this movement immediately changed into a general rush for the building, when, as I have stated, Cherry was removed, as well as the body of Byrne, the latter from the burning building.

It was found impossible to reach where the other outlaws were, and it is clear, from the Rev. Mr. Gibney’s statement, that these were dead when the fire took place; and it is impossible to say whether they had been killed by our last volley, or had shortly before taken their own lives.
Before proceeding briefly to refer to the conduct of the police under my command, I wish to call attention to that of Mr. Jesse Dowsett, an employee on the railway, who, armed with a revolver only, stood manfully to his ground in the capture of Ned Kelly. His conduct has been specially commended to me by the members of the force who witnessed it.

I understand also that Mr. Charles Rawlins, of Lake Winton, was also in Mr. Hare’s company at the first encounter, but that officer will be in a better position than I for describing what his conduct was.

I have also to acknowledge the readiness with which Dr. John Nicholson, of Benalla, accompanied my party, to afford any professional assistance that might be necessary, and his services were at once afforded to Ned Kelly when captured.

The conduct of every member of the police force engaged was completely satisfactory. From Sub-inspector O’Connor I had throughout the day continual assistance and advice, and with regard to the members of the Victorian force, my only difficulty was in restraining a few too eager spirits.

I have already alluded to the conduct of Senior-constable Johnston. He did the special work sought by him in the face of special danger, as all then supposed.

I am assured—for I was not present on the spot—that the men who captured Ned Kelly had a difficult and dangerous business for the short time it lasted.

I find that Sergeant Steele (1,179), Senior-constable Kelly (1,925), Constables Bracken (2,228), Dwyer (2,507), and Montiford (2,697) were the men concerned. I find, also, that Constables Arthur (2,971), Phillips (2,745), and Healey (2,886) were all more or less directly assisting in the arrest of Ned Kelly.

Ned Kelly, from his appearance in the imperfect light, looked like some unearthly being, on whom bullets had no effect. Mr. Dowsett, who was also on the spot, says he thought he was the devil.

The conduct of the Queensland trackers was excellent, and shows, certainly, that in good company at least they may be thoroughly relied on.

The circumstances of the day did not call for many acts of conspicuous daring, and excepting the severe wound to Superintendent Hare, none of the attacking party received any injury.

Martin Cherry died in a few minutes after his removal from the building, and a boy named Jones has since died from his injuries in the Wangaratta Hospital. I also understand that a youth named Rearden is in a critical condition in the same institution. A man named George Metcalf has also been forwarded by your instructions to Melbourne for treatment to an injury received in the eye while the firing was going on.

After the affair was over, the bodies of Hart and Dan Kelly were given over to their relations, as I reported to you on your arrival at Glenrowan.

Their friends applied to me next day for the necessary order for burial, which I had procured for them, and expressed their acknowledgments for the consideration shown to them.

Subsequent reports as to the conduct of these people have, as I have good reason to believe, been greatly exaggerated.

The body of Martin Cherry was handed to his sister.

The body of Byrne was buried at 4 o’clock on Tuesday afternoon in the Benalla cemetery, and was not claimed by any one.

Attached you will find a list of all the members of the force concerned in this duty, with the hour of their arrival.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

John Sadleir,

Chief Commissioner of Police, Melbourne.

Return of Officers, Sergeants, and Constables who took part in the Capture of the Kelly Gang of Outlaws on the 28th June 1880.

Date and hour of arrival at Glenrowan—June 28, 1880, at 9 a.m.

Superintendent Sadleir, Benalla.

P. MULANE, Senior-constable 2353, 30/6/80.

J. SADLEIR, Superintendent of Police.

155

2881. Is that a copy of the despatch that is in the department?—The original of that is my despatch to the Government.

2882. That will be in the Government department?—Yes.

2883. Do you remember if a party of civilians offered, before the burning of the place, to rush it themselves?—One did—not to rush it. A man named Dixon, a man I have already spoken of, said, “If you will allow me, I will go to the end building and bring out Cherry.”

2884. Was that before the fire?—Yes.

2885. Do you remember a Frenchman, named Amidie, offering to go and rush the building with a party?—I never heard of it and never heard of the man; I think it is somebody’s dream.

2886. He told me?—Well, he is dreaming or romancing. I never saw the man to my knowledge.

2887. That was reported?—I never heard that report, though I read the Benalla papers very steadily, and I am certain there is no foundation for it in fact, that Amidie or any person else hinted at such a thing.

2888. You do not remember a number of them saying they would take down the hoardings from the railway station, and go up to the place as if they were armed?—I never heard of that till this minute.

2889. It was reported in the paper that Mrs. Skillian wanted to go into the building?—I have stated that, and that we stopped her and the priest. My objection was lest the fire should not take, and we should have those two people, who were innocent, as a further difficulty in our final rush. My determination was to defer the rush, as I knew it was a most dangerous undertaking, until the very last thing before night set in. It would not have been safe to have left the outlaws there another night, even with all our men to guard them. We knew that the outlaws, as I have stated in my report, had a large quantity of ammunition; Bracken reported this in the building.

2890. Before the fire?—Before the fire; and we heard a proof of this—the ammunition exploding continuously while the fire was going on. On the next day the usual arrangements were made for a magisterial enquiry. Mr. Wyatt was also seen, but I think that was the next day after. On the Tuesday or Wednesday Mr. Wyatt was seen, and an understanding was arrived at that he should hold an inquest on the body of Byrne.

2891. He was the coroner of the district?—Yes. Something transpired—I think it was desired to get rid of the business——

2892. You have broken off. You told the commission on the platform you offered to give up the bodies to the relations, you have not told what became of them?—The bodies were given up to the relations.

2893. Where was the inquest to be held?—Those were not the same bodies.

2894. Of course, the two bodies you gave up were Hart and Dan Kelly?—Yes. Joe Byrne’s body we brought to Benalla, and there was Cherry’s body also. I was anxious that there should have been a coroner’s inquest on both those bodies—Cherry’s and Byrne’s—and some difficulties arose that I cannot call to mind to prevent, and magisterial enquiries were held instead.

2895. Was not the arrangement before you gave the bodies to the relations that they were to allow an inquest to be held?—No, there was no formal arrangement. They were not to be buried without a magisterial order. I looked upon the bodies as the bodies of outlaws, and that we might have done what we liked with them.

2896. Did it not come into your calculation that the nearest relations were close upon the spot and their home close adjacent?—Yes, they were on the spot, and their homes within three miles or four miles at the very farthest.

2897. Well, you say Captain Standish did not interfere when you asked him not to?—The bodies were thereupon given up—those of Dan Kelly and Steve Hart.
2898. Captain Standish said in his evidence (question 77), “I instructed Mr. Sadleir not to hand over the charred remains of the outlaws. It is just possible he may have misunderstood me, but I certainly did say that to him; but seems that possibly there was a misapprehension”?

—It must be a misapprehension on Captain Standish’s part, because he was in my company the whole of the next day, and there was not the smallest allusion made to the subject. If Captain Standish had given any orders, I should have been very careful to have obeyed them on the spot or persuaded him to alter them, but there was no question at all.

2899. It was a mere question of yours to do the best?—I was greatly gratified at getting this trouble over that we had had on our hands for two or three years, and I was inclined to act liberally, and I know the effect has been most beneficial to the public peace. I had the thanks of those people since; both for that and for following a fair moderate course towards them; they have conveyed to me their messages direct that if I had pursued the course they had anticipated—that was a harassing course, pushing the law to the utmost, or, perhaps, going beyond the law—that there were eight or nine men prepared to break out, and we should have had the same trouble in an aggravated form again. I have ascertained since, too, that the vapouring and threatening that were said to have been over those bodies was confined to one or two drunken men, and it was put down by the real friends of the Kellys themselves as unseemly and uncalled for. The most dangerous of that crowd were the first to say the police had done their duty simply and you ought to be thankful for the kindness you have experienced. Of course these are mere reports, second hand, and to be taken for just what they are worth. I was anxious for the inquest upon all the bodies, especially Cherry’s, as he was a man against whom there was no accusation, and about whose death there might be some serious question. It was impossible to arrange it. Mr. Wyatt had some private business at Seymour, as well as public business, and before he could return some necessity arose, I forget what it was, to have the bodies all disposed of and buried.

2900. Where the coroner is in the district, is it not more desirable and more according to law to have the coroner’s inquest as distinguished from the magisterial?—Certainly, but the rule is departed from every day.

2901. What is the difference of the effect in law?—No difference in effect. I think there is a greater security to the public in the coroner’s inquest than in the ordinary magisterial enquiry, but, eventually, they both lead to the same result if fairly conducted. The magistrate, upon hearing the evidence of witnesses concerning the death of any one, can issue his warrant for the arrest of the person inculpated; but the coroner has a further power. He can issue, his warrant for the committal, but, in effect, there is very little difference. Usually, in spite of the coroner’s warrant of committal and case is brought before the police court, as if the coroner had not interfered in the matter.

2902. To whom does the result of the magisterial enquiry go—does it go to the coroner of the district?—No, the Crown Law officers direct; they are sent usually to the police to forward direct to the Crown Law officers. That is so in my district, but there is some variety, I believe.

2903. If Mr. Wyatt did not agree with the magisterial enquiry, would he have the power as coroner to order a fresh enquiry absolutely of his own action?—Of course, certainly. I spoke to Mr. Wyatt after the affair, and he seemed satisfied. I wrote to him, and spoke to him afterwards in Melbourne about it.

2904. What was the magisterial finding in the case of Cherry?—Shot by the police in the execution of their duty.

2905. And in the case of Byrne?—That he was shot as an outlaw. The evidence of Constable McIntyre was taken, the proclamation of the Government declaring them outlaws, the whole of the official papers from the Gazette were shown and read before the magistrate.

2906. Who was the magistrate?—Mr. McBean.

2907. Was Captain Standish on the bench?—Yes.

2908. The report of the magisterial enquiry in that case is what he puts as being his finding in that case?—Yes.

2909. At the coroner’s enquiry the jury is sworn?—Yes.

2910. And the evidence taken and they find a verdict?—Yes. I may say I do not like answering the foolish rumours that appear in the press, but there is one thing personal to myself. One writer connected with the Melbourne press on the ground that day stated afterwards that I was off the ground, and that the men and police were without my control. Now I can only account for that in this way, and that upon the report of others, that the gentleman was not upon the ground at all himself.

2911. You can say it is not a fact?—It is a downright lie, a most annoying lie to me.

2912. You cannot tell who wrote it?—I can, I know Mr. Carrington wrote it. I would like to give my most emphatic denial to that. According to some other gentlemen of the press, Mr. Carrington was away off the field altogether—he found it too hot and went away to Mr. McDonnell’s, and I wish to add further that I do not know him and he does not know me. I think he is mistaking me for some one else. I received from the Governor, through Captain Standish, the usual thanks on those occasions.

2913. You mentioned, in the early part of your evidence, and you told Mr. Hare when he came up, you could not assist him con amore as formerly, but you would do your best. Was there anything said by Mr. Hare... about the disposal of those agents upon his coming into the district?—Mr. Hare spoke to me about that telegram we were considering yesterday, as to the dismissal of the agents. He asked me if I understood what it meant. I did not understand what it meant, looking at it in that light as the dismissal of agents. I have not seen the telegram, but he told me of it.

2914. You stated he had an interview with Detective Ward?—Mr. Hare spoke of that as the dismissal of the agents, and I could give no information about it.

2915. What was the cause of the coolness between you and Mr. Hare on that occasion?—There was no coolness, we were very good friends.

2916. Did you disagree with his method?—Well, I did not like the turn things had taken. I looked upon it that Mr. Hare was pushing himself forward into the position unfairly towards another officer. Mr. Hare denied it. I should tell you he denied always that he was doing anything of the sort, but at the time I had those feelings I was moved to act in that way. I said, “I am not going to take the trouble with you that I did before; I will attend to my own and you must attend to your own business,” but nothing personal between us. We had been always good friends, perfectly free and open.

2917. How many years brother officers?—I have known him twenty-five years.

2918. How did you join?—As a cadet.

2919. And he as lieutenant?—Yes. He has always been senior to me.

2920. We have Mr. Nicolson’s telegram of the 29th November 1878 before us now; I will read it?—I was speaking of another telegram.

2921. You stated that in May 1880, when you heard that Mr. Hare was likely to supersede Nicolson, you wrote to Mr. Hare remonstrating with him—may I ask you your reasons for so doing?—I think I explained that yesterday. I was satisfied Mr. Nicolson was doing the best that could be done, and I did not expect any improvement by a change.

2922. Did you know at that time that Mr. Hare was likely to be appointed in Mr. Nicolson’s place against his own desire?—Not until Mr. Hare wrote and told me. His answer to that was he could not help himself.

2923. Are you aware he had written to Mr. Nicolson on the same subject?—I did not know he had as early as that. I knew he had written about that time.

2924. As far as you were concerned, when Mr. Hare arrived at Benalla, on the 2nd June, you were aware Mr. Hare was there not of his own seeking?—Yes, he had repeatedly told me so.

2925. This telegram is with reference to the bank robbery. There have been statements made that Mr. Nicolson was informed, and that telegram of the 29th November was spoken of, but we have not got it now. It is—“Re confidential communication of yesterday. The temporary stationing of one or two foot-constables at Seymour recommended. No men can be spared from this district.”—C. H. NICOLSON.” You would not say that that telegram proves that Mr. Nicolson was aware that the banks were to be protected all through the district?—No; but that confidential communication ought to be read in connection with it, wherever it is—it all turns upon that.

2926. This is the statement:—“If they do leave the ranges, they are certain to stick-up and make a haul. They would likely try the Seymour bank, as Ned Kelly had it in view for a long time to stick it up. They would keep the bush until they got to Seymour, and returned the same way. Mrs. Skillian would probably get the haul. The Kellys have a track from Greta to Barnawartha; they pass under the railway bridge.” That is dated 15/11/78. There is an endorsement on the back of it by Captain Standish, dated 28/11/78, as follows:—“Confidential. Forwarded for the information of Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir. I address this to the latter, being uncertain whether Mr. Nicolson is still in Benalla. At all events this information, which is important, should be communicated to him as soon as possible. The signals which Mrs. Skillian makes from her place clearly bring her within the reach of the new Act. It would be very desirable to convict her if possible, or at any rate to prosecute her.” It was forwarded with this endorsement to Mr. Sadleir on the 28th?—Are my initials to it?

2927. No, Captain Standish has sent that, and Mr. Nicolson, being in the district, has replied to it. You and he were working together at the time?—Yes. I had no recollection of it, and I was sure I had never seen about the banks in the district.

2928. This is about the bank at Seymour?—Yes; I imagine now I must have seen that. I was at Benalla when it would arrive.

2929. Where are the ranges there referred to?—Probably the Tallaroop Ranges, a continuation of the Black Ranges.

2930. Is not Tallaroop below Seymour?—Yes; but, as to the ranges, it depends upon which side of the river you speak of.

2931. “The Kellys are certain to keep on the ranges in the neighborhood; they get supplied with rations from Mrs. Skillian, which she will plant for them.” Now, first of all, there is Greta, where Mrs. Skillian lives; and what are the first ranges; suppose they were going to rob a bank at Seymour, and keep the bush, which way would they go?—If they kept the ranges—I thought it was the bush.

2932. “Certain to keep on the ranges”—would that not mean the Strathbogie Ranges?—It would mean that of course, but it would be very rough riding, but the shortest way as the crow would fly.

2933. Would it not mean at the back of Euroa, Strathbogie, and towards Seymour?—They would probably take the ranges by Dall’s, cross to Doon, over the Puzzle Range.

2934. On by Broken River to Doon?—By Dall’s, that is the only easy way of doing it.

2935. When they came to Dalls, how would they get to Doon?—There is a made road before going to Mansfield.

2936. By the Black Swamp or Glen Creek?—Glen Creek; then by Gobur, and run into Seymour between Ghin Ghin and the railway line; that is seventy miles, the shortest route you can go.

2937. Did you receive any police information of any member of the Kelly family being seen by the police in their search, immediately after the bank at Euroa robbery;—would it be true that the police saw Kate Kelly on the very road you now have indicated?—I have never heard anything of the sort; I do not like speaking from memory where records can be had.

2938. Would it be within your knowledge that the search parties of police—were you informed that the search parties of police who went that very road met Kate Kelly within a day or two of the bank robbery at Euroa?—No, I have no recollection of any such report.

2939. That road you speak of now would go very close to the aunt we spoke of the other day?—Yes, it would go within four miles or so, or nearer; or they might have taken the very road, and got over the highlands of Tabletop, as it is called.

2940. From Wodonga, did Mr. Nicolson leave you on his way down to Melbourne at Wangaratta?—Yes.

2941. Did any of your men go along that road from Benalla, along the road you have just mentioned?—No; I think Mansfield men did go that road.

2942. We will know from some order in the Mansfield barracks what exactly was done on that occasion—have you got a clerk at Benalla?—I have.

2943. Did he remain there?—Yes, all the time.

2944. Did he open the correspondence?—He took care of every communication, everything in our absence.

2945. Is it usual to leave orders in writing about the route or verbally?—We are apt to do without them when in haste.

2946. Does the sub-officer then who takes charge keep a diary of all he does?—He keeps a diary of all duties—the duty he does himself.

2947. Would his entry be “Ordered to proceed in such a way, started at such a time, and came back”?—No, not exactly that.

2948. But it would contain each day’s work?—The principal parts of each day’s work.

2949. In other words, if the Commission asked for the instructions, and how they were carried out, given by you on that occasion at Wangaratta, and Mr. Nicolson at Benalla, will we find it written in any way?—You will find all those instructions in the papers now before you; in fact, I have seen them—all you can refer to.

2950. Mr. Nicolson had a very short time in Benalla on that occasion, and if he gave the instructions verbally the men would, in the course of their duty, say how they carried them out?—Yes, there are only two men—Sergeant Whelan and Senior-constable Maude—you will have to examine about it.

2951. He was clerk of the office at the time?—Yes.

2952. You stated just now that the constables talked about rushing the building, and that the general feeling was that the time had not arrived?—That was my own feeling.

2953. That you did not at all events accept that offer?—Yes.

2954. At that time was Cherry to your knowledge lying wounded in the outhouse?—I have stated all I knew about Cherry.

2955. Was the offer to rush the house for the purpose of taking the Kelly that were in the main building or was it to save Cherry in case he was alive?—The offer by the police was to shoot the Kellys—to get them.

2956. You were asked was it within your knowledge that the offer was made by civilians, you said “No”?—There was no offer made to me, I am certain of that.

2957. Neither to rescue Cherry nor rush the house?—There was an offer from Dixon to run the risk of going to the back building and getting out Cherry. I told them we would take care of him, and not let any harm come to him; and he grew anxious as the fire came on.

2958. Dixon’s offer was after the fire was lighted?—No; he was offering several times in the day. Nobody except Dixon will come forward and say (if they speak the truth) that they made an offer to go and relieve Cherry. I am absolutely certain of that.

more certainty about it than before. Their manner of life I could tell you, I think, for the last few months before the outrage.

2961. You are going to send down a report, and can show whether steps have been taken by the police to ascertain all the information it is possible to obtain, so that in the event of another outbreak of a similar character in that district they would have a reliable idea of the places where the outlaws secreted themselves?—We have learned very very little; my hands are a good deal tied. That sort of information you have to pay money for, and the Government have a great objection to paying anything except for salaries and wages.

2962. You think that information could be obtained if money was available?—Yes. If I had the handling of perhaps a very few pounds, and send an agent in amongst them and get the talk and gossip, it would only be of use to me as information coming through gossip, I should be able to get all the information I have not been able to get, and information in the past that I would like.

2963. Supposing you were told the hiding places of those men, Greta, and so on, are there not hundreds of places equally secure?—Each party of outlaws would be guided by their connections and their nearness to a basis of supply. Probably if people in the Black Range broke out, they would make that their place; if people in Beechworth were to take to the bush, they would make that their principal centre.

2964. Has the strength of the police been reduced since the capture?—We have a few men, perhaps eight or ten, extra.

2965. At the time, I think you said 50 was the strength of the district?—No, 100 was strength of the district—perhaps about 95 or 96—before the Kelly affair. I gave it in my evidence the other day, that the proper strength of the district, on the 1st of April 1879, was 100 men, mounted and foot.

2966. That is the united district—Mansfield, Benalla, and part of Kilmore, now known as the North-Eastern?—Yes.

2967. Has the district been quiet lately?—There has been a great deal of horse-stealing lately, and I shall be glad to speak on that; as to the future prospects of the district—I think the prospects are very serious, and we may any day hear of some serious outbreaks.

2968. Do you know Kelly’s surviving brother, James?—No.

2969. Do you know he has been in gaol?—I know he has just come out of gaol in New South Wales—the end of last year.

2970. Has the younger Tom Lloyd, who went about with Kelly, been in gaol?—Yes.

2971. Where is the Quinn who was arrested as a sympathizer?—There were two.

2972. The one that was in gaol?—Jim Quinn?

2973. Yes?—He is at his sister’s place—the Farrells—constantly.

2974. Are you aware that most of those men have been arrested and tried for serious offences, over and over again?—I do not think Tom Lloyd has.

2975. His father?—He is dead.

2976. His uncle?—He has been in Pentridge for something—cattle-stealing, I think.

2977. Did you know, of your own knowledge, that the constable in charge at Greta was attacked by a member of this family?—That was a mistake.

2978. By Hall?—He is married to an aunt, but he is no relation.

2979. What character do the Harts bear in the district—the brother of Steve?—Dick Hart is an unconscionable young scoundrel.

2980. Has he been in gaol?—I think not. Those young men are doing no work—not one of them—they live by roguery.

2981. Do you know the Wright family?—Yes, very well.

2982. Do you know they have moved from Mansfield?—Yes, to Lake Rowan, towards the Murray.

2983. How do those men generally get their living?—Part of the year they shear, probably taking somebody’s horse with them to New South Wales. Then they make a little money, and I really think that is all the work they do for the rest of the year.

2984. Do they bring back the same horse?—No; there is so much chopping and changing, and altering of brands, that unless the owner drops upon his own horse, no person can know it by description. They use brands dipped in scalding water, and cigar ends, and are up to all sorts of tricks that we know nothing about.

2985. As a matter of fact, with a bit of hoop-iron, you can almost erase any letter by heating it in the fire?—You can do that without heating it in the fire—you can do it by putting the brand in boiling water for a time, which will leave a little rise in the skin, and show no difference between the new and the old mark, and by pulling out the hair with the finger-nails you can easily turn a B into a D for instance.

2986. Have you established any new stations in the district?—Yes. I have; I have re-establish Greta, and strengthened the station at Glenrowan.

2987. And put the best men you could find?—Yes.

2988. Is there a station at Glenmore?—No.

2989. Is there at Hedi?—Yes; two men there, and arrangements are being made for a new station at Dederang, which is a sort of no man’s land.

2990. By Mr. Hare. —The letter that Mr. Nicolson put in evidence from the “diseased stock” man, was that one of the three letters you sent down to him?—Yes, of course.
2991. Dated in the middle of May?—May 20th was one of the dates I sent.
2992. How many did you send altogether?—Three.
2993. Because there are four besides the letter he put in evidence?—I was not aware of that; let me see the one you are speaking about.—[A letter was handed to the witness.]
2994. May 20th?—Yes, this is one of the letters I sent.
2995. How many did you send in all?—I sent one dated 26th February, one May 14th, one May 20th.

159

2996. Do you know where March 16th came from?—1881 that is; that is long after.
2997. July 13th 1880—do you know where that came from?—No, that is after the Glenrowan business. I never saw this; they never came near my office at all—[the post-marks were examined by the witness].—I never heard of them before.
2998. By Mr. Nicolson.—Those two letters never came through your hands at all?—No.
2999. By the Commission.—Those three are the ones you sent down, the ones of which the dates were given?—Yes.
3000. And those were in the drawer of the table?—And I did not look at them till I was asked for them by Mr. Nicolson.
3001. As soon as Mr. Hare was wounded you got the keys, and those letters would be in your possession till Mr. Nicolson asked for them?—Yes, and no one had any access to them.
3002. By Mr. Nicolson.—If it has been stated that there were six to eight letters from “Diseased Stock” left by me with Mr. Hare, is that true?—I cannot say. I do not think it was. I never heard of them.
3003. By the Commission.—Do you know of your own knowledge of any other letter from “Diseased Stock” but those three?—Those are all I know of.
3004. You have seen all the documents?—There is nothing left now; you have before you every paper I have in the business. I do not know of any besides those three from the “diseased stock” agent.
The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday, 3rd May, at Eleven o’clock.

TUESDAY, 3RD MAY 1881.

Present:
Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P.,  J. Gibb, Esq., M.L.A.,

John Sadleir further examined.

3005. Have you anything further to say?—Only this, that since the last meeting I sent in a return of the number of reported appearances of the outlaws at various places (vide Appendix), and that I desire to be present to offer to the Commission any remarks upon that that they may desire. The information as to the steps taken by the police will necessarily be incomplete, as I have explained in the foot-note to the report, and it may be that the explanations I have given may be questioned by the other officers who were in charge of operations; and as it is such a very important report, I thought it better to be here to offer myself for any examination by the Commission or the officers concerned on the subject.

3006. There was one case where I think it was stated in the papers that the Kelly party were seen near one of the Hart family, where they bound the man not to give any information for a month. Is that in your list?—Yes, I think so. That would be about October 1879. It is the sixth item on page 3—Green’s paddock, near Wangaratta. I would remark that the genuine names of parties are given in this list in many instances, and urge upon the press the necessity of precaution, either in alluding to the names or the particular facts that would lead to the discovery of the identity of our informants. In this instance it does not much matter, because the man made the affair public himself in Wangaratta.

3007. What do you mean by the entry, October 23rd—”A man named Smith reported he had been made prisoner by the gang. (See last item for steps taken.)” What were the steps taken?—You will see in the previous report, October the 16th, that we had an agent employed as scout in that very locality.
3008. Then the police took no action, except through this agent, on that report?—No. You see this information was more than a month old.
3009. Was the statement made in the papers of the day that they had given money for the silence of Smith?—Certainly, and Smith stated it too.
3010. Was the money handed over to the police?—I think it was offered to the police.
3011. How much?—£10. I am speaking from memory. Two sums of £5 each.
3012. Who was the officer he offered it to?—I cannot tell that. The files of correspondence all speak for themselves.
3013. The report is true that Smith did receive £10, and did do what I have referred to?—It is true he reported to that effect.
3014. And at the end of the time he offered the money to the police, and gave information?—I believe so.
3015. The first information came from Smith?—No, the first information we got did not come from Smith, himself. We got hold of rumours from the police after Smith had started it.
3016. Where are the references—"D 10," and so on?—The number is attached to the files I forwarded to Mr. Williams, the secretary of the Commission.
3017. Have you reported in any of your papers, in connexion with this, about the money (the £10) that Smith was offered—will it be found in the report?—I cannot say without looking at the papers.
3018. Can you say whether Smith retained the money or not?—I believe he did retain the money. I believe that is certain.
3019. Do you know what bank the notes he had were from?—No; Mr. Nicolson knows more about that. I did not see Smith at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Nicolson.—I received that report yesterday, and I am going over it, and will have to add considerably to it in many respects.

Michael Edward Ward sworn and examined.

3020. By the Commission.—What are you?—I am a detective constable stationed in Melbourne.
3021. Were you employed by the police to trace out the Kellys?—Yes, on the 25th of April 1878.
3022. You have been allowed to refresh your memory during the last week?—I have been allowed to go through the papers, and refresh my memory, and take short notes.
3023. In what capacity were you appointed on the 25th of April?—Having been in the North-Eastern district, I joined the police on the 1st of October 1869, and, in November, I was then sent to the North-Eastern district in search of Power, the bushranger, and remained there until November 1875. From my previous knowledge of the Kellys—3024. When did you acquire that knowledge?—From 1869 to 1875, when I was after Power, and still stationed in the district. I was for three years in Beechworth. During that time Ned and Dan Kelly, the Quinns, and all their relations were in the habit of being at the circuit courts; one of their friends was always before the circuit court at the general sessions.
3025. Accused of some criminal offence at every circuit court?—Some of their friends were at nearly every court.
3026. Do you mean that they were prisoners on trial at every court?—Some of their friends. Not at all the courts. At the commencement, when I went up, I do not think there was a year when some of their friends were not before the court for trial.
3027. By “their friends” you mean their blood relations?—I mean their blood relations. In 1874 and 1875 I knew Ned Kelly very well. I was stationed then in Wangaratta, and had occasion to speak to him very often there.
3028. What was the nature of the offences that these men were principally taken up for?—For beating Sergeant Hall, the policeman at Greta, horse-stealing, and cattle-stealing.
3029. And violent assault on Sergeant Hall, at Greta?—Yes, violent assault on Sergeant Hall, at Greta, with a stirrup-iron.
3030. What else?—Sundry other offences.
3031. Can you speak more exactly of that?—I cannot call back the exact offences.
3032. Principally horse and cattle stealing and assaults?—Principally horse and cattle stealing and assaults.
3033. Was there any reason assigned for appointing you a detective in that district?—No, not that I know of. The late Chief Commissioner gave me the appointment in the detective force, or offered me one when I was in Wangaratta. I then declined.
3034. Were you a civilian at the time?—No, a mounted trooper.
3035. Was there no particular reason assigned for sending you into that district at that time, 1878?—Yes I will come to that presently.
3036. At what date were you appointed detective?—1876. Some short time after I refused the Chief Commissioner, there was a general order that all the efficient members of the force who would be recommended by their superintendents, and were holding over their names, would be enrolled and called into the detective force as required. At that time I placed my name on the roll, and was called. On the 25th of April 1878, the report of the shooting at Constable Fitzpatrick came in. I was then directed by the officer in charge of the detectives to proceed to Benalla, there to report myself to the officer in charge of police, and to try and catch Edward Kelly and Dan Kelly then charged with the offence.
3037. Try and state the names of all those you had to do with. Was the officer Sergeant Whelan or Sergeant Pewtress that you reported yourself to?—I saw Superintendent Chomley there, I think on the day after I arrived.
3038. Whom did you report yourself to?—I cannot say. On that night, in company with Senior-constable Strahan and two other constables—I do not remember their names now—we started for the Eleven-mile Creek, at seven o’clock in the evening.

3039. Is the Eleven-mile Creek Kelly’s residence?—Yes; Kelly’s residence. Our object in going there on that evening was this. Mrs. Skillian and Kate Kelly were in Benalla to hear the preliminary hearing of their mother’s, Mrs. Skillian’s, and Williamson’s cases; they were brought into the court on that day charged with aiding and abetting Edward Kelly at the time he shot Constable Fitzpatrick. The night was raining heavily and very dark. When about two miles from Winton, on the Greta road, and about four miles from Mrs. Skillian’s residence, we found a dray, and two bags of flour and other articles, without a horse, in the middle of the road. We searched round and found Mrs. Skillian and Kate Kelly sitting on a log. They were wet through, having very light clothes on. We went up and spoke to them. They said they were benighted, and could not find their way home—it was too dark. I had a flask with some whisky in it. I gave some to Kate Kelly. She drank it. 3040. Did they know you?—Yes, they did. They knew Senior-constable Strahan very well. I then left two men behind to show them the road to their own house. Senior-constable Strahan and I started for the Eleven-mile Creek, and placed ourselves in a position to see if any person came to the house during the night, as we were of the opinion that Ned Kelly or his brother would come on that night to see his sister, and know how his mother got on at the court. I watched the place without success. My object was that I might capture him when he would come home to hear how his mother got on at court.

3041. You were unsuccessful?—Unsuccessful, yes.

3042. Up till June 1879 you did not hear anything of him?—Oh, yes, I did. During that month I received information that they were at Bullocky Gully, or at the head of Ryan’s Creek.

3043. What position is that in from the place where the constables were murdered?—About five or six miles from where they were murdered.

3044. In the same direction of the same country?—In the same direction of the same country, This was on the 7th of May. Constables Mooney, Hayes, Whitty, and Senior-constable Strahan proceeded to there, and made search for three days.

3045. Were you with them?—I was with them.

3046. That was to Ryan’s Creek—Bullocky Gully?—Yes. We were unsuccessful at that time again. We searched the surrounding creeks for three days, but could find no trace. I returned to Melbourne, and on the 9th of September, from information I had received, I was instructed to return to the Kelly country.

3047. By whom?—Mr. Secretan.

3048. Under whose instructions did you generally act?—Mr. Secretan’s, when in Melbourne or the suburbs; when in the country, I of course acted under the officer in charge of the district.

3049. Mr. Secretan is the head of the Detective department?—Yes.

3050. When you received information respecting the Kellys, could you act on that information without first reporting to one of your superior officers, either in Melbourne or the country district?—In the country district, at one time, I could, but in Melbourne I could not.

3051. At one time, you say, you could, in the country—was that altered as to the country?—Yes.

3052. At what time?—While after the Kellys.

3053. At what time?—About the latter end of the search for the Kellys.

3054. Was it six months after they were taken?—No, it was not.

3055. Was it three months?—No. I think it would be about the time Mr. Hare came up the last time.

3056. What was the fresh order you received?—The order was that I was to receive two black trackers, and to start whenever I got information, but to telegraph where I would likely be found and what direction I was going in.

3057. Are the Commission to understand this—that while you are stationed in Melbourne and get instructions to make a certain offender amenable to justice, you are at liberty (that being handed over to you) to take your own action as to how best to do it, as being responsible for it?—I am.

3058. When you went up to the North-Eastern district, under instructions to make the Kellys amenable to justice, were you at liberty during that time, until you came back, to act on your own responsibility, without consulting with your officers?—When I first went, on the 9th of September, I did not go as a detective officer to be known to the world; I went secretly—privately.

3059. When you got any information, what would you do then?—I would immediately communicate with my officer, Mr. Secretan, in town. And even at that time, up to the 26th of October, the day of the police being shot, my instructions of what I would do, acting as I was at that time, were to communicate with Mr. Secretan. But if I at any time found any information that I could immediately work upon with the aid of the nearest police station, I was to go and get the police, and make an arrest if possible.

3060. Upon your own responsibility?—Yes, upon my own responsibility.

3061. And you were permitted to do that throughout?—Yes.

3062. Then, as a matter of fact, were your actions in regard to the capture of the Kellys untrammeled by any instructions from your officers?—Yes.

3063. Would it be true or untrue that you could not take any action for making the Kellys amenable to justice without consulting the superior officers before you took any steps?—It would be perfectly untrue.
3064. You stated that for a portion of your time you could not act upon your own responsibility. You had better complete your evidence about that?—It was, providing I saw my way clear. For instance, if I got information that the four outlaws were in a certain place; I was one individual, having nobody with me. I travelled the whole district without any person to assist me. No matter where information was received from, I went there myself. For instance, I was once in a false position near where the police were shot, in which I would not like to be again, and I alone could not arrest the four.

3065. That is not an answer to the question. You went on the 9th of September 1878?—Yes.

3066. Did you remain in the Kelly district till the capture of the Kellys?—Yes.

3067. At what time were you prevented from acting on your own responsibility—or were you ever?—I was never prevented, but I was to be guided by circumstances.

3068. You stated just now that, when in Melbourne, you would have to report any information to your superior officer, and also that you were allowed to do the same in the country up to a certain time (about the time that Mr. Hare took command on the second occasion)—now we want to know what was the difference made at that time?—The difference made was that there were different parties in the district.

3069. Never mind the parties in the district. What we want to know is this—were you prevented by any instructions from taking action at once, when necessary, through having to consult your superior officer?—Never, but different arrangements were made.

3070. By whom?—Mr. Hare. We were working on a different principle before that.

3071. What was the difference?—All the black trackers were kept in Benalla—that was the only difference.

3072. Then you could go out with black trackers without sending for them?—We could by sending for them; they were always ready the moment I telegraphed for them. But the new arrangement was that they were to be on the spot—two in Beechworth, and two in Wangaratta, as well as two in Benalla.

3073. Were they that way with Mr. Nicolson?—No, never in Beechworth, except when required, when we should telegraph for them.

3074. You mean they were not distributed over the district. They were all in Benalla before?—Yes.

3075. They were not distributed till Mr. Hare took charge?—Yes; but they could be got any time to go anywhere they would be required, but their head quarters were at Benalla.

3076. Mr. Hare altered that system, and distributed the trackers?—He intended to do so; but on the 3rd of June I saw Mr. Hare. He telegraphed to me from Beechworth, on the night of the 2nd, directing me to proceed to Benalla on the following morning. I did so. I met Mr. Hare, and we walked along the road in the direction of Violet Town. We had some conversation there, and it is there he said, “It will take me two or three days to read the papers over.”

3077. What papers?—The Kelly papers in the office at Benalla. He said, “I intend having a party of police in Benalla, and to give you two black trackers, that you will be able to act with at any time, immediately you receive information. I will have two in Benalla, and two in Wangaratta. You could go at any time you pleased when you get information, but telegraph to me what direction you are going.”

3078. Was that different from what the usage before was?—We never had the black trackers except when we applied for them.

Michael Ward, 3rd May 1881.

Continued.

3079. “I had long talks with them and their men”—[reading from Superintendent Hare’s report published in Argus of 20th July 1880]—“on the state of affairs, and informed them that I intended stationing black trackers whom I expected from Queensland, at Benalla Wangaratta, and Beechworth. Those are the black trackers you refer to?—Yes.

3080. Are those the ones originally there or the ones recruited by Mr. Chomley?—The ones recruited by Mr. Chomley.

3081. He then says, “I also told them that at each of these towns I would have a full party of men stationed, so that if any information was received about the Kellys they would be in a position to go in pursuit at once.” The question is this, was that the fresh order, different from the usage that was adopted by the constables before—did Mr. Hare then alter the usage for the first time?—We could not have the usage; we had not the men. I had to communicate with my officer.

3082. That is the question we are asking?—Yes; I had not the men.

3083. Before that, when you had a report of the Kellys, you had to communicate it to your officer and act upon his instructions as to what you were to do?—We were never told to do so, but we always had to report to the officer.

3084. This altered that arrangement?—Yes; because we would have the power of doing so having the men.

3085. This simply refers to the black trackers?—Yes.

3086. Then this change was simply that you got the black trackers there to assist you?—Yes.

3087. Then there was nothing to prevent you going out, if you could have gone alone, at any former period?—Nothing.

3088. But if you were at Beechworth you had to telegraph to Benalla for the black trackers?—Yes.
3089. Here is a statement made by Mr. Hare that some alteration was made in the manner of proceeding. It does not refer (according to his report) alone to the black trackers—that is the part where he stated he would have a party of policemen stationed at the different townsups. Supposing that you were stationed at Beechworth, that being your head-quarters, and you heard of the Kellys being at the Sheep-wash Creek, would you, supposing you were a mile or so outside Beechworth, before this alteration in the arrangements by Mr. Hare, have been in a position then and there single-handed to go in pursuit of the Kellys on your own account, or would you have had to go to your officer and report first, and take his instructions how to act?—The order was never given either one way or the other to do one thing or the other, but the men were not available. I had certain men at Beechworth, but they were employed in a certain position, and their instructions were very clear as to what they were to do if the Kellys came in their way they were to wait for no officer; they had written, instructions to shoot or capture in the best way they could, but not to lose a chance. It was my duty to communicate with the officer, as being head of the working of the Kelly business in that part of the district.

3090. It has been stated in the papers and elsewhere that one of the causes of failure was that, when a constable had private information in his district, he could not take any action without consultation with his officer as to how he should take action. Is that true or false?—It is false. I remember that not only one but a hundred different people said to me, “Ward, if you got your own way you would capture them,” and I said “No,” that was not the case, that I was really left perfectly free.

3091. Formerly the practice would be that in whatever position you were placed you would naturally consult with your superior officer if he were near at hand?—Yes.

3092. Still you were not restricted from taking action in his absence?—No.

3093. Were there any other detectives in that district?—Detective Eason, and Detectives Brown and Berrill...

3094. Your action there was never in any way trammelled—so that such a statement would not be true?—Never. I had full power to employ any persons I thought would be able to do good—to pay them to submit their claims, and the accounts were always passed by the officers. I received the greatest kindness. There is not a man I sent them but they employed.

3095. When Mr. Nicolson was in charge was there a larger number of constables in Benalla than after Mr. Hare distributed them over the district—did he send constables to Benalla?—I could not say that.

3096. It seems that he also sent constables as well as black trackers?—He said he would do so.

3097. Was it done?—Yes, a few men were sent to Beechworth, but they were on special secret duty, watching the place that they would come to if they showed out. Men were very scarce in the district at the time. Several times I applied for men, but they could not give them to me from having distributed them in different places just at the time. In a day or so they would be forwarded as soon as they could conveniently do it.

3098. The detective service in Melbourne, while you are there, is under Mr. Secretan?—Yes.

3099. In the country whom are you under?—The officer in charge.

3100. Irrespective of Mr. Secretan?—Yes.

3101. The superintendent of the district?

3102. Suppose there was an instruction at Beechworth, your superior officer you would communicate with would be the superintendent?—Yes, I always recognized the superintendent, but I would recognize any officer. I was under the officer who had charge of the capture of the Kellys.

3103. On the day of the capture where were you?—At Beechworth.

3104. Were you, as detective, cognizant of all that was known as to the Kelly movements?—No, not of all.

3105. Were you solely employed in pursuit of the Kellys, or did you do other detective duty?—No other duty.

3106. Then your duty from week’s end to week’s end was to keep yourself acquainted with the movements of the Kellys?—Yes.

3107. Are you aware of any chance being lost, or not being made available, for the capture of the Kellys on any information you received?—I am not.

3108. Some time ago, a man named Sherritt made a disclosure that on a certain day the Kellys were to visit him at a place?—I must refer to my report on that.

3109. You were saying about going to Bullocky Creek—will you go on from there?—On the 29th August 1878, I received information in Melbourne. I furnished the report then to Beechworth, and this is a copy of it:—“I have the honor to report, for the information of the officer in charge, I have received information that the above-named offender, Edward Kelly, was seen about three weeks ago between the Woolshed and Sebastopol, in the Ovens district, by a Mr. ——, a blacksmith at the Woolshed; he was riding and carried a gun under his arm, and had a revolver strapped on his saddle. Kelly is well known to ——. If Kelly was seen there, he would be most likely making for Joe Byrne’s mother’s place, as she lives at the Sebastopol. I would respectfully suggest this report be forwarded to Mr. Inspector Smith for careful enquiries. Mr. —— is a very respectable man, and will give every information to the police, providing it is Michael Ward, continued.

kept secret. The person who makes the enquiry would do well to call on —— of the Woolshed before calling on ——, as he may be able to give some information on the subject. —— has a good many cattle running on the common, between the Woolshed and Sebastopol, and if it was known by Byrne or Sherritt that he would give any information relative to Kelly’s whereabouts, his cattle would not be safe.”

3110. Did it appear that a report sent in three weeks after the time would be of much value?—Yes, I did; this was after the murders—it would show I was aware they were in communication. On the 9th September, I left Melbourne and reported myself at Benalla to Superintendent Sadleir.

3111. That was in 1878?—Yes; from Benalla I went to Glenrowan—Glenrowan to Oxley, and made search then until about the 15th of October, when I received information that Dan Kelly was on the Fifteen-mile Creek, working with a man there.

3112. Is it a fact that you had information that Ned Kelly, prior to the murders, was going about armed?—Yes, there was a report there of that.

3113. Before you proceed, I would like to know how you learned that—what information did you usually get that you could rely upon?—Direct information; in fact, I had a secret service man with me, as well as myself.

3114. Do you doubt now that they were armed prior to the murders, and going round the country?—No; my opinion is that Ned Kelly had a revolver, I do not know whether he had a gun.

3115. You say that you were there from the 9th September to the 15th October, five weeks—how would you employ yourself for five weeks in the district?—I will tell you where I was every day. On Monday, 9th September, at 2.30 p.m., I left Melbourne. I will read the distances and the places I went to.—[The witness read his diary, giving in detail the places he was at every day.]

3116. In what character did you go round those places?—In disguise, sometimes as a butcher, sometimes as a splitter, and as a swagman—every sort of disguise.

3117. On foot or horseback?—I had a horse; I sometimes walked and sometimes rode, as I best could disguise myself.

3118. Now proceed with your narrative?—On the 15th of October, I then wrote a letter to Mr. Secretan, the officer in charge of detectives, suggesting to him that two bodies of police should be sent out to search the Fifteen-mile Creek, the right-hand branch of the King, and thence on to Mansfield.

3119. You said just now that you were placed under the charge of the superintendent of the district. Why did you write to Mr. Secretan?—At that time I was not placed under the superintendent. The conversation that passed between Mr. Sadleir and me was private at the time, and it was not to be known to anybody in the district, to be kept quite private.

3120. Not till after the murders; you were under the officer in the district?—After the murders. Well, I wrote suggesting that two bodies of police should both start at the same time, that I would go to Mansfield, and that the secret service man I had, would go to the head of the King; that if my information was correct the Kellys would be started from their haunts, and we were bound to get them. I specially wished this done, as the public were talking that the police were frightened to catch Ned Kelly.

3121. Did you hear at this time that the Kellys were mining at some diggings near where the murders were committed?—Not at this time. I heard on the first occasion, on the 7th May, information that they were at the old diggings place, and we made a search there.

3122. Then, if you had gone higher up on that date, you would come to those other places?—I believe we should. The information was good, but we did not find the place. Mr. Secretan and the Chief Commissioner agreed to this, and I believe Mr. Sadleir made arrangements for two parties of police to start and make this search.

3123. Did you inform Mr. Secretan, at that time, you knew Ned Kelly was travelling about armed?—I did not know he was travelling about armed then.

3124. You stated he had been seen before that?—Yes; I reported before that, through my officer, Mr. Secretan, to Mr. Inspector Brook Smith.

3125. Did you think, and the constables you were acting with at that time think, that if you did come on the Kellys they would be likely to fight?—I thought they would fight, but I never had the remotest idea they would shoot. I knew Ned Kelly would fight. I had a fight with him once before. I would not leave Melbourne with a small revolver if I thought they would shoot. I knew Ned Kelly would fight.

3126. You did not know they were so well armed?—I never gave it a thought that they would be. About the 20th—I think on the 21st—of October, I received a letter from Mr. Secretan, stating that the Chief Commissioner had sanctioned the suggestion, and that Mr. Sadleir was instructed, and that a body of police would start about a certain time. Instead of my going to Mansfield, as suggested to me by Mr. Secretan, I went to the head of the King myself.

3127. Was that by instructions?—Oh no, on my own motion; I had nobody—just my own idea.

3128. Whom had you with you?—A secret service man with me, that is the only one; he was in one part of the country.

3129. He did not go to the head of the King?—No, nobody went with me there; I was by myself alone.

3130. Armed?—Armed with a small pocket Webley revolver.

3131. Mounted?—I always had a horse.

3132. Still travelling in disguise?—Yes.

3133. Your object in going there was not really to catch them by yourself but to obtain such information as would lead to their capture, with the assistance of others?—My object in going to the head of the King was to be present at about Power’s Look-out, as I was of opinion, if my information was correct, that these men, the Kellys, would make for that place. On the 26th October I went and got up on the top of Power’s Look-out; from that I went along the Dividing Range in the direction of, and along the Fifteen-mile Creek, about ten miles from Glenmore, and there was no person with me; I was expecting to meet the police, and I was undecided which side of the ranges I would take to return back, whether the right-hand branch of the King or the back of the Fifteen-mile Creek. I turned to the right, into the Fifteen-mile Creek, and went back near Glenmore. I met Senior-Constable Strahan, Constable Shoebridge, Constable Thom, and another, I do not remember his name now. I asked them had they any good news—did they see or hear anything of the Kellys.

3134. This was one of the search parties?—This was one of the search parties, the party that started from Greta. They said, “No; we are very hungry, we have had nothing to eat for the day.” I said, “Come on to the station and I will get you rations. Where is the other party—did they start?” Strahan replied they had. “Sergeant Kennedy started from Mansfield on the same day that we did; he had three constables with him; he is to meet us down at the head of the King.” “Has he not arrived yet?” I said. He said, “I saw nothing of him, you are the first I have seen.” “Well,” Strahan said, “we will go to the Hedi station to-morrow; from there I will make to Eldorado, for I think I will get the two Kellys. I am certain,” he said, “that they will be somewhere about Byrnes’.” That was Saturday the 26th. On Sunday the 27th I went to Jack Daniels’ hut, up the King River, about nine miles higher up than Glenmore.

3135. Was Jack Daniels there?—No, that is an empty hut. I returned on the same evening, got on the top of Power’s Look-out, expecting every moment to see Kennedy. On Tuesday the 29th, when I found he did not come to Glenmore, I left to go to Moyhu, to get my letters.

3136. Are there any relatives of the Kellys up in that country—Moyhu?—Yes, Moyhu, and higher up.

3137. Whereabouts?—Jack Quinn, an uncle.

3138. Where is he?—He lives about four miles above the Hedi station, close to where I was.

3139. What is he?—He is a notorious cattle-stealer, and Jack and Jimmy Quinn, the two brothers, they are living on the Black Range Creek.

3140. Do they keep cattle?—They keep cattle, very few cattle, but a lot of horses—a stock of horses; they go round the ranges, take all the unbranded horses they can get, and brand them and pluck them; they have been repeatedly in trouble about it. They have the run of the country there—they are uncles of Ned and Dan Kelly; and that was part of my reason to be at that point where the Fifteen-mile Creek and the right-hand branch of the King, where they would be when they run across the Black Range into their uncle’s place.

3141. There they could get horses day and night?—Yes.

3142. They never could want a horse?—No, never want a horse there. On Tuesday the 29th I started for Moyhu from Glenrowan. When about four miles from Glenmore, a young lady overtook me on horseback.

3143. Do you mean Glenmore station?—Lewis’s station. I was stopping there.

3144. How far is Glenmore from Glenrowan?—Forty-five miles, I think. The lady overtook me, and handed me a small note from Senior-Constable Strahan, informing me of the death and the shooting of the police, and requesting me to return to Glenmore at once, the party that I met on the Saturday previous.

3145. What date was that?—That was on Tuesday the 29th I got the letter.

3146. How did she know you?—I was staying at their place—it was the daughter at the place.

3147. How did they get the information?—Senior-Constable Strahan crossed over there.

3148. Where did he get it from?—He got the information from the police from Wangaratta. He requested me to return to Glenmore. I said, “No” to myself—he was not present—“I am not going to return as long as there are three police shot, and me only with a little revolver; they are well armed; I am not well armed. I will make my way to head-quarters for proper arms and accoutrements.” When I got to Mr. Isard’s, I met the police there. I there met Constable Arthur and Constable Thom and this constable—I do not remember his name. They gave me further particulars of the murders of the police. On the following morning, the 30th, I arrived in Wangaratta. I there saw Mr. Nicolson, the Assistant Chief Commissioner, and made arrangements to return back to Mount Blowhard to interview some people that we were of opinion would give information, and could if they only pleased to do so. I remained there for two or three days. I was hemmed in by the floods; I got up but could not return owing to the floods. On the morning of the 4th November, arrived in Oxley.

3149. Still by yourself?—By myself all the time. I received information in Oxley that, on the night of Sunday the 27th October, there were four horsemen seen riding through Oxley, near the Oxley square, going in the direction of the Pioneer Bridge. They had two pack-horses with them; they were going pretty quickly. The person who gave me the information said it was about two o’clock, and on the following morning he examined the foot-prints, and he believed them to be police horses’ foot-prints from the marks of the shoes. I then proceeded to the Pioneer Bridge Hotel, kept by a man named Moon. He was absent in Melbourne at the races at the time, but I was there informed by a young man that on the morning of the 27th, or the morning of the 28th, I think, that one man called there and purchased a bottle of brandy. The other men stood with their horses near the Pioneer Bridge, and crossed over the bridge, going in the direction of Everton. From other enquiries I made, I found that the same four men called at Everton, and purchased several boxes of sardines, and some horse-feed, and crossed under the railway in the Blind Bridge, between Everton and Beechworth, going in the direction of Sebastopol that would be. I proceeded to Wangaratta the same day.

3150. Did you believe those were the Kellys?—Yes, I believed that those were the Kellys.

3151. How far would Sebastopol be from where they were seen on the morning of the 28th?—They would run across there from the ranges in about six or seven miles.

3152. How far would that be from Mrs. Skillian’s place?—From fifteen to nineteen miles. Her place is about ten miles from the King Bridge. Then I proceeded to Wangaratta. I was just in time to catch the train. Finding that Mr. Nicolson was up in Wodonga, on the Murray Flats, I put my horse into the horse-box and went to Wodonga. I went from there. Mr. Nicolson was out with the party, and went across to Albury. I returned to Wodonga. Finding he was not at home, I telegraphed to Beechworth and Wangaratta to have the bridges guarded that night. The place was flooded. I received information that the police had them surrounded on the Murray. The Murray was at high flow.

3153. The outlaws could not have got across except by punt, boat, or those bridges?—They could not.

3154. You must have telegraphed on November 4th?—Yes, on that night.

3155. Your information about Sebastopol?—No; later information arrived that they were on the Murray. The direction I mentioned was in the direction of the Murray.

3156. What information had you of their being seen—had you any information of their being actually seen at any particular place between the 28th October and 4th November?—On that evening, when I arrived at Albury, I found it was common report thereabout that the police had them surrounded on the Murray. Then I believed my information was good.

3157. Do you know from your knowledge whether they were seen after the 28th?—Only when they were seen on the Murray.

3158. When?—On the 4th, I heard.

3159. Were they seen on the 4th?—were they seen by anyone after the 25th of October, with any certainty?—There was a certainty between the 28th and 4th that they were seen by the men when they called for rations. Mr. Nicolson will know about that.

3160. Of your own knowledge can you say?—I did not know myself.

3161. The 28th October was the last you knew anything about?—Yes, but I did not receive this information till the 4th.

3162. You have had information since where they were seen. Were they seen by anyone from the 28th October to the 9th or 10th November by anybody?—Yes, I believe they called at Sherritt’s place going across.

3163. When?—Just after the murders.

3164. Between the 28th October and the 4th November?—Yes.

3165. When you say Sherritt’s place, do you mean the house where he was shot, or his mother’s house?—His mother’s house.

3166. What date would that be?—On the 28th or 29th; they were no distance from there.

3167. After the 29th had you any positive information?—No, I had none, because I was in a different part of the country at the time.

The Chairman.—As we cannot take the whole of your evidence to-day, it is thought better to break off your evidence at this point, in order to call the next witness, who has to leave Melbourne immediately.

The witness withdrew.

W. B. Montfort, 3rd May 1881.

Michael Ward, continued, 3rd May 1881.
the number of stations was reduced, and that pressure thereby was taken off the criminal classes.

3182. You mean supervision?—Yes.
3183. Do you mean supervision or pressure?—Supervision in the same sense as pressure.
3184. What stations were done away with?—The Glenmore station, for example.
3185. Who was responsible for doing away with those?—That I cannot say of my own knowledge; of course I can form an opinion.
3186. What is your opinion. Were you the superintendent’s clerk at Wangaratta when it was done away with?—No, sub-inspector of police at Melbourne. I opposed its being done away with every time it was hinted at.
3187. For what reason?—Because I think the station was one of the most important in the district.
3188. Why?—To keep down horse and cattle stealing, and the free passage of the criminal class, the Quinns and Kellys and their associates, backwards and forwards from Mansfield.
3189. Were there any other stations reduced in strength?—I believe the Greta station was reduced.
3190. When was the Glenmore station done away with—what year?—I cannot tell; I was in the station at Melbourne at the time.
3191. Was it before the shooting of Fitzpatrick?—Yes, decidedly.
3192. Years before?—Yes, I think so.
3193. Was it after Power was caught?—It was established in consequence of that being Power’s head-quarters.
3194. You said you opposed it on all occasions?—Yes.
3195. What was the nature of the opposition you offered?—My advice.
3196. To whom?—Superintendent Barclay, who was in charge of the Ovens district.
3197. Was he in a position to accept or refuse your advice?—Decidedly he was; it was he who recommended its abolition.

3198. On what grounds?—I do not know. Ostensibly the ground was, as well as I can remember (the report is now in the Chief Commissioner’s office), that it was not needed, that it was a loss of power having men where there was no population.
3199. His report would be forwarded to the Chief Commissioner of Police?—I saw it. I read it and reported on it, and my report is no doubt attached to it. It was in 1872, about the month of March or April.
3200. That it was abolished?—No; that I had to report on it.
3201. Were you the officer there?—Yes, sub-inspector of police.
3202. That was after Power’s capture?—Yes, I was promoted after that.
3203. For the reason that Power was captured—was that one of the reasons given for abolishing it?—Oh, no. It was established in consequence of Power having established himself there. It was considered by Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare, who were there, and had to do with the capture of Power, advisable that a police station should be placed there for the express purpose of preventing what I have already stated, the free movement of criminals. It was abolished in direct opposition, I believe, to the officers who originally had established it. I had the station erected by direction of Messrs. Nicolson and Hare.
3204. The inspecting superintendent, at the time of the first application for its abolishment, I believe to have been Mr. Bookey?—I think so.
3205. He refused to have it abolished. Mr. Nicolson said it was without his own knowledge and without his consent—were you aware it was against the opinions of the really responsible officer who understood it?—I know nothing about Mr. Bookey, but I know Mr. Nicolson was in charge of the city at the time, and he called upon me; he was so much opposed to its abolition, that he pursued the extraordinary course of calling upon me to report upon Mr. Barclay’s recommendation, which was then about a week after my transfer from North-Eastern Victoria.
3206. Being the superintendent’s clerk, and therefore cognizant of every correspondence that went through, is it your opinion that the abolition of those stations was the cause of those criminals you speak of getting ahead and out of the control of the police?—Not altogether. In addition to that there are various causes—undoubtedly it did affect it to a very great extent.
3207. You know the Greta station?—Yes.
3208. Under whose charge was it?—When I was stationed at Wangaratta, Senior-Constable Hall.
3209. Was he specially selected?—Yes, by the officers immediately over me, Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare.
3210. Are you aware that he kept the criminal classes completely, as far as possible, under control?—As far as possible, while he was there.
3211. Under what circumstances did he leave?—He got grievously assaulted there by Pat Quin.
3212. What relation to Kelly is he?—Pat Quin was a cousin to Jimmy Quin, and Jimmy Quin is Kelly’s uncle, and Pat Quin is married to Jimmy Quin’s sister.
3213. Was there a conviction for Hall’s assault?—Pat Quin got three years.
3214. Why was Hall removed?—I think at his own request.
3215. Why?—His wife was in a bad state of health—he got married, and his wife got into a very bad state of health, and I think that is why he made the application— I think so, I am not sure.

3216. Who was sent there after Hall by Mr. Barclay?— I am speaking now altogether from memory and without the aid of the books—that is why I wanted to give my evidence at Benalla—I believe a constable called Montgomery.

3217. Had he any experience of these criminal classes?— None whatever, he came from the Portland district.

3218. Was that considered an unwise step by the officers?— I looked upon it as extremely so.

3219. Is a special knowledge of those criminals indispensable to keep them under?— Yes.

3220. And a knowledge of the country?— Yes.

3221. Did Montgomery have a knowledge of the country?— No. I got him removed. It was my duty to inspect the Greta station, and after he was placed in charge of it, on the first occasion of my inspecting it, I noticed his horse was very fat, and I knew his horse, and I was surprised that this horse should get so very fat.

3222. What time was that?— The latter end of 1871. It attracted my attention, and the next time I went to the station I determined I would overhaul the occurrence-book, because I found him there when I went, and then the next time I found him there in the barracks, not on duty, and he appeared as if he had not been mounted, and I knew there is such a thing as doing duty by the occurrence-book, and I questioned him. I saw he had entered “Bush patrol” in his book. That means riding in the bush for a certain number of hours, a certain number of miles, without any terminus being stated.

3223. Is it generally undertaken for special duty or for the exercise of the horse?— No; patrolling the district to see what he could see, to get a knowledge of the country.

3224. What knowledge of the country had he?— Absolutely none, for I asked him about Mason’s station, and he did not know about it. That is on the Fifteen-mile Creek.

3225. Would not that be the direct road where those lawless men would go?— Yes, and of course he should know every inch of it.

3226. Was Montgomery removed?— Yes.

3227. Why?— On my report. I reported him to Superintendent Barclay for this, and he removed him to Bright I think.

3228. Who went there then?— I think it was a mounted constable named Flood that went there after him.

3229. Did you ascertain from the records of your office whether those criminals about there had been prosecuted constantly by Montgomery?— No, there was no prosecution when he was there—no arresting.

3230. Was there in Hall’s time?— Certainly.

3231. Constantly?— I could not say constantly, because it is a difficult matter; it may take months and months to get at them for one offence. He did it as often as the opportunity offered.

3232. Flood was sent there?— Yes, he was an active man and did good work.

3233. Do you know he had them continually under “pressure”?— Yes, he had.

3234. Do you know he was removed?— I think it was after I was away from the district. I cannot speak of that unless I saw the occurrence-book. I inspected the station while he was there some times twice a month.

3235. At whose advice was Glenrowan station put there?— Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare’s.

3236. Do you know as a superintending clerk that the Kellys and their companions, the Lloyds, were active agents of Power and their party?— I was superintendent’s clerk to Mr. Hare at that time, but I had been previously at Wangaratta up to 1867. And when there I knew they were assistants, and also I knew from the correspondence that I afterwards saw when I was Mr. Hare’s clerk, and I knew it after 1870—after Power’s arrest.

3237. With the exception of that lot—Power, Quinn, and Lloyd—were the rest of the inhabitants lawless or the reverse at that time. In other words, were outrages more frequent in that district than in others?— Always. It was always a bad district; it was a focus of crime.

3238. Was it a place where criminals collected?— It was in consequence of two families of the name of Lloyd—the Kelly’s uncles—settling down there.

3239. And then the criminal classes came?— They were arrested by me, and they got three years for cattle-stealing— Tom Lloyd and Jack Lloyd. I got acquainted with the criminals in Wangaratta, and when they came out of there they were never without criminals rallying around them; and the Quinn’s, at the head of the King River, was another depot. You never went there without seeing strange faces, all of the criminal type.

3240. Is it your opinion that that is a place where there should be police protection of extra efficiency?— Most decidedly.

3241. Was not that principle violated when Glenmore was abolished and Greta reduced?— Undoubtedly.

3242. Would it not be worse than none if an indifferent man was sent?— Yes; because they would have the name of police while absolutely there would be none.

3243. Was Montgomery long there?— Montgomery was either two or three months there. I know the
Do you know of your own knowledge as to whether the magistrates and presidents of the shire and the shire councils of the district remonstrated to the Police department against indifferent men being sent to Greta?—To Greta?

I do not remember that. I know that a remonstrance was made by the President of the North Ovens Shire, Mr. Parfitt, against a refusal to form a station at Boorehman.

It would lie between those portions of the Murray?—It would lie on the Ovens between Wangaratta and the Murray. It was the track of the cattle-stealers to New South Wales.

Are you not aware that they used to exchange horses and bring back stolen horses?—That was not in force when I was there; the Omeo was the place they used to take them to.

This station would intercept anything of that sort?—It ought to from its position.

In what year were Jack and Tom Lloyd convicted for horse-stealing, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment?—Morgan was shot in 1865, and I think it was before that.

Power was arrested in 1870?—Yes.

Were the Lloyds convicted before that?—I think it was in 1864—I think it was before Morgan was shot.

Would it be within your knowledge as to whether the sessions were held at Beechworth or Benalla?—Beechworth.

Do you know that some one or other members of this family wore continually up for trial at those sessions?—Well, I have heard of it many times. I did not know of my own knowledge.

Detective Ward has given evidence of that?—He was much later than I was. That was the first time they were caught when I arrested them, and we were looking out for them a very long time. That was their first conviction to my knowledge. They were known to be cattle-stealing of course, but we could not get at them.

The Kellys must have been young then?—Yes, quite boys. Their mother kept a grog-shop on the Eleven-mile Creek.

Was Kelly’s father alive then—Red Kelly, as they call him?—No; I never saw him.

We have had it in evidence that there were serious differences of opinion between the heads of the Police department—did anything of the sort come within your own knowledge?—No.

None whatever?—None. Nothing of that sort came under my observation. In fact, the present enquiry was the first intimation that I had of it to a great extent.

When did you leave the North-Eastern district?—Finally in 1872—March 1872.

Had you, during that time, prior to your leaving the North-Eastern district, drawn the attention of your superior officers to the necessity of greater police protection in that place?—That would not have been my province.

Whose would it have been?—The superintendent of the police—Superintendent Barclay.

You are not aware whether he did at any time do so?—No. I was in charge of Wangaratta, and he in Beechworth. I had nothing to do there, except to look after the stations he instructed me to visit.

At the time you left you were of the opinion that it was necessary to have an unusual number of police there, on account of the crime there?—The stations should have been kept up—that was all.

Had Senior-Constable Hall any man stationed with him when he was attacked?—That I cannot very well remember without the occurrence-book. I think he had two mounted men.

Is it your opinion that, if the police stations which were dispensed with had been kept up and the same watchfulness observed, that the Kelly difficulties which afterwards occurred would have been prevented?—It would certainly have had that effect no doubt, the same stations and proper men in charge. I have heard that the man placed in charge of Glenmore station was utterly unfit. I did not think of that just now, when you were asking about the abolition of the station. There was a constable named McInerney; this I heard afterwards—

Was the man dismissed?—He died in the Lunatic Asylum I think or got killed—I am not certain. He was placed in charge of Glenmore station, and I was told by a settler of that neighborhood who met me down in town here. He complained of the want of police protection, sending a man like that to be in charge of Glenmore station. Of course that is the effect, that it would be no use having a station there without a good man.

The criminals would soon find out that?—Yes.

Was that man McInerney the man who was afterwards dismissed at the recommendation of Judge Barry?—I heard he was sent to the Lunatic Asylum and died there.

That observation of yours with reference to the unfitness of policemen at those stations would seem to imply that there is not proper supervision of the police force—is that to be inferred from your remarks, because if such unfitness existed for any lengthened period, would it not be very soon discovered if there was a proper system of discipline and supervision maintained over the force—I mean as regards every locality?—I think his immediate superior ought to have known the character of the man. I would have, had I been there at the time.
3270. Is it not a fact that the police, as a body, should be more effective in preventing crime than in capturing criminals after the crime has been committed?—That is a recognized dogma of the force.
3271. Do you believe that?—I believe prevention is better than cure in any case.
3272. Do you believe that is the duty of the police?—Yes, no doubt.
3273. How far towards the Mansfield district did your district go?—Nominally the boundaries of the sub-district are half-way between stations—about twenty miles from Mansfield.
3274. Did you know Sergeant Kennedy, who was murdered?—I cannot remember him, but I know he was stationed under me in the escort at one time.
3275. Did you know Scanlan?—Yes.
3276. Did you know they were specially selected to keep the mountain portions there free from those characters?—No.
3277. Did you know that Flood and Steele, and those men, acted as a cordon there?—No, I had nothing to do with that then.
3278. How often would those out-stations be visited by the inspecting officer?—The order is once a month. I visited them every month, sometimes twice and three times a month.
3279. That being so, what rule is adopted by the officer so inspecting to detect any remissness in the performance of the duties of the man in charge?—It depends on the individual officer. I can only tell what I do.
3280. He reports on every thing connected with the station; is there a general revision of the daily duties performed by the men since last visit?—He has an occurrence-book.
3281. The constable keeps a journal?—A diary.
3282. And the inspection is something after the manner of this—every station is inspected, and everything about it; the buildings, the cleanly appearance; whether the horses had been worked; where the men have been, and everything of that sort?—Yes.
3283. In this case you have alluded to, where the horse was suspiciously fat, that led up to the impression that the man himself had not worked?—Yes.
3284. What test would you have of that fact by reference to his diary—would that show the daily work he had performed?—I cross-examined him on his diary, when I found that, and he could not answer me, and then I concluded that he was telling an untruth, and that he did not go out on bush patrol, and his stating that was to prevent the testing of the entry. He did not say where; therefore we have no means of finding it out.
3285. The unsuitability of this man was a want in the knowledge of the country, and not knowing the criminal class?—Want of knowledge of the criminal, classes and of the country, and want of inclination on this man’s part to learn anything.
3286. Does not the efficiency of the test depend on the individual officer himself—you have power to visit night and day?—Yes.
3287. Do the officers go at night?—No, I do not remember ever going to the out-stations at night on purpose.
3288. Do the officers of the force visit stations at irregular times for the purpose of testing the efficiency of the men?—I never remember any officer doing that but one. It was Superintendent McCulloch. He used to visit them at all times of the night.
3289. Is it usual in other countries?—Yes, in Ireland.
3290. At all hours, day and night?—Yes.
3291. To see the efficiency of the men?—Yes.
3292. Were you in the Irish police?—No, my father was.
3293. You got promoted to the position of officer?—Yes.
3294. It was stated in evidence that the efficiency of the police, I think, would be materially increased if young officers from the cadet rank entered into the police force—is that your opinion?—I think it would be quite impossible in this country.
3295. Why?—Because the general feeling in the police force would be so much against it.
3296. Against what?—Against promoting men outside the force. It has been always an understood thing since 1854 that promotion would go from service in the ranks; and it would go far to demoralize it, if such a proposal got wind.
3297. Can you speak from memory as to the age of the youngest officer promoted as an inspector in this force?—I think I was the youngest myself.
3298. How old were you?—Forty.
3299. Is it your opinion that it would be against the feeling of the force—do you yourself consider the efficiency of the service would be increased by young officers being brought into the service or younger men promoted from the ranks?—All things being equal, a younger man is better than an old.
3300. With regard to police service?—Yes.
3301. Why?—He is supposed to have more energy as a rule. I said all things being equal, but of course I might find an old man who would have a great deal more energy than a young man.
3302. How large are the districts those officers have control over, if you are sent to the country districts?—The North-Eastern district?
3303. Yes!—It is a very large size; ninety miles north of Yackandandah is one station I believe, and there are other stations, such as Snowy Creek; and the southern station is Longwood.
3304. Does that entail a great deal of horse work?—There is a great deal of work done by railway now, but it is all horse work north of Beechworth.
3305. A man over forty or fifty would not be so efficient in the saddle as a younger man?—I suppose such would be the case, though I do not know it in my person. I am as well able to work as I was twenty years ago.
3306. As a general rule, would it be the case?—Yes, as a general rule. Men generally get heavier, and they have not the same amount of energy and fire as they grow older.
3307. Is it correct that your conclusion is that you do not think it would be fair to the police themselves, as they expect that promotion will go from the service; except for that, do you think that young, carefully prepared, and trained officers would be more efficient than the present system?—I think the Irish system is the best, if it had been carried out; that is, trained officers appointed by competitive examination, and regularly trained and drilled.
3308. And under probation?—Under probation, to see if they are proficient.
3309. And then promoted?—And then promoted; and, in isolated cases, where men were found suitable, they should be promoted from the ranks, as in the home force; but with the force here, as at present constituted, every man enters it with the understanding that he carries a marshal’s baton in his knapsack—that he can rise to the highest rank if he conducts himself properly.
3310. Is there a feeling in the force against promoted men, as there is in other services, amongst the men themselves. Is there a feeling amongst the ordinary constables and sergeants against the men promoted as officers?—In connection with men promoted from the ranks, there is decidedly, amongst those who are aspirants themselves; a great number of men think they ought themselves to be promoted.
3311. In those promotions that are made, what is the difference of their pay when they are promoted and when they leave. What was your pay before you were promoted?—When I was promoted my pay was £14 5s. one month and £14 4s. 6d. another month. I was then with Mr. Hare.
3312. What did you get as sub-inspector?—£20 6s. 8d.
3313. Is that sufficient pay, in your opinion, for the difference between the officers and the expenses attending that position and sergeant’s pay?—I do not think so.
3314. What year were you appointed?—I was recommended for promotion by Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare. Mr. Hare selected me in his office to go up to the North-Eastern district at the time of the Power outbreak, and subsequently I was ordered to meet him and Mr. Nicolson at a settler’s station, and thence we went to the head of the King River, and I was with them when Power was taken, and the two officers did not themselves accept any remuneration on account of their services; they only asked for my promotion, and I was promoted.
3315. You think the Irish system would be a better one than that?—That would be the Irish system I have spoken of.
3316. The questioning has been particularly with regard to officers so far—now I would like to ask what is the practice as regards the men and constables generally, the system that is adopted by the chief of police and the officers co-operating with him, in locating men; that is to say, supposing a constable was appointed to Melbourne, would he be appointed only for a given time or would he be there until he was ordered to remove; is there any system of interchange by which men will be kept moving about?—No system at all.
3317. In your opinion, do not you think that the efficiency of the police would be increased by having an interchange of that sort, so as to cause ordinary constables to be familiar with every district in the colony?—I think it would be very beneficial, but not for that reason alone.
3318. There are many others, but that is one!—Yes.
3319. What are the others?—When a constable is left too long in one place he gets property, surrounds himself with encumbrances of various sorts, and he seems at last to look after his own affairs a great deal more than the affairs of the police force.
3320. That would not apply to a district like the North-Eastern, where they need to know the criminal class?—There may be instances in which I do not know of my own knowledge, unfortunately I know very few men who had money there, when I was there, because they were very active men, while activity there means spending money to get information.
3321. What difference is made between the single and the married men in appointments?—I never knew any difference. If a man is thought suitable he is sent to a certain place; of course at some stations it would be necessary to station a married man; in some stations the man’s wife cooks for the station. In some there are quarters only for married men.
3322. Would that do in the North-Eastern district?—I have a great dislike to married men myself, but my opinion is not shared by every officer in the force.
3323. Is it the custom to be accommodated with house room at the barracks, or are they permitted to occupy private rooms?—The rule is laid down in the regulations; the Government is not obliged to provide barracks, but if there are quarters available they are allowed to occupy them, provided they keep them in repair until they are required. You will find it under the head of “Buildings.”

W.B. Monfort, continued, 3rd May 1881.
3324. What proportion of the constables at present in the police service are accommodated by a selection of their own?—I could not form an idea.

3325. In country districts they have their quarters in the police barracks?—No, not all the married men; they have at Benalla.

3326. That is the officers’ quarters—I mean the out-stations; do they reside at the barracks?—At some places—Wangaratta, for instance.

3327. Assuming they were all provided with barrack accommodation, if the system were adopted of locating the men for a given period at one station, would the efficiency of the service be increased?—As a rule, yes; but there are exceptions, for I have known men to be stationed a long time in stations that were just as efficient the day they left as in the beginning of their career, but then they are few and far between; and of course, the man that does his duty zealously, the longer he is there the better, because he knows the whereabouts of people.

W. B. Montfort, continued.
3rd May 1881.

3328. As an inspector, you could tell at the places you visited every month whether the officer in charge was really discharging his duties?—No, not necessarily. You might go to a station; you could not see it on the surface; you might get information about it.

3329. Do you place yourself in a position to get that information. As a rule, has not an inspector got sufficient judgment to lead him to the conclusion as to whether the place he visits is properly conducted. You visited Glenmore, for instance; were you not able to form a pretty correct opinion as to whether the police had done their duty since the visit before?—I understand what you mean; but it is a wide question, and the duties of the constable are so varied, and further, you must judge of his efficiency a good deal by results, and those results will not appear in the books except the crime book.

3330. You can judge if his arms and accoutrements are in good order?—Yes.

3331. But can you judge whether he has taken a liking to one lot of men and a disliking to another?—Certainly not.

3332. Or whether he has discharged his duties faithfully?—I cannot. The first point is to see that the forage is correct according to his books, and that the Government property placed in his charge is in proper order, that his horse is properly groomed and looked after properly, and that his books are properly kept, and written up to date. The crime book will afford an indication of the number of offences reported to him. The occurrence book will show when he goes out and in, where he went to and generally what he did, but beyond that it is impossible, to say.

3333. Then when a constable is placed in charge of a district, what means have you as an inspector of ascertaining whether the constable is performing his duties as he ought, beyond the observations of the stores and books and so on?—By information received, for one thing.

3334. From the people of the district?—People I knew—a man I would know intimately, he would tell me in a minute if he knew that so and so was going wrong. Of course a man’s personal appearance when I go to the station would be a very good indication of what he was doing.

3335. Who would be responsible for the proper management of the police in the outlying districts?—The superintendent in charge of the district.

3336. And you would be in a position to ascertain from his report whether to retain or remove a man?—Decidedly.

3337. If an officer of police were placed at one of those out-stations, and he had obtained one or two thousand acres of land, that would not prevent his being there if he did his duty?—No, decidedly not.

3338. You stated just now that you would examine the occurrence book and the crime book?—Yes.

3339. If there was frequent crime in the district undetected and the offenders not made amenable to justice, would you not know that the man stationed there was more than likely inefficient?—Not necessarily.

3340. Would the book show the action the constable took on that information?—It would only show he had made enquiries, in a general way, it would not give the details. For instance, two men might come over from New South Wales and go to Moyhu, and steal horses there, and successfully pilot them across into New South Wales, and it would be a difficult thing to make the police officer responsible for that. It does not necessarily follow that the thieves live in the district.

3341. But if offences were taking place constantly in the district, and no man made amenable?—It would not be policeman’s fault alone.

3342. Would it not cause you to enquire if it was his fault?—It would necessitate a very large amount of supervision on his part.

3343. Would not the inspecting officer be bound in that case to be doubly careful if he doubted the man’s efficiency?—Undoubtedly. It is laid down in the regulations.

3344. Do you know anything about the promotion in the service amongst the men; is it by the Chief Commissioner?—The Chief Commissioner.

3345. Upon what recommendation?—Upon the recommendation of the superintendents of police.

3346. Is it altogether arbitrary on the officer taking upon himself the responsibility of recommending promotion, or is it by political patronage?—There is no political patronage I am aware of. Promotion is made by the Chief Commissioner of Police on the recommendation of the officer in charge of the district. There are a certain number of promotions allowed in each rank in proportion to the number of men in the district. For instance, Superintendent Winch in Melbourne would be permitted to recommend a greater number of men for promotion in the ranks than any other officer, because he has a greater number of men under him.

3347. Then another man more efficient in another district might in consequence of that fact not be promoted?—Yes; or another man very inefficient might be promoted over the head of a good man here.

3348. That may occur?—Yes.

3349. It is not by a mere general system of record sheets?—No. With reference to the superintendents’ action, I was not a superintendent, but I believe it was always the rule of the superintendents I was with that the record sheet, together with the man’s general efficiency, length of service, aptitude for the post, and so forth, was the basis upon which he recommended.

3350. It is quite possible then that in the city of Melbourne a man with a shorter service, and without an efficient record, would be promoted over men of a more lengthened service in the country districts?—No, on the contrary; you must reverse it. The man in the country competes with only 30 men, while the man here competes with 300—that is the difference.

3351. Do you know if that is a matter of complaint?—Yes, I know it is a matter of complaint.

3352. The men in each district are promoted for their district, and not through the police force generally?—That is a question I cannot answer. I do not know what reasons the Commissioner may have for promoting men. I can only state the manner in which the names are submitted to him. A man can be removed to any part of the colony.

3353. I understood you to say that a policeman in Melbourne had far less chance—300 to 30?—Yes.

3354. What I wish to know is—are those promotions confined to localities?—Each officer recommends so many for promotion.

3355. Then how can there be discontent, if a certain number out of 300, and a proportionate number only out of 30, can be recommended?—The discontent is this—Take the case of a senior-constable, we will say in a small district, the Western district—he is promoted, and he may be the best man there, and recommended by the superintendent on that account. He comes into Melbourne here, and he takes precedence over men that are his seniors in length of service and his superiors in ability and everything.

3356. Now, as a matter of fact, when he is promoted, is he not removed at once?—He ought to be.

3357. That is understood?—He must be unless there is a vacancy made for him in the district, because only a certain number are allowed in each district.

3358. Do you know that senior-constables in the district are employed in private service for which they receive remuneration altogether independent of the Government service—as inspectors of nuisances, and so on, by shires and others?—I know that is so, because I was inspector of nuisances myself at one time.

3359. Do you think that is good for the public service?—I do not; I think no man should hold any position except that in the Government service.

3360. Do you not think that it is very unsatisfactory that officers highly paid, and whose services ought to be applied to the Government service, should be employed in those subordinate things?—That is my opinion.

3361. Do you know that there are constables who devote nearly their whole time to those private duties?—I was aware of it in Melbourne.

3362. In the country?—The same principle applies. I do not know that they do devote their whole time in the country. It has that tendency; they can always say they are on that duty, and they cannot be disbelieved.

3363. How much did you get for that position?—£20 in Wangaratta.

3364. Supposing that a man can say he is at that work when his officer reports him for some neglect, that is very unfair to the Government service?—I do not think that there can be two opinions about that.

3365. You believe that prevention is better than cure?—Yes.

3366. You believe that if there had been better supervision by police in the Kelly district we would not have had the trouble with the outlaws?—That is my opinion as far as I can judge.

3367. Are there other districts where crime has existed and the police have been removed?—I can speak of my own personal knowledge only of north-eastern Victoria, and I think that is quite exceptional, and that the removal of police from there would have a far greater and more immediate effect than in any other locality that I know of.

3368. On account of the character of the population?—Yes, on account of the character of the population.

3369. And the character of the country?—Precisely.

3370. When you went to capture Power, the bushranger, with two officers, who ordered you for that duty?—Mr. Hare.

3371. Where was he stationed?—At the depot, Richmond.

3372. What position?—Superintendent of the depot—the county of Bourke.

3373. Did he succeed Mr. Bookey?—I do not know.

3374. Where were you stationed at that time?—I was Mr. Hare’s superintending clerk at the office.

3375. Did he take you up?—No, he sent me up before.
Were you altogether then under Mr. Hare’s control?—At the time I was sent up.

There seems to be a difference as to who was in charge of that party. Mr. Nicolson was the senior officer, under whose control were you supposed to be then, and that party was supposed to be?—There was no manifestation that I could judge of who was in charge until we were going up to where Power was. Then Mr. Nicolson stepped out and said—"I will go first; I am the senior here."

And made you believe that he claimed that position?—There is no doubt about it.

Suppose that Mr. Hare had disputed that, and told you not to go, what would you have done?—We were all going together.

How could you go together?—We did.

What would you have done under these circumstances. Suppose Mr. Nicolson said—"Go with me," and Mr. Hare said—"No, go with me"?—I cannot imagine such a contingency.

What I want to ascertain is this—On that particular morning, if Mr. Nicolson said—"Come with me," and Mr. Hare said—"No, come with me," which would you have obeyed?—Mr. Hare. I was acting under him.

Which was superior in rank?—I know Mr. Nicolson was senior.

Would it not have been your duty, as under an officer who was under Mr. Nicolson, to obey Mr. Nicolson?—It would be my duty to obey the order of the senior officer.

As far as that expedition after Power was concerned, Mr. Hare had the control of it?—I did not understand it so. The thought never struck me.

You said that you would have obeyed Mr. Hare—why?—Because, as he brought me up there, I was in his charge continually, under his immediate control and supervision, and I looked upon him as my personal officer.

There is no personal officer in a case like that?—You asked me what I would do; I have told you, if there were such a contingency.

Would it not have been Mr. Nicolson’s duty to instruct Mr. Hare to instruct you?—It is so far fetched that I could not possibly say, I can only tell you what I think I would do now. I am sure I would have obeyed Mr. Hare if there had been a conflict of authority.

Mr. Hare, in his statement, says he was sent for by Captain Standish and instructed to proceed to the North-Eastern district to capture Power—that he met Mr. Nicolson in the street afterwards and Mr. Nicolson asked him whether he would allow him to accompany him, and Mr. Hare put it to this Commission that he had charge of the capture of Power, and up to the morning when you were proceeding to capture Power Mr. Hare thought he was still in charge of that capture. Were you under that impression at that time?—The thought never struck me; you asked me did I form an opinion on it, and I wish to tell the exact truth, that I did not form an opinion. There are some questions I cannot answer, because the thought never struck me. I am telling you what my impression was at that time. I saw no act of 3398. What made it so?—The extent of country over which they ran, the amount of assistance and help they could get at all points. That necessitated an equal dispersion of the police, and an equal amount of watchfulness on the part of the police; so that no person knew where something would not occur, therefore it required a large number of men spread over the country.

3399. Would the character of the Kellys have anything to do with it?—Undoubtedly.

3400. That they could creep out and get provisions and so on?—Yes, that is involved in my answer.

3401. Are there many men in the force capable of coping with outlaws in a country like that—bushmen in fact, good shots, and so on?—They may be good shots, but the thing is to find the outlaws; it is not how to shoot them, catching them is the difficulty.

3402. Would it not be possible for the policemen not to want to find any four men so well armed?—That might occur.

3403. Did that occur, do you think?—No, it did not, from my knowledge of the men.

3404. Do you believe they would go anywhere to face them?—Yes.

3405. Do you believe there is a single coward in the force who would not face them?—Yes, I believe there is.

3406. Have you formed any opinion as to the shooting of Sherritt?—I have read the original depositions, and seen the ground-plan of the house where they were.

3407. What is your opinion of that?—Well, it is a difficult question to answer.

3408. Was that a display of courage, their getting under the bed?—It happens that I know one of those men, and I believe he is as sterling a man as any in the force—I mean Constable Armstrong.

3409. Is he not notorious as a fire-eater in the force?—He has a character of great daring. I knew him in the city on one occasion walk up and down Little Bourke street in danger of his life.

3410. The cowardice of three men might have outweighed the bravery of one?—Yes; but I do not want to give an opinion on that case.

3411. You have closely followed the history of all this Kelly business—the action of the police?—Yes.

3412. Is that the only case you know where the slightest attack can be made upon the courage of the police?—It is the only case I ever heard of. I beg your pardon, as I am on my oath—I did hear that some police turned back near Wangaratta, and that the officer in charge displayed an amount of apathy in not pursuing the outlaws when the men under him considered he should have done so.

3413. That was Inspector Brook Smith?—Yes.

3414. Are those the only cases?—Yes.

3415. In regard to Armstrong, who was in charge?—I did not know he was in charge. I would go with Armstrong anywhere myself, and that is the best compliment I could pay him.

3416. You have heard the statement about those four constables remaining in Sherritt’s house. After reading that, do you believe they acted wisely in remaining inside on that occasion, purely from a police point of view?—I do not think I would have remained in.

3417. If you would not, you do not think they ought?—I think they ought to have made a rush. That may not be the fault of one—there is no use one man rushing unless they all do it; and besides, as I remember, the manner in which the door was opened, the door obscured the person who was standing outside. They could not see him from where they were standing inside the room. I am judging from the depositions I saw.

3418. The opinion that you formed of the North-Eastern district, more especially what is now known as the Kelly country, led you to believe in those days that it required special police protection?—I did not know he was in charge. I would go with Armstrong anywhere myself, and that is the best compliment I could pay him.

3419. Have you formed the idea that special men should be specially trained for that work—good shots and good bushmen?—Yes.

3420. And that ought to be done even now, from the latest reports we have received from that district?—Special men should be selected—good bushmen.

3421. Men reared in the locality if you could get them?—That would be much better.

3422. In your experience in the Power business, had you been in charge, or if you were now placed in charge of that district, and another outbreak took place of a similar character to the last, would you explain the course that you would adopt in suppressing or endeavoring to suppress a gang of that description?—I could not answer that question.

3423. Have you read the evidence that has been taken sufficiently to be enabled to express an opinion on the course of proceeding adopted by the officers from the time of the murders to the capture?—That is a very large question.

3424. I am asking if you read the evidence?—The impression I gained from the evidence was that there were two systems in vogue—one was the system of patrol through the bush, and the other was the system of secret service. You ask me which do I think the most effective. As far as my opinion goes, I think the patrols would be useless there.

3425. Why?—Because it is like looking for a needle in a bundle of straw.
3426. Do the roads run up the valleys?—The men will not go on the roads, and they do not require to.
3427. Could the police go any other way?—Certainly they could.
3428. Could they go with their baggage?—They can go with pack-horses through the bush.
3429. Did they as a matter of fact?—That I cannot say.
3430. Would it not be very inconvenient?—No; pack-horses are used in travelling stock through bush.
3431. Would the Kellys go where police could not?—One horse could go where another could.
3432. Are there not horses accustomed to mountain country that can go where no other could?—There are some police horses will go where any other horse will go.
3433. It was stated that the outlaws had such superior horses that the police could not follow them?—I do not believe that.
3434. If it was a system of waiting for secret information, do you believe, after reading the evidence tendered by the officers, that the system adopted there of the secret service was likely to eventuate in the capture of the Kellys?—I think so—more so than the other.
3435. Will you tell us why?—For this reason, the outlaws could choose their own time to go out—there is no necessity to go out and meet the police, they can always avoid the police—there is any amount of scope to do so. It would be their own fault if they did meet them; and another thing, I got information from a private source, which I cannot mention of course, that the outlaws used to travel by night; well, even if the police did travel by night, they could not see them even if they did meet them.
3436. It would be a mere matter of chance?—It would be a mere matter of chance—a fluke. I am merely giving an opinion—I may be all wrong.
3437. Do you know that those men committed their cattle-stealing depredations, and drove them always at night?—I heard so and I believe so.
3438. Have you ever had experience with the black trackers in this country?—No, I never saw any until I went up in July last.
3439. With your knowledge of the country, do you think it would be desirable to have a number of them located in the Kelly country?—I think it is a very important adjunct from what I have been informed by Mr. Sadleir of their capabilities.
3440. Have you ever formed an opinion as to the advisability of amalgamating the two branches of the police force, the detective and the general?—I have formed an opinion, but what it is worth is another matter.
3441. What is it?—I think the present system is not conducive to success at all.
3442. Do you believe that in the detective police there are such cases as what are known in the force as “put up” cases?—I could not say of my own knowledge.
3443. Has it come under your notice?—Cases in the police court have been pointed out to me, but there was no proof that they were “put up”—the assertion has been made.
3444. Have you formed an opinion—every man forms his own opinion—as an officer stationed in Melbourne a long time, and being as able to obtain information on that head as any man in the force?—It is a very serious matter for me to cast imputations upon any man.
3445. Have you formed any opinion that there have been cases known as “put up” cases?—As a matter of evidence I have not. I might be accusing some one unjustly.
3446. No?—I must form an opinion.
3447. I want your opinion generally?—I have heard of cases at times in which those facts were as described to me that I believe the case was “put up,” but I do not say the facts were so. I may have been misinformed.
3448. Had it that appearance in your mind?—Provided the facts were as stated to me, it did.
3449. Is there a general feeling between the two branches of the service, or is there a strained feeling between the two?—There is a very antagonistic feeling.
3450. Do you know that there is a strong antagonistic feeling between the two branches of the service?—I think so.
3451. You have already stated that it would be better to have the whole of the service under one control?—I did not say that. You introduced your question to me by that, but I did not answer it in that way.
3452. Do you think it would be better under one general management, or how would it be better than at present?—It is rather too extensive a question for me to answer.
3453. It is not a very extensive question, it is only for you to express your opinion about?—Yes, I think there should be a different system. You ask me my opinion of the detective and general police.
3454. Will you explain what you mean by different?—A different system established. I think the ordinary detective police, as they are in Melbourne, might be divided into two classes. They are what I call nothing less than plain-clothes police, and there are some three or four very good men—I mean high-class detectives—but the majority of the detective police are just equivalent to our plain-clothes police in Russell street as regards their ability to detect crime.
At considerable expenditure?—I think that a detective should be a man of high-class ability.

Do you consider that a large number of them are not suitable for the position?—I do think that a large number of them are not suitable as detective police.

Are we to understand that you would recommend that the detective force should be reduced to a few really good efficient men?—No, not reduced, not a reduction.

I mean so far as the management is concerned at present. The other detectives you speak of as not possessing special ability should be under the control of the ordinary police, and at any time Constable So-and-so could be sent out in plain clothes?—That is my opinion. I believe the detectives should be divided into two classes—one under the direct supervision of the superintendent in charge of the district, the other under the supervision of the Chief Commissioner himself.

That is a higher order?—That is a higher order, who, I should add, I do not think should be known to everybody.

To direct operations?—Yes, to be used when information is received from other sources that would require their attention, and that they should not be used in police courts and seen amongst prisoners.

Their efficiency becomes destroyed by publicity?—Yes, in the police courts, and being known by everybody.

They should be men superior in intellect and ability?—Decidedly; pay them well and pick them for the work they may be best fitted for. Some men have an aptitude for detecting horse-stealing on a large scale—some men have a commercial mind, and are useful for embezzlement, high-class forging, and so on.

Is it the custom of the police to visit the police cells every morning?—Yes.

By that means become known as detectives?—It is for the purpose of the prisoners becoming known to them.

Have the prisoners not the opportunity then of knowing the detectives?—Yes; every man, I believe, discharged from Pentridge is discharged through the detective office. I wish this to be under stood, that I express this opinion with great reluctance, because I am pitting my individual opinion against men of much greater experience than myself.

Do you believe it is advisable to continue the present management of the police under one responsible head, or would it be more advisable to have, say, a commission of three?—Yes, I think it would give a great deal more satisfaction in the force. I say so on the ground that I think it would give more satisfaction to the men.

You say it would give greater satisfaction to the police?—I think it would.

Would it be, do you think, in the public interest to appoint a commission of three?—Yes, because what would give satisfaction to the police would be conducive to the public welfare.

Would you describe what you would recommend as the duties of those three special commissioners?—I think one should be chairman, and the other two should travel like the provincial inspectors in Ireland.

Why make an exception of one?—There must be a chairman—there must be one.

Why not recommend that the three should travel at stated periods in different localities in turn?—There is no objection to that, except that I cannot conceive a regiment with three colonels. I offer the opinion as regards the three commissioners to prevent the possibility of an accusation of favoritism being made against the head of the department. I think two commissioners would be a check on the chairman.

And to assist their deliberations?—Certainly, that is what I mean.

All of equal standing, except one appointed as chairman?—Yes.

Were you inspector of the North-Eastern district at the time of the Kelly outrages?—No, I was in charge of No. 1 here.

You were at the depot?—Yes.

Who is responsible that the constables trained from the depot are efficient for service?—The superintendent in charge of the depot.

What does the efficiency consist in?—Knowledge of the use of arms.

What arms?—When I was there the men used to be drilled with the old carbine, the muzzle loader, and the foot were armed with the ordinary Enfield rifle.

Were they supposed to understand that?—Yes.

And the mounted men pistol exercise?—Certainly. I might add that the officers had only the opportunity of arming the men with the arms afforded them to arm them with.

There was a statement about the inefficiency of the men on account of not being accustomed to arms—were they from the depot?—I never saw an instance yet where a man could not use his arms.

There was one statement where a man said he had never fired off a gun in his life?—A gun?

Yes!—The carbines were not used in the mounted service.

Is it your opinion that constant supervision—what you call “pressure”—ought to be continually maintained, night and day, over those men that are committing these outrages?—Certainly, as offenders in all places should be.

And that the men charged with the maintenance of peace in the district should be efficient, active, intelligent men?—There can be no two opinions about it.

And better have none at all if not such men as that?—I cannot say that.

Every policeman is not alike?—I know some perfectly useless, not fitted to be there or...
3488. Have they the best men there now?—I do not know; I have not been there for a very long time. 3489. If you found on taking charge of a district that there were inefficient men, you would at once call attention to it?—Yes, I have instructions to that effect.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow, at Eleven o’clock.

WEDNESDAY, 4TH MAY 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
W. Anderson, Esq., M.L.A., G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A.,

William B. Montfort further examined.

The Chairman (to Mr. Nicolson).—You had a question or two to ask Mr. Montfort, you said; you can do so now.

3490. By Mr. Nicolson.—I want to ask with reference to inspecting stations. He stated yesterday that stations were not visited by the officer in charge on inspection at night or early in the morning. Am I correct?

The Chairman.—There was one officer he excepted from that. He said it was not the usage of the service to inspect at night or at extra hours, and Mr. McCulloch was the man.

3491. By the Commission (to the witness).—Are you aware that stations are far apart, and must necessarily be examined at night in some instances?—I only speak of my own experience. Mr. Nicolson may have done so. I am only speaking of my own experience before I came to Melbourne.

3492. When an officer takes to visit two or three stations in one day, must he not necessarily start very early in the morning, and reach the first station before breakfast, or earlier than that?—I only speak of my own experience. I have known the inspecting superintendents—that is, those in the habit of inspecting my stations—if they arrived in the evening, or over night, they invariably inspected the next morning. That was my custom. I never had a station inspected at night. I only speak from my own knowledge. I do not know what Mr. Nicolson’s system or custom has been, because he was not inspecting stations. Of course I exclude the city, because the city watch-houses are inspected at night.

3493. You are speaking of the inspecting superintendents?—I have never known them to do so. They may have done so without my knowledge.

3494. The Commission.—At such hours as twelve or one at night?—I have never known it to be done.

3495. By Mr. Nicolson.—You spoke of one instance, where Power was arrested, when I used an expression to Mr. Hare or to you that I was the officer or leader of the party?—The expression was not that you were the leader or officer. The expression was, “I will go first here; I am the senior.”

3496. By the Commission.—You said that occurred ten minutes before the capture?—Yes.

3497. That was the first overt act by which he claimed to be the senior?—That I noticed. The thought never struck me to enquire who was the leader; both were acting together in concert without any apparent priority on either side.

3498. By Mr. Nicolson.—Would two officers in such a case stand on ceremony?—No.

3499. Except when it came to a crisis, and then the senior officer would exercise the right if he chose?—That is the case. I am merely telling my feeling at the time.

3500. Do you remember when we reached the small plateau on which this man’s mia-mia was erected, going up the hill, my making a sign to you or Mr. Hare to follow me to go round by the back?—No, I do not remember that.

3501. Do you not remember my waving my hand?—No.

3502. Did you not go to the back?—I did not take any one’s direction at the time.

3503. Here was the mia-mia, there was the tree—[explaining]—about seven in the morning. We were coming up this hill. I ran towards the mouth of it and I signed to you to go round?—I do not remember your signing.

3504. Did you go round?—I did; but the reason was because you were at the other side.

3505. Did you and Mr. Hare go round to the back?—We did.

3506. A long time has elapsed—are you sure that what prompted you was not a sign by my beckoning with my hand?—I am quite positive it was not your beckoning that caused me to go round. You may have beckoned, but I did not notice it. My reason for going round was you were at one spot and there was a lot of hop scrub at the other side, and my idea was he would jump out and escape there.

3507. By the Commission.—What was the mia-mia?—Made with a blanket, bushman’s fashion, and covered over with trees.

3508. Therefore if a man approached the apparent entrance the man inside could escape at the side?—Of course, if Mr. Nicolson went to the front he could jump down the declivity at the side and get into the hop scrub. Therefore I ran round the hill immediately alongside of me, and when I was getting in front Mr. Hare pushed me back, so that he got in front of me the other side.

3509. By Mr. Nicolson.—Where was I?—In front of the gunyah.

3510. Was not I inside?—No, my recollection of you was presenting your pistol at Power.

3511. How could I have been doing that?—That is my recollection of it.

3512. You stated that you protested against the first suggestion of the abolition of the station at Glenmore?—Yes.

3513. At whose instigation did you do that?—At yours.

3514. You did not say that yesterday?—I did not think there was anything in it. I certainly did not claim any credit for doing it.

3515. Is that your signature?—Yes.

3516. Is this what you mean to say, “In conclusion, I consider the withdrawal of any of the police at Glenmore, or breaking up the station, would be a great mistake, and, now that the police stables have been burned, such a step would be most disastrous to the prestige of the department in north-eastern Victoria”?—Those are my sentiments still.

3517. Are you not aware that the reward for Power was promised before his arrest to the informer?—I was told so.

3518. Therefore how could we take a portion of it?—I do not know what the reward was, but I understood from the conversation between you and Mr. Hare, in the Royal Victoria Hotel, on the occasion that you were writing the report concerning the arrest of Power, I understood from both you and Mr. Hare that you would not accept, either of you, any pecuniary reward for the arrest of Power—that the only thing you wanted was my promotion.

Mr. Nicolson.—There was a great deal made of our magnanimity in not taking that. I must strip the thing of that illusion, for we had no chance of getting it, so there was no credit due to us—it was no feather in our cap.

3519. By the Commission (to Mr. Nicolson).—If the reward had been available by you instead of by the informer alone, what would have been your feeling as an officer as to taking it?—I would not have taken it.

3520. Is not that the general feeling?—Yes.

3521. That a reward should not be taken, but let it go to the general fund, and every man to do his duty?—Yes.

3522. Would not the taking of rewards lower the standing of the lower officers of the force?—Yes.

3523. Could anything be more calculated to lower them?—No.

Mr. Sadleir.—[hanging in a paper with names on it.]-That is a list of persons looked upon by the police as belonging to the criminal class in the North-Eastern district.

3524. By the Commission (to the witness).—Will you read those names over?—[The witness did so.]

3525. Are those persons known as criminals in the district?—I know six of those by repute, but cannot speak of those I do not know.

3526. Do you consider that criminals of the type of the Kelly be allowed to select in the district?—No.

3527. By Mr. Nicolson.—I go further than that. Should persons whom we may know by experience as likely to help offenders have facilities to settle in the district—is it a good policy, and tending to the peace of the district, to allow them to settle, especially in remote mountainous parts?—It is a difficult question to answer, because it they are in the habit of helping criminals, they are criminals themselves, and my first answer covers that.

3528. Suppose they are criminals, or ready to assist, is it desirable to let them take up selections in mountainous lonely places?—I do not think so. I think, on the contrary, it should be resisted most strenuously on every occasion.

3529. John Quinn, you know him?—Yes.

3530. Has that man ever been convicted?—No. He was in my mind, for though he was never convicted, yet at the same time he is a most undesirable man to be allowed to select, more especially on the verge of civilization.

3531. By Mr. Sadleir.—Is he not, taking him all in all, a dangerous man?—He is, undoubtedly.

3532. Would it not be desirable to prevent men of that class, and women also, settling in any district so as to form a community or band of criminals?—I think if it were possible to prevent it it would strike the greatest blow at horse and cattle stealing, and crimes arising therefrom, that could be struck. It is the aggregation of those families that has been the bane of the Eastern district.

3533. By the Commission.—That list of names has been submitted to you, and you have answered generally upon it. Will you look at the names marked No. 1 and No. 3. Do you know those of your own knowledge to belong to the class of men such as would be undesirable as occupiers of land?—I know nothing of my own knowledge of the first one.
3534. What about the second one?—I know nothing about him.
3535. Do you see this name here—[pointing to another]—do you know him, or any of his family?—Yes.
3536. Would you class that man amongst them?—Decidedly. Not as being direct criminals themselves, but aiders and abettors, and sympathizers, on all occasions. His two daughters are married to criminals.
3537. Did I understand you to say, in reply to a question by Mr. Sadleir, that in the interest of the public service it would be desirable to prevent suspected persons, by reports from the police, from becoming selectors of land under the Land Act?—Yes, persons that they have a reasonable ground for believing to be so, which reasonable ground can be substantiated, because the police may have good grounds for believing a man to be a horse stealer and yet not be able to arrest him. If they could prove it, of course he could be arrested, but the police may know it only from circumstantial evidence, which may yet be quite sufficient to establish their belief.
3538. All this applies to the Kelly district in consequence of the outrages?—And it has been so for years.
3539. There is no other district in the colony it applies to?—I do not think so. I may mention that it is the law here in Melbourne, that the occupier of a house which is frequented by disorderly person and thieves can be brought up under the Vagrant Act. None of those persons I speak of are themselves suspected persons, but they always harbor and allow their places to be frequented by men who have been known to be criminals. On those grounds the law would simply be extended, or the operation of it, to certain extent. I am only giving my opinion, but I am put on my oath to give my opinion. I would just add that in north-eastern Victoria the persons referred to in Mr. Sadleir’s question had, in my time, the invariable tendency always to settle at the back, always on the outside of the settled country, having nothing behind them but the ranges—that was always their disposition.
3540. And anybody that travels will always find it so along the skirts of the Gippsland mountains?—Hence the difficulty of getting at them.
3541. Would you recommend that a list of the persons of the character you allude to should be kept in the Crown Lands office, in order to avoid the evil you speak of, as being the most effectual to prevent it taking place, by the report from the police from all the districts?—I think so, because I do not think the aggregation of those people in any locality ought to be allowed. It has always been productive of the greatest evils in that district as long as I remember.
3542. Are you aware that in the North-Eastern district exactly what the last question proposes has been done, that a very large number of names are in the hands of the Lands department who will be refused land on applying for it in that particular district?—I heard so; indeed I saw the correspondence in connection with one man, but that is all I know. It was not so in my time.
New South Wales. I could mention the names of the parties. There is still the same complaint. That is why I considered the doing away with the Harrietville station was a great mistake at the time.

3552. Do you see the name “Tanner” there?—Yes.

3553. Will you read that letter from the Secretary for Lands, dated the 16th June 1879?—[the witness did so, as follows:—] “To Mr. William Tanner, Myrrhee.—Sir—Referring to your letter of the 9th instant, enquiring the reason why your application for 44a. Or. 4p., parishes of Myrrehee and Tatong, was refused, I have the honor to inform you that the land in question was refused on the recommendation of the Police Department.”

3554. Do you consider that a desirable action to refuse a license and state it in that way?—If I answered that question in the affirmative it would be a reflection on the Lands Department, because they would have good grounds for refusing.

3555. I ask when those men are refused ground, do you think it desirable the public should become aware of the refusal because the police reported?—Certainly not. I think the greatest difficulty we have to contend with is undue publicity.

3556. As an experienced officer of many years standing, you think the power of the police to do that should not be exercised except with the very greatest caution, and with sufficient evidence before them?—I made my remarks with the understanding that every precaution possible would be used by the police before making any such recommendation. I assumed that. To begin with, I could not imagine an officer of police making such an assertion in a reckless manner, or without having very good grounds for it.

3557. Is there no such thing as a reformed criminal who would be perfectly competent to occupy land with advantage to himself and to the public?—Undoubtedly.

3558. Would it be desirable to throw any obstacles in his way merely from the fact of his having been convicted of crime?—Not merely that, but if he was in the habit afterwards of harboring criminals.

3559. If a man were convicted in a certain locality, and he had assistants in his crime when he was convicted, and if when he got out and had apparently reformed he wanted to select where his companions were, should he be allowed to go there and take land?—No, certainly not.

3560. You are going to the North-Eastern district?—Yes.

3561. There is an article in this morning’s Age, which looks as if it had been inspired by one of the officers. Will you look at that—[handing a newspaper to the witness]—and tell me whether you do not think if an article such as that has come from the Police Department, it will tend to interfere greatly with the public service?—I think it is a very unfortunate thing that this article has appeared. I thought so when I read it this morning.

3562. Does that article appear as if it was inspired by some person in the Police Department?—I do not know who inspired it.

3563. From the information therein contained, could that reasonably have come, except through the Police Department to the public?—Shall I read it out?

3564. Yes?—[The witness read the article referred to as follows:—] “The feeling in the North-Eastern district that another gang of bushrangers is likely to break out before long is increasing, and the Acting Chief Commissioner of Police, under the advice of his officers stationed in that district, has taken the necessary steps to strengthen the force in the north-east, but at the same time it is generally admitted that the force will be in a worse position than before to effect the capture of any future gang, because of the difficulty that will be experienced to secure the services of any reliable and competent secret agents. The men who have been in the employ of the police heretofore have declined to act longer, because of the fact that their acts in the past have been made known by the publication of the evidence taken before the police commission. Many of them have already left the district, dreading violence from the sympathizers of the late Kelly gang. It was at first thought that the fate of the outlaws would deter others from following their example, but about three months ago the police at Benalla received secret information that a gang was in course of formation in the neighborhood of Greta. This was at first considered to be the result of empty boasts on the part of certain lawless inhabitants of the district, but more recent information has been received which has evidently caused the authorities to think it necessary to be prepared for any emergency. The number of police in the district has been very considerably reduced, the men having been sent to do duty in Melbourne during the Exhibition, but now it has been determined to strengthen the various stations on the North-Eastern line, and to establish other stations where it is considered desirable. It was rumored in Benalla on Monday that four valuable horses had been stolen from a farm close to Benalla, but there does not appear to be any real foundation for the rumor. The black trackers at present stationed in Benalla are believed by the authorities to be better men than their predecessors.”

the Press that is likely to affect the interests of the service.

3570. Would that information be likely to do so?—I think so.

Mr. Sadleir.—I am the officer in charge of that district, and perhaps Mr. Graves suspected that I inspired that. I can assure the Commission that I never heard of it till this moment.

Mr. Graves.—I have no suspicion of any man; but I ask you now, do not you think if it was inspired by any official that it must have a very injurious effect on the district?

Mr. Sadleir.—Not a bit more because it was inspired.

Mr. Graves.—I speak of the effect.

Mr. Sadleir.—It is not advantageous, and that is the effect. If I had inspired it, I would have given more correct facts. The Age reporter has evidently been there, and it is the general talk of the district.

Mr. Graves.—That, to be of any value, could only be known by the police.

Mr. Sadleir.—No, the only circumstances in that report correctly stated are those that are common property in the district; the other details are not correct.

_The witness withdrew._

William Duross sworn and examined.

3571. _By the Commission._—What are you?—A police constable.

3572. What time did you first go into the North-Eastern district?—On the 29th October 1878.

3573. Was that before or after the murders of the constables?—Three days after the murders.

3574. Are you a foot constable?—A foot constable.

3575. Where were you stationed after that?—I was sent from Benalla to Violet Town on the 30th October 1878, to take charge of the Violet Town station.

3576. How long did you remain there?—Close on twelve months.

3577. Was the Violet Town Station the station where the murdered man Lonigan was?—Yes.

3578. You went to the station after he was murdered?—I went to the station after he was murdered.

3579. Did anything of importance transpire with reference to the Kellys while you were there?—Yes; the Euroa bank was stuck up during the time I was there by myself.

3580. How far is Violet Town from Euroa?—Twelve miles to where the bank was stuck up, and eight miles to Youngusband's station.

3581. Were you at any time amongst the parties who were scouring the bush after the Kellys?—I went on two occasions out with a message to them, when they were stationed at the Strathbogie.

3582. You did not form one of a party at any time?—No.

3583. Did you go out on horseback?—On a horse.

3584. Then you really know very little of what occurred in the district at that time with reference to the outlaws?—Not a great deal. I remember on one occasion in Violet Town Tom Lloyd and a man named Ryan—

3585. Who is Ryan?—A mate of Tom Lloyd's.

3586. Is he the Ryan whose horses were found with the Kellys at Glenrowan, do you know?—No; I do not know that. Those two came into Violet Town about six o'clock one evening; their names were told to me by Constable Gascoigne, who was then in Violet Town with me.

3587. You did not know them personally of your own knowledge?—No.

3588. Had they any particular business in Violet Town at the time?—I followed them up the township. I saw them putting their horses in the stables of the hotel. I went in after them, where they were in the sitting room, and commenced reading the paper. They were sitting opposite me, and I do not think they knew me at this time, until the coachdriver, who was driving the coach between Shepparton and Violet Town, came in—he spoke to me and called me by name. I did not answer, did not want to make myself known to the men, and they commenced laughing; so the coachdriver said, "I have seen a party of your police down on the road to Shepparton, who are camped close to the road." They were laughing over this. I sent a telegram to Mr. Sadleir in Benalla about the whole affair, and he returned one to me, told me to pay strict attention to them and watch which direction they went. I did so, and sent Gascoigne to watch them a certain distance out of the township, and he watched them and said they went in the direction of Benalla. I afterwards received a telegram from Benalla, saying they were seen there at the proper time. I was by myself at the time the Euroa bank was stuck up, and it was about twelve o'clock at night when I first received the intelligence from the railway porter—he came and knocked me up—I was in bed. I was very cautious in opening the door. He informed me that the Euroa bank had been stuck up, that Constable Anderson was proceeding from Euroa to Benalla on the engine and informed him so. I got out the back way with what arms I had and went to the bank in Violet Town, knocked the manager up, and informed him of the circumstance. I got a civilian along with me, and armed him in the bank, and stopped there the remainder of the night, up all night, as it was rumored they were coming towards Violet Town. I remained in the bank, and there were two or three men sent down to me from Benalla a day or two afterwards.

3589. Nothing further occurred?—No.

3590. Did you remain there till the capture of the Kellys?—No; I went to Mooroopna.

3591. You were sent down to Mooroopna?—Yes, and remained there till June 1880, when I was ordered to Beechworth by telegram, where I arrived on the 11th of June.
3592. Was Sherritt alive then?—He was. There was another constable sent from Shepparton, named Dowling, along with me. We were in Beechworth four or five days before we were ordered to Sebastopol, that is where Sherritt lived, to relieve two other men who were there at the time, as they were not satisfied with their position—Sherritt did not like them; they did not agree; and we were ordered in their place.

3593. Did you know that Sherritt was employed by the police, as an agent?—No; I never saw him till I went out that night.

3594. Were you in the house on the night he was shot?—Yes, and when we were leaving Beechworth for Sherritt’s, our Spencer rifles were taken from us, the only rifles we ever used in the district, the only ones I ever had practice with in the district; and we were told we should receive the rifles from the men when they were relieved—double-barrelled shot guns we had never seen before in our lives.

3595. Who was in charge of that party?—Constable Armstrong.

3596. Who ordered that change?—Senior-Constable Mullane, at Beechworth; we asked him would we take our rifles, and he said, “No, get the guns from the men you relieve, and they will get yours and will look after them.”

3597. Did you travel that distance unarmed?—Except the revolvers. It was a distance of seven miles.

We reached Sherritt’s about one or two in the morning.

3598. What was the date of that when you reached Sherritt’s?—I could not say the exact date, about five or six days after we went to Beechworth, about the 16th of June.

3599. You were there some time before Sherritt was shot?—About ten or eleven days before Sherritt was shot.

3600. What were the party doing during that time?—We used to go out to Mrs. Byrne’s house of a night.

3601. Who are “we”?—Constable Armstrong in charge, Alexander, Dowling, and myself, and Sherritt along with us.

3602. By what means did you proceed?—We used to go different directions each night, on foot.

3603. At what time at night?—Different hours, because there was sometimes a lot of people knocking about the road, going backwards and forwards to a bit of a shanty there.

3604. What arms had you with you?—This double-barrelled shot gun and revolver.

3605. You say you did not understand this shot gun?—I never fired a shot out of it; they shot a wire cartridge.

3606. What sort of shot?—Duck shot, I think.

3607. Did you expect to meet the Kellys at Mrs. Byrne’s?—We got no instructions when we went out, except to go and proceed with the other men and watch with them. I did not know exactly before I went what I was to watch for. I understood we were to watch for the Kellys.

3608. What time did you return in the morning after watching?—Sometimes we used to come back because of the dogs; and there was a flock of geese as bad as the dogs; we could not get there.

3609. You did not know whether you were to watch the dogs or the geese?—We had no positive instructions.

3610. What did you do in that time?—We used to have to stop in Sherritt’s house all day, and not be seen by any person.

3611. You were there, as far as you know, unknown to any one, except the officers of police and the Sherritt family, from the 16th to the 26th?—Yes.

3612. Did you approach some of the trees near the hut, and remain so many hours?—Yes; and Sherritt used to go sometimes close to the house. We used to remain one under each tree.

3613. How many hours?—Five or six hours.

3614. Did you form any opinion of Sherritt’s character during the ten days you were there?—I thought he was a very good man, but I thought it was strange his not being armed of a night.

3615. Did you form any opinion as to whether he was keeping good faith with the police, or really only stringing them on, as the expression is?—We were very watchful of him.

3616. What opinion did you form?—We were told by some of the constables in Beechworth to have our eye on him before we went out.

3617. After your being warned about him, what opinion did you form yourself during the ten days’ experience you had?—I thought he was honest to the police.

3618. The arms you were supplied with you were unaccustomed to?—Yes.

3619. Did you complain from the 16th at any time to Armstrong, who was in charge of the party, that those arms were of no value to you?—No.

3620. Although you knew, in the event of the necessity arising, that they would be no use, yet you complained to no one?—Armstrong knew that we had exchanged arms.

3621. Did he know that you, for instance, were dissatisfied?—No, he did not.

3622. Did you tell him?—No.

3623. During the time you were there, from the 16th to the 26th, was there any officer of police visited you?—Yes.

3624. Who?—Mr. Superintendent Hare.

3625. Did you complain to Mr. Hare that your arms were not adapted?—No.

3626. Why did you not?—I do not know whether it was forgetfulness or not.
3627. Did you not desire Armstrong to complain?—No.
3628. So you simply remained there, knowing your arms were useless in the event of your requiring them, and yet you never took any steps to complain?—Yes.
3629. Suppose the Kellys had put in an appearance at Byrne’s, you would have fired?—Yes.
3630. You knew the distance they would carry?—We thought 40 or 50 yards.
3631. Were you so experienced that you might have struck a haystack?—I think we could. On the evening of the 26th Sherritt and I, and Mrs. Sherritt and Sherritt’s mother-in-law, were sitting in the kitchen having our tea about half-past six or a quarter to seven. The other three men were in the bedroom.
3632. Was it dark at that time?—Yes.
3633. What were they doing in the bedroom?—They had to go in. When they heard the least noise they went in. We were often in there for hours if anybody came to see Sherritt, not to be seen.
3634. Had you any information that the Kellys were likely to appear?—Not the slightest.

180

William Duross,
continued.
4th May 1881.

3635. Not from Sherritt?—Not the slightest. They had finished their tea, and we were talking. Sherritt and I were having some conversation.
3636. Were you dressed in police uniform?—No, private clothes.
3637. Describe the dress?—A blue jacket; on, like a butcher’s smock.
3638. Something like bush dress?—Yes. And a knock came to the door, and I said, “You had better go to the door.” He motioned for me to go into the bedroom. There was a calico screen hanging down for a door. I went in.
3639. Was the whole partition calico or only the door?—Only the door.
3640. There are only two rooms in the house?—Only two.
3641. What material was the hut?—A log hut and a shingle roof.
3642. Does that mean slabs or logs?—Slabs.
3643. Slabs on end?—No, lengthways; slabs running lengthways.
3644. Split or sawn?—Sawn.
3645. Will you draw a sketch of it?—[The witness did so, and explained it.]
3646. What thickness were the boards?—About three-quarters of an inch.
3647. Hardwood weatherboards?—Yes.
3648. There was a front door and back door?—Yes.
3649. Will you describe what occurred when the knock came to the door?—When I went into the bedroom Sherritt opened the door, and there was some person asked the road, said they lost their way, and Sherritt was stepping outside and saying, “Do you see that sapling over there, at the back of the door”; and Mrs. Sherritt (the wife) said, “Go out and show him the way.” Sherritt was stepping outside to do so when the first shot was fired; he staggered back, and the second was fired, and he fell then in the kitchen.
3650. Could you see him from where you were?—No.
3651. He fell back into the room?—Yes.
3652. You heard the shot?—Two shots.
3653. Were they both fired by the same person, do you think?—I think so.
3654. You heard, and saw enough to know, a man was being shot near by where you were standing?—Yes.
3655. What was your impression—that it was the Kellys?—Yes, as soon as the shot was fired, not before.
3656. Did you feel disposed to fire at them?—I could not see anything to fire at.
3658. What did you understand by that?—Put him away to the authorities—the police authorities. He said, “Who is that man along in the room, the man that went in the room?” She said, “That is a man by the name of Duross.” He said, “What is he?” and she said, “He is looking for work about here.” He said, “Go and tell him to come out.” She came in and said, “Come out”; and I said, “I will not”; so at this time Constable Armstrong was standing on one side of the partition, and Alexander on the other—both could see any one at the door if they were inside in the kitchen—and Constable Dowling was watching the kitchen, I was watching the window, watching to see if we could have a chance of anything. She came and said, “Come out, he wants you.” I said, “I will not.” She went out, and he said, “Go and bring him out or I will shoot you too.” Constable Armstrong, when he saw the figure coming so often, said he (Armstrong) was near shooting her on account of her running back and forwards.
3659. Was Sherritt dead?—He was shot at this time, he never spoke after he was shot. When she came in the second time we got hold of her and would not let her go out—we kept her in there.
3660. Who is “we”?—I think I was one, and Constable Dowling I believe was the other, and did not let her go out; the others also spoke and said—“Do not let her go,” the other two men, Alexander and Armstrong. There was a shot then fired into the bedroom, just near where Constable Dowling was. He said,
“Look out.” I heard somebody saying then to Mrs. Barry (the mother-in-law), “Go and see did that shot go in through the boards.”

3661. Who said this?—Joe Byrne; the same voice was speaking all the time, so she said, “If I go down they might shoot me,” meaning us. She put it plural; she said, “They might shoot me.” She said, “They might shoot me if I go down.” He said, “If you do not go I will shoot you”; so he called on me to come out again.

3662. By name?—No, he said, “Come out here, out of that house.”

3663. You understood he thought there was only one man in?—No, because at that time when he said to go down and see, she said “they.” She put it in the plural that time. I do not think he thought there was more than one, previous to that.

3664. Did you afterwards?—Just through her making use of that expression “they”; if he had his ears open he might have known too. He then said, “I will soon make them come out,” and he commenced whistling. We heard the whistle. Mrs. Barry said, “You come out, Mary.” I think she said—I forget the name. “Come out, they are going to burn the house down,” so we would not let her go out, and Mrs. Barry came in, and we would not let her return.

3665. Who was “we”?—The constables in the bedroom at the time.

3666. Were you one who would not let her go out again?—Yes. We heard voices outside; and Byrne sang out, “Look out for the window in the bedroom,” to Dan Kelly—Dan Kelly we thought it was. There was a shot fired from the front end of the bedroom, and Byrne said, “Who fired that shot”; and Kelly said, “It was me”; and he said, “All right, look out for the window in front”; and Byrne said, “That is all right, I have my eye on it.” Constable Armstrong picked up one of the slugs in the bedroom that went near Constable Dowling.

3667. A slug?—It might have been a bullet.

3668. Was there nearly enough lead in it to make a bullet?—It was a very large one.

3669. What happened next?—There were several shots fired in, about seven altogether, I think.

3670. Was that counting those you spoke of before?—Yes, seven altogether; about five after the women were in there.

181

3671. How did you manage to protect yourselves from those shots?—At the first, Armstrong was kneeling at one side of the partition—one side of the bedroom—guarding the entrance into the kitchen; and Alexander and the other constable, Dowling, were looking to the partition. There was a sack of flour there, and Constable Dowling looked over off this to see; and it was the shot that was fired in then of which he said, “That was close then.”

3672. Were any of you under the bed?—Not a soul, except the women.

3673. Not at this time!—Or any other time.

3674. You were prepared to fire if you could have seen any object to fire at?—Yes. At the time there was a wooden log fire burning in the kitchen. We used to put three or four logs on. It was very cold and frosty, and we used to have to wade through the creek every night going to Mrs. Byrne’s house.

3675. How long from the time that Aaron was shot till the women came into the bedroom?—I think about between half an hour and an hour. They were talking to them outside.

3676. Talking to whom?—To Byrne, outside at the back of the house.

3677. You just now said Dan Kelly was there?—He fired from the front of the house. They were talking to Byrne and Weekes. That was the man that Byrne got to come to the back. Dan Kelly was at the front.

3678. Was Weekes the man who was supposed to lose his way?—Yes, a German.

3679. What happened after you refused to let the women go out?—There were other shots fired into the room, and we heard conversation at the back of the house until about four o’clock or five o’clock in the morning. But about half an hour after the women came in we could not distinguish any voices who they were, but we could tell there was somebody there, and the dog was howling all night at the house.

3681. What time?—Daylight; and the first one then we saw was a Chinaman, and we called the Chinaman and asked him would he take a message into the police in Beechworth, and we would pay him for doing so. He was horrified at the sight of Sherritt lying on the floor, and said he would not. We asked him then if he would go and take a message to the schoolmaster, who lived about a couple of miles away from there. He went, and the schoolmaster came back. We asked him if he would take a message into Beechworth. He said certainly he would, and he went and he returned in about an hour’s time, or an hour and a half, and said his wife would not allow him to go in, afraid he would be shot on the road taking the message. Then there was another man; he volunteered to go through the bush and take it in.

3682. A constable?—No, a civilian.

3683. Who was he?—He was introduced by the schoolmaster as a man who would do it. He was gone about half an hour, and then the four of us came to the conclusion that one of us had better go in, and Armstrong decided to go in.
Did that not strike you before?—We had nothing to do with that. Armstrong was in charge of the whole movements. We were supposed to obey him.

Did you never see any of the parties that were outside?—No.

Was it so dark that with careful watching you could not have distinguished an object moving about?—There was a careful watch kept, and we could not distinguish any. The fire was burning very brightly, and the two doors were facing each other, and they opened towards the partition.

Were both doors open?—Yes. One of the outlaws, Byrne, made Mrs. Sherritt open the two doors wide. It was about one o’clock, I should think, when Armstrong got into Beechworth with the message. He did not return; nobody came to us until about five or six that evening.

How far had he to go?—About seven miles.

Was he in uniform?—No, plain clothes.

Did you form any opinion at all on the conduct of the force that night?—Well, we knew the public would be criticising our conduct afterwards, but at the same time it would be foolishness for us to come out of the bedroom in the kitchen because, the way it was lighted up, we would have been shot before we got out.

Could you not get out by the window?—No, Dan Kelly was at the front watching the window; Byrne told him to.

Did Byrne call him by name?—He said, “Who fired that shot?” and the answer was, “I did.” He said, “That is all right.”

Where was Byrne when he said, “Who fired that shot”?—At the back of the house.

Apparently then you think they were watching the two doors?—Yes.

Looking through into the house by them?—Yes.

Was there no outlet from the bedroom but the door?—Only the window—a small window in the bedroom.

Was the chimney slab or brick?—Slab.

High?—I should think about twelve or fourteen feet to the top of it.

Was it a glass window in the bedroom?—A glass window.

Did you knock the panes out, or anything?—No.

Did you not attempt to open it?—No.

Was there any axe or tomahawk in the house?—There was an axe outside.

What was the roof covered with?—Shingle, hardwood.

It was not a bark roof?—No, no bark in the place.

What were the other three members of the force doing from daylight in the morning till six in the evening?—They were inside in the hut.

Did Armstrong instruct you what to do on the evening of the 26th, after you went in the bedroom and that shot was fired that killed Sherritt. Did Armstrong take the command and instruct?—He was the recognised leader all along.

I understand that; but did he tell you how to act?—We advised one another at the time what to do.

I think he first at one time said, “Will we get out?” meaning the whole four of us.

I should say about eleven o’clock.

How long before that time had you ceased to hear voices outside?—We heard the voices outside until about four or five o’clock.

Armstrong, about eleven, leave the bedroom and go to the kitchen?—He went out, and I think Alexander went out and dragged Sherritt further over into the kitchen and covered him up.

Did he put the fire out?—No; the fire was not and the candle was out.

Did he close the doors?—Yes.

Did you not go outside then?—No.

Did the women remain in the bedroom all night with you?—Yes.

State that only the women were under the bed?—That is all.

Did I understand you to say that you kept first Sherritt’s wife in, and next the mother-in-law, and would not allow her to return?—That is correct.

Did they voluntarily after that keep under the bed?—They were forced under the bed because there was very little room in the bedroom, and there was not much room for them to be knocking round in the room.
3724. When you used the word “forced,” did you mean that you compelled them, or that they were obliged from the circumscribed space—did you tell them to go under?—We told them.

3725. During that evening, from the first shot to the last, what space intervened between those two?—Between an hour and a half and two hours.

3726. All those seven shots were fired into the bedroom?—No; two were fired at Sherritt, and five into the bedroom.

3727. What portion of the building did they strike?—The bedroom.—[The witness showed on his plan.]

3728. How many penetrated the building?—There were two—[showing the spots].

3729. What direction was that fired from to get there?—[The witness indicated on the plan.]

3730. Were you satisfied that there were not more than two outside between the hours of seven and nine?—We believed there was.

3731. Did you ask Mrs. Barry how many people there were outside when she came back?—Yes; she said she saw two and Weekes, but they were whistling for others.

3732. Do you think now if you were placed in a similar position, that had the police made a charge after the first shot, that you might have captured those men?—No.

3733. Why?—Because there is the scrub outside, and before we would leave the kitchen at all they could have shot us. It is my opinion we would not have left it alive; and if we did, it was dark outside and we could not see anything, and they had timber to protect them.

3734. Had you arms on your person at the time?—Yes, a revolver.

3735. Did it not strike you that when Mrs. Sherritt said you were Duross, a man looking for work, you might have gone out under that assumed idea?—No; I believe he thought it was police all the time.

3736. Might you not have gone safely in your disguise?—No, I think not.

3737. What was the motive that induced you to believe you ought not to have gone out; was it self-preservation?—As much as anything else.

3738. Was it that more than anything else?—Of course it would be foolishness to have gone out by myself alongside of Byrne.

3739. This was not immediately after the shooting; it was a little time after you went into the bedroom the conversation had taken place, and you might have consulted the others as to a concerted attack?—If I went out with a revolver he would know who I was, and if I made a movement to take it out of my guernsey he would see it.

3740. Might you not conceal it under your shirt and trousers’ belt, and assume the idea that you were looking for work? Did you consult with the others?—Yes.

3741. Was that course mentioned?—No.

3742. Could they have heard your voices?—Byrne said, “Look out, they are loading,” as soon as we went into the room; we were getting our rifles. It was darkish in the bedroom. They heard the noise, Byrne did; he said, “Look out, they are loading.”

3743. Then he must have known there was more than one person looking for work?—Yes, that is my opinion.

3744. Were you talking in a whisper?—We were not talking at all; we were getting our rifles.

3745. You said you were consulting?—When we were it was in a very low whisper.

3746. You said you were under the impression that they believed there was only one in the house till Mrs. Barry went and spoke about shooting her; now when you were described as a man looking for work, it must have been previous to that?—No, when I went into the room I heard the conversation—that was after Sherritt was shot.

3747. Byrne asked Mrs. Barry who was it went into the bedroom?—Yes.

3748. She said it was Duross, looking for work?—Yes.

3749. That was some time before she said if she went back she would be shot?—Yes.

3750. So that they were under the impression you were the only man?—No, I think not. I believe, if they had thought there was only one man, they would have come inside.

3751. It is not the fact that the police got under the bed?—No, it is not.

3752. Did you move about from place to place between that time, from seven to eleven?—Yes, Constable Armstrong was in this corner, and he made a considerable noise in that corner, and Constable Alexander was here, and Constable Dowling was here too, close alongside of him. I was down at this end at this time—[pointing out the places on the plan].

3753. Was there at one time one of you went under the bed?—No, we were in different positions on the floor, but not under the bed.

3754. Where was the bed?—Just underneath the window.

183

3755. Did it fill the whole side of the room?—It came within about three feet of it.

3756. Is the room lined?—No.

3757. Only the slabs outside?—Yes.

Mr. O’Connor.—Before you go on I wish to ask—I have been offered an appointment in the North Eastern district, and the Government are anxious I should go to work as soon as possible, and I wish to ask if you can dispense with my presence for the future till I come down to cross-examine a few witnesses. I wish too that the secretary could notify me of that.

The Chairman.—I do not think there is any objection to your leaving. If there comes any necessity there will be ample opportunity in the North-Eastern district of calling you; the secretary will give you due notice if you are wanted.

3758. By the Commission (to the witness).—You brought us up to the point at which Mr. Armstrong went to Beechworth. We have it from you that Sherritt was shot about seven o’clock in the evening?—Yes.

3759. And you could not see anybody outside, which was the reason for not making a rush out during the night, as there was a possibility of your being shot as you came before the open door?—Yes.

3760. How was it you did not go out when daylight came?—Constable Alexander did go round the house when daylight came.

3761. You seem to have done nothing for twelve hours after daylight—from five o’clock in the morning till five o’clock at night?—Yes; Constable Armstrong had a verbal message himself by one o’clock. He had arrived at Beechworth himself at one o’clock.

3762. What were you doing during the day?—We were not doing anything; we were just inside the house.

3763. What object had you in keeping Mrs. Sherritt and Mrs. Barry in the house after they came in?—Because they were running about and interfering with us. The room was very small, and the running backwards and forwards made less room for us, and Mrs. Sherritt was in danger of getting shot herself.

3764. She was willing to go out, but you detained her?—Yes.

3765. What was your object?—To prevent her running backwards and forwards; she had been in twice.

3766. And the same with Mrs. Barry?—She came in to take her daughter out, and we would not allow her.

3767. About what time was the last time Mrs. Barry came in?—I should say about nine o’clock.

3768. Then your object was to prevent the two women being shot?—Yes, and to give us more room, because of the running in at the door; we did not know but what the others would be on top of us any moment.

3769. Your object was not that, having the women in, the Kellys would not be so likely to shoot you?—That never entered my head.

3770. Mrs. Barry had been out several times before this, talking to Byrne?—Yes, she had been out all the night, and came in for her daughter, Mrs. Sherritt.

3771. How often was she in the bedroom?—Mrs. Barry was in once and Mrs. Sherritt twice. There are two things I omitted to tell: On the Saturday night previous to the murder Mr. Superintendent Hare and Detective Ward came out to Sebastopol, where we were. They arrived there between eight and nine at night. Detective Ward burst in the back door and shoved it in. I may mention there was no lock on either of the doors, we had to fasten the door with a bit of a prop-stick to keep it fastened. On Saturday night it was our custom not to go out till late; as I stated before, there was a shanty a couple of miles down the road, and many people passing backwards and forwards, and Sherritt said it was not wise to go, and the wood we used we had to chop after dark for fear of being seen in day-time. At this time, when Mr. Hare came, constables Dowling and Armstrong were out chopping wood at the back of the house. The reason I make this statement is because I see by Mr. Hare’s evidence that he accused two of us of telling an untruth. When Ward shoved in the door he asked where were the other men; I said, “Chopping wood at the back.” “No,” he said, “they are away watching Byrne’s house—say that,” he said on the moment. Mr. Hare stepped in and said, “Where are the two men?” and just to shield them, as Ward told us (Alexander and I had no reason to be frightened), we told Mr. Hare they were watching the house. He asked one of us to show him the house. Constable Alexander, who had been longer there than I had, said he would show the way. We went across to the house, and I see by Mr. Hare’s evidence that Ward told him he could not trust us, and that we told an untruth. We had no reason whatever to be frightened of telling the truth, because he had no reason to be out so early on Saturday night, because our custom was not to go out till ten o’clock on that night. Mr. Hare also states that Sherritt said he had no faith in any of us, only Armstrong. I can contradict that by saying that I myself, along with Alexander and Dowling, can state that Sherritt said on different occasions he was well satisfied with the four men he had, and if we were changed he would do nothing more for the —— Government—he was getting sick of the way the men were galloping round the country and the outlaws laughing at him.

3772. Why did you feel it necessary at all not to tell the exact facts of the case when Superintendent Hare came?—Detective Ward, as soon as he burst in the door, said, “Where are the men?” I said, “Chopping wood at the back;” and he said, “Say they are away watching Byrne’s house, here is Mr. Hare.” He put the words in our mouths, and we went and told it.

3773. You were inspired to make this false statement by Detective Ward?—Detective Ward told us to state so—Alexander and I.

3774. You say there was only a calico screen between the room you were in and the room Kelly was in?—No, a wooden partition; but the door was calico, just hung down.

3775. Had you no means to have a peep through that door?—Yes; Constables Alexander and Armstrong were on either side of the door, and they could have seen the two doors, back and front, from the position they took up.
3776. Mrs. Sherritt states that Kelly came into the front room?—She has not given her evidence.

3777. I want to know whether you had an opportunity of seeing any of this—did you look through—move the curtain?—No. Those two constables were alongside of it, and could not have helped seeing the kitchen some part of the time, because the wind was blowing back the curtain. The Kellys could not have been in the room without their seeing it; the partition did not run up to the top.

William Duross, continued.

4th May 1881.

3778. Could he see what took place in the kitchen?—Yes. Dowling stood on the top of a bag of flour, and could see. If he looked over the top of the partition, anybody could have shot him. They had the command of that from outside, if anybody got on top of the partition.

3779. You could have reached over and shut the doors?—Yes; but they could have easily been opened again.

3780. What light had you in your room at this time?—None.

3781. What light in the kitchen?—A bush fire, with big logs, as we were in the habit of putting a large fire to warm us in the morning, and a candle. Byrne asked what sort of light we had, and Mrs. Barry had the candle. He asked was there no kerosene—he wanted to burn the house down, and she said there was none in the house. There was a constable (Jim Dixon) that Byrne had a “down” on, and he asked if that b—— Jim Dixon was in the hut.

3782. Was it suggested in your party the advisability of one being on the outside of Sherritt’s hut on the watch?—No, that was a mistake. If there was one outside we could have had them; but we were supposed not to be seen in the day-time; and if we were there, we would have been seen by the people there; and at night we were supposed to be at Byrne’s house.

3783. Not on the look-out at Sherritt’s?—No.

3784. Your duty up there was watching Byrne’s house?—Yes.

3785. You were concealed during the day in Sherritt’s house?—Yes.

3786. At what time did you leave Sherritt’s house for Byrne’s?—About eight o’clock.

3787. And, on Saturday night, later?—Yes.

3788. And return about four in the morning?—Yes, and sometimes a good deal before that, as we could not keep near the house for the dogs barking.

3789. About what distance from the house did you get to watch?—We used to go round about three miles.

3790. No; I mean, what distance from Byrne’s house?—About a hundred yards; sometimes more and sometimes less.

3791. Were there any children?—No, I never saw them, only going to school in the day-time—a little boy and girl going to school. Only once I saw Paddy, a boy of nineteen, next to Joe. We saw him watching Sherritt’s house one day—watching the hut for an hour.

3792. How long was that before Sherritt was shot?—On the Sunday before exactly.

3793. Had you any suspicion he would give any information of that to Mrs. Byrne?—That was her son Paddy.

3794. So that his mother could communicate to the Kellys?—Yes. He had a well-bred horse, stable-fed, locked up of a night, that we suspected he used to be scouting about on of a night—that is, Paddy Byrne. A couple of days after this Sunday he was watching, Mrs. Sherritt got him at the back of the house in the scrub. There is a thick scrub at the foot of the range, what they call the Sugarloaf.

3795. Did you find out afterwards that the public knew you were in that house all the time?—No, 3796. You never had any information that Byrne knew you were there?—No.

3797. Had you any suspicion that anybody in Byrne’s family or anybody knew?—We thought it strange Paddy Byrne watching the house this Sunday, and a couple of days after in the back.

3798. Then in fact you considered that you were being watched by the Kelly friends?—I consider we were only in a trap all the time; and I would request that you would ask any constable that has been doing duty previous to me about that.

3799. What did you think of Sherritt not giving you information all the time that you were in a trap?—I do not think he knew it, because if he knew it he would not have got shot himself.

3800. Are you not aware that Sherritt upon many occasions gave information about the movements of the Kellys?—He said he mentioned one case that he met them after they came from Jerilderie—met Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly.

3801. Are you aware whether he said on any occasion that he could tell where the police were?—Yes.

3802. In consequence of his intimacy with the Kellys?—Yes; he told us that the Kellys could see the police, the way they were galloping round the country in search parties.

3803. Did not he pretend to be in constant communication with the Kellys and their sympathisers as an agent—did he ever tell you that?—Yes; that he was doing the police good service all the time by speaking to them. He said he had communication with Kate Kelly—that he was over at Greta, where she was, and spoke to her on different occasions.

3804. Was Sherritt with you all the time you were there, or did he go away?—No; on the day he was shot he went to Chiltern, twelve miles away.

3805. How long was he gone?—Gone about three hours. He rode away.
3806. Did he tell you what he was going for?—He said he was going to look for some cattle of his mother-in-law’s in pound.
3807. Did he tell you anything?—No, only he saw the police going about.
3808. Do you know Jack Sherritt?—Not Jack, but his brother Bill. I saw Jack in Beechworth and in Glenrowan.
3809. You do not know why the outlaws did not set fire to the hut?—They tried to. It was a damp night; because we found some bark broken up at one side of the hut and some leaves up against it, and the leaves were damp.
3810. Did you hear them threaten to set fire to the hut?—Yes.
3811. Did you expect they were going to carry it into execution?—Yes.
3812. What action were you going to take if that were the case?—To remain as long as we could, and then make a rush when we could not do anything else.
3813. Would it not be better to make a rush while they were making preparations?—I do not suppose they would all be doing it.
3814. How many were there?—That has never been solved, for they were whistling.
3815. Could you not fire through?—The shot would not penetrate.
3816. Why not through the window?—We might fire through the window.

185

Cross-examined by Mr. Hare.

3817. You say you had a shot-gun. Would not a shot-gun be more effective at night than a Martini-
Henry rifle?—Yes, at night amongst the bushes.
3818. Do you think a man could fire with a rifle, unless he was a very good shot, at night?—No.
3819. Do not you think a shot-gun is more effective for night work than a rifle would be?—Yes, when you are outside, when you have fair play the same as they would.
3820. And far more effective than a rifle?—Yes.
3821. And you distinctly said Ward suggested to you to tell that untruth to me?—Yes. I can prove it, because he sent Mrs. Sherritt to the other men, who were chopping wood, to tell them to clear before Mr.
Hare got down to Byrne’s house to do us a good turn.
3822. Did the other man hear that?—Alexander did.
3823. Did you go with me and Alexander?—Yes.
3824. You remember we took a long time, got into a difficulty on the way?—Yes; Alexander was leading and I was behind you.
3825. And we found Armstrong and Aaron Sherritt there?—Yes, and Constable Dowling.
3826. You said something about not being able to use a double-barrelled gun; if you could fire a rifle, could you not fire a double-barrelled gun?—I did not say I could not; I said I never did.
3827. Did you object to take it at the time?—No.
3828. You made the statement that you were given a double-barrelled gun, and your rifle was taken from you; I suppose, if you could use the rifle, you would be a better shot with the shot-gun?—Yes; but I think it would have been better if two had rifles and two shot-guns.
3829. By the Commission.—Did you delay for a time in order let Armstrong and Dowling get to the house?—No, we never had such a thought.
3830. Did you hear any of the police make any suggestion about going out and fighting the men?—
No; only Armstrong said once, “Shall we go?” and we said we were willing to go if he thought it advisable.
3831. What time was that?—About nine o’clock at night. I think it was Armstrong who said it—one of them said would we rush out, and we said we were agreeable.
3832. Why did not you go?—He thought afterwards it would not be advisable; that we could not get to either door before we were shot.
3833. At any other time, during the time the Kellys were there, was there any talk about going out in pursuit of them?—No; we had no horses at all, we were on foot.
3834. You say that Mrs. Sherritt and Mrs. Barry were under the bed all night—were they not allowed out at all. Surely it was a miserable thing to stick them there?—Yes; they had their heads out from under the bed.
3835. Were they upon the hard boards?—Yes.
3836. Was there a floor at all except the earth?—There was a wooden floor. I think the women came out before daylight, one of them, and got on top of the bed.
3837. Did they complain much of being kept in this position?—No, not after the shots, they did not complain at all.
3838. Did either of them faint?—No.
3839. When you came home from the watching, what did you usually do?—Lie on the floor.
3840. Did you not turn the women out and lie on the bed?—No, the women were not there. Sherritt came home, and lay with his wife, and we lay on the boards with our feet to the fire.

William Duross,
continued.
4th May 1881.
3841. Where was Mrs. Barry?—At her own place, a mile and a half off.
3842. Could any one have got in?—When we were sleeping there, any one could have pushed the door in, and come on us; there was no lock on the door; we put a bit of a log to keep them closed.
3843. No one sitting up to watch the remainder of the morning?—No.
3844. All asleep?—Yes.
3845. I heard you mention that the man who shot Aaron Sherritt asked the women to come outside?—Yes.
3846. What did they say about burning the house?—Joe Byrne said, “We will soon make them come out, we will burn the house;” and Mrs. Barry said, “Joe, don’t burn the house;” and he said, “You go in, I will consider over it.”
3847. Was it to prevent them burning the house you kept the women inside?—No.
3848. Did you not consider it would be the more honorable course to rush out than be burnt out?—We would have had to if it had come to that, but, otherwise, I am certain we could not have got further than the door without being shot.
3849. It would be the same if the house was being burnt?—It would be the same then.
3850. I was under the impression that you stated you had come to the conclusion from something that occurred that the outlaws were going to burn the house, and called on you to come out?—Yes.
3851. You would not go?—No.
3852. Then you said the women went out, and there was a talk amongst them about burning the house—Yes.
3853. You then stated you prevented the women going out again?—Yes.
3854. Did it come into your mind that they were going to burn you out?—When they whistled they said they were going to burn us out.
3855. Did you come to that conclusion?—I cannot say.
3856. You stated that the outlaws heard, or you believe they heard, you loading your guns?—I know they spoke about it. Byrne said, “Look out, they are loading their rifles.”
3857. Were your rifles loaded?—Yes.
3858. Were your guns loaded when Aaron Sherritt was shot?—Yes.
3859. How long had they been loaded?—Mine was loaded from the time I went there, except to clean it.
3860. Were you in the habit of unloading when you came from duty?—Just took the charge out and put it in again at once, after cleaning.

Police.

William Duross, continued.

4th May 1881.

3861. In what place was Sherritt shot?—On the left breast.
3862. And the second shot brought him down in the house?—Yes.
3863. Where was the first?—Close to the same place.
3864. How near was Joe Byrne to him when he shot him?—Joe Byrne was close behind Weekes; he stood one side of the door.
3865. How near to Aaron Sherritt?—About two yards from him, because Mrs. Barry told us that Byrne had his rifle in his hands swinging like this—[explaining his meaning by gesture] 3866. Were there marks of powder on Aaron Sherritt’s clothes?—I did not see any.
3867. How long would it have taken you to have got your arms and immediately rushed out?—Our arms were inside the room. It took me a considerable time to get my gun, for we were feeling for it in the dark.
3868. You had no light in the inside room?—No.
3869. Where did you keep them inside the room?—Up against the wall.
3870. How long was the room?—A very small room—not much more than room for five or six to stand in, with the bed.
3871. Were your arms stacked together?—Along together, and the cartridge pouches hanging alongside of them.
3872. When Aaron Sherritt was shot and fell on the floor, did his mother-in-law or wife go to see if he was shot to death—to see whether it was fatal or not?—I cannot say.
3873. Did any of the constables?—Not till afterwards.
3874. How long?—When they brought him inside from the door.
3875. How long?—About eleven or twelve o’clock that night.
3876. In the morning you said that the people in the neighborhood came round?—Yes.
3877. What hour?—The Chinaman was the first.
3878. And when did the people come?—About two o’clock; that is, the people from Beechworth, in traps, and there were people before that.
3879. Did any constable there or officer propose you should rush out?—On one occasion one of the men proposed it; I think it was Armstrong.
3880. He was in charge?—Yes.
3881. Is it a fact that one of the constables in the place, when they heard that the Kelly party were going to burn the house down, said, “Let us keep the women in, and while they are here they will not burn the house down”?—That was never said.

3882. Were those three constables at Glenrowan?—Yes, the following day.

3883. Are you named for the reward?—Yes, £42.

3884. Where were you that morning?—We were in Beechworth, and went down by special train.

3885. Were you stationed in Beechworth?—We were withdrawn from the place that night; about six o’clock the night after Sherritt’s murder.

3886. When did you go down?—On the Monday morning.

3887. Did you come into barracks in Beechworth?—Yes.

3888. Whom did you go out in charge of?—Senior-Constable Mullane.

3889. How many men?—Nine or ten; and Jack Sherritt came along with us.

3890. Why?—He said he wanted to be revenged of his brother on Byrne.

3891. Had he been round to collect men that morning?—Yes. I think he slept at the barracks that night, and there were three other men that relieved us down at Sherritt’s place, and he galloped down the first thing to them to go by special train, and they came back with him, and we all went down in the special train.

3892. That was to Glenrowan?—Yes.

3893. After you left the hut what did you do?—We walked into Beechworth.

3894. What steps were taken to follow the murderers?—The police came out on horseback, five or six of them I think, and they relieved us, and we were told by Mullane to proceed to Beechworth.

3895. Did any black trackers come to follow the tracks?—No; not one.

3896. None of those four that were in the hut were sent in pursuit of the outlaws?—No.

3897. It was Sunday night you went in?—Yes.

3898. You saw the black trackers when you went to Glenrowan?—Yes.

3899. At what time did you arrive at Glenrowan?—At nine o’clock in the morning.

3900. Did you take up your stations directly?—Yes, immediately.

3901. Who put you into your position?—I saw Mr. Sadleir there and Mr. O’Connor, and I got close alongside of them, off where Mr. Sadleir was standing, just alongside the house. I did not know Mr. O’Connor at the time; and there was some other constable there, and I said, “Which is Mr. O’Connor?” and he nudged me to say that is he.

3902. Whom did your sergeant report himself to when you arrived?—I think Mr. Sadleir; I would not be certain.

3903. Did you get instructions from anyone?—No.

3904. What did you do?—First I went to where Ned Kelly was.

3905. Where was he—he was taken?—Just in the room adjoining the station. I got some warm bricks and put them to his feet, as he was complaining of cold.

3906. Where was Mr. Sadleir?—I think he told me to attend on Kelly.

3907. Where was he?—I think he was on the platform when we arrived; I would not be certain.

3908. Was Ned Kelly taken at the time of your arrival on the platform?—Yes.

3909. You knew he was taken at that time?—Yes.

3910. After that you went down to the scene where they were shooting at the house?—Yes.

3911. What did you do when you got there?—I heard that news from a couple of men, and took up my position alongside of Mr. Sadleir, and he had evidently heard about the men while they were in the room. I had my Spencer rifle at this time, and was firing a couple of shots at the house, and he saw a couple of splinters flying out, and he gave me orders to fire into the brickwork low down.

3912. He saw you fire the shot?—Yes, and he told me to fire into the chimney, low down; that he believed the men were there.

187

8913. As to Sherritt’s hut, did Mrs. Sherritt or Mrs. Barry tell you anything about the men, the Kellys, having armour on; did you hear about that at that time?—No.

8914. You had no idea of that?—I never heard of it.

8915. Did you see any tracks of horses in the morning at Sherritt’s hut?—No; we heard the foot of horses in the scrub.

8916. Did you go and look?—No, we did not hear of it till after we left.

8917. At Glenrowan were the prisoners still in the house, in Jones’s hotel, when you got there?—Yes, they were there, because I saw them when they came out.

8918. How long after you came was it that they came out?—I should think about 11 or 12 o’clock, to the best of my recollection.

8919. When did you take up your position with your Spencer?—It was a little after 9 when I did.

8920. How many rounds of ammunition did you fire?—I fired more after the people came out than before.

8921. The rifle you fired is a magazine rifle?—It will hold seven or eight cartridges.

8922. How many of those did you fire?—Altogether I should say twenty-four or twenty-five.
3923. Then you loaded it more than once?—Yes.
3924. The orders were to fire at the house?—Yes, there were no orders only what I am telling; when I was firing at the house Mr. Sadleir said, "Aim for the brickwork."
3925. Where were you standing?—Opposite the chimney, at the side of the house.
3926. How far from the house?—I should say about a hundred yards—the men were all round the house.
3927. In which direction from the railway station?—As you go up the line this way towards Beechworth. Here is Jones’s house—[explaining his meaning by a diagram]—and I was stationed at the north of the house, by the chimney.
3928. Were any shots coming from the house when you were firing?—There were several shots passing by.
3929. Was that from the house?—Either from the house or the opposite side of the house.
3930. Were the constables opposite?—Yes.
3931. Would their bullets penetrate the two walls and come to you?—I should think so unless they came in contact with the brickwork.
3932. Were you aware when you were firing that there were people inside beside the outlaws—of course you were obliged to obey instructions—from any information you heard?—I think I heard there were some.
3933. What do you think you heard?—That there was somebody inside besides the outlaws.
3934. How many?—It was not stated. I did not take much notice.
3935. Where were the black trackers?—They were running round in all directions about this time.
3936. What time?—About eleven o’clock, I should say—no, it was after eleven, because I saw Mr. O’Connor give them some lunch.
3937. When you arrived there first you saw Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor—where was Mr. Sadleir?—The north side of the house was the first time I saw him on the ground.
3938. Where were you when you asked about indicating Mr. O’Connor?—Just alongside of him.
3939. Do you know anything of the drain?—There was a drain in front of the house.
3940. How far where you from it?—To the north-west of it.
3941. How far from it?—I should say about 120 yards.
3942. That would be about what time when you fired the shot that splintered the wood?—I could not say.
3943. It was about the first shot you fired?—Yes; I can only remember the time I arrived accurately.
3944. You were warming bricks for a time?—Yes.
3945. How long?—Half-an-hour or three-quarters.
3946. What did you do after that?—I went around the place.
3947. You did something else for Ned Kelly you said?—I turned him in the bed and settled the bed underneath him.
3948. Mr. Sadleir had instructed you to do that?—Yes; Mr. Sadleir and Sergeant Steele.
3949. Where were the men that instructed you to do that?—Sergeant Steele was in the room, and I think Mr. Sadleir was on the platform.
3950. After performing that duty, who gave you further instructions?—I acted on my own instructions.
3951. You went to that point one hundred yards away?—Yes, I saw the other men go and followed them.
3952. Were the other men instructed to take positions in your hearing?—I could not say.
3953. You took your own position and took the general fire with the rest?—Yes, I saw the others fire.
3954. Were you instructed by either of your superior officers to fire?—No, I was not.
3955. Did Mr. Sadleir seem to have charge of the whole affair, giving orders to all the men around?—Yes, he seemed to be in command there.
3956. What do you mean—"seemed to be"?—He was the senior officer there.
3957. What do you mean by "seemed"?—I mean seemed—that he was the senior officer, and I supposed he would give instructions.
3958. Did you see him giving instructions from point to point?—Yes; I could not tell what he was doing or saying.
3959. Did you hear him call upon the people in the house to come out?—Yes.
3960. Did all the people in the house then come out?—Yes—and to cease firing, and the men did cease firing for a considerable time, and the people all came out in a body.
3961. Was the fire pretty hot before that?—No.
3962. After they came out did they fire volley upon volley?—Yes; there was a little time elapsed before there was any firing, and then it was pretty warm for a time.

William Duross, continued;

3963. Were the volleys by order, or every man as he liked?—I could not say. As soon as I saw the 7th May 1881.

3964. Did you put down your gun from your shoulder, and then lift it again and fire?—Yes.
3965. To see where you hit?—Yes.
3966. You cannot remember when the outlaws ceased firing from the house—how long before it was burnt?—The house was burnt down about four or five o’clock.
3967. The outlaws ceased to fire about eleven?—No; I think I heard some man say that one of them came out, and tapped his armour.
3968. You did not see it yourself?—No.
3969. You saw the house when it was set on fire?—Yes.
3970. You saw the priest enter?—Yes.
3971. How far were the police from the house when the priest went in?—There were some of them nearer than others. He went up from near the front of the house, and I think he went in the back door, and came out and put out his hand.
3972. Do you call the back door the one nearest the station?—No, that leading to the back yard.
3973. On the other side you mean?—Yes.
3974. How far were the nearest police from the house when the priest went in?—I should say about 50 or 60 yards.
3975. Did you see the priest go in?—Yes.
3976. And go out?—Yes.
3977. Did you see his action?—He held up his hand.
3978. And then after that did the police go up?—Yes, they rushed the house then.
3979. They were then about 60 yards off when he raised his hands?—Yes.
3980. And about that time the priest went in?—Yes.
3981. By Mr. Sadleir.—You said I ordered you to fire at the bricks—was not that as late as one o’clock in the afternoon?—It might have been still later on.
3982. Was not the supposition then that they would go in the chimney?—Yes I recollect that the prisoners when they came out told you or some one that they were in the chimney.
3983. Did we also try to fire through the wooden end, into the breastwork at the other end, right across the other side?—I believe it was done, I do not know of my own knowledge.
3984. By the Commission.—Did you get instructions from your officers to do that?—Yes.
3985. Did you do it?—Yes, I did, to the best of my belief.
3986. By Mr. Sadleir.—Do you remember where Dixon and Armstrong were standing?—I remember where Dixon and Armstrong were standing.
3987. At the tree directly opposite the door?—Yes.
3988. Is not that tree inside the railway fence?—Yes.
3989. Will you look at this plan.—[The witness did so.] The tree was about here, was it not.—[pointing to the plan]?—Yes.
3990. How far from the tree to the front door—you have called it 60 yards—can you say it was anything like 60 yards?—I could not say.
3991. I have measured it, and know it was under 30 yards. Which end did the priest go round?—I think the little end, at the north.
3992. Did you see him go in?—I think I did—I saw him coming out of the little gate.
3993. Was that after he had gone into the house?—That was after.
3994. When he approached the house, did you not see the police run in after him, on all sides, some trying to stop him?—Armstrong was singing out to him.
3995. Did you notice him making the sign of the cross on his face?—I noticed him hold up his hands.
3996. By the Commission.—Did you see Mr. O’Connor often during that day?—Yes.
3997. Where was he?—I saw him along with Mr. Sadleir, and I saw him giving the black trackers lunch.
3998. Where were they then?—The north side.
3999. They did not leave their positions to get lunch?—Yes, they did.
4000. Did they get under shelter?—They were running behind trees.
4001. Where were they getting lunch?—Near the station.
4002. Did they get it there?—Either them or Mr. O’Connor.
4003. Did you get your lunch at the station?—Yes.
4004. There is a little difficulty; you cannot fix the hour of the shooting. The point of the examination is when you discharged this repeating rifle of yours—after the people came out of the house or before. Did you give me to understand that you had shot prior to the coming out of the people. Subsequently you fixed the hour at or about one o’clock. Can you decide on that point?—Yes, because I had fired before Mr. Sadleir told me.
4005. What time did you get your lunch?—I could not fix the time. I went down to the station and had it.
4006. You felt hungry and went down?—Yes.
4007. Did the men say there was lunch down there?—Yes.
4008. It was a mere matter of time?—It would not take you ten minutes to run down.
4009. Did most of the men go?—I do not know; I saw one or two.
4010. Did you see the black trackers eat their lunch?—I saw Mr. O’Connor distributing it to them, 4011. Where?—At the north side of the hotel.
4012. Were they stationed there?—No.
4013. Did they come together for lunch?—Yes, they came all together for lunch to the north side of the house.
4014. Was Mr. O'Connor moving about and giving orders?—No, I saw him give orders to the trackers.
4015. What was he doing when you saw him first?—Standing under shelter of a tree with Mr. Sadleir at the north side of the house.
4015a. Is what you call the north the back of the house?—No, the back I call the west.

4016. Beyond the station, as you go up the line, you call the north?—Yes.
4017. Can you take upon yourself, after this lapse of time, of your own knowledge, to say whether any firearms were discharged by the occupants of the house, the outlaws or any one else, after you came on the scene—discharged from Jones's residence?—Yes, on one occasion. I believe it to be Jack Sherritt he was standing up near the back of the house, and I got up there, and he said, “Look out, old man, there has just been one come out of the back window.”
4018. Did you see him?—No, I saw something.
4019. He drew your attention to somebody at the window firing a shot?—Yes.
4020. Do you believe a shot was fired from the time you arrived—can you state positively—do you know, yourself?—I cannot state positively.
4021. Do you think there was?—No.
4022. Could you not see the flash of the gun if fired from the window?—Not if they stood back a good distance from the window.
4023. Did you see Mr. O'Connor several times on that day—what was he doing?—He was along with Mr. Sadleir talking with him.
4024. Did he move from place to place?—I saw him on a couple of different occasions in different places.
4025. Did you see him in that drain under cover?—No, I did not.
4026. He was not in that when you saw him?—No.
4027. As far as you know it would not be true to say he remained in that drain, and did not stir out?—I could not say.
4028. When you saw him he was out of it?—Yes.
4029. As far as you know it would not be true to say he was in it all the time?—He might have been, but when I saw him he was out of it.
4030. Was it at one o'clock that Mr. Sadleir instructed you to fire lower?—It might be after one o'clock.
4031. So that Mr. O'Connor might have been in the drain up till one, as you did not know him to distinguish him up to that time?—Yes.
4032. Did he keep in one place?—I saw him lower down from the railway station.
4033. Did he seem to be going round and giving orders to the men?—I did not take any particular notice of him. I did not know him till then.
4034. After that?—I only saw him giving the black trackers their lunch.
4035. What did you think, yourself—was it quiet?—There were plenty there, and we did not all go together.
4036. Did you think the outlaws might rush out at any time?—I thought that it would be a good thing to have them out before night-time, to prevent their escaping at night.
4037. Then rush them or shoot them?—Yes, some way or other.
4038. What was your impression?—I heard several men say, “Rush the house.” I saw Armstrong and Mr. Sadleir. I think he said he would not lose any more lives over the like of them.
4039. What did Armstrong say before that?—He was roaring out a lot in front of the house, calling them cowards not to come out.
4040. Did you hear any men volunteer to rush the house?—A couple sang out, “We will rush.”
4041. Where?—Towards where Mr. Sadleir was standing.
4042. What did he say?—He would not lose any more lives.
4043. Did you come to any conclusion that he was going to adopt that particular course?—I heard immediately afterwards Senior-Constable Johnson was going to burn the house down.
4044. Did you hear about the cannon?—Not till afterwards.
4045. Did you see Mr. Sadleir any time after he gave you instructions at the railway to attend to Kelly till he told you to fire low?—Yes.
4046. Where?—I saw him talking to the prisoners that came out of the house—he and Mr. Rawlins, and I think Mr. O’Connor. I would not be certain about the latter.
4047. If Mr. O’Connor was there you would not have known it was Mr. O’Connor at that time?—Yes, I did.
4048. How could that be when you told me the first time you knew him was after you were told to fire lower?—Yes, it was after that.
4049. But they came out at eleven o’clock?—I did not know that.
4050. That was the time, the first time, you knew him; how can you say he was there?—I fancy he was there, because I know there were several, and I thought I recollected his features afterwards.
4051. It is only a matter of conjecture that he was there?—Yes.
4052. If a witness came and said Mr. O’Connor was not there, would you take upon yourself to say he was?—No.
4053. Were you somewhat confused after the brick warming?—A little, but not as much as I was at Sherritt’s hut.
4054. You do not seem to remember time well?—I do not remember the time at all.
4055. Did you see Constable Kelly that day?—I saw him.
4056. Did he come round to you at any portion of the day?—He did not speak to me personally, but he was going round.
4057. Was he actively engaged going about?—Yes.
4058. More so than Mr. Sadleir?—No, I could not say that.
4059. Did you see Mr. Sadleir continually moving about after eleven?—I could not say “continually.”
4060. Where did Mr. O’Connor go after you knew it was Mr. O’Connor?—I saw him giving the trackers lunch, and I may have seen him afterwards, but I did not take particular notice.
4061. Did you see Sergeant Steele?—Yes.
4062. Was he actively engaged?—Yes, he was in the room where Kelly was when I saw him first that day.

William Duross,
continued,
4th May 1881.
4063. Did you know him?—No, because he had shaved from the time I knew him before.
4064. Did you expend all your ammunition?—I had two or three rounds left.
4065. Did you put in a claim for this Kelly Reward Fund?—Yes.
4066. What was your claim?—Through being at the capture at Glenrowan I stated the part I took in it. Arrived there at nine, and left in the evening by the train.
4067. Was that a written claim you put in?—Yes.
4068. Were you examined before the Board?—No.
4069. In your claim did you claim anything for the great anxiety that you suffered on the night of the 26th?—No.
4070. How long have you been in the police force?—Since 1874, and I was in the barracks previous to that.
4071. Was your father a constable?—He was in the detective police.
4072. Are you a foot constable?—Yes, and always was.
4073. Where?—Stationed in the city of Melbourne.
4074. Had you much practice in the use of firearms before you went up?—Never.
4075. You could fire a gun?—I could.
4076. You did not consider yourself a “shot”?—No.
4077. Were you not trained at the barracks?—No target practice.
4078. The ordinary manual platoon practice?—Yes, artillery drill with no ammunition, and blank cartridge with the big gun.
4079. Were you not shown how to discharge the gun and aim with the rifle supplied to you?—Very little of it.
4080. Have you been accustomed to guns?—Only to drill with them—shoulder arms, and so on.
4081. After passing the military barracks did you go direct into the police?—We go to the Richmond barracks for a little. I was there for a month.
4082. What did you learn there?—Ordinary police duty.
4083. You were not taught anything. You get your manual and you have to learn it. Have you passed any examination in that?—No.
4084. Was the practice in your time to draft from the artillery barracks into the police?—Yes.
4085. Did you undergo no examination as to whether you were accustomed to firearms?—No.
4086. Were you not asked?—No.
4087. You only put off one uniform and put on another, and got the book?—Yes, that is the regulation book I got.
4088. And went on duty at once?—Yes.
4089. In the North-Eastern district?—No, five years before that, in Melbourne.
4090. How long before you went to the North-Eastern district was it you had any use in firearms?—
About five years before.
4091. While you were stationed in Melbourne you had no practice in firearms?—No.
4092. Were any men, to your knowledge, taught. Are you not supposed to be armed. Is this the book you got?—No.
4093. You are furnished with batons?—Yes.
4094. And are you exercised in the use of them?—No.
4095. Did you make yourself acquainted with the “Police Regulations” book?—I am supposed to make myself acquainted with all the books.
4096. Does that one prescribe what your arms shall be. What are the police arms?—We have an Enfield rifle—a muzzle-loader—and that is all a foot-man has.
4097. Were you taught to take up, load, and discharge with that?—No.
4098. Were you taught that at the Victoria barracks while you were in the Artillery Corps?—I was taught a different rifle altogether in the barracks.
4099. Were you served out with a double-barrelled shot-gun in the North-East?—A muzzle-loading Colt’s revolver and a Spencer rifle.
4100. Were you taught the use of that rifle?—I had several shots with that.
4101. Were you taught how to use it?—Inspector Montfort showed us, in Russell street, before we left.
4102. Do you think you were competent or incompetent to use firearms when you went up there?—I was not perfect.
4103. Were you drilled up there in the use of firearms by Mr. Nicolson?—No.
4104. Never went out on practice?—I did on different occasions myself.
4105. On your own responsibility?—Yes, put up a target.
4106. Mr. Nicolson.—My party was at Benalla.
4107. By the Commission.—Is the feeling amongst the constables, in your opinion, that the men are not efficient in the use of the arms in the service?—The mounted men are different altogether from the foot police in Melbourne. The latter are not perfect in the use of firearms. They have no drill for firearms in Russell street.
4108. No shooting?—No shooting.
4109. Are the mounted men taught?—I heard they are taught revolver practice on horse-back, in the riding school. We have only the Enfield rifle—the City police.
4110. What is the special qualification for the police force that you were supposed to be perfected in at the Victoria barracks?—We were taught big gun drill and infantry drill.
4111. And to march?—That is infantry drill.
4112. Is there anything as to dealing with prisoners, or framing reports, or doing ordinary police duty there?—No.
4113. Were you drafted direct from that into the depot?—Yes.
4114. Except those books, were you taught how to frame reports to your officers and so on?—When you go out on the section with a senior-constable, he is supposed to instruct you in all that.
4115. At the depot you are not taught anything of that?—No.

4116. You learn that you yourself out on duty?—Yes.
4117. Is there a difference in the pay of the police when they first go on duty. Did you get less pay at first?—Yes, for two years I was getting two shillings per day in the artillery.
4118. You were not a policeman then?—No.
4119. When you say you left the Victoria barracks, and then joined the police force, and remained in the depot, what was your pay then?—Six and sixpence per day then.
4120. Has that been increased?—To seven and sixpence.
4121. Under what circumstances?—By Act of Parliament. After two years’ service in the police force we get a shilling a day extra.
4122. Had you an increase when you were in the North-Eastern district?—Yes; it was a travelling allowance, two shillings a day for being up there, while you are out on duty at night, and five shillings a day increase.
4123. Did that continue all the time?—No; there was a reduction previous to my going to Beechworth. We were transferred there temporarily; then we could not claim it after that.
4124. Before you went up there had you any experience of bush life?—No; I was never stationed out of Melbourne.
4125. Can you ride a horse?—Yes.
4126. Have you been trained in the regular way?—I have been accustomed to horses.
4127. All that you were taught in the artillery barracks was simply big gun drill and infantry drill?—Yes.
4128. Is the infantry drill not very advantageous to you as a policeman?—Yes, it is.
4129. It is a very legitimate basis of education to make a constable?—Yes, it is, in one way; a lot of men marching together would look awkward not marching properly.
4130. And ready to obey orders properly?—Yes.
4131. You were not taught sword exercise?—No.
4132. Have you heard any conversation amongst your comrades about giving evidence before this Commission?—Yes.
4133. Is there any reluctance on the part of the men to give evidence?—I could not state that. I heard a couple of men say they would like to give evidence—in the police.
4134. How do you mean “like”?—Anxious to be examined.
4135. Why?—Before the Board.
4136. Why—that they could give information about the Kelly business?—Not about that in particular.
4137. About what?—Other subjects.
4138. Is there any disinclination amongst the men to give evidence?—I could not state that. I heard a couple of men say they would like to give evidence—in the police.
4139. Why?—Before the Board.
4140. How do you mean “like”?—Anxious to be examined.
4141. Why?—Before the Board.
4142. Why—not about that in particular.
4143. About what?—Other subjects.
4144. Is there any disinclination amongst the men to give evidence?—Not to my knowledge.
4145. Is there any fear of the officers amongst the men?—Not to my knowledge.
4146. If there was a disinclination, would not you be likely to hear it?—I might not.
4147. There is no such feeling to your knowledge?—No.
4148. Have you heard any at Beechworth express a desire to give evidence?—Constable Dowling and myself applied directly we saw Mr. Hare’s evidence; and I now ask to be present when Detective Ward is finishing his evidence.
4149. As to the drill, were you not drilled in the use of firearms in the North-Eastern district?—No, only by myself, or with one of my mates. We must have a little practice. Gascoigne and I went out together.
4150. You had no regular practice—no one giving you regular instructions in the use of firearms?—No.
4151. Is not Gascoigne a first-rate shot?—Yes.
4152. Were you allowed to use ammunition to practise with?—We got orders on one occasion not to use so much, and we used very little of it.
4153. By Mr. Nicolson.—When was that?—When I was at Violet Town. There was an order came not to expend so much of it, and then the order came that Colt’s ammunition was very scarce.
4154. Did you get an order previous to that to begin to practice?—Yes, to have a little practice.
4155. By the Commission.—Was there a sergeant at Violet Town?—I was there by myself a considerable time.
4156. Did you get a circular that you were to make yourselves proficient by the use of Government ammunition?—I think that was the order that we could use a little.
4157. You were limited in the use of it?—Yes.
4158. By Mr. Nicolson.—Did you not get an order to discharge your Colt’s revolver every week?—There may be an order in the first part of it like that, but in the latter end we got an order that we were to be very careful in expending Colt’s ammunition.
4159. By the Commission.—Are you now supplied with a Colt’s revolver or a Webley?—No; I have neither.
4160. What arms had you at Violet Town?—The Colt’s revolver and the Spencer rifle.
4161. Has the Colt’s revolver a cartridge or a cap?—A cap.
4162. How would you get that unloaded without discharging it?—That would be a difficult thing.
4163. Could it be done?—I could not do it.
4164. Could any man do it unless he screwed out the bullet?—I think not.
4165. Is there any implement given you to screw out the bullet?—No.
4166. Would it be possible to see that your arms were in order without discharging your Colt’s revolver?—No, you would have to.
4167. Then if you saved ammunition you might have to leave your revolver loaded for a time longer than it should be?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Eleven o’clock.

Thomas Patrick Dowling sworn and examined.

T. P. Dowling,
5th May 1881.

4162. By the Commission.—What are you?—Constable.
4163. Were you engaged in the North-Eastern district of the colony at the time of the Kelly outrages?—I was.
4164. When did you go up first?—The latter end of February 1879.
4165. Where were you stationed?—Mooroopna.
4166. What time did you go towards Beechworth?—About the 11th June 1880.
4167. What was your first employment there?—I was employed on special duty at Sherritt’s hut.
4168. That was about when?—About the 17th.
4169. Were you told off along with other members of the force to watch in the neighborhood of Sherritt’s hut?—I was.
4170. Was your duty to watch during the night?—Yes.
4171. And to keep away from observation during the day?—Yes.
4172. Where were you watching?—In the vicinity of Mrs. Byrne’s house.
4173. Were you present on the occasion of the visit of Superintendent Hare to Sherritt’s?—Yes, 4174. Was it on a Saturday evening?—On the Saturday evening previous to Sherritt being shot, Mr. Hare and Detective Ward came.
4175. Do you remember what Mr. Hare said on that occasion?—No, I was not at the hut at the time he came.
4176. Where were you?—I and Constable Armstrong were about some 200 yards away from the hut, cutting firewood.
4177. What time was that?—We left about half an hour after dusk; after tea.
4178. What time would dusk be then?—I could not say exactly the time.
4179. Was it moonlight at the time?—Yes, I believe it was.
4180. Would it be about seven o’clock in the evening?—About half-past six.
4181. When Mr. Hare arrived?—When we went up the hill to cut firewood.
4182. How long did you remain cutting firewood?—We would be up there about an hour and a half, I think.
4183. Was it sufficient light for you to be able to use the axe to cut firewood?—Yes, it was.
4184. That would make it eight o’clock; after that where did you go?—We were coming down with a load of firewood when we met Mrs. Sherritt.
4185. What did she say?—She told us that Mr. Hare and Detective Ward were down at the hut.
4186. Did you see Mr. Hare that night?—Yes.
4187. What did you do when she told you that; did you drop the firewood?—We were going down to the hut. She told us that they had arrived, and that Detective Ward sent her up to tell me and Armstrong to go and take up our posts as quick as we possibly could at Byrne’s house. I said there was no occasion to tell him a lie; that we could go down and tell him the truth, and there would be no blame attached to us. On our way down to the hut we saw Detective Ward, who told us to clear out as quick as we could, and take our post at Byrne’s house, as Mr. Hare had just gone to see what we were doing there.
4188. How far were you from Sherritt’s hut when you met Detective Ward?—About 150 yards.
4189. Did Detective Ward give you any reason why you should go down there so quickly?—No, he did not.
4190. Did he say Mr. Hare was led to believe you were down there?—No.
4191. He gave you no reason?—Yes, he said he told Constable Duross to tell Mr. Hare that I, Armstrong, and Sherritt were over at Byrne’s place watching, and that the reason he and Alexander had remained behind was that Aaron Sherritt thought it too light for them to go with us.
4192. Did he suggest to you then that having told that to Mr. Hare it was absolutely necessary for you to go on?—Yes, he told us to clear out. I told him there was no necessity to tell Mr. Hare a lie, and to tell the truth. He then said to me “——— it go on, and do as I tell you.” I and Armstrong then left and had taken up our posts some three or four minutes previous to Mr. Hare coming along.
4193. You obeyed that command?—Yes, when I saw Mr. Hare I was going to stand up, but he made a sign to me to remain where I was, and passed on to Constable Armstrong. I do not know what took place between Mr. Hare and Armstrong.
4194. Go on with your narrative in your own way, and tell what came within your own knowledge on that occasion?—That was all.
4195. You stayed there all that night?—Yes.
4196. And returned to Sherritt’s?—Yes, about three o’clock in the morning.
4197. You saw nothing else before that?—No.
4198. You were doing nothing all the day?—No, we were supposed to remain in all the day.
4199. Mr. Hare returned to Sherritt’s with you?—No, he left us at Byrne’s.
4200. And you and Armstrong returned to Sherritt’s?—We remained at Byrne’s till three o’clock in the morning, and then returned to Sherritt’s.
4201. Did anything further occur before the night on which Sherritt was shot?—No, not that I am aware of.
4202. How long was that before he was shot?—That was the Saturday night previous to his being shot.
4203. When was he shot?—Saturday night.
4204. Then nothing particular occurred during that week?—No.

4205. Just the usual duties?—Yes.

T. P. Dowling, continued,
4206. Will you just relate to the Commission what occurred upon the night when Aaron Sherritt was shot?—

The witness was requested to withdraw.

The Commission deliberated in regard to the reported appointment of Mr. O'Connor to the position of Inspector in the North-Eastern district.

Thomas Patrick Dowling further examined.

4207. By the Commission.—Will you just relate to the Commission, in your own way, what occurred upon the night upon which Aaron Sherritt was shot?—On that particular night I and constables Armstrong and Alexander were in the bedroom. Constable Duross, Aaron Sherritt, and his wife, were in the kitchen, having tea.

4208. And Mrs. Barry?—Yes, was in the kitchen also. I was lying on the bedroom floor when I heard a voice outside, at the rear of the hut, saying, "Aaron Sherritt, I have lost my way, I want you to put me on the road." I then heard Sherritt say (this was giving me and my mates to understand that he knew who was outside), "It is only Anthony Weekes, a German that lives over the creek, he is in the habit of going astray when he gets drunk." Mrs. Sherritt then said to Sherritt, "Go on and show him the way, and do not keep him waiting out there." I then heard the back door opening, and heard Sherritt say, "Do you see that sapling over there?" when there were two shots fired, and the words "bail up" were heard in a loud tone of voice three or four times. I then heard Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Sherritt screaming, and saying, "Oh Joe, why did you shoot Aaron. Oh Joe do not shoot me." He then asked, "Who is that gone in there, in that room?" Mrs. Sherritt said, "It is a man that is looking for work, named Duross." He then called upon him to come out, several times, and commenced whistling as if signalling to some one to come to his assistance, when there was another shot fired in the front door, I believe by Dan Kelly. I then heard a voice at the rear of the hut saying, "Who fired that shot?" and I heard the reply outside of the front door saying, "I did"; and the man then at the rear of the hut said, "It is all right." He then told the women to throw the doors open and come outside, and they did so. I and my mates kept a sharp look out into the kitchen. We were at the bedroom door looking in, and also out through the kitchen doors when they were thrown open, but could see nothing outside but darkness. Armstrong then said to me, "What about rushing?" I said, "Yes, I will rush, ask your other mates."

4209. Did you know who those men were?—I thought it was the outlaws directly I heard Mrs. Sherritt shout "Joe." He asked them, and they said, "Yes." Armstrong then said we would remain in the hut till daylight in the morning, as he believed the outlaws would remain until then, as they had done so in other places they had stuck up; and that then we would be on equal terms with them. He also said if they were gone at daylight we would go and search Byrne's house. Mrs. Sherritt then came running in, and said that Byrne sent her in to tell Duross and his mates to come out.

4210. "And his mates"?—Yes; and that he would not shoot us. I told her to keep quiet and not be running in and out of doors. My mates also told her. I believe we also told her mother not to be running in and out of the d——

4211. Did you know who those men were?—I thought it was the outlaws directly I heard Mrs. Sherritt shout "Joe." He asked them, and they said, "Yes." Armstrong then said we would remain in the hut till daylight in the morning, as he believed the outlaws would remain until then, as they had done so in other places they had stuck up; and that then we would be on equal terms with them. He also said if they were gone at daylight we would go and search Byrne's house. Mrs. Sherritt then came running in, and said that Byrne sent her in to tell Duross and his mates to come out.

4212. Between the slabs or how?—It was a slab hut, plastered inside.

4213. Lath and plaster?—I am not sure whether there were laths or not. It was lined with some sort of bags and paper also.

4214. Was it slabs with plaster between the joints?—I cannot say about between the joints. There was papering—covering of some sort, and dirt fell down anyhow. They were calling on us to come out and surrender.

4215. Up to that time did Mrs. Sherritt present the appearance of being very much frightened, or did she what would be commonly called "take it easy"?—She seemed very much frightened. I heard her ask Byrne several times not to shoot her. They were calling on us to surrender, and saying, "Come outside here, and I will shoot you down like b—— dogs. If you don't come out I will riddle the b—— hut, for I have any amount of ammunition." immediately the two shots went I jumped on a bag of flour that was leaning against the wall, when there were two more shots fired from the rear of the hut into the wall that I was leaning against. The effect of the shots was knocking some of the mortar down my neck and back.

4216. In looking outside could you see in this sitting-room?—Yes.

4217. You could see what took place in there?—When I looked over I could.

4218. Did you look at all when you heard persons inside?—Yes; we went to the door and kept a sharp look out.

4219. Did you look out while they were there?—Yes; we looked in from the bedroom door.

4220. While the outlaws were in there?—No, they were not in the kitchen at all; they were outside.

4221. They had not come in at that time?—No.

4222. Were they ever in the kitchen?—No, they did not enter the house at all. They could not come in without our seeing them.

4223. You would have shot them?—If they had come in we would have shot them. I would have fired at random, at that particular time, had it not been for the women being outside. I was afraid of shooting one of them if I fired. Armstrong then said, "Look out for that window," and I got on the bed and pulled the blind on one side. I could not see outside, it being so dark. I then heard the outlaws call on us to come outside again, and saying, "You are a long time about coming out"; and I heard one of them say, "I will b— soon make you come out"; and I heard him strike a match and set fire to some scrub at the end of the hut.

4224. Will you point out which end—[showing a plan]?—The bedroom end.

POLICE.

5th May 1881.

T. P. Dowling,
continued.

194

4225. Were they aware at the time there were police inside?—They were. I believe the women told them. I heard them ask, "Is that b—— Dixon inside?"

4226. Was he one of them?—No. I heard Mrs. Sherritt say he was not one of the men that was inside.

4227. Is there a policeman of that name?—Yes.

4228. Do you know him?—No. I believe I have seen him once.

4229. Was he up in that district?—Yes.

4230. He must have referred to a policeman in asking if Dixon was there?—Yes. Up till nearly daylight in the morning I could hear some one talking outside the hut every now and again.

4231. Did the women come in ultimately—that would be before daylight?—It was after the third or fourth shot that went they came in. Shortly after the time I mentioned about not shooting because they were outside, they came in, and were running in and out of the door several times. We could not keep them quiet, so we concluded not to let them out again, and we put them under the bed.

4232. Was that to give you more room or for their protection?—For their protection, and also to give us more room, as the bedroom was very small, and they were apt to be shot, running in and out the way they were doing.

4233. Shot by whom?—They might have been by us, supposing we did fire at any time.

4234. What size was the room?—About 11 feet by 10, I should think.

4235. What size was the bedstead—was it a double bed?—Yes, I think about six by five or four.

4236. What else was on the room on the floor?—Some boxes.

4237. How much space would they take up?—About one corner at the head of the bed.

4238. So there was very little standing space for you?—Very little standing space. I remember, when I was lying on the floor, I could not stretch my full length through the boxes being in the corner.

4239. The bed was under the front window?—Yes; we also heard a dog barking and making a rush every now and then, as if he was running at something.

4240. Did the dogs give any alarm before the arrival of the men?—Not that I heard of.

4241. How many dogs were there?—One. At daylight in the morning Constables Armstrong and Alexander went outside.

4242. Did either of the constables leave the room before daylight?—Armstrong, I believe, went outside and covered Sherritt up, and put the fire out. That would be about 12 o'clock.

4243. Was the door closed before that?—Yes; he closed them himself, I believe.

4244. Were they closed before that?—Yes.

4245. Who closed them?—Armstrong and Alexander, before they went out, closed them with their guns.

4246. You could have done the same when you looked over on the bag of flour?—No, not very well with the gun.

4247. Was this partition (pointing to the plan) across from wall-plate to wall-plate—about the same height as the wall-plate?—Yes, about that.

4248. And the doors opened back to that partition?—Yes.

4249. Could not you have closed them when looking over?—If I had had a gun.

4250. Could you not have got some one to assist you with a gun?—I do not see how I could. I had a revolver only when I got on the partition.

4251. Your three comrades were in the bedroom?—Yes, one at each side of the door then.

4252. You heard voices till daylight in the morning?—Yes.

4253. When Armstrong and Alexander went out the doors were open?—No; they closed them with their guns.

4254. In what position were they then?—They were at the bedroom door.

4255. And the doors were not closed until that time?—No.

4256. At that time you were under the impression that those people who fired were outside?—Yes.

4257. You said you kept the women inside for fear you would shoot them. Did you shoot after that?—No; they stopped talking outside, so we thought it would be useless. There was not a shot fired. We could hear them at the side of the hut.

4258. Was that fancy?—No, I am sure it was not fancy. I made the remark to my mates several times during the night.

4259. You each had a gun in the bedroom at the time you describe?—Yes.

4260. What was the character of those guns?—They were double-barrelled breech-loaders.

4261. And loaded with what?—Wire cartridges.

4262. Bullets or shot?—Shot.
4263. What was the character of the shot?—That I could not say.

Mr. Hare.—They are pellets, B shot, 14 or 16 to the ounce and a half of shot, and they use half a shot in a cartridge. They were not all wire cartridge.

4264. By the Commission (to the witness).—What is about the length of one of those guns; stand up and show where it would reach to?—(The witness stood up and indicated that it would reach up to his waist.)

4265. Standing on that bag of flour with a gun in your hand, could you have reached to touch the doors?—Yes, I could.

4266. You could have done that at any time?—Yes.

4267. Did it not strike you at any time?—No.

4268. Nor any of your comrades?—No.

4269. Was it that you were expecting them to come in every moment?—Yes, and I could hear them talking outside.

4270. If they had come opposite the door you would have tried to shoot them. Did you try to see them?—Yes, all we could.

4271. Were you ready to fire at any moment up to the time of the shutting of the doors?—Yes.

4272. That was what was in your mind?—Yes.

4273. That they might come to close quarters at any moment?—Yes,

195

4274. How many men could get in such a position as to fire at the door?—If they were coming in at both kitchen doors, only two could see them. If they came into the kitchen, any of us could see them.

4275. You would have to stand on the bag of flour?—No, we could have seen them from the door, and one could have got on the bag.

4276. And shot over the partition?—Yes.

4277. Did they send Weekes in?—No.

4278. Were you quite satisfied with your arms—the gun?—Yes, I was satisfied with them. On the night I was told to go out there I was going to bring my Spencer rifle; and I was told by the sub-officer in charge of the Beechworth station that I was not to bring any arms but the revolver, and that I was to take the arms and ammunition from the man I was going to relieve at the hut.

4279. Was the gun, do you think, preferable to the Spencer rifle—the way it was loaded—for shooting in the dark?—It would be better outside, perhaps, but not inside.

4280. What do you mean by that for shooting at an object in the dark, which would be the best, the rifle or that gun—the most certain to hit at short range?—If we were to fire at random, I dare say the guns would be better, but, firing at an object, I would rather have the rifle.

4281. Had you been used to firearms before being sent to Sherritt’s?—Yes, I was.

4282. In what particular instance?—In shot guns.

4283. So that you did not object to the shot gun?—No, I did not.

4284. You believe they were likely to be just as effective as any weapon you could have?—No, I would have preferred the rifle, as I was more accustomed to it since I joined the police.

4285. But you were quite competent to use the shot gun?—Yes.

4286. Were you told your duties when you went there; what was your supposed object in being sent there; did you not know that?—Yes, I was told by Aaron.

4287. What?—To watch Byrne’s house, to see if the outlaws came there at any time.

4288. And any further instructions, in the event of your seeing them?—No, he never told me any more.

4289. No instructions that, in the event of seeing one of the outlaws—as to what you would do, and you being at a distance from your other comrades—what course of action you were to take then?—No.

4290. You were told simply you were there to watch, and report afterwards?—Yes.

4291. Supposing, during the time you were watching Byrne’s place, you had seen one of the outlaws moving from Byrne’s place, what course would you have adopted—acting on your own responsibility?—If I knew for a fact it was one of the outlaws I would fire.

4292. Were you instructed to do so?—No.

4293. You had no other instructions than to watch Byrne’s place?—No other instructions.

4294. As a matter of opinion, do you consider as to those four men who were together if any of them had seen one of the outlaws would he have considered himself justified in shooting without any orders?—Yes, I would.

4295. Was that the feeling among the men themselves?—Yes, it was.

4296. What experience had you of that particular duty before going to Sherritt’s place?—I had no experience. I was on bank duty at Mooroopna, doing mounted duty there.

4297. Are you a mounted trooper?—No, but I was doing mounted duty there.

4298. Were you in the artillery corps before joining the police?—Yes, I was.

4299. Was there no understanding between those four men that if the Kellys put in an appearance at Byrne’s place what course they were to take?—No, I never received any orders.

4300. None at all?—No.
4301. Did you feel you would be fit to cope with four outlaws if they came there?—Yes, I felt that.
4302. Would you try it?—Yes, I would, I was always prepared, supposing they did come.
4303. Supposing they had put in an appearance, you would have surrounded the house and deavored to take them?—Yes.
4304. Without sending to head quarters?—Without sending to head quarters.
4305. Have you had much experience in firearms?—Not a great deal, only what I had previous to going to the police force.
4306. How long before that had you had practice with firearms?—The last I had was in Mooroopna.
4307. How long was that before?—About three or four months.
4308. Did you fire a shot between that time and this night?—No.
4309. Were you accustomed to use a shot gun before you entered the police force?—Yes.
4310. How?—Shooting, up country.
4311. What sort of shooting?—Duck shooting or opossums, or anything.
4312. From your childhood?—Yes.
4313. When did you first fire a gun, what age?—About thirteen or fourteen.
4314. Are you a native of the colony?—Yes.
4315. Was there anything particular in the double-barrelled gun?—No, nothing particular.
4316. You just put in the cartridge?—Yes.
4317. A breech-loader?—Yes.
4318. What occurred in the morning?—Armstrong called in a Chinaman who was going along the road.
4319. About what time was that?—I could not say what time that was.
4320. How long before daylight, fix the time as near as you can?—It might be a quarter of an hour.
4321. After daylight?—About that. He wrote a letter, gave it to the Chinaman, and also some money,
I do not know how much it was, and told him if he delivered the letter at the Beechworth police station—.
4322. Was the Chinaman on foot?—Yes. That he would receive more money afterwards. The Chinaman said he would and left for Beechworth, but returned in about half an hour and said he would not go as he did not understand what it meant. Armstrong then asked him to take the letter to a schoolmaster.

T. P. Dowling.
continued.
5th May 1881.

4323. Did he see Aaron Sherritt’s body lying there?—Yes.
4324. Did he make any remark?—No, he did not make any remark. He seemed rather frightened.
4325. Where was the body then?—Lying covered in the kitchen.
4326. Did the Chinaman know there was a murdered man in the house?—Armstrong pointed out the body to him, I believe. He asked him if he would take the letter to a schoolmaster named Donoghue, who lived half a mile up the creek. The Chinaman did so, and the schoolmaster arrived in about half an hour’s time.
4327. Had you any means of knowing the time—any clock?—No. Duross had a watch.
4328. Then you could know the time of day?—Yes; but I never asked him the time except on one occasion.
4329. At this time it would be about nine o’clock, judging by the time taken by the Chinaman and the schoolmaster?—About eight, I should think.
4330. Did the schoolmaster go?—Armstrong asked him if he would take a letter. He said he would not take a letter, but would give the information without. He said he was afraid if he brought the letter with him he might be stuck up on the road, and if they found it in his possession they would be sure to shoot him.
4331. Did he go?—Armstrong asked him to be sure and go. He said he would, and left for Beechworth. He returned in about an hour and a half, and said his wife would not allow him to go; that he was afraid of his life, as he believed the outlaws were on the opposite hill to us, watching our movements.
4332. Did he lead you to understand that he had any reasons for believing so?—No. He told me they were on the opposite hill watching our movements. I told him he might have come back sooner than he did to tell us that he would not go.
4333. What did you do then?—Armstrong asked a digger that happened to come into the hut at the time if he would go. He said he would, and left for Beechworth. He had gone about half an hour when we came to the conclusion that it would be better for one of us to go.
4334. Why did you not communicate that before, earlier in the morning?—I do not know. We all thought it was advisable to leave the body and go away into Beechworth, all of us.
4335. They could not have injured a dead man?—No, certainly not.
4336. Had there been any others at the hut up to this time?—Several others came in; but I did not hear him ask them to go.
4337. Who were they?—I do not know.
4338. You were present?—Yes. They were workmen that would be about the creek there.
4339. Were they all informed that Sherritt was shot?—Yes; they heard of it.
4340. Cannot you give their names?—No, I cannot.
4341. Was it that intelligence that brought them there?—Yes.
4342. Where did they get it from?—I do not know.
4343. Did you ask them?—No.
4344. At what time did the workmen come out?—Shortly after daylight.
4345. Did they remain or go to the adjoining houses?—I think one went outside. I am not sure. I was not paying particular attention.
4346. Were you out of the house yourself?—Yes; I went away about twenty yards to a sort of a slab hut that was there covered in at the top only.
4347. At what time did the workmen come out?
4348. Did they remain or go to the adjoining houses?
4349. Were you out of the house yourself?
4350. Speak for yourself only?
4351. How long did you remain out on that search?—Perhaps ten minutes.
4352. Did you find any traces?—No, I did not.
4353. Did you make a circuit of the hut to see if you could find any traces?—Yes, we——
4354. Were you not afraid that the Kellys or some of their friends might have been coming to the place?—We were on the look out.
4355. Were you not afraid that the Kellys or some of their friends might have been coming to the place?—We were on the look out.
4356. You allowed those men to enter, and did not question them?—No, we did not. We allowed them to come in.
4357. Did you know Kelly or any of the gang at that time?—No.
4358. For all you knew one of those men that came in might have been one of the gang?—Yes, they might have been for all I knew.
4359. Did you challenge them at the door when they came in?—No, we did not challenge them.
4360. Did you ask them what they wanted?—No.
4361. Were you not afraid that the Kellys or some of their friends might have been coming to the place?—We were on the look out.
4362. Were you not afraid that the Kellys or some of their friends might have been coming to the place?—We were on the look out.
4363. Some of your party knew the Kellys?—I am not sure whether any of my mates knew them or not.
4364. You had the photos of those outlaws?—Yes.
4365. You would form a pretty good idea from that?—Yes.
4366. Did you remember any remarks made by those parties when they came in?—No, I do not, only what Donoghue said that the outlaws were on the opposite hill.
4367. Was it not rather strange they should come in, and look about without your saying anything and their saying anything?—I heard them say they heard about Sherritt being shot, I believe.
4368. Did you ask where they got the information?—No.
4369. Did Donoghue say, in the first instance, that the Kellys were there?—No, when he came back.
4370. Did he say then they were?—Yes.
4371. Not that they "may be"?—No.
4372. As a fact, that they were there?—Yes.

197

4373. Do you know what means he had of ascertaining that fact?—No.
4374. Was there any sign outside of where they made any preparations to fire the house?—Yes there were some bushes gathered together, but they would not burn.
4375. Anything else?—There was also some wood under one of the windows.
4376. They could not have put that wood there without coming under the window?—They could not. It was a catch window.
4377. You did not attempt to open that window?—We could not open the bedroom window.
4378. Why?—It was fastened. I tried it myself and could not. It would have been useless in any case if I could.
4379. Was the place where the boughs and wood were where you heard the match struck?—Yes.
4380. That was by the bedroom?—Yes.
4381. Did you hear any voices there?—Yes.
4382. Whose?—Byrne and Kelly both, I think, also Mrs. Barry, I think.
4383. They must have left their positions at the front and back when they collected those boughs?—They must, at least one must be looking in while the other was bringing the bushes, but there were bushes there for us to light a fire ourselves?—We brought them down.
4384. At what time did they attempt to set fire to the place?—About ten o’clock at night.
4385. Was it not suggested you should make a rush while they were making preparations to set fire?—No, it was not. We were not aware that the others were not there. We were sure in fact the others were there. We did not believe they would leave the others while they were going to commit that deed.
4386. What time did the moon rise that night?—It was moonlight about twelve, I think, as near as I could guess.

4387. Did it suggest itself to you that you should go out as soon as the moon had risen?—No, Armstrong said it was better to remain.

4388. You were entirely under the direction of Armstrong?—Yes, we were supposed to obey him. We were under his orders.

4389. At what time in the evening were you in the habit of going to Byrne’s house?—About eight or nine.

4391. You were preparing to go out, I suppose?—No.

4392. What were you all doing at this time when the knock came?—I was lying on the floor, and I think Armstrong was on the bed, and Alexander on the bedroom floor.

4393. You had all your arms in the bedroom?—Yes, they were leaning against the wall.

4394. You placed them so as to easily find them at anytime?—Yes, we could easily find them.

4395. No difficulty in going to them in the night time to find them?—No; we always kept our revolvers on us—at least I did.

4396. And placed the gun so as to find it at any moment?—Yes.

4397. Would it be possible for the outlaws to come to Mrs. Byrne’s hut without your seeing them?—They could have come at the back.

4398. And you not see them?—We were there, we were all at the one side of the house.

4399. You had no spy?—Yes, Sherritt.

4400. Did he go to Mrs. Byrne’s house?—He was with us.

4401. Was he inside the house to see?—Not that I am aware of.

4402. You had no one there to inform you?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Jacob Wilson sworn and examined.

4403. By the Commission.—What are you?—A farmer.

4404. Did you receive any information from Superintendent Nicolson?—Yes.

4405. What did he do?—He sent out a constable to my place.

4406. Were you ever a man-of-war’s-man?—Yes.

4407. What vessel were you on last?—I was discharged from the Dreadnought.

4408. Where do you live?—I lived near Greta.

4409. Were you a selector?—Yes.

4410. Who was your nearest neighbor?—My nearest neighbor was Tom Lloyd.

4411. Did you know Ned Kelly, the outlaw?—Yes.

4412. Was Lloyd any relation of his?—Yes, Mrs. Lloyd is his aunt.

4413. Mr. Lloyd was his uncle, Then, by marriage?—Yes.

4414. Do you recollect when the constables were murdered at Mansfield?—Yes.

4415. When first did you know anything about the police being in search, as far as you were concerned?—I knew the police were in search in 1878.

4416. Was that after the murders or before?—Before.

4417. Did you know who they were in search of?—I knew they were in search of Ned Kelly, after the outrage on Fitzpatrick, on the Eleven-mile Creek.

4418. How far did you live from the house where the outrage was committed?—About four miles.

4419. You knew all the family?—Yes.

4420. You recollect when the constables were murdered at Mansfield?—Yes.

4421. How soon did you see the police after that, looking for Kelly?—I do not remember.

4422. Did the police come to your house—a search party—looking for Kelly?—Yes.

4423. What occurred on that occasion?—They asked me if I had seen anything about the Kellys, we said, “No.”

4424. Who was “we”?—There was my son along with me.

4425. Who asked you that?—I think it was Constable Flood.

4426. Did you see any officer?—No, I did not.

198
4433. Did he ask you had you seen the Kellys?—Yes.
4434. What did you tell him?—I told him I had not.
4435. Had you?—I had seen Ned Kelly in December or January, after the police were murdered.
4436. You had seen Ned Kelly and you told the officers you had not?—Yes.
4437. Where did you see him?—I went to the Kilfera station early in the morning after sheep. We were fencing for the station, and he crossed the road and bid good morning to me; he was riding a bay horse.
4438. Was he armed?—I did not see any arms; he might have been under his coat.
4439. Mr. Hare asked you might he put his horses into your paddock?—Yes.
4440. What did you reply?—Senior-constable Mills came to my place, and I told him I would not give him any hay; I was frightened to give him any hay, and that if he went to Tom Lloyd’s place he could get plenty of hay there. He said they were camped and had put up their tents at the creek, and it was too late to go to Tom Lloyd’s place.
4441. What time was this in the evening?—Just dusk.
4442. Did they put the horses in your paddock?—Yes.
4443. Did you give them hay?—Yes.
4444. Did they pay you?—Yes; fifteen shillings every morning for the hay for 21 horses.
4445. Did you refuse at first to give it?—Yes.
4446. Why?—Because I was fearing that the sympathizers would have a “down” on me.
4447. That is the Lloyds?—Yes.
4448. Did you tell the police they might take the hay if they liked?—Yes; Mills said they must have the hay as their horses were knocked up, and paid me for it.
4449. After they went away that time did you give any other information to the police?—Yes.
4450. Who did you see next?—I do not know the name of the policemen, only Senior-constable Mills, but I saw Inspector O’Connor.
4451. Did you offer to give any information to the police?—Yes.
4452. What did you say?—I told Mills, when he asked me if I would have a look-out in Eagan’s paddock for horses.
4453. Where was that?—A mile and a half from my place. I did look in Eagan’s paddock, and I saw no horses there, only their own horses.
4454. Did you see any trace of the outlaws after that at all?—After that I heard nothing. This was in 1879, and I heard there was nothing before 1880.
4455. Can you say what month in 1880?—In March.
4456. What occurred to you in March 1880 about the outlaws—you mean you gave no further information to the police till March 1880?—No; I did not give any information to the police till April 3rd 1880.
4457. What information did you give then on the 3rd April?—Some hobbles I found; but I was frightened to give any information, because after they had their horses in my paddock the outlaws’ friends came to my house at three o’clock in the night and ordered me up, and I would not get up. Then they took a big piece of stick, and said they would get me up; that was James Quinn and John Hart, at the Fifteen-mile Creek.
4458. What relation is he to Steve Hart?—I do not know whether he is any. They came then and called me to get up.
4459. What names did they call you?—An old b——.
4460. And to get up?—Yes; and I said I would not get up, and I asked what they wanted, and they said “Get up;” that was all they said. They then came into my room with the stick and said I was to get up, and I got up and dressed, and I ran away to my neighbors.
4461. What for?—I got frightened of them.
4462. Did they follow you?—They called me back and told me to come down in the creek, and I went down.
4463. Where was the creek?—About fifty yards from my house. They did not say anything going down, and I did not know what they were going to do with me. There they had two horses in a dray with a plough, and two horses tied up—they could not cross the creek, and they asked me to see them across the creek. It was a little deep creek above the crossing place.
4464. Did you see Mr. Sadleir after this?—Yes.
4465. What did you tell him?—Sergeant Whelan was the first one. I told him Jim Quinn had been at my house.
4466. Did you tell Mr. Sadleir you had found any hobbles?—Yes, that was in March 1880.
4467. What did you tell him?—I told him that I found five pair of hobbles in the next paddock to me in some ferns.
4468. Whose paddock was that?—It belonged to the Kilfera station.
4469. Is that known as Patterson’s paddock?—Yes.
4470. Whose paddock is next to that?—Tom Lloyd’s.
4471. Did you tell him whose the hobbles were?—I told him they belonged to the outlaws, I thought.
4472. Anything else?—Some sort of a cloth they had had some provisions in.
4473. Did you tell him there was a high bank of ferns that you thought they camped in, and sardine tins?—Yes, and newspapers, and all that sort of thing.
4474. Did you tell him you thought they camped there constantly?—Yes, I saw a lot of horses at Tom Lloyd’s at various times.—three times.

4475. Did Mr. Sadleir ask you to keep a watch on Tom Lloyd’s place?—Yes.

4476. In consequence of your telling him the outlaws visited there?—Yes.

4477. Did you see the outlaws at Tom Lloyd’s?—I could not tell that.

4478. Did you go up on one occasion believing they were there?—Yes, I went up.

4479. Did you hear the outlaws at Tom Lloyd’s?—Yes, I heard Dan Kelly in Tom Lloyd’s.

4480. What was that?—I saw six horses tied up to Tom Lloyd’s garden, and I thought there were more horses, and I went to a cow-shed about a hundred yards from his dwelling place, and a dog came out and detected me.

4481. Did they always keep dogs about the place?—Yes, and when the dog commenced to bark furiously, and a lot of them came out of the house, I could see that by the candle, and I ran away then.

4482. Were they men or women you saw then?—I do not know. I had not time to see.

4483. Was this night-time?—Yes, dark. I ran into the next paddock, and they came after me and “sooled” the dog.

4484. Hunted you with the dog?—Yes, “sooled” the dog after me, and I crept up into a low cherry-tree and they went past me.

4485. Who?—The lot of them. Dan Kelly and young Tom Lloyd. They were within ten yards of me on the other side of the fence, and “sooled” the dog, and called out as if to the police that they would burn the b——. They thought I was the police, I expect, and was watching the place.

4486. Whoever it was, that was what they meant?—They did not say.

4487. Are you satisfied it was Dan Kelly?—I am satisfied it was, because I knew him by his voice.

4488. You knew them for years?—I lived there five years, and knew them since I came there till they took the bush.

4489. How long was this after you gave the information about the hobbles?—It was a week after I found the hobbles before I gave the information. I went to Melbourne and did not want to have anything to do with the police, because every move was in the paper next morning.

4490. Have you any doubt in your own mind that they were the outlaws’ hobbles?—No.

4491. Did you give that information?—Yes. I did not give the information at once, because I would not have anything to do with it. I was frightened they would come down and murder me and burn my place.

4492. Were you frightened of the Kellys’ friends?—Yes, I lived in a lonely place, and they could come and murder me there.

4493. You would not give the information because it would get into the papers the next day, and they would know it?—Yes. On account of my information Superintendent Nicolson sent for me when I was in Melbourne, and when I came back from Melbourne they asked for me to call at the police station at Benalla, and I called there and saw Superintendent Sadleir. I had a long conversation with him about the matter—about the outlaws—and told him about the hobbles.

4494. Was that after the cherry-tree affair?—No, after I was in the cherry-tree; it was the 14th May I was there, on Wednesday night, and I was there all night.

4495. What information did you give Mr. Sadleir?—About the hobbles, and I was quite sure the outlaws were there off and on; I was quite sure the outlaws were there off and on at that time.

4496. After that did you see any policemen looking at the place where the Kellys had been?—No.

4497. Did you go home after giving the information to Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.

4498. And then you watched the Kellys after that?—Yes.

4499. And saw them at Tom Lloyd’s house?—Yes, that was from the 3rd of April until the 14th of May. I did not see anything of anybody about Tom Lloyd’s place. I went every night to see if I could see them hanging up their horses.

4500. Did Mr. Sadleir ask you to do that?—Yes, he told me that I should keep a look-out.

4501. Did you ask him to pay you for that?—No.

4502. Did you tell him you would do it if he would appoint your son a constable?—Yes.

4503. Was that the reason?—I applied for my son to join the force in 1879, but Mr. Sadleir said he was too young.

4504. Did you say you would keep a sharp look-out if your son got into the police force?—The superintendent told me if I did anything for them my son would get the place.

4505. Is your son alive now?—Yes.

4506. Is he fit to join the police?—No, he has ruptured himself, and is not fit.

4507. What age is he?—Twenty-one years.

4508. Did you work any further for the police in connection with this matter?—Yes.

4509. Do you think the Lloyds or Kellys knew anything of your working for the police?—They suspected me ever since Mr. Hare had his horses in my paddock.

4510. Did you tell Mr. Sadleir their camp was there in the ferns?—Yes.

4511. Did he send any one out to examine that?—He did not that I know of.
4512. Did you know that any party was sent out to watch this place?—They might have sent out for all I know.
4513. What kind of place was this camp in the ferns?—A whole big bush of ferns in the side of the creek, and there were logs and very high ferns.
4514. Did it look as if it had been used?—It was quite easy to see some one had been lying there.
4515. In June you saw Mr. Hare?—Yes.
4516. What occurred?—He sent a constable out to my place, stating that he wanted to see me on urgent business. That was on the 10th of June, and I told the constable I would see the Superintendent the next day, the 11th. He asked me if I could conceal a man in my house, and I told him if he would guarantee my safety I would be willing to do anything for him.
4517. What did you mean?—If any of the outlaws came upon me, that he was to guarantee to protect me.
4518. Did he send a constable then?—Yes.
4519. What name?—George Stephens.

Jacob Wilson, 5th May 1881.
continued.

4520. Was that the man known as the groom from the Faithfull’s Creek station?—Yes.
4521. Did that man go there?—Yes.
4522. Did he remain there?—Yes; he remained with me for a fortnight. He came to my place on the 14th of June, I worked with him every night after at Tom Lloyd’s place. We thought we could do better if we could get a night-glass to look at Lloyd’s house at night to see who came in it. George Stephens went into Benalla on the 28th of June, and when he got to the place he was captured, and he came back to me on the 29th, Tuesday, for his blankets, and I told him I was not satisfied with him leaving.
4523. Why?—He might have stopped there for a month after, as the men might have had suspicion of me harboring detectives.
4524. Was he removed?—Yes, he told me he would be in Melbourne that night.
4525. What became of you?—I was left there by myself.
4526. Did you stay then?—Yes, from June to the 17th October.
4527. Why did you come away then?—When the Kellys found that the man at my place was the groom at Younghusband’s station, and he had also been in the law courts at Beechworth, and he had been stationed at Glenrowan three months as a porter on the railway, they told me. They called me all the names they could, and said I would harbor the police, and they came at night and often insulted me.
4528. Who came?—Patrick Lloyd came first, in the afternoon. He is brother to Tom Lloyd. He came riding past my paddock, I was sitting on top of my fence, and he said to me, “You b—— old b——, we will have it in for you.” I did not say one word to him, and he said, “We will make it hot for you.” This was on the 16th, Saturday night. Two other men came to my place. I did not know them because it was dark. I ran away into my paddock, through stones and grass in my place, and yelled out. I ran away and went in the morning at four o’clock. Walked 13 miles into Benalla.
4529. Have you been driven out of your place solely in consequence of what you did in the Kelly matters?—Most decidedly.
4530. Do you believe the outlaws kept about that quarter?—At times they came there very often.
4531. To Tom Lloyd’s?—To Tom Lloyd’s very often. I knew that all along they came there very often.
4532. Did you know Byrne?—I did not.
4533. But you knew Dan Kelly and Ned you say?—I never knew other than those two.
4534. What means of support has Patsy Lloyd; how do they occupy their time farming, and so on?—They never do anything but ride about.
4535. Did you ever hear of them as connected with horse-stealing, or anything of that kind?—I often heard them say so, but I knew nothing about it. I know that is what they are supposed to live on—they must live on something.
4536. They did not occupy themselves in any honest work—farming, and so on?—No.
4537. Is there much connection between the house of the Lloyds and the Kellys?—Yes, they are always back and forwards.
4538. Are there always a lot of people stopping at Lloyd’s?—Yes, strangers.
4539. Are they residents, or were they strange faces?—They are all friends; that is, a meeting of the whole of the outlaws’ friends.
4540. Have you received any remuneration from the Government for keeping Stephens?—Yes; he paid me eight shillings, and he went away. Superintendent Sadleir asked me in Benalla what he gave, and I told him, and he gave me £1 then. I got £1 8s. for that.
4541. And how much for the hay?—Thirty shillings. They were in my paddock two nights and two days.
4542. Did you bear a good character in the district?—Yes.
4543. Were you ever summoned by the police for any offence?—Never in the colony. I can say before this Commission, I am 29 years in this colony, and there is nothing against my character.
4544. Why did you wish to be examined before this Commission?—I wished to be examined because I suffered greatly, and so that I may get compensation from the Government for my loss.

4545. Were you on a selection?—Yes.

4546. How long?—Five years.

4547. Have you paid the rent?—Yes, every rent.

4548. What has been done with the land now?—Somebody else has got it now.

4549. Has it been re-selected?—No, I owed some money, and I am seven months in Melbourne now.

A man named De Boos has got it now.

4550. You owed some money on this land?—Yes.

4551. In consequence of those difficulties did you pay your rent?—Yes.

4552. Did you owe some money to a storekeeper?—Yes.

4553. Who was that?—De Boos.

4554. Did De Boos sell your land under the sheriff?—Yes.

4555. Who was the purchaser?—He was himself.

4556. Would it have occurred—would you have been in debt and your land sold if you had been able to remain on it?—No, because I have three big sons, and they have to run away from the district the same as I have. £17 was all the debt I was in.

4557. Did De Boos sell your land for that?—Yes.

4558. How many acres?—Fifty-five acres.

4559. Then it was sold for that?—That £17 I was in debt.

4560. What improvements were on it?—There were improvements on it valued by the Crown lands bailiff at £106, and I have another receipt for clearing five acres valued at £20.

4561. Where are your sons now?—I do not know; I have not heard from them since the 17th October.

4562. They have cleared out?—Yes.

4563. Before that were they living with you?—Yes.

4564. What do you estimate your loss at?—Well, my loss is very great, if I estimate it. I lost my living and I lost my liberty.

4565. Was not there some arrangement made between yourselves and the police to make use of it as a station?—Mr. Sadleir said to me, one time I was there, they were going to put up police stations, and he thought my place might be a suitable place to put a station on; and I said it was the best place they could have, because all the gaps in the dividing ranges coming from Mansfield and into Greta are near there, and it would answer well as the people travel that road mostly.

4566. Who travel that way?—Those outlaws and the horse thieves.

4567. That arrangement came to nothing!—No, it came to nothing; he said he would see what he could do, and that was the last I heard of it.

4568. How long have you been in Melbourne?—Seven and a half months.

4569. What money have you to live upon?—I came to Melbourne with very little money, £26, when I started from Benalla, but I had to give my son some, and I am indebted a good deal in Melbourne.

4570. What are you doing?—I have just got a situation to go to to-morrow.

4571. Did you get any employment since you came down?—No.

4572. How many sons have you?—Three.

4573. What ages are there?—One is 21 years, another is 20, and the other is 18.

4574. What were you doing before that, were you all living on the 50 acres?—No, my eldest son had rented a little farm from a man named Cass, at Glenrowan.

4575. Has he gone from his farm?—Yes, after Ned Kelly was captured there were some of the outlaws’ friends round his place every night for about a month, and he had to call the attention of his neighbors to look out and help him to watch at night. He went to Glenrowan to the constable in charge there, and informed him of what had happened, but the constable said it was as much as they could do to look after themselves; there were only four constables in Glenrowan, and they could not look after him.

4576. You know Tom Lloyd’s house?—Yes.

4577. Supposing you had seen the Kellys there in the evening at eight o’clock, and you had gone into Benalla and given information to Mr. Sadleir that they were there or in Patterson’s paddock, would there have been any difficulty in the police getting there?—No, no difficulty if they were ready to go.

4578. How many miles is it from Benalla?—About twelve miles.

4579. Would there be any difficulty in finding Tom Lloyd’s house at paddock if they got out at Lurg?—No.

4580. What is the road from Benalla to Tom Lloyd’s?—You go to Kilfera station—the Kilfera road they call it.

4581. Up the main road?—Yes, the main surveyed road to Greta, and there is a cleared road up to within five miles of Tom Lloyd’s house.

4582. Is it clear at his house?—No, a bush track the last five miles.

4583. Did you give any information to Mr. Hare, the time he sent out the man to stop at your house, that you had seen the Kellys about there?—I had a conversation with him.

4584. That you had seen them previous to the man being sent out?—No; I saw Ned Kelly about a month or two after he murdered the police, but I never gave information, for the reason that everything was in the paper next morning, and I would not run the risk.

4585. You are asked did you tell Mr. Hare that you had either seen the Kellys or were sure they were constantly about there?—I said to Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Nicolson, when I was in conversation, that I was perfectly sure they were at Lloyd’s house on occasions.

4586. Occasionally?—Often.

4587. Could a party of police have gone out to that camp, to examine it, without you knowing it?—Yes, they may have been there without me seeing it.

4588. Are we to understand that you left that district after the capture of the Kellys from personal fear?—Yes.

4589. That you were afraid to remain in that district in consequence of it being known to the Kelly sympathizers that you were in communication with the police?—Yes.

4590. And had a shelter to one of the police to give information?—Yes.

4591. And that also applies to the case of your sons?—Yes.

4592. And in consequence that your selection of 55 acres and improvements were sold to a party you owed £17 to?—Yes.

4593. And that you have not received anything out of that?—Yes.

4594. Why was Stephens sent to your house?—He was a detective, on the information I gave to Mr. Hare, suggesting that Stephens be sent to my place to watch Tom Lloyd’s place, and find out when the Kellys came there.

4595. And you had told Mr. Hare, previous to that, that they were in the habit of coming there?—Yes.

4596. Had you seen them there before?—I had not seen them.

4597. After the time you got up the cherry-tree, had you seen them?—No, I saw them before I got up the cherry-tree; I saw at one time thirteen horses tied up near Tom Lloyd’s place.

4598. How long before Stephens was sent to your place, that you saw a number of horses there?—In March, and then we found the hobbles, but I did not give information at once.

4599. Had you seen any unusual gathering of horses between the time of the cherry-tree and the time of the conversation with Mr. Hare?—No.

4600. Is there a well-beaten track from the Lloyds’ to the Kellys’ house?—Yes; Mrs. Lloyd used to run there with her buggy.

4601. Is Kelly’s house on the main road?—Yes, on the old Sydney road.

4602. The road from Greta to Glenrowan?—Yes, the main road from Winton’s to Greta, there is no main road to Glenrowan—you have to cross the bush to Glenrowan there.

4603. Kelly’s house is on that track?—Yes.

4604. What was the policeman doing while he was at your place?—At the time the Kellys were captured and the time I left the district, the police were twice at my place.

4605. No, I mean Stephens, the man who was at your place—did he go out often to look at Lloyd’s place?—Yes.

POLICE 2 C

Jacob Wilson, continued.
5th May 1881.

4606. How often?—Every night he could go out. There was a fellow ploughing at my place, and Stephens was prevented from going out, as we did not want any one to know it.

4607. But every night he could he went out?—Yes.

4608. Had you any crop on your place?—Eight acres of crop.

4609. Did you leave it standing?—Yes.

4610. What crop?—Wheat.

4611. What were your other two sons doing?—I had one son who was a servant with Mr. Bamford, who has been there two and a half years—a farm, near Benalla.

4612. Where is the other?—He was serving with a man named O’Horan, at Glenrowan.

4613. There was only really yourself living on the place?—That was all.

4614. By Mr. Sadleir.—When you informed me about the hobbles, how long were they there before you told me?—I think they were lying there after I was in Melbourne; there were three pairs of hobbles just as they were taken off the horses.

4615. I will read my note of the conversation I had with you. “Wilson called and reported that some month ago his sons found, under the Bald Hills, in a secluded cover, five pairs of hobbles; the ground was beaten about.” The same visit you told about the wires being cut in the fence?—Yes.

4616. I have got it here that your story was that the hobbles had been there a month before you told me?—I did not know how long they were.

4617. Did you find the hobbles there before you came to Melbourne?—Yes.

4618. How long did you remain in Melbourne?—Yes.
4619. How long did you find them before you left for Melbourne?—The same Sunday, Easter Sunday, we found them, and on the Monday I went to Melbourne.

4620. By the Commission.—Did you go to Superintendent Sadleir on your return from Melbourne?—The very minute I came out of the train, on the 3rd of April, there was a note to call at the police station, and I went there at once to see Mr. Sadleir.

4621. Your statement is that you found, on the Easter Sunday, these three wires cut, and the hobbles?—Yes.

4622. They looked quite fresh?—Yes.

4623. You got a letter to go to the barracks?—No, a private message left by Sergeant Whelan.

4624. Did you tell him, when you saw him in that interview, that you saw the hobbles about a month before?—No.

4625. By Mr. Sadleir.—That is not what I said. I have got a note of your conversation here, written at the time on that. I find you called on the 3rd April, and it was your opinion that the hobbles were a month lying?—Some of them. There were five pair of hobbles; two pair looked as if they had been a month.

4626. How long were they lying there before you spoke to me about them?—I think only from the Sunday we found them.

4627. How long were they there before you got them?—There were two pairs looked like a month since they had been worn; but they may have not used them.

4628. When you told me (that was on the 3rd) you found the hobbles on the Sunday before, would it have been any use going to look for tracks?—No.

4629. Would it have been of the slightest use?—No.

4630. Or to go expecting to find the Kellys?—No. I only gave you information for you to find, that they came there.

4631. While you were in the cherry-tree how many men rushed by?—I only saw two men go by, whom I am confident were Dan Kelly and young Tom Lloyd; but I heard plenty on the other side of me.

4632. Were they the only two men that rushed after you?—There were a lot rushed after me, but I did not see them.

4633. By the Commission.—Did you recognize any other voice in that party?—No.

4634. Did you hear old Lloyd?—No. I heard footsteps of some one on the other side, but I cannot tell who they were.

4635. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you see any arms with them?—I did not.

4636. And yet you think they were looking after the police—the outlaws?—I am certain sure it was the outlaws.

Mr. Sadleir.—I have a note of that visit too.

4637. By the Commission.—What did he tell about that?

Mr. Nicolson.—Not a word, not the smallest word. The note about it is simply “A visit from old Wilson, Greta.” His story was pretty much all as it is now. He was sure there were visits of people to the Lloyds, and that is why the action was taken.

4638. By the Commission.—Is there a date to that “A visit from old Wilson, Greta”?

Mr. Nicolson.—14th May.

4639. By the Commission (to the witness).—You could not have told on the 14th about the time you were up the tree?—Yes, that is the time I was up the tree, and I did not tell till the 16th. I was sick the day after; I was frightened to death. I told Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir both.

4640. Did you tell them you had to take refuge in a tree on the night of the 14th?—Yes.

4641. Did you see them take notes?—No.

4642. Did you tell them you had seen Dan Kelly and Lloyd together there?—I cannot tell that.

4643. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you ever see Dan Kelly after that at Lloyd’s?—No.

4644. You saw Mr. Hare also?—Yes.

4645. Did you tell him about it?—No, Mr. Hare never questioned me.

4646. Did you tell him you had seen him?—I do not know whether I spoke to him about being in the cherry-tree or not, because I spoke to Superintendent Nicolson about that.

4647. Did you see Ned Kelly at Lloyd’s after that?—No, not Dan Kelly.

4648. By the Commission.—Did you see Ned Kelly after the murders of the police at Mansfield?—Yes.

4649. You said just now you could not say whether it was before or after the murders?—I said two or three months after the murders. I do not remember whether it was December or January when he crossed the road.

4650. By Mr. Nicolson.—Do you remember seeing me once in the office?—Yes.

4651. You applied for your son about the police force?—Yes.

4652. And in the course of our conversation you told me something about mounted men coming to Lloyd’s house in the evening?—Yes.

4653. Did you not ask me to send a man there to watch there?—No; you asked me could I take a couple of men out, and that you would pay for them, and I said to you that I would be quite willing if you would promise me to protect me if anything happened, and you said you would, and it was all right, and it was a very dangerous matter for me to take a man there.

Jacob Wilson, 5th May 1881.

4654. Are you aware that just a day or two after that, that I met old Tom Lloyd in the road?—No, I am not.

4655. Do you remember one time in the Kilfera road seeing me talking with Tom Lloyd, both of us on horseback?—I remember it very well, but I did not know it was you then;—you had a big coat on.

4656. Do you remember, on that particular road, one afternoon seeing me talking with Tom Lloyd, both of us on horseback, and you went back?—Yes, I do, perfectly well. Tom Lloyd had a bundle of boots on his saddle. I did not know you, and I did not like to look much, because Tom Lloyd might be inquisitive.

4657. Are you aware that Tom Lloyd abused you to me?—No.

4658. He did abuse you as a personal enemy, and that he had his eye on you. I did not send two men there?—No.

4659. I did not send Stephens to you?—No.

4660. Are you aware that Stephens was a man very well known as working at the railway?—Yes, but I did not know that then.

4661. Are you aware when I proposed to send Stephens to your place that it was impossible, as he was almost as well known as you were there; was he not known to the people all about?—Yes.

4662. Was he not known to the Lloyds?—I do not know.

4663. Are you not aware that Stephens, the railway man, was known as a railway guard?—I know he was well known to them all about there as being a railway guard.

4664. Would it have been a proper thing of me to have sent Stephens to take care of you—a man so well known as a Government servant?—No, it would not be the proper thing to send him.

4665. Are you aware I was removed from the district soon after that?—Yes, in the latter end of May. I told you distinctly—"If you send men to my place, send dirty-looking men, who would not be detected as being policemen."

4666. By the Commission.—Did Stephens go out in the day?—No, only night.

4667. He was not known to be there by the outlaws’ friends?—Oh, they knew that he was there. They knew there was a man, because I stated to them that there was a man stopping at my place. He was going up shooting—that was the yarn I gave them—and I allowed him to leave his horse in my paddock till he was ready to go up; and when the Kellys were captured this man disappeared.

4668. Did they know it was Stephens at that time?—No, they said where was the man gone that was stopping at your place. I said we ran out of provisions, and said he could go and stop where he liked. I made it up to clear myself.

4669. He came to your place on the 14th of June?—Yes.

4670. Did you know his name was Stephens?—Not till he told me himself.

4671. How soon did you know that?—The same day he came.

4672. To your knowledge did the people about there know he was Stephens that was in the pay of the Government in June?—Yes, they did, because he had been three months on Glenrowan railway station, and they were going up there with their produce, and he was helping to unload on the railway.

4673. Did the people round there know that he was in your house as Stephens. Did he show himself about the neighborhood that they would know?—Yes.

4674. You said they did not know he was there?—They knew it was Stephens, because two men ploughing my land knew him directly they saw him, and their names were Petersons, living at Greta.

4675. Did Stephens tell you he was dismissed from the railway service?—He told me, of course. I knew it when he came to me what he was. Hee told me he had been on the Glenrowan railway station, and that he was dismissed. McDonald did not know but that he was dismissed.

4676. Who was McDonald?—The publican.

4677. Did Stephens tell you he knew the Kellys by appearance?—No.

4678. Did he say he would know them if he saw them?—No.

4679. By Mr. Hare.—He saw them at Faithfull’s Creek?—Yes.

4680. Did he not say he knew the outlaws?—Yes, he said if I saw Byrne ever, he had a double lip.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday next, at Eleven o’clock.

TUESDAY, 10TH MAY 1881.

Present:

Hon. F. Longmore M.L.A., in the Chair;

Mr. Sadleir asked to make a personal statement in reference to question 1602 in Mr. Hare’s evidence.

The Chairman.—You can take this opportunity of doing so.

Mr. Sadleir.—I refer to Mr. Carrington’s letter at the end of the question. That letter was put in as... giving his evidence; he had it from the 19th of July last, so he had full time to consider its purport, and yet he calmly and deliberately places this before the Commission as part of his evidence. If this sort of thing is to be allowed the reputation of no officer in the service—no person inside or outside the service—will be safe.

4681. By the Commission.—Was that letter evidence?—(Mr. Sadleir) That was put before you as evidence.

4682. If it be evidence, is it not probable that Mr. Carrington will be called later on in this enquiry, and you will be able to cross-examine him then?—Yes; but it has been said, “If a lie gets twenty-four hours start,” &c.

Mr. Dixon submitted that it would be better for Mr. Sadleir not go on but to wait till Mr. Carrington was present.

Mr. Sadleir.—I am entirely in the hands of the Commission, and if I am not to be heard will sit down.

4683. By the Commission.—What is your complaint?—The incorrectness of the thing; and its being put in is contrary to every rule of evidence—that an ex parte statement from a man himself absent should be put in as evidence, especially where it reflects on the reputation and character of another.

4684. It is too late to excise it now?—I myself hold several letters casting reflections on people. I should think it most dishonorable conduct, unbecoming in an officer or a gentleman, if I were to offer those before the Commission, and especially in the absence of the man whose reputation was attacked. I do not ask it to be excised, because what has happened cannot be remedied; but I would ask your opinion whether witnesses are to be allowed to put in ex parte statements of this sort, affecting the reputation of others.

By the Commission.—I do not know how we could prevent this statement going in. The evidence will be all before you, and we shall be able to receive any statement you make, and will be able to see whether there is any truth in it. We do not take Mr. Carrington’s evidence as worth more than any other man’s.

Mr. Sadleir.—It is a very serious thing to have one’s reputation damaged, and for five or six weeks to elapse before one can give an answer to it. I thought it just to myself to call attention to the matter, and there I will drop it for the present.

4685. By the Commission.—You may be quite sure that you will get fair play; and, if I mistake not, in the last portion of your evidence you alluded to this matter?—I did, but I was under the impression it was not admitted into the evidence.

4686. And gave your opinion of Mr. Carrington very clearly?—I was not aware whether it was printed or not.

Mr. Nicolson.—I wish to make one observation with reference to Jacob Wilson, who was called before you at the last meeting, and laid before you an account of his losses through being employed by the police. I wish to repeat again that I altogether repudiate having any connection with that matter. What ever loss he sustained was not through me.

4687. By the Commission.—Under your responsibility, no action was taken in reference to this man at all?—None, whilst I was there.

Thomas Patrick Dowling further examined.

4688. By the Commission.—Was Sherritt attached to the party?—Not that I am aware of; he was to show us the way over to Byrne’s house and back; that was what he was there for.

4689. Was he armed?—No.

4690. Was he to show the way always?—Yes.

4691. Was he supposed to be in the pay of the police at that time?—I did not know.

4692. You only got instructions he would show the way when you had to go there?—Yes.

4693. Was he always about the premises?—Yes.

4694. Had he arms in the house?—No, he was not armed. He had no arms at all, unless he used the ones we were supplied with.

4695. Did he do so?—No.

4696. When you returned from Byrne’s house in the morning, what did you generally do?—We went to bed.

4697. Which bed?—On the floor of the hut.

4698. Not to Sherritt’s bed?—No, in the kitchen we went.

4699. Was the door kept locked when you were in bed?—No, there were no locks on the door.

4700. Was it secured?—There was a stick on the inside.

4701. Was it shut in such a way as to prevent strangers coming in and seeing you?—No, anyone could come in and see we were there. They were in the habit of coming in there, but we were always on the alert and managed to get into the other room.

4702. Do you remember anyone coming into the room and seeing you?—No, not to see us.

4703. You never had any conversation with anyone who visited the house?—No, we had to remain in the bedroom for two hours sometimes.
4704. Did I understand you to say you were not aware of Sherritt’s not being employed by the Government?—I was aware he was employed by the Government.

4705. But I understood you to say he was not fully employed by the party of which you formed a part?—No, I was not aware that he was.

4706. Was he engaged in any other sort of occupation whatever?—I believe he was engaged by the officers, I am not sure.

4707. I mean during the time you were resident in this house by day and down by the hut at night, were you not conscious that he formed one of the party, with the same object and purpose that you were employed for?—Yes, I was.

4708. You say you went into the bedroom frequently when strangers came into the kitchen?—Yes.

4709. Could you overhear the conversation?—We could.

4710. From that overhearing, were you led to believe that any of those persons who came to the house were sympathizers?—No.

4711. There was no conversation of importance with reference to the Kellys and their sympathizers?—No.

4712. Was there anything to believe that the public knew you were in that house?—No; nothing passed by any of the visitors that came to the hut.

4713. Did they speak in whispers as if some one was in?—They spoke in a very low tone of voice.

4714. Do you think that was to prevent anyone in the adjoining room hearing?—No; I do not know.

4715. Were the Byrnes there?—Paddy Byrne stood on the road the Sunday previous to Sherritt being shot.

4716. We have it in evidence that the old lady, Mrs. Byrne, used to go about—was Paddy Byrne the only one that seemed to be about there?—He was the only one I knew of.

4717. Did it occur to you that he was searching for the police?—I believe he was.

4718. Were the Sherritt and Byrne families on good terms?—Not that I was aware of; I never saw them holding any conversation.

4719. Where was Sherritt?—In the kitchen.

4720. Did he say “There is Paddy watching the place”?—Yes.

4721. And did he say “keep quiet” or anything?—He told us to keep quiet—that Paddy Byrne was standing on the road on a grey horse watching what was going on. Two or three days afterwards he came round to the back of the hut, and took stock of the back of the hut.

4722. It was quite possible for Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly to be in Byrne’s house and you not know it?—It was.

4723. This was two or three days before the murder when he came to the back of the hut?—Two or three days prior to the murder, and about a night or two afterwards we saw him going away on this grey horse, about two o’clock in the morning.

4724. He was watching the house?—I believe he was going to give information that we were there and about the hut.

4725. How old is Paddy Byrne?—About 20, I should think.

4726. Do you think the object of those two visits was from the impression that he had that you were present there—do you think he had any information that you were in that building?—That I could not say.

4727. What was the impression on you and the men you were working with at the time as to that?—I believe he was to give them a description of the hut.

4728. Were they not of their own knowledge familiar with every spot surrounding the hut so that they did not require information from him?—I could not say.

4729. Was it a new hut?—I could not say it was new; I cannot say how old it was.

4730. How long had Sherritt been married?—About seven months, I should think.

4731. Do you know whether he resided there before he was married or not?—I do not think he did.

4732. Do you not know that he lived with his father?—Not that I am aware of.

4733. Seeing Byrne going, as you thought, to inform the outlaws, did it not occur to you to be more careful to set a watch and guard the place?—It made us more careful, and we gave information about his going away. I or Armstrong gave information to the sub-officer at Beechworth, and two black trackers were sent out under Constable Kirkham. I believe that Paddy Byrne had returned at daylight in the morning, and they did not take any notice of that, because he had returned.

4734. It would have been easy enough to track him where he went that night?—It would.

4735. They never attempted to follow him?—No, it was not our place to do so.

4736. Do you know, of your own knowledge, whether they did?—I know they did not come out to the hut and track Paddy Byrne.

4737. All you know is that you gave information that Byrne had been seen at two o’clock in the morning, but you do not know what was done in consequence of that?—No, I do not.

4738. You heard that two black trackers and Kirkham were sent out?—I saw them.

4739. Where?—At Beechworth. I had been sent in a night or two afterwards for something.
4740. You heard from them that they had been sent out?—Yes.
4741. Did you see them out?—I did.
4742. Where?—At the Beechworth police station, in the hut there.
4743. Did you see them on the ground where you saw Paddy Byrne?—No.
4744. Could they have come to you or to the place where you saw Paddy Byrne, in front of Sherritt’s hut, without you knowing it?—They might have done so, but I do not think they did. I heard Kirkham say they were going back the next day—that they were not going out.

Mr. Hare.—I gave evidence of that on page 89 of my evidence—that Armstrong reported there were no steps taken.

4745. By the Commission (to the witness).—Might Byrne’s watching the hut have been more with the view of ascertaining that Sherritt was assisting the police than to find out that the police were really there?—I believe it was to give them the best way to come to the hut.
4746. Is what you want us to understand this, that you believe that man went there to set the hut to bring the outlaws there?—Yes, I believe he did.
4747. Did you think he did so at the time?—I have always thought so since, and did so immediately afterwards—after Sherritt was shot.
4748. Were you at Sherritt’s house when the notice came that the Kellys were at Glenrowan?—No, I was at Beechworth; I came in the night previous there.
4749. Were you called away at once to Glenrowan in the morning?—Yes, I was knocked up about three o’clock in the morning to go there.
4750. What time did you arrive there?—Between eight and nine o’clock in the morning.
4751. Were the police surrounding the building when you arrived?—I believe they were.
4752. Did you hear any firing?—I saw one shot as I was coming along in the train previous to arriving at Glenrowan station.
4753. Will you state what you saw in as few words as possible, and what you did yourself. When you arrived were you ordered to any particular place?—We were ordered to go up and surround the Glenrowan house.

206

T. P. Dowling, 10th May 1881.
4774. Then the shots had no effect?—No, they had not.
4775. What time was it you fired at him?—Two o'clock I should think, I am not sure, I could not form any idea what time it was; I had no watch on me at the time; it was after the civilians surrendered.
4776. Did you estimate the length of time they were there before they came out?—It was twelve or one o'clock, I should think, when they came out.
4777. Cannot you fix the time when you commenced firing—what time did you get down?—Between eight and nine o'clock.
4778. You then left the railway and took up your position at the north of the building?
4779. In a direct line with the building or facing it?—Partly facing it.
4780. That would be about half-past nine?—Yes.
4781. What did you do after you got to this spot?—I believe I saw some of the outlaws come to the window at the west of the building.
4782. Did you see Mr. Sadleir then?—Yes.
4783. Where was he when you saw him?—He walked towards the civilians.
4784. What did you do after the civilians came out?—I fired some into the building.
4785. Where was he standing before he commenced to walk?—Twenty or thirty yards on the north, lower down than we were, between us and the railway platform.
4786. Facing the railway line?—Yes.
4787. Could you see them leaving the railway line?—Yes, I could see them pretty well.
4788. And you saw Mr. Sadleir there?—Yes.
4789. What had you done by the time you fired three shots—you saw the prisoners come out of the hut?—Yes, I fired some into the building.
4790. In the interval between your moving from the north point to the west of the building, did you receive any instructions from any officer to do any particular work?—No, I did not.
4791. After the prisoners left the hotel, where did you go then?—I walked closer up towards them.
4792. Doing what?—I was looking out to see if any of the outlaws were among them.
4793. Did you still remain about that spot?—Yes.
4794. When did you leave watching any portion of the hotel?—When we got word by the police that they were dead inside.
4795. You remained about that spot till the place was fired?—Yes.
4796. Did you see any one fire from the hotel after the prisoners were released—you were then within 20 yards of the hotel?—No, I cannot say I did.
4797. You were watching the building all the time, from the time you took up your position?—Yes, I am not sure. I believe I saw shots fired at Constable Williams.
4821. Did you see any shots fired after the prisoners were released?—I think I did.
4822. It is not a question of thinking—did you or did you not?—I am not positive.
4823. Is it possible there were none?—There may have been, because there were shots fired by other constables from the other end of the building. I cannot say for certain.
4824. When you were placed in this position, from the north to the west, and back again, where were the other police stationed?—All around the house.
4825. Surrounding the whole building right round?—Yes.
4826. Were there shots fired from all directions?—Yes.
4827. Could policemen have fired from the back side, and you and others been under the impression that they came from the hotel?—No; we could judge pretty well.
4828. Was there any danger when you were firing to the persons at the back?—Yes, there was.
4829. Did you receive any instructions how to conduct your fire?—I got word from other constables, and I think it came from the officers.
4830. What word did you receive from the other constables?—That we were to be careful and hit the house, in order not to shoot any other constables on the other side.
4831. Whom did they say that order came from?—Mr. Sadleir, I think it was.
4832. Did they tell you who it was?—I cannot swear, but I was under the impression it was.
4833. Did either of those constables say that the orders came from Mr. Sadleir, or any one else?—No, they did not.
4834. Were you under cover of a tree or fence?—Some were out in the open, and some behind trees.
4835. How many police would there be surrounding the hotel, say at eleven o’clock in the morning?—I could not judge who were at the other side. I could not see any of those.
4836. Did you see any officer connected with the police at any time during the day for the purpose of giving information to the men placed in position?—I did. I saw Mr. Sadleir going round to them.
4837. Did he come to you?—No, I do not think he did.
4838. Or any other officer during the day?—I saw Mr. O’Connor walking around.
4839. Did either of the officers come to give instructions?—No.
4840. Did any sergeant or constable give you instructions?—No.
4841. Did you see the black trackers?—I did.
4842. Where were they stationed?—They were further back than me, also some of them were more to the west.
4843. Further north?—Yes.
4844. Did you see the black trackers?—I did.
4845. Where were they stationed?—They were further back than me, also some of them were more to the west.
4846. But were further back from the hotel than you?—Yes.
4847. That would be at nine o’clock?—No, after nine; about ten or eleven.
4848. Did you not see the black trackers till after you had been on the ground an hour?—Yes, I did; they were in about a line with me.
4849. You did not see them when you went to this point beyond the platform?—Yes, I did.
4850. Where were they?—A few yards further back from me.
4851. Nearer Beechworth?—Yes.
4852. Where was Mr. O’Connor at this time?—He was coming up with some of the reporters from the railway station.
4853. Do you know the reporters?—No.
4854. Would you know them if you were to see them?—No.
4855. How do you know they were reporters?—I heard some other constables say so.
4856. Where did he come to?—He came away up round to the west of the building.
4857. Come round from the railway station to the west?—Yes.
4858. Did you see what he did?—No, I did not take much notice.
4865. You have recognized that direction in all the questions you have answered?—Yes.
4866. Mr. O'Connor came from the platform round at the north end of the building, travelling round, and the black trackers were stationed at one point, or were they divided?—They were divided, and were all behind trees.
4867. In which direction were they stationed—one separately or two together?—I think there were two of them together in some places.
4868. Altogether they would be in three or four different places?—They would be in three different places to the west—that would be on the opposite end to the railway station.
4869. Mr. O'Connor was several times walking about during the day attending to his duties; having the black trackers under his charge, was that so?—I never saw him speaking to any of them; I do not know his motive in walking about.
4870. Did he give you any orders?—He did not.
4871. Did you see Mr. O'Connor from the time the prisoners were released at the hotel?—Yes, I think I did, once or twice.
4872. Where was he at the time the people came out and held their hands up and walked towards Mr. Sadleir; did you see him at that time?—No, I would not be sure I did see him.
4873. You saw him several times during the day?—Yes.
4874. Were you there when the house was set fire to?—I was.
4875. Did you hear any shots being fired from the building when the house was set fire to for some time?—No, I did not.
4876. Did you see the priest going into the house?—I think the first police to go in were Constable Armstrong and Constable Dwyer.
4877. I said the priest, not the police?—Yes, I did see him go in.
4878. Did he remain in long?—No, I should think he just walked through.
4879. Did he come rushing out again?—He just held out his hands and said they were all dead inside.
4880. Did any constables go to the building before he did that?—I do not think so.
4881. Did any of them move from their positions before that to rush the building?—Not that I am aware of.
4882. They rushed the building immediately after that?—Yes, I think so.
4883. How far were the police generally from the building when the priest went in?—I believe I and Kirkham were the nearest to it.
4884. About how far, according to your estimate?—About twenty yards, I should think.
4885. And no policeman passed you to try to get in until after the priest held up his hands?—No.
4886. Was it immediately after the house was set fire to the priest walked up to the building?—Yes, immediately after.
4887. Did he ask to be allowed to go in before it was set on fire?—I could not say that.
4888. Did you hear about any volunteer wishing to go in and rush the building before it was set on fire?—No.
4889. Neither police nor civilian?—No.
4890. Did you go down to the railway station to get lunch after you got there?—I went for the purpose of getting ammunition. I went to Mr. Sadleir and asked him.
4891. How many rounds do you suppose you fired at the house?—I might have fired about a hundred, perhaps.
4892. So many as that?—I think so.
4893. How many charges had you served out to you at various times—is it not customary to serve out a certain number of charges?—Not on that particular day; I do not think so.
4894. What was your arm?—A Spencer rifle and a revolver.
4895. Were you allowed to help yourself to cartridges or were they given out by any recognized officer?—No, they were not particular; you can go and help yourself. Mr. Sadleir told me to get them from someone; I do not recollect where it was.
4896. Can you recollect?—I got them from some place at the railway station, I cannot remember where now.
4897. Did you help yourself from the store without taking note of the quantity?—I did; I cannot say how many I took.
4898. You just took up a number?—Yes.
4899. You think it is probable you fired a hundred shots?—Yes, I daresay.
4900. Do you think any other constables there fired as many as you did?—I believe several of them did not fire so many.
4901. How many constables, do you estimate, as far as your knowledge goes, at this particular time were within your vision and would be firing?—There would be seven or eight, perhaps.
4902. Not more?—Not at the north of the building I should think, as near as I could guess.
4903. Do you think those seven or eight men had as much ammunition served out as you had?—I do not.
4904. How much do you think they had?—I do not know; they remained up in the one particular spot.
4905. Can you give any special reason why you should have fired so many more shots than your comrades?—We received orders on two or three different occasions to fire on the house.
4906. It would apply equally to your comrades as to the others?—Yes, but I had a Spencer rifle, with seven rounds, whereas the others had only two; they were armed with double-barrelled breech-loader shot guns.

4907. Do you wish us to understand that there was such an indiscriminate firing into a house where there were only three individuals at most, and one of those known to be shot. What purpose could be served by that—did that strike you?—Well, there were some occasions when we thought we saw them at the windows. In fact, I know I saw them on one occasion.

4908. Do you think the house was the object, or to fire for any express purpose?—I heard once that the outlaws were seen to put their heads out of the chimney, and we fired into the chimney then.

4909. From the outside?—From the outside.

4910. Did you fire through the boards so that the shots would go through into the inside of the chimney?—No, through the chimney; that is, into the bricks.

4911. Where was the head seen?—Out of the top. I did not see it I heard one of the constables say so.

4912. What hour was that?—I cannot form any idea.

4913. Did you expect the bullets to go through the brickwork?—We did—that after a few rounds they would.

4914. Did you see the effects of the shots disintegrating the bricks—powdering them down?—No I did not, take much notice. I saw dirt flying every time.

4915. How many shots were fired at the chimney?—Several; I could not say how many.

4916. Did you see any effect upon the chimney?—No, I did not.

4917. As far as your own feeling is concerned, if you had been ordered with the other men to surround the building, would the men have obeyed, and could they have rushed without any great loss, and prevented the delay that occurred?—I believe several of the policemen would have been shot, because the outlaws could have been in one of the centre rooms and seen them from either end.

4918. You were twenty yards from the building, exposed to fire; would you have been in greater danger in rushing and endeavoring to close with them?—Yes, I believe I would.

4919. You said you were exposed; is that so, or were you concealed behind a tree?—I was exposed at the time one of the outlaws came out of the building.

4920. But you could fall back behind a tree?—No, not at that particular time. I was standing, watching the house at that time.

4921. Were not you in quite as great danger at a distance of twenty yards by expert shots as if you had made a desperate rush on the building with your comrades?—I might have had a chance if I had lain down.

4922. You are a practised shot, I suppose—you have practised in the use of firearms?—Not since I came into the police. I might have fired five or six rounds at most, in Mooroopna, when I was stationed there.

4923. Then, from the small practice you have had, would you feel any fear of making sure of a man at twenty yards?—No, I would not.

4924. As sure as at ten yards?—Yes, I would.

4925. Then were not the men standing and firing at the house in as great danger as if they had closed and made that rush?—I do not think so.

4926. If you had not fired a single shot you could have kept the outlaws there till the present time?—No, I do not think so.

4927. Was there any chance of their escaping, suppose they had come out?—Not if they had come out in the light but I believe if they had come out at dusk they might have escaped.

4928. Could they come out at night and escape?—Yes.

4929. Was it what the police talked of as being likely that night would fall before they were captured and that they would get away?—I never heard them say so.

4930. At what hour did you afterwards see the last of the outlaws at the house?—It was one of them that came out after the people surrendered—I believe it was after; he came out in the back yard at the west of the building.

4931. Did you see anyone at the windows?—I did.

4932. Did you see any constable fire at that man when he came to the window?—I did.

4933. What constable?—I think Constable Williams or Williamson I fired also.

4934. Did you hear any constable say "There is Dan Kelly at the window"?—No, we could not tell them one from the other in armour.

4935. Were you present when Constable Johnson set fire to the building?—I was.

4936. Did you hear anything about a cannon being sent for?—I heard it spoken of by the other constables.

4937. That they were waiting for the cannon to blow down the house?—Yes.

4938. Do you know the reason the place was set fire to was because they thought the cannon would not arrive before dusk and the outlaws might escape?—No, I did not.
4939. Did you hear that said at the time?—No.
4940. Did you hear why the cannon did not come?—No, I did not.
4941. You said just now, I believe, that you received commands of what you were to do while you were there, after taking your position, from some officer of police—did you?—Yes.
4942. Were the orders passed from man to man?—Passed from man to man.
4943. Whom did you receive orders from?—I could not say.
4944. Did the orders pass from right to left or left to right?—Left to right, I think.
4945. Whom did you get your ammunition from?—We went to the railway station; Mr. Sadleir told us where to go.
4946. Did you go to him about it?—Yes.
4947. Did you leave a constable in your position when you left?—Yes, there were some not far away.
4948. Did you say to the next constable, “I am short of ammunition, I am going for a fresh supply”?—I think I said, “I will go the station for more ammunition.”
4949. Then when you went to the station whom did you see?—Mr. Sadleir was the first, I think.
4950. Did he see you serve out your ammunition?—No.
4951. Did you take it yourself?—Yes.
4952. What was it in?—I could not say what it was in now.

T. P. Dowling, continued, 10th May 1881.

4953. What did you say to Mr. Sadleir when you went down with your rifle and without ammunition—try and recollect what you said and what occurred exactly?—I had no more ammunition, he told me to go and get some off someone who was there.
4954. Did he question you as to what was going on in front, or give any instructions what you were to do when you went back to the front?—No, he did not. He was up there a few minutes previous to that. He only said we were to take up our posts as usual.
4955. You say he was up there; where was “there”?—Fifteen or twenty yards nearer to the railway station than where I was.
4956. Between your position and the railway station?—Yes.
4957. Did you see him come round to the men?—I did on a few occasions previous to that.
4958. Did you see Mr. O’Connor?—I did.
4959. Was he going round to the black trackers or to the ordinary men?—He was walking with some of the reporters.
4960. Was he armed?—I think he had a double-barrelled gun, I would not be sure.
4961. Had he a cap on his head?—That I could not say.
4962. What o’clock was that?—Previous to dinner time and after, I think.
4963. Did you hear one of the constables volunteer to go up to the hotel in Kelly’s armour?—No, I did not.
4964. You did not hear it talked about that there was one who volunteered?—Yes, I heard that Constable Dwyer offered to go and rush.
4965. In Kelly’s armour?—No, not in armour. I also heard that Constable Montfort volunteered to rush afterwards.
4966. Did you see Senior-Constable Kelly at all about?—No, I did not.
4967. Or Sergeant Steele?—Yes, I believe I saw Sergeant Steele.
4968. What distance apart were the men surrounding the building?—It might be ten or twelve yards.
4969. All round the house?—Yes.
4970. It was quite possible to keep the outlaws there without firing a single shot?—Not if it was dusk.
4971. Why?—Because they could have escaped, and we would not have known it was not one of ourselves.
4972. Was there no means of making fires to surround the building, so as to make a light and prevent them escaping at night?—Yes, you could have made a fire there.
4973. What was the feeling amongst the police, that what was wanted was to have them out sometime before dark?—Yes.
4974. Was that the feeling universally amongst the police?—Yes.
4975. Because, after dark, they might get away?—Yes. There were some of the horses shot previous to that, so that they should not get away riding.
4976. By Mr. O’Connor.—You stated that I was pointed out to you when you got out of the train—what time would that be?—About ten o’clock.
4977. Can you remember how I was dressed?—I think you were dressed in a grey suit, if I do not mistake.
4978. Had I a long coat on?—You had long boots on. I am not aware if you had a long coat on.
4979. I think you must have been mistaken about me at that time. Do you remember whether I had a long coat, nearly down to my heels—what they call an ulster?—Well, I am not sure.

4980. Can you tell me who the reporters were I was with?—No.

4981. Can you swear they were reporters—might they not have been police?—I think they were reporters.

4982. Can you state who the man was that told you?—No I heard several of the police say they were reporters.

4983. By the Commission.—Is that the gentleman—[pointing to Mr. O'Connor]—who was there on that occasion?—No I would not swear it is him now.

4984. By Mr. Sadleir.—How soon after you landed from the train did I speak to you?—I do not remember, I am sure.

4985. By the Commission.—Who came with you, in charge?—Senior-Constable Mullane.

4986. Did Mullane report you and your party to Mr. Sadleir?—Yes, I believe he did.

4987. Do not believe—do you know?—No, I would not swear he did.

4988. Did he bring you out together, as police are generally taken out, or one by one?—We got out one by one.

4989. Did he bring you up and show you?—I remember Mr. Sadleir telling us to take up our posts at the north of the building. That is all I remember.

4990. By Mr. Sadleir.—How long after you landed?—I think a few minutes after.

4991. Where were you then?—I was on the platform.

4992. You said McHugh and you fired at one of the outlaws, at the window?—Yes, the one outside.

4993. At what hour was that?—I think it was after the civilians had surrendered.

4994. You said you thought it was at two o'clock; do you think so still?—To the best of my belief, it was. I will not swear.

4995. By the Commission.—How do you reconcile that with your answer that you would not swear you saw a shot fired after the prisoners were released from the hotel; did this man outside fire any shots when he came out?—No, he did not. He had a gun lying across his arms.

4996. Did you see one of the outlaws outside?—I did.

4997. Was the outlaw that came outside out before the civilians left or after?—I am not sure; I believe it was after.

4998. Did you fire at him immediately?—I did. McHugh was the first, and I was the next.

4999. Where were you standing at that time?—I was within twenty yards of him at the time, facing from the hotel, he was in the back yard, at the west of the building, and I was at the north.

211

5000. How long after the people left the hotel?—I am not positive whether it was before or after. I will not swear to that.

5001. By Mr. Sadleir.—You say it was about two o'clock when you last saw an outlaw?—Yes.

5002. Do you remember the occurrence when I was assured by a man in front that McHugh's last shot, and probably yours, brought down one of them—did you hear anything of that?—I heard some of them say one of them fell down in the chimney.

5003. Was that the shot you are speaking of now?—No.

5004. Can you say at what hour that occurrence was?—No.

5005. I suggest that it was about two o'clock—could it possibly have been about two o'clock?—It may have been. I would not swear, because I had no watch, and did not take notice at the time.

5006. Was there not a great confusion about the time that day. What time did you turn out that morning—were you in bed that night at all?—I was, for a little time.

5007. What time did you leave Beechworth—was it not very early in the morning?—It was. We arrived at Glenrowan between eight and nine.

5008. Is not that likely to confuse any man’s notion of the hour of the day getting up at unusual hours?—Yes, it is.

5009. You cannot speak positively as to any hour you have given?—No.

5010. You have said that the prisoners were let out between twelve and one—would you be surprised to hear they were let out at ten?—I would not.

5011. Then time confusion as to the time I have spoken about would account for that?—Yes.

5012. You have stated that I gave you orders to fire two feet from the floor—where did you stand at that time?—Immediately after we came out of the train I think it was.

5013. Then Senior-Constable Mullane would be present. I saw him jump out of the train, and you came with him—he must have been present when I gave those orders?—I could not say whether he was or not.

5014. Considering the confusion of the hours, is it possible that those orders were given to you after the prisoners escaped, and that the order had reference to Cherry, and who was supposed to be lying on the floor?—It is.

5015. By the Commission.—That occurs to you now from what the officer asks—that that is possible?—Yes.
5016. By Mr. Sadleir.—You conscientiously think you may have been so far mistaken that the orders may have been after the prisoners escaped?—I do not recollect the hours. I had little sleep that night, and none for two or three nights before that.

5017. By the Commission.—And in such cases time might go quickly or slowly without your observing it?—I think it would go very slowly.

5018. You say you had a Spencer rifle on that occasion?—Yes.

5019. Had you much practice with the Spencer rifle previous to this?—I had none whatever.

5020. Had you much practice in firearms previous to this?—Previous to joining the force I had a little practice.

5021. When a Spencer rifle is loaded, and you know how to put the cartridges into the magazine, is there much trouble except pulling the trigger and holding it straight?—No.

5022. And then you have only to load again?—Yes.

5023. By Mr. Sadleir.—From your position, could you see the front door—that door facing the railway?—Yes.

5024. Were you not rather at the end and back rather than the end and front?—I was more at the north of the building all the time.

5025. That is taking the chimney as the north?—Yes.

5026. Were you not more north and west than north and east?—I was.

5027. By the Commission.—Were you stationed more towards the back fence or towards the front of the house?—I do not know the back of the fence.

5028. You know the verandah is on the front?—That would be the east.

5029. You did not see me while the priest was approaching, and I think I saw Mrs. Jones.

5030. Then you shifted your position so as to enable you to do so, because the house does not turn round?—I was moving about all the time.

5031. Where were you then when Father Gibney went into the building?—(No answer.)

5032. By the Commission.—Did you see him going in?—Yes.

5033. Did you see the door when he went in?—I saw him go in.

5034. By Mr. Sadleir.—He was approaching the building. Did you see him step on the verandah and go in at the door?—No, I did not.

5035. He was out of view for those few steps?—Yes.

5036. Did you see me during this time?—No, I will not swear that I did.

5037. You did not see me while the priest was approaching the building?—No, I did not.

5038. Might I not, from the other end, have rushed to intercept the police without your seeing it?—Yes, you might.

5039. Did you see anything going on at the other end of the building—did you see Johnson?—No; but I saw the priest approaching, and I think I saw Mrs. Jones.

5040. Did you know what was going on at that end?—No.

5041. Was not your first knowledge of the fire seeing the smoke?—It was.

5042. You heard a smart volley before the smoke appeared?—Yes.

5043. You did not understand what that meant?—No.

5044. You said you did not see Senior-Constable Kelly about at all?—No, not that I am aware of.

5045. By the Commission.—Did you know Senior-Constable Kelly by sight before you were at Glenrowan?—No, I will not swear that I did.

5046. You will not swear you saw him before that?—No.

5047. Could you swear to him if he were in plain clothes in the room now?—Yes.

T. P. Dowling, continued.
10th May 1881.

5048. Would you swear it was not Senior-Constable Kelly who was pointed out to you for Mr. O’Connor that morning?—I could not tell that.

5049. By Mr. Sadleir.—Where did you see Sergeant Steele?—I cannot say whether I saw him. I think I saw him in the morning.

5050. Are you not aware that Sergeant Steele got hurt on that occasion early, through Kelly falling on him, and never turned out again after that?—No, I did not know that.

5051. By the Commission.—As you were up very early that morning, and unable to account for the time during the day, is it not just as possible that the time you saw the outlaw at the back of the hotel may have been at ten or eleven instead of two?—It may have been.

5052. If some other constables say they saw this man at the back of the hotel, say at eleven o’clock, you are not in a position to contradict them?—No.

5053. By Detective Ward.—On what day did you leave Beechworth to join the party at Mrs. Sherritt’s?—On the night of the 17th June.

5054. Who was in charge when you arrived there?—Constable Armstrong.
5055. Was Constable Duross with you at the time?—Yes.
5056. I gave you instructions to report yourself to Constable Armstrong, who was in charge of the party?—Yes.
5057. And sent a guide with you to show you the place?—Yes.
5058. You did receive instructions from him and accompany him to watch a certain place?—Yes.
5059. The Chairman (to Detective Ward).—We have got all that from him. Have you any point you wish to establish?
5060. By Mr. Ward (to the witness).—Do you remember the night I called at the house?—Yes, I do.
5061. Do you remember you were cutting wood in the bush at the time?—Yes.
5062. Did any person go for you, or were you returning of your own free will after performing the duty?—Mrs. Sherritt came up to where we were.
5063. After she did, did you see me some time after at the house?—Yes, a few minutes afterwards.
5064. Did you see me speaking to Constable Armstrong?—I did.
5065. You stated in your evidence the other day, I saw in the papers, that I told you and Armstrong to tell a lie. Would you remember now exactly what I did tell you?—No, you gave me no orders.
5066. That was Saturday the 19th?—Yes.
5067. On that night whom did you receive your orders from?—Armstrong.
5068. Will you be kind enough to tell the Commission what Armstrong told you. I never gave you any order at any time. I always communicated with the man in charge. Do you remember what Armstrong told you?—Yes, he said we were to go over and take up our stations at Byrne’s house.
5069. By the Commission.—Have you been speaking about the case to your comrades or anyone since you were last examined here about the evidence you were giving?—No.
5070. Was that all that Armstrong told you. Did he assign any reason why you were to take up your posts there?—No, he did not assign any reason.
5071. He did not say he had been told anything?—No, he did not.
5072. You stated in your evidence that Mrs. Sherritt came and told you to go to Byrne’s hut, and that she had been instructed to do so by Detective Ward?—Yes.
5073. Will you give the exact words that Mrs. Sherritt used to you when she came from the hut to you that night to where you were wood-cutting?—She said that Mr. Hare and Detective Ward were down at the hut, and that Ward sent her up to tell me and Armstrong to take up our posts as quickly as we possibly could at Byrne’s house.
5074. Did she say anything else?—That was all she told me to do.
5075. In giving your evidence you stated that Detective Ward had sent her on purpose, first stating that he had told the two constables to state that you were at Byrne’s house?—Yes.
5076. Did she tell you that?—Yes.
5077. Why do you not tell us that now. Give us the exact words?—I said there was no occasion to tell a lie.
5078. To her?—Yes.
5079. Did you meet Detective Ward again after that?—Yes, on our way down to the hut we met him.
5080. Did he give you the same advice that she had done?—Yes.
5081. He repeated that?—Yes.
5082. Did he say that he had told any other?—Yes, he said he told Constable Duross.
5083. To say what?—To say that I and Armstrong were over at the house in company with Sherritt, watching Byrne’s house.
5084. In consequence of that, did you act in accordance with his instructions. Did you ever tell that lie he desired you to tell?—No.
5085. You acted on it?—We went to Byrne’s house.
5086. And pretended you were there all the time?—Yes.
5087. Did Superintendent Hare see you?—I was sitting under a sapling when he came along.
5088. Did you get up?—No, I was going to, but Mr. Hare made a sign to me to remain where I was.
5089. Mr. Hare was under the impression that you had been there all the time?—I cannot tell.
5090. By Mr. Ward.—Who was wheeling the barrow of wood?—I could not say, I am sure.
5091. Had you your arms?—Revolver, I had I could not say about Armstrong.
5092. Could you go to Byrne’s house without first coming to where I was?—We could have, but we would not have been properly equipped.
5093. Was I not aware on calling there that your arms were at Sherritt’s house?—I could not say that.
5094. Did you ever go without your arms—without your double-barrelled gun there?—No, we did not.
We were all armed but Sherritt.

213

5095. You stated in your evidence that Pat Byrne was seen at the back of the house some two or three days before the murder of Sherritt?—Yes.
5096. By the Commission.—Did you report upon that at all?—I think Armstrong went in and gave the information.

T. P. Dowling, continued.
10th May 1881.
5097. Can you say for certain?—Only from hearsay.
5098. Can you tell whether Detective Ward knew anything at all about it from your own knowledge?—No, I cannot.
5099. By Detective Ward.—Do you remember the night of the 21st, four days after you went down (with reference to the night when Paddy Byrne was seen going away on the grey horse)?—Yes. I do not remember the date; I remember the circumstance.
5100. Was Aaron Sherritt with you on that night?—He was.
5101. Will you consider that matter over; I do not want to take you short?—Well, Constables Armstrong and Duross were on the opposite side of a sapling to me. I was the first to see him, and I said, “Is it he, here they are coming along.” And Armstrong ran out on the main road, and I told him to keep in where he was, and I do not remember seeing Sherritt there.
5102. By the Commission.—Did Constable Armstrong challenge him?—No. I was sitting by myself at the time, and the others were opposite to me. I could not see them because of the thick scrub.
5103. Did you see Pat. Byrne riding in the direction of Madden’s Gap on that occasion?—I did. That is at two o’clock in the morning.
5104.5. This is what Armstrong reports—“I beg to report that at 11.15 p.m. on the 21st instant Paddy Byrne left his house, riding his grey mare, and keeping off the road, high up the range, going in the direction of Madden’s Gap, which is situated in the Beechworth side of Mrs. Byrne’s house. The other constables and I who were watching the house did not consider it advisable to follow him, as he was riding at a half-trotting pace; and the night was so light we could be seen for several hundred yards off; besides being confident that it was Paddy, we thought it better to let him pass on than run the risk of being found out. We remained watching the house until 3.30 a.m., at which time he had not returned home. I may further add that the dog kept barking for the greater part of the night, so we were obliged to take our position almost at the foot of the range, far away from the house. On my return to camp I came into Beechworth to report the matter, prior to which I requested Moses to keep a sharp look out, and obtain all the information he could in the meantime.”
5105. Do you know who Moses was?—Sherritt, I believe.
5106. Must he not have been there then—was he there or not?—That was after we came home in the morning.
5107. Can you now say if he was there in the morning; was he there when Pat. Byrne went away on the horse?—I will not swear that he was.
5108. Or that he was not?—Or that he was not. He was there in the morning at his own house, and that was the time that Armstrong told him to keep a sharp look out.
5109. Do you recall whether he was on duty with you during the night?—He was on at the commencement of the night.
5110. Do you mean he went with you to Byrne’s house?—Yes.
5111. But you will not swear whether he was there at the time that Paddy Byrne rode away or not?—No.
5112. But he was at his own house in the morning?—Yes.
5113. By Mr. Ward.—Are you aware that there was any special object in his being away—that there was some reason for it—that he should not be actually where he should be stationed?—No, I am not.
5114. You will swear that you positively heard me give that order that I told Duross to tell Superintendent Hare a lie—that they were at the hut—
5115. By the Commission.—He has not positively sworn that. (To the Witness.)—Did you meet Detective Ward when you came in?—On the way down to the hut we did.
5116. Did he speak to you or to your party then?—Yes; he said, “Go on, and take up your posts at Byrne’s house.”
5117. Did any of you say it was not necessary for you to tell a lie—to make a misrepresentation?—Yes, I did.
5118. By Mr. Ward.—Within my hearing?—Well, I do not know you heard.
5119. By the Commission.—If Detective Ward said to you, “Go and take up your place at Byrnes house,” without saying anything else, would that be for the purpose of deceiving your officer; would that not be for the plain purpose of deceiving your officer, without anything else?—Yes.
5120. Would not that be the effect?—Yes, it would.
5121. By Detective Ward.—Do you know what the orders were from me to the men in charge on any night at first?—No, I did not know the instructions we received at first.
5122. How do you know then that it would be deceiving your officer; do you know whether the order was to go out at eight, nine, ten, or eleven, from me to the constable in charge?—No, I never got any instructions what time to go out or what time to come in in the morning.
5123. By Mr. Nicolson.—The week before you were surprised at this post and Sherritt shot, did you receive any warning from head-quarters to be on the alert in case of surprise?—No.
5124. By the Commission.—Was it reported among your comrades that any order for special care had been promulgated among them; was it said among the men that there was to be special caution, or anything?—No, I never heard of it.
5125. Mr. Nicolson.—May I ask for D 13 to be produced and read?
5126. The Chairman.—It is a letter from John Sherritt to Mr. Inspector Hare, Sheep-station, dated June 20th 1880.—“Dear Sir,—I would like very much to have seen you yesterday, as the outlaw Byrne does be frequently and sleeps in”—’s haystack on Sebastopol. I cannot see how it is that he is not caught before now. His brother Patrick does be out all night and sleeps all day. Mrs. Byrne has their winter flannel and socks all ready to go to them, and she has provisions for six families stored by in her house. Sir, I don’t want to dictate to a gentleman of your ability, but the plan I would suggest is this—for Patrick Byrne to be watched minutely day and night, as this is a particular time. As long as Aaron has the men down there, they will never do any good, as to my knowledge he lets too many of his mother-in-law’s children to his house, and his mother-in-law herself will go there night after night, and will stop sometimes until two o’clock in the morning, and this will be the means of discovering the police, as the Barry children and the Byrne children go to the same school and are on friendly terms. Dear sir, the reason I send you these few lines is this—anything I say up here, they will not listen to it; therefore I would like to explain matters to yourself. I am certain before long they are going to make another raid; I have not heard yet what it is. I am very busy now, but if you don’t succeed, sir, I have a grand plan made up that I think will carry through. I remain yours most respectfully, JOHN SHERRITT, junr.”

T. P. Dowling, 10th May 1881.

A. J. Faulkner, 10th May 1881.

By the Commission to the witness.—Do you remember any of those children coming about when you were there—the Barry children?—I remember one coming into the hut on one occasion.

5126. Did you go out of that room when the children came in?—No.

5127. Did you hear what was said?—No.

5128. How many was “we”?—Four of us.

5129. How old was the child?—About eight years.

5130. Do you believe, from hearing that letter read, that the child was likely to meet the Byrne children at the school—do you know whether he did meet them at the school?—No, I could not say.

5131. Do you know the haystack alluded to there—you used to go on duty to Byrne’s house at night; do you know where that haystack is?—No.

5132. Used Mrs. Barry, the mother-in-law, to stay at night, as that letter says, and go away towards morning?—Not that I am aware of.

5133. Did she live permanently in the house with her daughter?—No, she did not; she visited her daughter every night very nearly.

5134. How did you know that?—I saw her coming in.

5135. Were you not away at Byrne’s hut?—Not at the time she came in; she came in previous to our going.

5136. She must have known you were there?—Yes, perfectly well.

5137. Was the reason she came at night to keep her daughter company while you and Sherritt were out?—I believe it was.

5138. Have you any doubt of it?—I could not say.

5139. Did your hear Mrs. Sherritt say that?—No.

5140. You only suppose that was her object in coming?—Yes.

Mr. Nicolson.—I would also draw the attention of the Commission to De... off for special duty—watching the bridge over the Mitta Mitta, near New South Wales. I was there to January 1879.

5154. You were watching that bridge?—Yes.
5155. After January 1879 what were you doing?—We made a report stating that we thought it was useless carrying on the duty we were at, as the traffic was so much on that road, and asked to be relieved; that was Constable Deacon and myself. I was accordingly removed to Rutherglen, and received a telegram there to report myself at Benalla.

5156. When was that?—I should think that would be some time about the 13th or 14th of January.
5157. Did anything particular happen about that time; any robbery or anything?—During the time I was stationed over the bridge of the Mitta Mitta the Euroa robbery took place.
5158. Did anything occur soon after you were stationed at Rutherglen?—No, nothing.
5159. We have it that on the 10th of February the Jerilderie bank robbery took place. Were you at Rutherglen then?—No, I was not.
5160. How long did you remain?—I think I returned to Benalla about the 14th of January.
5161. Do you recollect the Jerilderie robbery?—Yes.
5162. Where were you then?—We were at the Murray. I returned to Benalla, and there joined Senior-Constable Mullane’s party, and travelled some distance up the Murray, the other side of the Corryong. After some time we returned to Wodonga, after searching the place up there, when we heard of the Howlong wires being cut.
5163. What time was that?—I should think about a week or ten days after the Jerilderie robbery.

5164. Is that the Howlong in New South Wales?—Yes.
5165. Where were you on the 3rd of November 1878?—I was at Mansfield.
5166. Is there anything about a special train?—A telegram to return to Benalla, and on our arrival there there was a special train to convey us to Beechworth.
5167. What was the object of that special train?—It was to distribute the search parties round towards Beechworth.
5168. Do you remember, or were you one of those that went with Mr. Sadleir, Captain Standish, and Mr. Nicolson to Sebastopol?—Yes.
5169. Where did you start from to go to Sebastopol?—Yes, and searched the ranges into Yackandandah on the 4th; and on the 5th searched the ranges into the Gap; and on the 6th Mr. Sadleir met a large party of police at the Gap. I am not quite certain of the date.
5170. How do you know that Mr. Sadleir met them; was he with your party?—He was not with any party, but he came to Sergeant Steele’s party.
5171. Were you at the Sebastopol business?—Yes.
5172. Where did you start from to go to Sebastopol?—Myrtleford.
5173. Who was the officer then in charge over you?—Mr. Sadleir thought this one party was too large, and divided them into two, placing so many under Flood and so many under Steele. Flood’s party went to the Gap and Steele’s party went on to Myrtleford. A despatch was sent from Beechworth ordering the two parties to return to Beechworth. The despatch reached us about two a.m. in the morning, but it was in the middle of the night.
5174. Will you describe the Sebastopol business. Captain Standish’s evidence at page 2 is:—“I arrived there about eight o’clock, had supper with Mr. Nicolson at one of the hotels at Benalla, and, whilst we were talking over matters afterwards, we received an urgent despatch from Superintendent Sadleir, who was up at Beechworth, saying that they had received information from a person in Beechworth that the Kellys had been at Sebastopol, and believed they were there now. I immediately ordered a special train, and proceeded, with Mr. Nicolson, nine mounted constables, and one black-tracker, to Beechworth.” Were you one of that number?—No.
5175. Where did you meet this party?—We met them in Beechworth that day, late that morning, in clear daylight.
5176. Where did you go then—how many were there altogether?—About 40, I should think, by a rough guess.
5177. Did you march in open order?—In open order.
5178. Make a great noise?—Well, of course, 40 horses would make a noise.
5179. Were you told to load your arms?—No; we never knew what information we were going on.
5180. Were your arms loaded?—Yes.
5181. What were they?—I am not certain—the Martini-Henry or the gun.
5182. Had you revolvers?—Yes.
5183. Swords?—No.
5184. You were one of the party of 40 from Beechworth to Sebastopol?—Yes. We travelled on the main road for some little distance, and then turned off to the right. I suppose Sherritt’s is about six miles from Beechworth; and when we came within view of the place the party halted, and Mr. Nicolson picked out five or six—some of the men who knew Kelly.
5185. Were you near enough to the three officers to hear who gave the orders?—Yes, I was in front. I understood it to be Mr. Nicolson, on account of going with the men.

5186. What officer was in charge in your opinion?—I think it rested between Mr. Nicolson and Captain Standish.

5187. A sort of divided responsibility?—Yes.

5188. When you came in front of the hut, and the men were selected, what was done?—They rushed the house with Mr. Nicolson, and through some accident a shot went off against the door. As soon as the men in the distance heard this shot (I was one), we all rushed the house, and after some delay there, finding the outlaws were not there, we went on to Mrs. Byrne’s, a distance of three miles.

5189. What was the opinion?—That they were not there.

5190. Was it the opinion that they had been there?—I do not think so. I heard Senior-Constable James having some argument with Sherritt, but Sherritt declared they had not been there.

5191. Which Sherritt?—Old Sherritt, the father.

5192. Is that Senior-Constable James of Mansfield?—Yes.

5193. Then, on your way to Byrne’s hut, did you see anyone after leaving Sherritt’s, and before you arrived there?—No, I do not remember seeing anyone.

5194. You knew Aaron Sherritt?—Yes.

5195. When did you first see him?—I saw him that morning when we rushed Mrs. Byrne’s house. I think he had an axe on his shoulder, and had been cutting wood a little way from the house.

5196. Was that the first time you saw him?—Yes.

5197. Did you notice anyone speaking to him?—No.

5198. You did not see Captain Standish speak to him?—No.

5199. Or Mr. Sadleir?—No, I did not see anyone speak to him—I was in front of the house.

5200. You were in advance?—Yes.

5201. By Mr. Sadleir.—How many men were in Sergeant Steele’s party?—I should not think about nine or ten.

5202. As many as that?—I would not swear exactly to one.

5203. And how many were in Senior-Constable Flood’s party?—About seven or eight.

5204. Would thirteen have been the total of the two parties?—It might have been.

5205. By the Commission.—Were there any other parties except those two named?—Only those two that came from Myrtleford and the Gap.

5206. There were others at Beechworth besides those?—Yes.

5207. How many besides those two parties?—Well, I could not say; I should say between 30 and 40 police altogether.

5208. Was there anybody else?—Yes, some reporters.

By the Commission

5209. Was there not some special informant?—Yes, he was there with his face blacked.

5210. By Mr. Sadleir.—You know the number of men in Beechworth that night?—I have not the slightest idea, because I had not been in Beechworth since the 4th of November.

5211. You say there might have been only 13 in the party?—Yes.

5212. With nine that Captain Standish brought up that would make 22?—Yes.

5213. By the Commission.—Do you know that Captain Standish brought that number?—No.

5214. You had come to the time of the Jerilderie bank robbery; where were you then?—I was at the Upper Murray.

5215. Will you just go on with the personal things that came under your notice, and give us the dates as well as you can. Then came the Howlong wires?—Yes. We returned then to Benalla, and were continually out with parties.

5216. That brings you up to about March 1879?—Yes.

5217. What were you doing during the early part of 1879?—We were continually out on information, and in search of the gang.

5218. Who was in charge in the early part of 1879, do you remember?—I think Superintendent Hare.

5219. Was Captain Standish up there?—Yes, he was occasionally, I believe, but I could not really say whether he was always there, because I was continually out.

5220. Was Mr. Hare there in the early part of 1879?—Yes, I believe he was.

5221. Then both Captain Standish and Mr. Hare were there at that time. How many used to go out in search parties?—Mr. Hare formed a search party, about eight or nine of us.

5222. Had you any pack-horses?—Yes.

5223. How many usually?—Mostly two pack-horses, sometimes three.

5224. What did you carry on them?—We mostly had hampmocks and some provisions.

5225. And cooking utensils?—Yes.

5226. Could you, as a rule, get clear of the roads very much, with that large party?—At times, when we received information, we generally went nine or ten miles in a different direction, if we went in the daytime at all, so as to avoid meeting people.

A. J. Faulkner,
10th May 1881.

continued.
5227. And did you return at night?—Yes, but sometimes in a different direction.
5228. Would not the country be very difficult to go through with nine or ten, off the roads, through the bush?—Well, we would separate 150 or 200 yards, and keep in view of each other.
5229. At night?—We never travelled at night that distance apart.
5230. Do you remember hearing any remarks about the noise and dust kicked up by those parties?—No, I cannot say I do.
5231. Were you ever out with Superintendent Hare?—Yes.
5232. Did you, during the early part of 1879, when you say you were continually out, ever come anywhere near the Kellys, so far as you knew?—Yes, I will just refresh my memory—[looking at a paper]. On one occasion, when searching for the gang, without information, we were camped in the ranges, about five p.m.
5233. What date was that—fix it, if you can?—I suppose about April or May 1879; I cannot exactly remember. Two young men rode up to us; Mr. Hare asked them their names; they replied with a sneer, after giving some impertinence to Mr. Hare, showing their sympathy for the Kellys. Mr. Hare at once placed two men in charge of them.
5234. What did they say?—I could not say exactly. I could hear them muttering to Mr. Hare, and he was vexed with them at the time, and told them he had a mind to arrest them, and sent them home with the constables. A short distance from home they were observed by their parents, who took one of the constables to be Ned Kelly and the other to be Steve Hart. The father called out for the constable whom he took to be Hart—he was in the waterhole, bathing, at the time (the old man was)—to come to him. One of the constables remained there, and the other came back to tell Mr. Hare of what the father had said to him, taking him to be Hart. Constable Canny and I left that morning about two a.m. to go into Wangaratta to bring out men to watch the place whilst Mr. Hare’s party searched the ranges.
5235. What did the old man say?—I cannot say what he said, but he found his mistake when the constable went to him. The party arrived before daylight that morning, and they watched the house whilst Mr. Hare’s party searched the ranges. We also came across a stable built three-quarters of a mile away from the premises, in the bush paddock, which caused much suspicion. On a second occasion, when searching without information—5236. What date?—Prior to Mr. Hare being relieved for the last time. I think it was the last time he was out with a search party.
5237. It would be about June or July 1879?—Yes. We came across a hut near Lloyd’s, in the small bush paddock, and no person at home. We searched the place, two or three of us—I could not say which of us—think Constable Canny and I, and I think Constable Lawless, and found three or four saddles hanging up that had been recently used, noticing they had sureingles on made by a saddler at Wangaratta. The person who occupied the place was a man with one hand, a bachelor, which clearly showed that he had not a use for four saddles.
5238. Did you speak to him?—I think Superintendent Hare spoke to him.
5239. Did you hear him say anything?—No, I could not hear him say anything; and, as he was looked upon as a sympathizer, this made us still more confident that the gang were still about. When the Kellys were captured, and the horses and saddles brought to Benalla, I identified those saddles as the ones I had seen hanging up in the house near Lloyd’s, and sent in a report to that effect, but did not hear anything more about it further than, I believe, some of the Kelly friends claimed them. I would not be certain of that, but I have heard it. This was the last search party Mr. Hare had for the outlaws prior to being relieved by Mr. Nicolson. I was then in Benalla, up to the time of the Lancefield robbery.
5240. What time was it; was it a month after that?—Yes, about that. That day I was told to saddle up and go off to the train. I did not know what was wrong till I got near to Kilmore, when I learned that the Lancefield bank had been robbed. We arrived at Kilmore that evening—Mr. Sadleir, Mr. O’Connor, Senior-Constable King from Lancefield, five or six trackers, and four police. After we had had tea and the horses had fed, Senior-Constable King asked me if I would go with him to see Mr. O’Connor, to allow us to go on to Lancefield that evening, and make an early start in the morning from there. Senior-Constable King left to go to the township to see Mr. O’Connor, and when he returned I asked him the result of his interview.

5241. Was Mr. O’Connor in charge?—No, I could not say he was; he was in charge of the trackers. He said we would have to remain here to-night, and go to Lancefield in the morning. King asked me if he took the trackers would I go with him. This I refused, telling him that it was a good man that would do as he was told. We left Kilmore next morning, and arrived at Lancefield about nine or ten.
5242. Was Senior-Constable King in charge of you?—No, he was second to Mr. O’Connor with the trackers.
5243. Who was really in charge of the party?—Mr. Sadleir, I believe, was relieved at Kilmore by Inspector Baber. Mr. Hare was then at Lancefield. He said I would have to remain behind, and, after he started the trackers, he asked me how it was we did not reach Lancefield last night. I replied I did not know.
He asked me if the horses were not able to travel that distance. I replied that it could not have been that, as the horses were all fresh. I had had to ride my horse half a mile behind to keep him steady. Constable Deacon and I were then told off to go in a certain direction to search for the robbers of the bank. When we arrived at Kilmore we were informed that the men had been captured. I returned to Benalla and was there till November, when I was told off for special secret duty, watching the house of Mrs. Byrne at night-time and sleeping in a cave through the day.

5244. Was Mr. Nicolson in Benalla at this time?—Yes, he was in Benalla, but the day I arrived to go to this duty he was in Beechworth.

5244a. Who was the officer in charge of the cave party?—While it lasted it was between Detective Ward and Senior-Constable Mullane, that is the senior officer; of course Mr. Nicolson was at the head.

5245. But not yourself?—No.

5246. Who was the recognized head of the cave party?—It was always the senior man; they were relieved at times, and the senior man was always at the head.

5247. Who were in the cave party?—Constable Alexander, Constable Canny, Constable Armstrong, and Constable McCall. That night I think Constable Alexander was in charge.

5248. Will you give the date you went?—The 15th of December, I think.

5249. That will be 1879?—Yes.

5250. By Mr. Nicolson.—You did not go out with the first?—No.

5251. Did not Canny go out with you?—He had been up before me. The instructions we received with reference to this duty were that four of us would be told off with Aaron Sherritt as a guide in watching the house (Mrs. Byrne’s place) at night-time. If possible, we were to try to capture Byrne alive, to stick a handkerchief in his mouth and bring him in to Beechworth. We were to try to capture the others if they came to the place. The duty I had to undertake whilst with the watch party at the cave was that Aaron Sherritt had the power, if he wanted a man to go to any place, he was to take me, which he did, to go out through the day, occasionally. I was introduced to people by his wife as a friend from New South Wales.

5252. Were you enjoined to secrecy with regard to being secreted in the cave?—Yes.

5253. What were you told about it?—To confine ourselves to the cave during the day, and about whatever time it suited to go down to this house at night. We were boiling our tea with spirits of wine, so as to cause no smoke, and living on bread and fish.

5254. And told not to let anyone know where you were secreted?—Yes.

5255. All the men had that instruction?—Yes, we received those instructions from Mr. Nicolson before we left Beechworth.

5256. Mr. Nicolson.—May I read this note I made at the time?—‘Arrange for a party of four constables, with five days’ provisions, to proceed to cave near Mrs. Byrne’s, to rest during the day and come out at night, and watch Mrs. Byrne’s hut for Joe, to capture Joe outside going to or fro, without creating a noise, if possible; if that cannot be managed, to take him in the hut; and, in that case, arrest all those in the hut, the mother and all, and convey them as quietly as possible to Beechworth.’ Were those the instructions?—Yes.

5257. There is nothing about a pocket-handkerchief?—That was the stopping of his mouth. I did this duty during the day, and watched the house of Mrs. Byrne during the night. After nine or ten days of that duty we would be relieved for four or five days, returning to Beechworth. The duty I had to undertake, when relieved from this cave duty for a few days, was—I was sent out a distance of about twenty miles all round Beechworth, serving summonses, attending inquests, and other police duty by myself, and, on one occasion, I was sent to a place so close to Mrs. Byrne’s that one of her sons held my troop horse whilst I went to the house with a despatch. I was under the impression that if I complained to my officers they might think it was cowardice on my part. At the same time I thought it was unfair to be sending me as a constable to a place where I was doing secret duty, but I did not complain. I was four or five weeks doing secret duty with Aaron Sherritt, in the house he was shot in, but I was not there at the time he was shot. I was at the cave duty from December 1879 to April 1880.

5258. By the Commission.—How many days was it before you were sent back to the cave again after this Beechworth duty?—Four or five days.

5259. And after being at the cave for another nine or ten days you were relieved again as before?—Yes, and went back to do ordinary police duty.

5260. And this was continued with you from December to April 1880?—Yes, till the party broke up.

5261. You took your turn all that time?—Yes.

5262. Did you hear that the fact of your being in the cave was known to persons outside?—I did.

5263. You heard it reported amongst the men that were with you in the cave?—Well I, heard it, of course, speaking outside of the cave duty.

5264. Apart from the police altogether?—Yes.

5265. From civilians?—Yes.

5266. How do you suppose this information got out?—Well, I took it to be that there were so many mixed up in it.

5267. More besides the four that were in the cave?—I do not mean the police, but the people outside the police.

POLICE.
5268. How many police were there—different police—from the time you went in December till April?—I suppose about nine or ten different policemen.

5269. Were there any others besides Aaron Sherritt and those nine or ten men that knew of their own knowledge that you were watching the place?—I think on one occasion Mr. Nicolson held an enquiry as to how it had got talked about—called the police together at Beechworth.

5270. About what time?—About a couple of months before it broke up—it was spoken of in Wangaratta.

5271. About February or March?—Yes.

5272. How many police were present when he conducted the enquiry?—I think three or four of those that had been at the cave.

5273. By Mr. Nicolson.—Was not the enquiry you allude to into the fact that some of the neighboring police had attempted to pump you when you were down the country?—I understood it was that it had been talked of in Wangaratta.

5274. That some of the police had tried to pump you?—The question you asked me was had I mentioned it or seen anyone in Wangaratta that had mentioned it. I said not; but, at the same time, a person leaving the station like that, when they returned, and were asked what duty they were on, it was not for them to say what duty they were on.

5275. That is not the question—what was the enquiry about. Was it not about some police attempting to find out what duty you were on?—I understood they had found out, and it was your desire to find out who it was.

5276. What made you think that?—Constable Cox was under the impression that it was. He was blamed for speaking of it, because he had been in Wangaratta.

5277. By the Commission.—What was the result of the enquiry?—I believe it was not known who spoke of it.

5278. They could not find out whom the information came from?—No.

5279. No one suspected?—I could not say that; there might have been some. Constable Cox was under the impression he was suspected. Sergeant Steele had spoken to Cox, I believe, when he was in Wangaratta. That was what made me think why Mr. Nicolson held that enquiry.

5280. Did you hear that it was known at the Melbourne depot?—I could not say.

5281. You did not hear that amongst your own comrades?—No.

5282. Did you hear that Captain Standish had written up to say it was known there?—No, not at that time, not till this enquiry took place.

5283. After your enquiry were you sent back to the cave again?—Yes.

5284. Besides the police, was there any of Sherritt’s family knew you were concealed in the cave from December to April?—Yes, Sherritt’s family altogether, and Mrs. Barry.

5285. Knew you were confined in the cave and watching at night?—Yes.

5286. How did they obtain that information?—The provisions were sent to old Sherritt’s place, and we had to take them from there to the cave. I went to Sherritt’s place, and took them from there to the cave.

5287. At the time you were introduced as being from New South Wales, did Mrs. Sherritt know you were there doing duty on the search party?—Oh, yes.

5288. Then, as far as the possibility of keeping this secret was concerned, it was known to others besides the police actively engaged?—It was.

5289. What did you do after you left the cave party—did you send any communication to any one stating you were in the cave party, and it was generally known you were in this cave party, to any private person or anyone in the force?—No.

5290. No communication whatever?—No.

5291. You kept that secret?—Yes, until such time as the cave party was about to be broken up and we were called upon for reports. On April 2nd I furnished a report to Senior-Constable Mullane, which is as follows:—“North-Eastern District, Beechworth, 2nd April 1880. Report of Constable Faulkner, relative to special duty in the bush.—I respectfully report, for the information of the Superintendent, that this day I was called on for a report by Senior-Constable Mullane relative to the special duty in the bush near Beechworth. As I am at a loss to know what to report about, as I am under the impression that the Superintendent is well aware of the ditty I have been engaged in, and how it was carried out; and as I am returning to Benalla this evening, I will be most willing to answer any questions put to me by either the Assistant-Commissioner of Police or the Superintendent.” On this Senior-Constable Mullane made the following memo.:—“I have called on Constable Faulkner for a report whether it has come to his knowledge that the outlaws’ friends are aware of the party of police camped in the Strathbogie ranges.” On this I made a second report.—“I respectfully report, for the information of the Assistant-Commissioner of Police, that it would be impossible to say that this secret duty has been carried out unknown to the outlaws’ friends, as persons who are well aware of this party of police camped in the bush are continually visiting Mrs. Byrne’s place, and sleeping there; and, from what has come under my notice, this duty must be well-known to the outlaws’ friends.” That is on the 2nd April.
This is the reply by Constable Mullane to the Acting Chief Commissioner of Police from Beechworth, dated 5th May 1881:

“No reports were received by me that existence of cave party was known at depot, or that any person gave information of the party. Reports were submitted by cave party that they believed Mrs. Byrne knew the police were there. These reports were given to Detective Ward, and returned to the constables who wrote them.”

Are you pretty well done with the cave party now?—Unless you have any questions to ask. My reason for keeping a copy of this report was because my first report was not forwarded to the Superintendent or Mr. Nicolson, as it should have been. Had this been done, Mr. Nicolson would not have been surprised at Captain Standish’s ordering the cave party to be discontinued.

The witness withdrew.

Alfred John Faulkner further examined.

The Chairman read the report referred to, and the Commission agreed that the report was not correct in the particulars named.

The Witness.—I would ask to be allowed to make a few corrections in my evidence as reported in the Age.

The Chairman read the report referred to, and the Commission agreed that the report was not correct in the particulars named.

The Witness.—Through cross-examination, in the first part of my statement I omitted to state two or three different things I would now like to bring under the notice of the Commission.

By the Commission.—Who was it that supplied you with provisions in the cave?

The provisions were sent out from Beechworth to Mrs. Sherritt’s, the old lady’s, and we conveyed them from there to the cave.

By the Commission.—How?

In a bag, on horseback.

By the Commission.—If it was stated that a man named John Sherritt was employed for the purpose of carrying the provisions backwards and forwards, would that be true?

He did occasionally, once or twice.

By the Commission.—If he did say he was entrusted with that duty, would it be false?

I believe he did come to the cave with provisions.

By the Commission.—Did you see him?

I believe I did.

By the Commission.—That is young John Sherritt?

Yes. As to the business I spoke of on the 3rd of November 1878, when we arrived at Benalla, when the special train was waiting to convey the party of police from there to Beechworth: when passing through Wangaratta we were informed that the Kellys had passed through that morning en route to the Warby ranges. This information I believe was given by one of the railway officials to Constable Twomey, who was stationed at Wangaratta. He came to the train to give this information so that the police should remain there instead of going on further. I believe myself, from the facts that afterwards transpired, that had this information been followed up at the time it was given, the Kellys would have been captured about the 7th or 8th of November.

By the Commission.—Was that the time that Mr. Brook Smith was out with them?

Yes.

By the Commission.—Were you with that party?

I was at Wangaratta at the time he came in with the horse belonging to the police.

By the Commission.—Do you recollect hearing that a party under Mr. Brook Smith, with Constable Johnson, had followed the Kellys into the Warby ranges, and ran them so close that they found the police pack-horse, that is Sergeant Kennedy’s?

Yes.

By the Commission.—Did you see that horse?

No.

By the Commission.—Did you hear they ran them so close that they had to abandon that pack-horse, and it was recovered and brought into Wangaratta?

Yes.

By the Commission.—When was that?

About the 9th or 10th November.

By the Commission.—Was it about the time that the Kellys crossed the railway towards the Warby ranges?

That was on the 3rd November.

By the Commission.—Can you fix the time of the horse being found?

About the ninth or tenth.

By the Commission.—Could they get across the line in that portion without crossing over the line? I mean, below Euroa, the roadways go under culverts in some cases. Could the Kellys get from the Mansfield side to the Warby ranges without crossing over the railway?

No, they could not.

By the Commission.—Therefore the probabilities were that they did cross then?

Yes I believe the river was very high at that time, and they swam their horses through under the bridge, and out on the other side, somewhere close to Wangaratta.

By the Commission.—The time you think, if they had been followed up, they might have been captured was about the time the pack-horse was found?—That was about the time.

5310. Have you any knowledge of where they went after they could not cross the Murray?—No I believe they remained about that place. We were always under that impression, when searching under Mr. Hare, that they were.

5311. He was not in charge then; you are speaking of the 3rd November, say within a month after that—do you know where the gang were?—I could not say because I was sent to the Upper Murray.

5312. From your own knowledge was any reliable information obtained as to where they were for the month after, from that time to sticking up the Euroa bank?—No, I cannot. Some time, I think, in February or March, Superintendent Hare’s party received information that Joe Byrne was going to run a horse at the Whorouly races. Three of us were told off in disguise. Johnson, Lawless, and myself. We went on to the course separately. After being there some time, I recognized Aaron Sherritt as the party whom I had seen at Byrne’s house the morning that we rushed the place. This was the man who was, I believed, to ride a horse for Byrne. I passed the remark to Senior-Constable Johnson that if this was the man we could consider the information a hoax either on the part of Sherritt or Byrne. I said it was not at all likely that a man twelve or thirteen stone weight was going to ride in a country hurdle race when Byrne and Hart had brothers of their own, good horsemen. I believe from the remark Mr. Hare made afterwards that Johnson must have told Mr. Hare what I had said. We remained for the two days’ racing. On our way home Mr. Hare asked me how it was I did not approve of the information he had received with reference to the Whorouly races. I gave Mr. Hare my reasons the same as I gave to Johnson. I also replied that I could bowl Sherritt out in a week.

5313. Meaning by “bowl” that you would find how truthful he was?—Yes, Mr. Hare replied, “You are clever, Faulkner; how is it I have been sleeping with this man in the bush this last three weeks, and I cannot bowl him out, I have always found him and proved him to be true.”

5314. Was it the fact that Sherritt did ride the horse?—No; that was all I omitted to state.

A. J. Faulkner, continued.

5315. Have you been accustomed to horses?—Yes, since I was born I have been with horses.

5316. Are you aware that bushmen in the bush, when they want to ascertain who is about, police or otherwise, that their first attention is drawn to the horses?—Yes.

5317. Is it not the first thing they enquire about to trace?—Yes.

5318. Do you recollect any horses you had at Whorouly races?—Yes.

5319. Were they distinctly branded?—No, none of them had brands on.

5320. Were there horses there that were bred in the district of particular brands?—Yes.

5321. Did you see a horse there branded “G. V. S.,” a brown-colored horse?—There was a brown-colored horse that Johnson was riding; I do not remember the brand.

5322. Would you consider it unlikely if, before the outlaws or anyone could have recognized you and Johnson as policemen, it was said on the racecourse, “Here are the troopers, because there is the G. V. S. thoroughbred horse that was bought the other day”?—No, because there were policemen on the ground doing duty there.

5323. Was Johnson riding that horse?—Yes.

5324. Was he in uniform?—No.

5325. Did you take your horses up to the ground?—They were tied to the fence, a distance out from the racecourse.

5326. The public could see them?—Yes, only the main thing is they had not a Government brand on them.

5327. Had they Government saddles and bridles on them?—Yes, but not the kit bridle, but rusty stirrups and rusty bit.

5328. Did we understand you to say that you mistrusted Sherritt all through?—Well I did at the first, when I heard of this information about riding a horse, but afterwards I did trust to him.

5329. Now the whole thing has passed, and, reflecting over your experience in the matter, do you consider that Sherritt behaved faithfully to the Government in the position he was employed in?—Well, I believe he was not friends with Mrs. Byrne, and that was the only thing that led me to believe he was in with the police.

5330. Had you occasion to believe at any time that he was acting ostensibly in the interests of the Government and at the same time serving the outlaws?—No, I had not.

5331. In the main your opinion is he behaved faithfully?—Yes, because he was not friends with Mrs. Byrne. If he had been that would have led us to the conclusion he was in league with the outlaws. She had a great down on him.

5332. Will you go on with anything further?—On handing Senior-Constable Mullane my second report Detective Ward and he had a conversation together. Mullane must have given my reports to Detective Ward, as he came to me with them and asked me to withdraw them.

5333. That is your reports with reference to the cave?—Yes. He stated that those reports would never suit Mr. Nicolson, and urged me to withdraw them, which I refused. He said Mr. Nicolson only wanted the report so as to make a favorable entry on my record sheet.

5334. Is that your third report—[handing a paper to the witness]?—Yes—[reading as follows:—]
“Special duty near Beechworth.—I respectfully report for the information of the Assistant Commissioner of Police that I have been doing secret duty in the above-named place since November 1879 to April 1880, and that I have at all times carried out the instructions received from the Assistant Commissioner of Police relative to that duty. Though unsuccessful, this duty has been carried out with the greatest secrecy by the members of the force who were engaged on that duty.—A. J. FALKINER, constable 2784. 2nd April 1880.” I replied I had sent in the report Senior-Constable Mullane called on me for. I also remarked at the time I believed I sent in a report stating that this duty was unknown to the outlaws’ friends it would have been forwarded.

5335. What do you mean by that?—Because my first report was not forwarded. That was the conclusion I came to.

5336. If your cave party had been a secret it would have been forwarded to head quarters?—Yes, because my first report was a straightforward report, and should have gone to head quarters; and, had this been done. Mr. Nicolson would have no doubt known the cave party was known.

5337. How did you know that this report was not sent officially?—I believed, had it been sent—— 5338. To whom did you give it?—Senior-Constable Mullane.

5339. What evidence have you then to speak positively that this report was not transmitted?—Detective Ward came with the report in his pocket, and asked me to withdraw it, and stated it would not suit Mr. Nicolson, and asked me to send up a report altogether different—that was the second report.

5340. You forwarded it to Mr. Ward?—Yes.

5341. What transpired afterwards to lead you positively to assert now that that was not transmitted officially?—Because they were not forwarded.

5342. How do you know that it was not forwarded after you sent it again?—Not the one report, but the two reports he came back with.

5343. You handed in those three sheets yesterday?—Yes.

5344. Those are copies of the three reports you forwarded?—Yes.

5345. This is the first?—Yes.

5346. And this is the second?—Yes.

5347. That was forwarded back to you by Constable Mullane. I will read the memo, by Mullane “I have called on Constable Falkiner for a report whether it has come to his knowledge that the outlaws’ friends are aware of the party of police camped in the Strathbogie ranges.” That one was sent back to you?—Yes.

5348. Therefore you know that was not forwarded on to Mr. Nicolson?—Yes.

5349. You forwarded this second report then?—Yes.

5350. And you say you know that was not forwarded, because Detective Ward brought it to you?—Yes.

5351. The original report?—Yes.

5352. So you knew it had not been forwarded to Mr. Nicolson?—Yes.

5353. On the representation of Ward you sent in that third one?—Yes. It was about two o’clock when Detective Ward came, and I was unable to make it out at the time. I made it out at Benalla, and dated it from Beechworth, and sent it the next morning to Detective Ward to forward to Mr. Nicolson.

5354. Than this last report is the one in the hands of the Police Department?—Yes.

5355. Do you say that that is a copy of the report that you sent to Senior-Constable Mullane—this first one?—Yes.

5356. Do you swear that the original of that was destroyed by you?—I swear it was not.

5357. Will you swear the original is not in the hands of the police?—No, I will not do that.

5358. You then sent in that report?—Yes.

5359. It was brought back by Detective Ward?—Yes.

5360. And this third one was substituted in place of those two?—Yes.

5361. When this came back from Mullane, what did you do with it?—I made a second report relative to it.

5362. Was the original left in your hands?—Yes, it was given me from Senior-Constable Mullane back again.

5363. And you kept it?—No, I made a report relative to his memo, on the back of it, and I forwarded the two together afterwards.

5364. You again then forwarded this third from Benalla?—Yes.

5365. I take it that in the first place you were called upon to report upon whether you supposed it was known that the cave party was known to the outlaws or their friends?—Yes.

5366. You sent that report number one?—Yes.

5367. Mullane sent that back again?—Yes.

5368. You then sent the report number two?—Yes.

5369. That was not satisfactory?—No.

5370. That was returned through Detective Ward?—He came with it in his pocket, but did not give it to me.
5371. And you wrote a third?—Yes.
5372. And that is the reason that you say if the cave party you thought had not been known outside, that first one would have been forwarded to Mr. Nicolson?—Yes.
5373. Then you report to the Commission that you wish us to understand that your impression is that those reports were required to be made to order?—Yes.
5374. Will you take those in your hands.—[the reports]?—Yes.
5375. Are all three reports made by you there?—Yes.
5376. What are the dates of those three reports?—The 2nd April.
5377. All bearing the same date?—Yes.
5378. Were they written on the same day?—No.
5379. About what time elapsed between writing the report here (marked No. 1 and No. 3)?—It was on the following day—on the 3rd. I think, I sent up the report from Benalla.
5380. What is the first report shortly?—Relative to the duty in the bush.
5381. What information does it give?—As Senior Constable Mullane did not call on us for any one particular thing, I made out my report accordingly, stating that I was at a loss to know what to report about, and asking to go before Mr. Sadleir or the Assistant Commissioner to explain.
5382. Did you get that back from the officer you sent it to?—Yes.
5383. Who?—Senior Constable Mullane.
5384. Did you see his original memo. on your original document?—Yes.
5385. Is that a true copy?—Yes, it is a true copy.
5386. The statement made in No. 1 was accurate?—Yes.
5387. Why did you make No. 2?—On account of Mullane’s memo, relative to that and the attached report; that was my own first report.
5388. Under what circumstances was the third report made?—Detective Ward, when he came back with my two reports, told me to send in a report with reference to duty, as Mr. Nicolson wanted a report to put a favorable entry on my record sheet.
5389. In consequence of that you wrote No. 3 report?—I did.
5390. There is a memo, here from Constable Mullane:—“No reports were received by me that the existence of the cave party was known at depot, or that any person gave information of the party; reports were submitted by cave party that they believed Mrs. Byrne knew the police were there; these reports were given to Detective Ward, and returned to the constables who wrote them.—5/5/81.” If this statement of Mullane’s is true that those reports were given to Ward, and returned to the constables, then it would be accurate to say that Mullane knows that the constables got those returned reports?—I could not say that Mullane would know that Detective Ward was not on the station when I handed in those reports to Senior Constable Mullane.
5391. If he says those reports were given to Detective Ward, and returned to the constables, would it be true that Detective Ward, if he had them, did return them to the constables?—It would be untrue that he returned them.
5392. How then did you get it?—That is only a copy.
5393. Therefore, if he got them from Mullane, and did not return them to you, but spoke to you about them, he must have had them in his possession?—He had them.
5394. He must have been aware, if Senior Constable Mullane’s statement is true, that he got instructions from Senior Constable Mullane to return them to the constables?—Yes.
5395. Did Detective Ward tell you he had the reports in his pocket?—Yes, he did.
5396. But did not give them to you?—He did not. He asked me to withdraw them.
5397. And kept them in his pocket?—Yes.
5398. You said you would not withdraw them?—Yes, said I would not; I refused.
5399. Then you have not at the order of any officer altered the true character of your reports?—No.
5400. You have stated the truth in all your reports?—I have.
5401. Constable Armstrong was in charge of the party at the cave?—At different times, and Constables Alexander and Barry.

A. J. Faulkner, continued, 11th May 1881.

5402. How was it that you were called upon to report?—I was not the only one. We were all called upon.
5403. Individually, to report to the officer next in charge above you?—Yes.
5404. Is the practice of the department under such circumstances for the constables to report to the officers next in charge?—Mostly the officer in charge reports, but in this case I suppose it was the intention to hear each person’s opinion on it.
5405. What was your idea at the time, that you were to report to the officer above you, or to the department?—To the department. My reports were addressed to the Assistant Commissioner, and the first one to Superintendent Sadleir.
5406. Then those reports being returned, did it strike you that the object the department would have in requiring reports of that kind was frustrated; and did it strike you as being desirable to send them direct to the department—reports you thought so important—so that the information should be in the possession of the department?—No; I considered that was the duty of my officer in charge.

5407. Having been returned by that officer, did you consider it would be an act of insubordination for you to send it direct?—Yes, it would; because we must send through the officer.

5408. Did it not strike you that those reports being returned in that sort of way was an act that was indicative of anything but good discipline and the best interests of the service?—They were not returned. I did not withdraw them. They asked that, but I did not; and as long as I furnished them, that was all I had to do with it.

5409. Those reports were returned to you—did you retain them then?—No; I still left them in the hands of the officer.

5410. As a matter of fact, the department are in ignorance up to the present time of the existence of those reports, until yesterday you produced them?—I could not say that. I have sent in reports myself, and have had no reply; for instance, about the saddles seen near old Wilson’s place, and I did not hear any reply to that.

5411. You sent that report direct to Senior-Constable Mullane?—Yes.

5412. He wrote that memo. on the back?—Yes.

5413. You then wrote this No. 2, with this first report attached?—Yes.

5414. These were forwarded also to your superior officer at Beechworth, Senior-Constable Mullane?—Yes.

5415. Detective Ward came to you then?—Yes.

5416. And then mentioned to you he had those two reports in his pocket?—Yes.

5417. Did he show them to you?—He partly drew them out of his pocket, and said, “Whatever did you send in reports like that for? Those are not the reports Mr. Nicolson wanted; he only wanted a report from you of what you had been doing, so as to put a favorable entry on your record sheet.”

5418. You then wrote a third?—Yes.

5419. Did you post that to your superior officer at Beechworth?—I did.

5420. Those two documents are now recognized by the commission as official documents; did those documents ever come into the possession of the Police Department?—No; these are copies of them.

5421. What did you mean by “made to order”?—are we to gather from your reply to that question that you must frame those reports in accordance with the wishes of the officers, or in accordance with the truth?—Not at all. I had to make a report with reference to this cave duty, so as Mr. Nicolson could put a favorable entry on my record sheet.

5422. That is not an answer to the question; are we to understand that you were to frame your reports in accordance with the truth of the facts, or in accordance with the wishes of the officers?—Well, I was under the impression that any sort of report I forwarded like that would have been forwarded.

5423. That is not an answer. There are two meanings to be gathered from your answer to that question just now, and one is, that you were to frame the reports in accordance with the wishes of the officers; and the other, that you had to frame the reports, perhaps coloring the reports?—It was to be a truthful report.

5424. Of the facts as they were?—Yes.

5425. Not to be in accordance with the wishes of the officers?—No.

5426. Your reports were not presented, and the reason was given?—No reason was given, only that they would not suit Mr. Nicolson.

5427. You say the reports were not forwarded, and the reason given was they were not in accordance with what Mr. Nicolson required?—Yes.

5428. Was that because they were untrue?—I cannot tell that.

5429. Was it because your report was untrue of what took place in the cave?—No; it could not have been that.

5430. Then what was the motive—was it because they were not in accordance with Mr. Nicolson’s wish of what he wanted in the cave?—It will be seen that I asked to go before Mr. Nicolson or Mr. Sadleir, and it appears what was meant was that I was to give in writing what I wanted to give verbally.

5431. In the second report you state the fact of the cave party must be known to the outlaws, but in the third sheet you make no allusion to that fact; both may be truthful, but there is a great difference between Nos. 2 and 3. No. 2 report reads—“I respectfully report for the information of the Assistant Commissioner of Police that it would be impossible to say that this secret duty has been carried out unknown to the outlaws’ friends.” The third report is “relative to that duty though unsuccessful, this duty has been carried out with the utmost secrecy by the members of the force who were engaged on that duty.” Both of those may be true, but there is a wonderful difference between the two; what is the reason why you omitted to state in the third report the fact of the party being known?—Because we were asked for a report of how we carried it out ourselves.

5432. The secrecy as far as the police were concerned?—Yes.

5433. Was there a Constable Robert McHugh in the cave party?—Yes.

5434. This is his report:—“North-Eastern district, Beechworth Station, 3rd April 1880. I beg to report that I was for some time engaged on special duty, watching Mrs. Byrne’s house at the Woolshed, and during that time I saw nothing to indicate that Mrs. Byrne or her family knew that the police were watching her premises.” Could you say that truthfully?—No, not Mrs. Byrne’s.
5435. The question was, could you send in that report truthfully, Mrs. Byrne or any of her family?—No; I could not.
5436. Here is a report from Detective Ward, telling all that occurred. He does not say anything about that he believed the cave party was known, or that he had any report from that; and he sends in the reports of all the men who are of the party, bearing the date the same day as your reports here or the day after, and he says that he sends in the reports with the exception of constables Cox and Faulkiner, who are away from here. What day did you see Detective Ward with the report that you say you believe was not forwarded, and of which you produce a copy to us?—On the 2nd of April.
5437. In the ordinary course of police duty, ought not your report to be amongst your brother constables’ reports?—Yes.
5438. You have never seen these papers before?—No.
5439. Is your report amongst them?—(The witness looked through the papers.)—No, it is not.
5440. Detective Ward says: I have the honor to report, for the information of the Assistant Commissioner with reference to attached memo.—Section 3. I am pleased to be able to state that the conduct of the constables named in the margin has been everything that could be desired.”—Constables Alexander, Hagger, Armstrong, A., Barry, Alexander, R., McHugh, Cox, Faulkiner, McCall and Dixon. Were those all the men?—Yes I think that would be about the number.
5441. And your report is not there?—It is not.
5442. This is dated 3rd of April; supposing that is written on that date, and that those reports of your brother constables were in Ward’s hands, can you say of your own knowledge that if that was written on the 3rd your report would have also been in Ward’s hands?—It should have.
5443. What day was it he had it in his pocket?—On the 2nd.
5444. You were asked, do you infer that you were required on that occasion, or any occasion, to write a report that would suit the officer giving the order. Now put the officer aside altogether—you are sworn. Do you believe that when you wrote those three reports and had a conversation with Detective Ward, that Ward expected you to write a letter which he thought would be pleasing to Mr. Nicolson?—A suitable report.
5445. Would not that be writing to order, making a misstatement or suppressing the truth?—It would be.
5446. Is that what you meant by giving that answer when you were asked did you believe that Detective Ward expected you to write a report to order?—That was it.
5447. Without referring to Mr. Nicolson at all, your oath is that when you were requested by Detective Ward to amend or alter the two reports that you were required to write one which he said would suit?—Yes.
5448. Was the character of that report either to misstate the facts with regard to the cave party being known or to suppress it?—It was altogether to keep out the cave party being known in it.
5449. Either to suppress it or make a misstatement about it?—I understood that to be it.
5450. You could not have written truthfully the same report as your brother constables did, that it was not known to Mrs. Byrne?—No; how possibly could I?
5451. I suppose when constables are doing such a dangerous duty as this together, they are in the habit of talking together?—Yes.
5452. I do not ask you to particularize men, but can you solemnly say as to whether the opinion you hold that the cave party was known was held by the constables doing duty with you?—Yes.
5453. Well known and spoken of?—Yes.
5454. By all of them?—I could not say all.
5455. You would be in regular conversation with all of them?—I have heard some of them express their opinion, but not all.
5456. Was it the general opinion?—It was.
5457. Do you mean to tell the Commission that you believe that evidence will be brought before them that Mullane instructed men to make that report?—No; I mean that mine is only a copy; and there are men who have got the originals, with Senior-Constable Mullane’s own writing on the back.
5458. Do you mean that there are men who have made similar reports to yours that have been altered?—That have been returned; I would not say altered.
5459. Who?—Constable Daniel Barry.
5460. Here is one of the 2nd April, of Constable Barry:—“I beg to report, for the information of the Assistant Commissioner of Police, that I have been engaged on special duty from 3rd December last to 17th March last, watching Byrne’s house at Sebastopol. During that time, so far as I could judge, none of that family were aware of our being in the vicinity. The instructions received from the Assistant Commissioner of Police were strictly carried out, and the greatest possible precautions were used by the party to prevent our being discovered.” What you now voluntarily say is that you believe that there was another report sent in by this man, and returned by Mullane?—Yes.
5461. Was that your belief?—Yes.
5462. Have you, from conversation with Barry, reason to believe that he also believed as you did, that the party was known to anyone?—He did.
5463. And, therefore, if he was spoken to as you were, would that be the kind of report that Ward wanted you to write?—Well it would.
5464. Do you know whether it is probable that the Commission will get the original of Barry’s report from him with Mullane’s memo, on the back of it?—I believe they will.

Constable Barry was called, and he handed in two documents with Senior-Constable Mullane’s endorsement on the back.

5465. To the Witness.—Were you in the habit of making reports the same as this every time you were out on a search party?—I never made one before.

5466. What was the reason you were called upon for this?—The cave party was about to be discontinued.

5467. It was not in reference to the secrecy only?—It might be on the part of the officers, but I could not say that. I thought it was merely because of the cave party being broken up.

A. J. Faulkiner, continued. 11th May 1881.

5468. “I have called on Constable Barry, 2710, for a report relative to how the special duty at Sebastopol was performed.” What was the character of the special duty; was one of the particular matters of the special duty positive secrecy?—It was to be kept secret.

5469. That was the special duty?—Yes.

5470. Was it a positive instruction for you to perform your duty with the utmost secrecy?—It was.

5471. Was there any other special instruction?—Nothing else that I am aware.

5472. Your special duty was to remain in the cave, and keep your position secret?—Yes.

5473. Was the energy of the police and the attention of those that attended them to be directed to that purpose to keep the secret, that any of your movements should not be known?—Yes.

5474. Would you say there was any other special duty referred to in that memo of Mullane’s but the secrecy—does that convey to you that meaning. You had better read the report and the memo. [The witness read the same.] Was the special duty there secrecy?—Yes. I would consider a man could make two reports on that memo.

5475. Was there a minute sent to you by Constable Mullane to report, or did the instructions come verbally?—Verbally, by Constable Barry.

5476. From Senior-Constable Mullane?—Yes.

5477. You have come now to the 3rd of June—where were you then?—I was in Benalla on the 3rd of June.

5478. Had you any further connection whatever with the cave party?—No; nothing more after that.

5479. Were you told off to go up the Murray then?—I was then in Benalla, up to the time Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson, some time in June 1880. On the 11th June Superintendent Hare sent for Constable Canny and me, and directed us to take a tour round the country, and see if we could not get some information of the outlaws. Mr. Hare said we could go where we pleased, giving us his private address, that when we found it convenient to send him a few lines, we could do so, and that we could go where we thought best. We came to the conclusion that it would be best not to carry firearms so as not to cause suspicion; and if anything urgent was to turn up, to come to the nearest telegraph office and speak to Superintendent Hare.

5480. Were you on horseback or on foot?—I am coming to that. Constable Canny left Benalla on the morning of the 12th June, and went to a station some distance out of Benalla, and got the use of two private horses. On the 16th or 17th I wrote to Mr. Hare from Cotton-tree, that we had been informed, on good authority, that the Kellys had been seen coming home frequently.

5481. Where is Cotton-tree?—Somewhere about fifteen or twenty miles beyond Bethanga, giving the names of the persons who had seen them, and the directions they were coming from. I stated that we had been informed that the gang were getting provisions from the Chinese store, and that we intended, on our return, to see if this statement was correct. That was the contents of the first letter. In the second letter I stated that we had received all the information we could, and intended to return and see if this information was correct.

Mr. Sadleir.—I would ask for those letters to go in as evidence.

The Chairman read the three letters referred to (dated respectively 16th, 22nd, and 23rd June). (Vide Appendix.)

5482. Did you or Canny know the appearance of the Kellys?—Canny did; he knew them from their childhood.

5483. Did he identify them among this number of men as being the Kellys?—No; he identified one as a friend of his own. We then went to the Chinaman’s camp, and employed some of them to come and wash sheep. We asked them if they were not frightened of the Kellys. One of them replied that they were too far away; he said that they were getting their provisions from the Chinese store at the Buckland Gap, and had pack-horses to carry it away. He said they came down from the ranges, two at a time; this, he stated, they did frequently. I asked him why he did not tell the police. He replied that the police were too frightened to go near them. He asked me not to tell the police; that they had been threatened if they told the police they would be shot and then burnt. We told the Chinamen that we were living on the sheep station. We then returned to Wangaratta, and, on the 25th, I sent a telegram to Mr. Hare, from Wangaratta, stating that Constable Canny and I would be back to Benalla in the evening, and wished to see him, as we had made arrangements for Mr. Hare to see these Chinamen.

5484. Did they specify any time that they had been by; was it about the time you were speaking to them that they spoke of?—We did not cross-question them too much, and through that Mr. Hare sent me back a second time. We then made arrangements by buying 100 cabbage plants for him. The information was that good that we wanted Mr. Hare to see the Chinamen himself. On our arrival at Benalla, we informed Mr. Hare of the information we had received, and the arrangements we had made for him to see the Chinamen. Mr. Hare replied then that it was the best information he had received, and he was well satisfied with our trip. We were away seventeen days, and travelled about 500 miles. On the morning of the 26th June 1880, Mr. Hare ordered me to his office, and told me that he would not be able to go and see the Chinamen, and, as I had gone so far, I could finish it. He said I would have to return to this place and get the name of the Chinaman keeping the store, and when the Chinaman who gave the information was at the store last. Mr. Hare said, “Constable Canny can go with you, if you choose.” I said I thought it did not want two of us. I left Benalla at eleven a.m. on the morning of the 26th, and went by myself to see the Chinaman, to the Chinaman’s place, on the 27th, and got all the information I required, and was returning to Benalla on the morning of the 28th, when I was informed of the fight with the police and the Kellys at Glenrowan. I reached Glenrowan that evening, and returned to Benalla in the same train that Ned Kelly and the body of Byrne were brought to Benalla in. On the receipt of this information (I believe that the Kellys were seen frequently coming home), Mr. Hare placed men in such positions as to prevent their being able to visit their friends, or their friends being able to supply them with any information.

5485. How do you know that?—The evening we were returning from being out on the 26th we passed two of the police parties. We called at Wangaratta and Glenrowan, and two of the police parties were there, thereby cutting off their communication, through which means, I believe, the gang were compelled to come out, and use some means to evade the vigilance of the police, which finally resulted in their own capture.

5486. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.
5487. That they were fairly driven out?—Yes, I think so. I returned to Benalla then, and was in Benalla until such time as I returned to my station at Oakleigh; that was some time in August, I think, I was then told off to escort Edward Kelly from the Melbourne Gaol to Beechworth, on his trial. Would you like his statement on the way up?
5488. You had better give it?—On his way up he expressed himself with reference to the police and the officers; he said if he had a tail (that is, a Chinaman’s tail) he would go home to China, as one Chinaman was worth all the —— Europeans, and he would rather trust his life to them than any —— European living. From the manner in which he expressed himself with reference to the Chinamen, he clearly showed he had received some sympathy or assistance from them. He then began to speak with reference to the officers.
5489. About the Chinamen: did you hear, when you were up in that district, that Byrne and Kelly were supplied with provisions by the Chinese storekeeper at Sebastopol?—Yes, I heard of that. He said, “The idea of Hare, being a picked man, being sent up to catch me. I can tell you every place his party passed two of the police parties. We called at Wangaratta and Glenrowan, and two of the police parties were there, thereby cutting off their communication, through which means, I believe, the gang were compelled to come out, and use some means to evade the vigilance of the police, which finally resulted in their own capture.

5486. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.
5487. That they were fairly driven out?—Yes, I think so. I returned to Benalla then, and was in Benalla until such time as I returned to my station at Oakleigh; that was some time in August, I think, I was then told off to escort Edward Kelly from the Melbourne Gaol to Beechworth, on his trial. Would you like his statement on the way up?
5488. From the manner in which he expressed himself with reference to the Chinamen, he clearly showed he had received some sympathy or assistance from them. He then began to speak with reference to the officers.
5489. About the Chinamen: did you hear, when you were up in that district, that Byrne and Kelly were supplied with provisions by the Chinese storekeeper at Sebastopol?—Yes, I heard of that. He said, “The idea of Hare, being a picked man, being sent up to catch me. I can tell you every place his party camped in the Warby ranges, and who used to get up the horses.”
5490. That is in the morning?—Yes.
5491. There was a man sent out to bring in the horses?—Yes, Lawless and I were sent off for that.
5492. Were the horses hobbled?—Yes. He said, “I would have liked to have caught the fat ———.” He said, “What was Nicolson doing at Benalla, pulling my friends into his office, and giving them money to do your lazy ———’s work.”
5493. Meaning the spies?—Yes. He said, “The Government could have given them all the money they possess, and then they would not have sold me.”
5494. To whom did he allude; the agents?—Yes, I suppose that was it, that was all.
5495. Were there any men by when he said that to you?—I think so when he spoke about the Chinamen, but one could not hear what he said to the others because of the noise of the van.
5495a. Did he speak to them?—Yes, he was speaking to them and singing all the way up from the time he got in the train.
5496. Did he appear to sing out of bravado?—It was a song made up about themselves.
5497. And their exploits?—Yes, “The brave Kelly gang,” during their time in the mountains, and something of that sort.
5498. Did he give you the idea of being a courageous man or a coward?—I believe he was a very plucky man and a very good man if he had put it to better use.
5499. Did he give any idea where they were?—No, except the reference to the Warby ranges.
5500. You stated you believed he was there during the first week in November, when the horse was found?—Yes.
5501. You also stated that he knew who was to bring in the horses in the morning?—Yes.
5502. That could only be acquired by a person on the spot?—Yes.
5503. Did he mention who it was brought them?—No.
5504. You do not know whether it was only brag?—I believe it was true because it was two men’s work, and he said he knew the men who brought up the horses every morning.
5505. You did not ask for the names?—No, if I began to ask a question he stopped at once; if I began to ask a question he thought I wanted to know too much.
5506. He would not allow himself to be “pumped”?—No. With reference to the time the information was received on the 3rd of November, I believe it to be correct, that they would have been captured on or about that time; I had not this information given directly to myself, but I believe that.
5507. Did you see Senior-Constable Johnson on your way through Wangaratta at that time?—No, after we came back from Sebastopol then we saw him.
5508. Did he tell you anything about his trip through the Warby ranges?—No, he did not.
5509. Are you aware he was the constable with that party?—Yes.
5510. How long had you been at the cave party before you formed the opinion of the probability of your existence there being known to Byrne’s family and others?—Well, I formed it gradually; after I was there a couple of months or so, I heard more and more, which convinced me towards the latter end.
5511. Do you remember any circumstance that first suggested to your mind that your being there was known?—I could not exactly say to a month.
5512. Was there any special circumstance about the first time that led you to that belief?—Simply because there were too many women mixed up with this cave party, Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Sherritt, and Mrs. Sherritt’s family were continually visiting Byrne’s.
5513. Was that the case from the first time you went to the cave?—Yes; Sherritts and Barrys I noticed.
5514. Were you called upon at any time, by either of your superior officers, to express an opinion whether you thought that your presence there was known or not before the time you were asked to send in that report?—No, never.
5515. So far as you were concerned you kept it a profound secret?—Yes, I communicated to no one.
5516. When you went back to Beechworth, during the nine or ten days, did you have any complaints?—No.
5517. Did you write to anybody during that time to tell that?—No, never.
5518. At no time no communication, written or otherwise, passed from you that you were engaged in that secret cave party?—No.
5519. You stated that the two families that you mentioned, in your opinion, were aware of the cave party being there?—Yes.
5520. You said they visited from place to place?—Yes.
5521. What women were in Sherritt’s house?—I think three young girls and one grown up girl.
5522. Are those girls in the habit of being constantly in Beechworth; are they doing business there?—One was at a dressmaking establishment there.
5523. Then if it became known to her, are not the probabilities that it would be generally well known about the party?—Yes; in fact she is a claimant for the reward.

POLICE.

A. J. Faulkiner, continued. 11th May 1881.

5524. What age were the other three?—I suppose one would be about 18, and another 16, and another 12, and there are some boys between.
5525. Was the one about 12 attending State school?—Yes, at Sheep-station, I believe.
5526. Supposing that the girl became acquainted with the fact of the cave party and the police in the district, do you think a thing of the kind could then remain unknown?—No, I doubt if the secret of the cave party lasted for five or six weeks; that was the longest it could last. Any secret duty like that it would be impossible to keep it secret longer than that; that is my opinion.
5527. There is a mention made here in Constable Ward’s report, when he sends in the reports of the cave party, with reference to constables Cox and Faulkiner, that they were away from here on the date of his sending it in; where were you upon the 3rd of April?—In Benalla.
5528. Where was Cox?—I think he was at Rutherglen.
5529. Then that statement, “away from here,” would be true?—Yes.
5530. Were the other men at Beechworth to your knowledge?—Yes, I believe they were; Dixon had left with me.
5531. Can you inform the Commission as to whether, to your knowledge, Cox shared your opinion of the cave party being known?—To the best of my belief he did.
5532. Can you state, in your opinion, was there a single man of your party who did not share in that opinion—you were constantly thrown together—did you read?—We mostly slept, and one kept watch.
5533. You constantly, during the day, talked of your special duty?—Yes.
5534. Do you think the idea that your presence there was not known was held by any one of the party?—They did not like to express themselves of the opinion that it was known—that was my own opinion.
5535. Did you hear them express the opinion that the cave party was known?—I did, some of them.
5536. Where were you on the 2nd of April?—I was in Beechworth.
5537. And you came away upon the evening of the 2nd?—Yes.
5538. Then that portion of Detective Ward’s report where he says Constable Cox and yourself were away would be true for the 3rd?—Yes; that is if he sent it on the 3rd.
5539. Did you have any conversation with Mullane besides the order upon the fact about your views upon that point?—When I handed him my second report he read it as relative to my first and the memo., and I insisted upon it being sent; he seemed rather surprised; that is all he said.
5540. Did he intimate a single word about the cave party being known?—No.
5541. Cross-question you?—Never said a word about it.
5542. What time did you leave the cave?—The morning of the 2nd of April.
5543. And then made your report?—Yes.
5544. Where did you write No. 1 report?—In the Beechworth barracks.
5545. Where No. 2?—Beechworth barracks.
5546. Where No. 3?—Benalla.
5547. When would that third report reach Beechworth?—I suppose on the morning of the 4th.
5548. Then if he did not get your final report, which is not here, and if those reports were in the possession of his officers on the 3rd, he could not have been in possession of yours?—No.
5549. But he would have had Nos. 1 and 2 if they were to be sent?—Yes.
5550. Did you see Mr. Nicolson when you came to Benalla?—No; I remember seeing him prior to the cave party being broken up.
5551. After the cave party being broken up on the 3rd or 4th?—Yes, some time after we arrived.
5552. Did he speak about the cave party?—No.
5553. Whom did you report to at Benalla?—Sergeant Whelan.
5554. Did you speak to him about the cave party?—No.
5555. Did you see Mr. Sadleir?—I think I did.
5556. Did you report to any of your comrades, senior-constables, or sergeants your opinion about the cave party being known after the 3rd?—I could not say I did.
5557. Did you before?—No.
5558. Then all the information you gave on the matter is detailed in those letters?—Yes.
5559. Were there any other members of the force left at the cave after you came away?—No, I was among the last that left.
5560. You knew then that the cave party was broken up?—Yes; the cave party was removed to Aaron Sherritt’s house.
5561. You knew it was broken up when you left on the 2nd?—Yes.
5562. Then they went direct to Aaron Sherritt’s house, a portion of the men?—Yes, soon after Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson.
5563. You stated you used to put your food in a bag and take it from Sherritt’s house?—Yes.
5564. Was that old Sherritt’s house?—Yes.
5565. Did young Jack Sherritt occasionally bring food there?—Yes.
5566. Did he do it at night?—Mostly about dusk.
5567. What food did you get, tinned fish?—Yes.
5568. Did he remove the empty tins or anything, and try to hide the appearance of your being there?—He might, but not to my knowledge.
5569. How did you get water?—Aaron Sherritt brought it in water-bags—I went a few times, but he generally brought the water.
5570. Was there any other man, except the two Sherritts or the women, that supplied you with provisions that you know of?—No.
5571. Do you think that all those three girls at Sherritt’s house, and Aaron Sherritt, and young Sherritt, and John Sherritt all knew of the existence of the cave party?—Yes, certainly.
5572. Did you see Mrs. Barry there?—Yes.
5573. She knew of it?—Yes.
5574. Where did she live?—Opposite the hotel—that is facing the cave; the cave is away up in the hill.

A. J. Faulkner, continued, 11th May 1881.

227
And Allan conveyed them to Sherritt’s house?—Yes.

By the Commission.—How do you know the Government paid?—Because we had a note out from Detective Ward that the cart would be out in the evening with the provisions, and we had to write to Ward for the provisions when we required them.

Still you did not know of your own knowledge that some one else may not have paid the storekeeper?—I suppose it was the Government.

You arrived at that conclusion because you sent to Ward and he sent to you?—Yes.

Do you know Allan’s store in Beechworth?—Yes.

Do you know that any officer of police is in the habit of going there and ordering provisions?—No.

By Mr. Hare.—Who ordered provisions?—We wrote to Detective Ward.

Did any of the Sherritt girls ever visit the cave?—I think not, but young Mrs. Sherritt did.

None of the daughters did during my time; but Mrs. Sherritt—Aaron’s wife—did on one occasion.

Do you know that the Sherritt girls used to visit Mrs. Byrne’s house?—One of them told me that she had slept at Mrs. Byrne’s.

Where did you see her?—At Sherritt’s.

Did you used to go there?—Yes.

You stated that Ward stated that an entry had been made in your record sheet; do you know whether there was or not?—No.

With reference to your performing duty at the cave?—I cannot say that there was.

You were out with me in the Warby ranges?—Yes.

How often were you out with me?—I think often with every party you went out.

Were you out at the Woolshed when I was watching Mrs. Sherritt’s place?—No.

With that exception, were you out with every party?—Yes.

Do you think that we were wasting our time when we were there?—I always thought that we were there on information. We had as good a chance as anyone.

Do you know one day we lost when we were out?—No.

What did we do?—Any time we went out on information we went out nine or ten miles in a different direction and after dark returned another road to within a couple of miles of the suspected place, and tied the horses up and walked the rest and surrounded the place before daylight; but when out without information, we used to separate about 150 or 200 yards, as far apart as we could well reach, and cover the range across or the side of a hill.

Did we keep on roads?—No, except we could not really help it.

Between Warby ranges and Benalla?—No.

Are there any roads in the Warby ranges?—No.

Did we go near a road for several days?—No, we kept the range, camping in the bush.

By the Commission.—Is that to the eastward of the Taminick station, or at the back?—At the back. There are no roads in the ranges.

By Mr. Hare.—Do you know a road going across to Wangaratta?—Yes.

By the Commission.—Do you know where a road comes out at Bryan’s orangery?—Yes.

Did you keep along that road?—We might have crossed it.

Supposing the outlaws were there in those ranges, unless you came across them by accident, would it be very difficult to find them there?—The only chance was to come across their camp, and shoot shot in the rocks, and you not see them?—Yes.

By Mr. Hare.—What distance apart did we walk?—Sometimes twenty or thirty yards, and in flat country as far as we could see each other.

Do you think there was a chance of catching them in the mountains in the way that we worked?—I was under that impression myself.

Were all the party under that impression?—Yes.

Is there much of that rocky country?—There are very high ranges, and the rocks very steep.

Describe to the Commission how we used to work, say from the Taminick station towards Glenrowan. Do you remember going down there one day especially, when Sergeant Fegan was one of the party?—Yes.

Describe that?—When we came to the foot of a hill, Mr. Hare would start so many men round one side, and so many on the other, and so many straight to the top.

By the Commission.—Then, if that was done, they could not be there without your finding them?—Yes.

By Mr. Hare.—If they were in the gullies, if one man did not catch them another would?—Yes.

By the Commission.—You have been all through that district up the Mitta, and all round the Kelly country, as it is called?—Yes.

Have you come to any conclusion as to what the movements of the Kellys were. Do you think they remained, being fed and provisioned, round about the Warby Range, Greta, Glenrowan, and their own homestead and the Fifteen-mile Creek, or do you think they remained away from that?—I think they were somewhere in the Warby ranges, from Greta across to Fifteen-mile Creek. That was their general track and their stronghold.
5624. Round Glenrowan, where they were captured?—Yes.

5625. By Mr. Hare.—Before I came there, were you in other search parties?—Yes.

5626. Did they work in the same way?—Yes.

5627. Did they think they were throwing away that time?—No.

5628. By the Commission.—Was it pleasant work?—I think not; some very cold nights.

5629. It wears the clothes out quickly?—We were in plain clothes.

5630. Is it not considered very rough work on them?—We used to put on any old clothes.

5631. By Mr. Hare.—You remember the night I watched Bryan’s place?—Yes.

5632. Describe the state I was in that morning?—That evening we watched the place with Mr. Hare, Canny and I; we stayed up in a potato field till about 2 a.m. in the morning. The other men were all round the house. Then Mr. Hare instructed Canny and me to go to Wangaratta. We got a party of police, and brought them back. We met Mr. Hare coming back, and he spoke to me. I would not speak to him at first. I did not know him, because his whole face was covered with icicles from the hoar frost. We watched there till daylight, and as soon as daylight we saddled up the horses and started to search the ranges.

5633. And were out the whole day then?—Yes.

5634. Do you remember going to some tracks up a hill?—Yes.

5635. And we followed them?—Yes, some five or six miles.

5636. The following day going up do you remember some information of a fire on the top of the hill?—Yes; we went to the top, and there was a fire and some stones removed, as if the men had lifted the stones, and the fire had got the start of them and spread on the hill. We thought it was a place no one would go unless they were compelled to go.

5637. Did you see any marks of people going up?—I think we saw the marks of stones.

5638. Do you remember we camped on a swamp that night?—Yes.

5639. Next morning did we see any indications of anything?—Yes; we were going up the hill, and we came to a little pool of water, and we went to look at it, and there were three or four footprints there.

5640. What sort of footprints?—A very big foot.

5641. Anything about the heel of the boot?—I do not remember.

5642. By the Commission.—It was stated in evidence when the ploughshares were stolen about Greta there were footprints with very high-heeled boots; was there anything remarkable about the foot prints?—I could not say; the sand closes up.

5643. Was it at the springs on Bruno’s selection?—No.

5644. By Mr. Hare.—We continued searching those hills?—Yes.

5645. Do you remember seeing any indications there of anything?—We came across a tent and no person at home, and a couple of bags of chaff and a pair of hobbles and cooking utensils outside.

5646. Any marks of horses?—Yes.

5647. Shod or unshod?—I think shod.

5649. We watched that place some time?—Yes, we did.

5650. Do you remember going on any other hill when seeing indications of stones being turned?—I think we went on two.

5651. You remember the night I watched Bryan’s place?—Yes.

5652. Who was in charge of that party?—Sergeant Steele.

5653. Were you going on any particular duty?—Not that I am aware of.

5654. Where were you going to?—To Beechworth.

5655. Did you hear the information given to Sergeant Steele?—I could not say I heard the information given, but the information was talked of in the train.

5656. About information that the Kellys had gone through Wangaratta?—Yes.

5657. You went in the Mansfield direction also?—Yes, to Beechworth.

5658. Why did not you stop?—I think Steele would not take the responsibility at the time. I believe Inspector Smith was there at the time.

5659. By the Commission.—How do you know?—I only heard.

5660. He might have been out in the ranges at the time?—He might.

5661. Then your answer to Mr. Hare is that, in your opinion, why Sergeant Steele did not act was he was under special orders to go to a certain place, and he felt it his first duty to do that?—That is my opinion.

5662. By Mr. Hare.—When you went there what did you do?—We went out and searched the ranges, and from there into Yackandandah. This was on the 3rd November, and on the 4th we searched the ranges from Beechworth into Yackandandah.

5663. Was Canny removed from the cave party before you?—He was.

5664. For how long?—I suppose he was removed for some time—for a few days—and then sent back again; for what time I could not say.
5665. Where did he go to then?—To Wangaratta.
5666. How long did he remain away?—Five or six, perhaps seven, days.
5667. What was the object?—I understood that he had been speaking of the cave, or that he was put away. That was his impression, and he was told he had been speaking of the cave party.
5668. But he was sent back again?—Yes.
5669. Did he remain there as long as you did?—Yes, till the removal of the cave party.
5670. By the Commission.—By whose orders would he be removed?—By Mr. Nicolson’s, I suppose.
5671. Through whom?—Directions coming through Ward.
5672. By Mr. Hare.—Did you get any important information from a Chinaman?—I received the information that he had been at this place of late, and also the names of the Chinamen keeping the store.
5673. By the Commission.—Before you leave, you volunteered a statement about Whorouly races. You said you doubted Aaron Sherritt?—Yes.
5674. The reason of your doubt was that he stated that he was going to ride Byrne’s racehorse, and that it was not likely they would put a thirteen-stone man on that racehorse at Whorouly?—Yes.

229

5675. A long time elapsed between that and the last time of your seeing Aaron Sherritt?—Yes.
5676. You had an opportunity of seeing him daily when you were in the cave party?—Yes.
5677. Did you see him after you left that cave party ever?—No, I did not.
5678. Of course it is a matter of opinion—have you formed any opinion as to whether he was true to the Government, or was all through acting a friendly part towards the Kellys?—I believe he was acting true to the Government.
5679. Though you did not think so at the Whorouly races?—Yes.
5680. What train of circumstances induced you to alter your opinion of him from the Whorouly races to the time you last saw him at the cave party?—He used to speak so against Mrs. Byrne, and used never to visit her; and I thought if he was not friends with her he must be enemies.
5681. The brother, Jack Sherritt, did you think he was true to the Government?—I could not say much about him.
5682. What is your opinion?—He was more inclined to drink and knock about amongst other people, so I had not such a good chance as with Aaron to form an opinion.
5683. Did you ever hear him mention he was in the habit of meeting the outlaws—did he ever talk to you of ever having seen any of the outlaws?—No, he did not mention it.
5684. Was he familiar did he say with their appearance?—Yes, he said he knew them well.
5685. Do you think that during the time you were on duty up there, or previously or subsequently to this, that the Kellys were in the habit of visiting Byrne’s?—Well, I doubted it. I did not see what they wanted to come home for. I thought they could easily get their provisions elsewhere. They might occasionally visit the place, I have no doubt, but not frequently.
5686. Do you know the origin of the unpleasantness that occurred between Mrs. Byrne and Sherritt—was it connected with the Kelly party. You said Sherritt did not agree with her?—I believe he had been courting one of the girls at one time, or something of that sort.
5687. Have you formed any opinion as to why Aaron Sherritt was shot?—Because he was in league with the police.
5688. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.
5689. Do you think that private vengeance in connection with his family had anything to do with that?—I do not.
5690. How do you account for the fact of it being known to Joe Byrne that the police were there. Is it from information supplied by his brother?—Yes, I daresay it would be. I have no doubt they would hear it as well as I heard it myself.
5691. Outside the police?—Yes.
5692. Do you think the information you received came from any members of the police force or a knowledge acquired from the parties themselves?—I think it would be the latter. I do not think it would be to the interest of the police to speak about it.
5693. Did you ever see any reluctance on behalf of the men from doing duty that they were not ready to meet the Kellys?—I have never.
5694. Did, to your knowledge, the officers and sergeants test the courage of the men in picking them for this duty?—No, I do not think they did.
5695. Would you be surprised to learn that the sergeants always did test the men?—I have no doubt they formed an opinion.
5696. Do you know they tested them by sending them on difficult duty; do you know that of your own knowledge?—No.
5697. By Mr. Sadleir.—You stated that there might have been thirteen men in the party from Taylor’s Gap?—Yes.
5698. Where did they meet the party?—A short distance out of Beechworth, on the main road.
5699. Which of them were you with?—Sergeant Steele’s party.
5700. You did not meet in Beechworth?—No.
5701. Is it not nearly two miles out of Beechworth?—I could not say it was not.
5702. A little way on the main road before we turned into the bush?—Yes.
5703. When Mr. Nicolson was rushing the house did you see me that morning?—I could not say I did, I think I did, I fancy you were up to the front.
5704. You said that Mr. Nicolson rushed?—Yes.
5705. What men were with him?—I think Constable Ryan, but I am not sure, and Bracken.
5706. Was Bracken with Mr. Nicolson?—Yes.
5707. Are you quite sure of that?—Yes.
5708. Not with me!—I cannot say that.
5709. You say he was with Mr. Nicolson?—I say he rushed the place, and I believe Mr. Nicolson was with him.
5710. By the Commission.—Will you take upon yourself to say whether Mr. Sadleir was with that party or not?—I will not.
5711. Mr. Sadleir.—What is the good of my asking questions if he does not know I was there?
5712. By the Commission.—Are you sure now?—Well, I would not be. I understood it was he that picked them out.
5713. Do you now take upon yourself to assure the Commission that Mr. Nicolson was the officer in charge of the party that rushed the house?—No, I cannot.
5714. Do you know whether Mr. Sadleir was there or not?—I believed he was, but I do not know for certain.
5715. Can you swear positively as to any of the men that were there?—Constable Bracken.
5716. Any others?—No.
5717. How many accompanied the, officer?—Four or five.
5718. And the only one you identify is Bracken?—Yes.
5719. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you not see me take a party and start with Mr. Nicolson?—No; I might have taken you to be a constable.

A. J. Faulkiner, continued, 11th May 1881.

5720. Might have taken me to be a constable—how long were you in the district?—Since October 1878.
5721. Had you seen me before?—I do not think so.
5722. Were you in the service in any other district?—No.
5723. How many men there did you see that you knew?—Lawless.
5724. Would you know the district men?—No, I did not.
5725. You say your party, Steele’s, and Flood’s joined about two miles out of Beechworth?—I cannot say the exact distance.
5726. Did you see another party start at the same time?—I saw a party go out at the lower side of the creek.
5727. How many men?—I think Steele was in that lot. I went to the other side, that was the party I went with.
5728. To Mr. Sadleir.—Is the evidence true; did Mr. Nicolson lead one party against the house or not?—Yes.
5729. Was Bracken one of that party?—No, he was with me.
5730. By Mr. Nicolson.—You must remember Bracken coming to the door with me, and Bracken’s gun going off—(to the witness)—did you hear the gun go off?—Yes.
5731. Was it Bracken’s gun?—Yes.
5732. By the Commission.—How long before that did you recognize Mr. Nicolson as leading that party?—Just when they began to pick the men out I understood it to be Mr. Nicolson.
5733 Did you know Mr. Nicolson’s appearance?—No, I could not say I did; but I was told it was he.
5734. And you saw somebody picking out the men?—Yes.
5735. And this body of men advanced, and Bracken was amongst them?—Yes.
5736. And you heard a gun go off?—Yes; and the two horses they had dismounted galloped off through the old shed.
5737. By Mr. Sadleir.—Is the witness to be tied to that, that Bracken was with Mr. Nicolson’s party at starting?—I know he was at the house.
5738. You said that Mr. Nicolson picked four men, and Bracken was there?—I believe he was.
5739. You said you had no instructions that morning?—No.
5740. Was not Captain Standish there to give you instructions?—He was there, but he did not give any.
5741. Did you require any instructions on the hill side?—I thought we might have been informed of the information we were going on.
5742. Is it an easy thing to inform thirty or forty police in the bush?—I should think it was a thing that ought to be done (not wishing to be impertinent) whether it was easy or not.

5743. By the Commission.—You would not see any difficulty in informing forty or fifty men?—No.

5744. In conversation with Mr. Hare, and in connection with the Kellys, when you came down for final instructions to go back to that place, did Mr. Hare tell you anything about the probability of the Kellys attacking the police in armour?—No.

5745. Did you know amongst the police that it was known amongst the officers of the force that the Kellys would likely meet the police in armour?—No.

5746. If it was known to the police officers that the Kellys were going to meet the constables in armour, as a matter of opinion, would you consider that it would be desirable, in order that you should know how to act in the matter, that you should be informed of it?—Yes, I should.

5747. Supposing that you had the knowledge now that the men were in armour and going to attack them, would that deter you from doing your duty?—It would make me more careful, still I would endeavor to arrest them.

5748. If you were informed that the four men were going to meet you in armour would you approach them and endeavor to capture them in a different way from what you would if they were on equal terms with you?—Yes.

5749. Would you attempt to rush them?—No.

5750. How would you act?—I would have an idea to fire low, or something of that kind, to hit them in the legs.

5751. Did you ever hear it said?—No, never a word.

5752. By Mr. Sadleir.—Do you know what officers were aware that the Kellys were likely to be in armour?—I do not.

5753. You have heard a great deal since from later information. Have you any notion what officers knew?—No further except I saw about the letters of the “diseased stock,” received by Mr. Nicolson.

5754. Are you not aware that I knew equally well with Mr. Nicolson?—No.

5755. And Mr. Hare knew?—No.

5756. You say it was about the 9th November that Mr. Smith found the police horses?—Yes.

5757. You said the Kellys dropped the horses because they were pushed?—That is what I believe.

5758. Did you see the horses after they were found?—No.

5759. Then you cannot tell that it was that the horses were completely done, or that the Kellys were pushed by the police?—No.

5760. What police were there there to push them?—Johnson and his party and Inspector Brook Smith.

5761. Would you be surprised to find, from Inspector Smith’s statement at the time, and Mr.
Nicolson’s evidence since, that the marks on those horses were over a week old, from the time they were let loose till they were found?—I would not be a bit surprised at that.

5762. By the Commission.—Could anyone tell?—They might imagine.

5763. By Mr. Sadleir.—Cannnot you tell by whether the marks are wearing out whether those are marks of yesterday or several days ago?—Yes.

5764. By the Commission.—If there were sweat marks?—Yes.

5765. If I ride a horse to-day, and turn him out to-morrow, can you tell whether I rode it the day before by sweat marks?—No.

5766. By Mr. Sadleir.—That is not the question at all. If you see a horse that has been turned out from under the saddle, can you not say by seeing him next day that it is very recent?—Yes I could form an opinion.

5767. By the Commission.—Could a party not rest a day, or two days, and leave a horse behind?—
Yes, they could.

Mr. Sadleir.—My purpose is only to show those men were not pushed.

5768. By the Commission.—In your opinion.

5769. Suppose there was no rain?—I would be able to make out.

5770. Pretty well?—Yes.

5771. On the 3rd November you say there was information about the Kellys crossing?—Yes.

5772. You never saw the original report?—No.

5773. Have you any idea whether the Kellys were said to have crossed, or some men supposed to be the Kellys?—Said to be the Kellys?

5774. Are you not aware that Inspector Brook Smith reported fully in the matter?—No.

5775. Your first letter to Mr. Hare was in June 1880. You reported that some person told you that the Kellys had been seen coming on the Fifteen-mile Creek, and living on a Chinaman at a certain place—where is that certain place?—I do not think I reported that.

5776. By the Commission.—The letter states what did occur.

A. J. Faulkner,
continued.
11th May 1881.
5776. By Mr. Sadleir.—Or information to that effect?—Not living with a Chinaman, getting provisions from a Chinese store.

5777. You have mentioned in that letter that they got those provisions from Chinamen, at a certain place; did you mention the place to Mr. Hare?—No, I did not.

5778. What was the good of that information to Mr. Hare, then?—Because we had not at that time seen it. We had only been informed they had been getting provisions, and intended, when we could, to see if the information was correct.

5779. That was on the 16th, and your next letter the 22nd?—Yes.

5780. Was this very valuable information lying idle all this time?—We called on the Chinaman. He was not there, and we could not wait.

5781. What was the value of that information, I ask you, as a sensible man—that they were getting provisions from a Chinaman at a certain place; what officer could make any use of that?—They could make no use of it as I furnished it, till I got further particulars.

5782. Did you furnish it on the 22nd, “The best thing that we can do is to return”—could get no information—is there any fresh information there?—Yes.

5783. Then your third letter of the 23rd June is to this effect—a party of armed men being seen in the neighborhood of Rutherglen?—Yes.

5784. Is not your third letter entirely about that, and nothing else?—Yes.

5785. So that this valuable information you never thought any more about?—No.
By the Commission.—He told Mr. Hare verbally.

Mr. Hare.—Mr. Sadleir was not in the room when he gave me full particulars about it.

5786. By Mr. Sadleir.—When did you come back to see your officer?—On the 25th.

5787. That was nine days afterwards?—Yes.

5788. You reported first on the 16th, that you had this valuable information about the Chinaman, and the first time you mentioned the case to Mr. Hare was the 25th. You did delay explaining fully to Mr. Hare about it till then?—Yes, I did.

5789. That was very valuable information?—Yes.

5790. What was the value of it?—That they were getting provisions from a Chinese store. This information we received on the 15th or 16th, but our reasons for not being able to give the full particulars were that we called, and the Chinaman was not at home.

5791. It might have been valuable, but it was not because you had not full information at the time?—It was not full.

5792. Then it was not valuable?—It was, but we could not follow it up.

5793. By the Commission.—Was it of value to let Mr. Hare know where the Kellys were?—We had first to see the Chinaman, before we could inform Mr. Hare, and he was not there, and would not be home till about the end of the week.

5794. By Mr. Sadleir.—What was the “certain place”?—Either the Buckland Flat or Gap.

5795. By the Commission.—Did you ever go to the place you heard they were being supplied at?—No.

5796. By Mr. Sadleir.—Or any one else?—No.

5797. Then the information was of no value as it stood?—As it stood.

5798. Is this what you mean. In your application for the reward, did you state about giving the valuable information?—Yes.

5799. Is that the valuable information?—Yes, that and seeing the Kellys coming home frequently.

5800. Is that in your letter?—Yes; the first letter, I think.—[The letter was read and examined by the witness.]

5801. Where was that written from?—The Cotton-tree.

5802. That is some seventy miles from Greta?—Yes.

5803. And the Fifteen-mile Creek—is it not some forty or fifty miles long itself?—I cannot say.

5804. By the Commission.—Is what is called the Fifteen-mile Creek the place that is called Mason’s station?—I think it is.

5805. If you talk of the Fifteen-mile Creek, would it not be Mason’s station, at the back of Greta?—Yes.

5806. You would understand that?—Yes.

5807. And when you wrote the letter, and mentioned Fifteen-mile Creek, did you mean forty miles up, or the Fifteen-mile Creek near the Kellys’ place?—Constable Canny got the information, and he is well acquainted with the different rivers.
5812. Mr. Hare would be probably aware of that?—Yes.
5813. By the Commission.—Does not the Fifteen-mile Creek indicate a certain radius of country?—Yes. They must have been close to home, or else this person would not have formed the opinion they were coming home.

The object of Mr. Sadleir’s question is to show that the information conveyed in that letter was not of such a character that it would be of any use to the officer.

Mr. Sadleir.—Yes.
5814. By the Commission.—The principal point, it appears to my judgment, is that the evidence was very indefinite as to the time they were getting the provisions?—He said recently.
5815. By Mr. Sadleir.—Those letters contain all the information of value conveyed to Mr. Hare, then?—Yes.

5816. What action did he take?—I said I believed that on the receipt of that information that was the reason why men were put to watch this house of Mrs. Kelly’s and Hart’s.
5817. Who was put to watch Mrs. Kelly’s house?—Constable Cornelius Ryan, Constable Barry, and Constable Wallace, I think.
5818. When did they go there?—I have not the slightest idea. I do not think they had been above five or six hours—not days.
5819. Were they there before the 16th?—After the 16th.
5820. You are sure of that?—Yes.
5821. How long were they kept there?—To the Saturday night prior to the capture of the gang; on the Sunday night, the 25th, I think.
5822. That was the day you gave that information?—No; it was the day I gave the information about the Chinaman.
5823. You imagine that those men were sent in consequence of that information of yours?—Yes.
5824. Is there any indication of Hart’s place in this?—No; that they were seen coming home.
5825. Had they not a home at Beechworth—Joe Byrne had?—Yes.
5826. Was it in consequence of that information that the party was sent there?—I would not say that.
5827. You said all this was done because of your information?—I said I believed it was.
5828. By the Commission.—You have arrived at this from something you heard or saw?—Yes.
5829. When you wrote the letter on the 16th instant whom was it directed to?—To Mr. Hare, under a false name, according to directions—J. M. Davis, Benalla.
5830. Therefore, if it came into his hands, and he took action about it, how do you then arrive at that knowledge—from what he told you or one of the constables?—One of the constables said to me, that Mr. Hare said he expected to hear something good from us; and on our way down we passed those two parties of police. I was not aware that at any time there were parties of police watching Byrne’s and Hart’s and Kelly’s together.
5831. Were those the places when you wrote that letter, after conversation with Canny, were those the homes that you spoke of, that you informed them they were working to?—I meant Hart’s and Kelly’s.
5832. Mr. Sadleir asked you as to the appearance of a horse which you did not see, and therefore it was all hearsay?—Yes.
5833. Did you hear your brother constables discuss at that time, or about that time, of the officers bringing the men in from that duty?—Yes, I did.
5834. What was their opinion about it?—That Mr. Brook Smith was not capable of taking charge.
5835. By the Commission (to Mr. Hare).—Did you act upon the receipt of this letter in consequence of the information in it?—No.
5836. That is the letter of the 16th?—No, I did not.
5837. By Mr. Sadleir (to Mr. Hare).—In supporting Constable Falkiner’s claim to the reward, what was the valuable information he brought in?—I think Mr. Sadleir is under a little misapprehension in this matter. He was out of the room when Falkiner gave his evidence with regard to the interview with me. I considered the information in those letters of very little service, but I considered the information he brought in by word of mouth to me of great importance, and upon that I sent him back again, because he was not certain whether it was the Buckland or some other place close by that those men came and got their provisions at, and I sent him back upon that.
5838. By the Commission (to Mr. Hare).—Did you send any of those men out in consequence of your conversation with him?—No I had sent him out before.
5839. Then simply Falkiner was under a wrong impression?—Yes.
5840. By the Commission (to Mr. Sadleir).—About the reward, you have spoken of that—did not all the constables in the district more or less consider they were entitled to this reward?—No I think there were only two who were not present, or three, who sent in a claim.
5841. Falkiner’s name was sent in?—Yes, and I considered it in my report, and it was accompanied with a report by Mr. Hare that he had given very valuable information; while I have to show from my statement that his information was of no value, which Mr. Hare confirms.

Mr. Hare.—In that respect alone, but the information he subsequently gave would have been of great importance if the Kellys had not been caught the next day.

Mr. Sadleir.—It had no actual value whatever.
Mr. Hare.—No.
5842. By the Commission (to the witness).—Did you put in a claim?—Yes.
5843. Is your name down for anything?—No.

Mr. Hare.—His name was amongst the number who were put down as deserving the reward. The information was this:—That there was a storekeeper at Buckland Gap, or some other place close by.

233

I think Harriettville, that both Falkiner and Canny could not give a decided answer about it. They said that this man and one of the outlaws used to come down from the mountains and get the provisions from this store, and that the others remained some distance back with pack-horses. They took their supplies from that store—that it was necessary they should say nothing to the police about. They looked upon them as some residents in the district. Did not know they were police. They bought some cabbage plants there, and he told me that, and I should find the exact spot, and how long ago it was that the Chinaman ——

5844. By Mr. Sadleir (to Mr. Hare).—Were you not aware that you had that information when you were in the district before?—I cannot say that for certain.

Mr. Sadleir.—Instead of three days, it was twelve months or more old.

5845. By the Commission (to Mr. Sadleir).—This very information?—That Chinamen, or one or two, were supplying the outlaws.

5846. Is the information, that you say was twelve months old, that they were getting provisions from Chinamen, or that they were getting them at the Buckland?—Yes, at the Buckland, and it was a twelve-month old; they had been searching about, and the Chinese detective had been employed; a Chinese handbill was issued about it.

5847. Had you reason to believe the information was accurate?—We always thought it was a most probable thing for an occasional supply.

5848. Have you positive information now that makes you believe now that they did get provisions from Chinamen, or not?—I believe they did, once in a way.

Mr. Hare.—They might have continued it till a later date.

5849. By the Commission (to Mr. Sadleir).—Is that the case?—We had exactly similar information.

5850. Is it the same information?—We had exactly similar information.

5851. By Mr. Sadleir (to the witness).—Coming to the information about the four persons reported upon by the Rutherglen police?—Yes.

5852. The impression there was that they were the four outlaws?—Yes.

5853. Had you not reason to believe that you met the four men that were seen?—Yes.

5854. That they were not the outlaws?—Yes.

5855. You say you started with the escort with Ned Kelly?—Yes.

5856. Were you the only man?—No.

5857. Were you in charge?—No.

I thought you were, from what you said.

The Chairman.—He distinctly said he was one of the men, and he was talking to him, and they were at different times.

Mr. Sadleir.—His words were, that he was sent for to escort Ned Kelly.

5857a. By the Commission (to the witness).—Directed to?—Directed to.

5858. By Mr. Sadleir.—You say you were out with every party but one with Mr. Hare?—Yes.

5859. I have, before the Commission called a work of that sort going out in search parties fooling—I ask you to state what object those parties started with; give one case where you had any information that the Kellys were in front of us?—I think I gave that in my statement. We had no information before we started, only our own opinion, except the officers did.

5860. I ask what you knew; you never knew of any information before you started from the barracks?—Sometimes after we got fourteen or fifteen miles away Mr. Hare, if he had any information, I have known him to call us together and tell it.

5861. Give us what he told you at any time?—Once, I remember, they were supposed to be in Cleary’s place.

5862. I know that was the fact; now was there any other occasion when you had information?—Not that I can remember well; there might have been.

5863. You have described your manner of working with Mr. Hare—take the working of the Warby ranges—you would work across so as to leave a very small space between each man?—Yes.

5864. When you got to the top, clear of all timber, how many other hills could you see?—Well, I could not say; you would have a good view.

5865. Would you not see a hundred—perhaps fifty?—Perhaps so.

5866. Did you try all those ranges?—All that were supposed to be in the Warby ranges.

5867. What was to prevent their being on the Strathbogie; you were without information?—There was nothing to prevent it.

5868. You saw a fire on the top of the hill?—Yes.

5869. Is that a likely place for the Kellys to be found?—I would not say it was a likely place for them to light a fire.

5870. Are you not aware that this fire and these tracks were left by Mr. Newcomen’s men, searching...
A. J. Faulkner,
continued.
11th May 1881.

5877. By Mr. Sadleir.—How many people did you hear were bringing reports?—I could not say. It was mostly all reported to the officers.

5878. By the Commission.—Did Jack Sherritt tell you he met Byrne at a certain place near Wangaratta?—He did at some place.

5879. In open daylight?—Yes.

5880. By appointment!—I cannot say that.

5881. Did he tell you he did meet him?—He did.

5882. By Detective Ward.—You remember the morning of the 2nd April, with reference to those reports?—Yes.

5883. Where was I on that morning?—I believe you had just returned to Benalla, and were at Benalla that morning. I fancy you were somewhere in the train.

5884. Could you tell what time I returned?—I suppose half-past two.

5885. What time did you receive instructions with reference to those reports?—About eleven or twelve, I should say.

5886. Whom from?—The instructions came from Senior-Constable Mullane through Constable
Barry to the men in barracks.

5887. Then I was not there?—You were not there when those instructions were given.

5888. By the Commission.—Barry was the man who brought you the first instructions to report?—
Yes.

5889. From Mullane?—Yes.

5890. About eleven o’clock?—I think so.

5891. By Detective Ward.—Was I there when the second report was asked for?—No.

5892. At half-past two, when I returned, was there some unpleasantness between the Senior-Constable Mullane and the men who had been in the cave party?—Yes, there was with reference to returning their reports.

5893. By the Commission.—With reference to those very reports?—Yes.

5894. The asking of them?—Not the asking of them, through him wishing to return them back.

5895. By Detective Ward.—Did I say if I had been at home there would have been nothing like this occur?—Yes, you did.

5896. By the Commission.—Meaning home where?—At Beechworth.

5897. That this unpleasantness would not have arisen?—Yes.

5898. By Detective Ward.—Did I say to you, “These are not the sort of reports required; all I want is a report of the duty you were doing in the cave, of what you know yourselves personally, as I wish to recommend you to the officer in charge for the services you have rendered during your time in the cave. I will forward my remarks to the Assistant Chief Commissioner, who I make no doubt will put a favorable entry on your report sheet”?—That is something of it but not in all.

5899. Say it yourself?—You asked us how it was we came to put in such reports as those, that is Constable Barry and myself, and other constables. “Had I been here this would not have happened.” You had my reports then with you, you half drew them out and showed them to me; you said, “These reports would ever suit Mr. Nicolson.” These were the exact words, “I want a report from you so that Mr. Nicolson could put a favorable entry on your record sheet.”

5900. Of what you knew yourself, did I say that?—Yes, of what I knew myself.

5901. That would be about a quarter to three, at all events—you left by train at three that same day?—Yes.

5902. Before your leaving, after my telling you this, what did you say?—You asked me then to forward that report with reference to how we had carried out the duty ourselves, the secrecy of it. I remarked to you I had not time to make out a report just then, and that I would forward you one from Benalla. I made the report No. 3, and forwarded it to you on, I believe, the 3rd of April.

5903. Then when this conversation occurred, when I asked you what would I do with the other two reports, what did you say?—I said I would have nothing to do with them, to destroy them.

5904. By the Commission.—Did you mean that you would not withdraw them?—Yes.

5905. And that you would not take them back?—Yes.

5906. On your mind was the idea that you were to report, and that it should be said by the men that the party was not known?—Yes.

5907. Was that the point in your own mind, and you absolutely refused to withdraw them?—Yes.

5908. And that was solely your objection?—Yes, so that I could go before Mr. Nicolson and speak of it.

5909. Did you tell Ward to destroy those Nos. 1 and 2 reports?—No.

5910. Or say anything to leave that impression on his mind ——

5911. By Detective Ward.—Did you ask me to forward them?—I had given them to Mullane to forward them.

5912. By the Commission.—You meant that the whole three should go forward?—I did. I attached the one to the other, and said I would forward the third to Benalla.

5913. By Detective Ward.—The order I gave to you, what order did I give you; did I tell you to tell a lie?—No, you told me to make a third report with reference to the secret duty, so that Mr. Nicolson could put a favorable entry on our record sheet.

5914. By the Commission.—From anything said by Ward did he convey to your mind that you were not to allude to the fact that outside people were there?—It was to make a report with reference to ourselves, nothing outside at all.

5915. By Detective Ward.—Do you know I handed Constable Barry back his report?—No.

5916. Did you tell me to forward those reports?—I could not tell you, because I had passed them into Senior-Constable Mullane’s office.

5917. You said you saw them with me?—Yes.

5918. What did I say?—You asked me to withdraw them, and I said I would not.

5919. Tell what I did say?—Detective Ward came into the office, he had then seen Senior-Constable Mullane, I knew by his bringing my reports back—they must have been in Mullane’s possession.

5920. By the Commission.—Is that what Mullane alludes to when he says he gave them to Detective Ward to give to the men?—Yes, Detective Ward came up with those reports in his pocket, up to the barracks, and he said, “Whatever do you mean by sending in reports of this sort, these reports will never suit Mr. Nicolson, you had better withdraw them,” and I said I would not.

5921. In what way “suit”?—He told me Mr. Nicolson only wanted a report to make a favorable entry on my record sheet.

5922. By Detective Ward.—Did I tell you to send a report about the party and yourself as to the secrecy of it, as you each knew yourself?—Yes, I have said that.

Detective Ward.—That is the only thing that I thought I was at liberty to tell them, or anything else, the same as I gave them to the other men.

5923. By the Commission.—After listening to Mr. Ward’s statement, taxing your memory with what took place on the 2nd April, do you still swear you refused to take back Nos. 1 and 2 reports from Ward?—I do positively.

5924. To Detective Ward.—Did you ever send in No. 3?—I did not know about that, because I forwarded my report on the 3rd, and made my remarks about them.

5925. To the witness.—When did you post; your No. 3 report from Benalla?—On the 3rd of April, at Benalla.

5926. At what time of the day?—He would get it either that evening (I cannot recollect the time exactly) or the next morning at the latest.

5927. To whom was that addressed?—Detective Ward, Police Station, Beechworth.

5928. Not to Sergeant Mullane?—No.

5929. Whom were your reports Nos. 1 and 2 directed to?—The first one is directed to the superintendent of police—[examining the papers].

5930. You were under Mullane at Beechworth?—Yes.

5931. And you reported yourself and came under Sergeant Whelan after that?—Yes.

5932. Would it not be your duty to make the report to the officer you did before, why to Detective Ward?—Because those cave reports were supposed to come through him, as I had not time to make it out at Beechworth.

5933. Was it in consequence of something he said to you, before you left, about your reports that you changed the direction from your officer to Detective Ward?—It is not directed to Ward.

5934. I thought you said it was?—I sent the envelope to him.
5935. To whom were those reports addressed?—The first to the Superintendent, the second to the Assistant Commissioner of Police, and the third the Assistant Commissioner of Police.
5936. And it was to be sent through Ward?—Yes, it was to be sent through Ward.
5937. Where was the Assistant Commissioner of Police on the 3rd?—In Benalla.
5938. And you were under a different officer; you had reported yourself to Sergeant Whelan and left Senior-Constable Mullane’s position altogether?—Yes.

Mr. Nicolson.—The fact of the matter is I was in Melbourne on the 3rd.

5939. By the Commission (to the witness).—You addressed your envelope to Detective Ward because he had the two other reports, and asked you for the third?—Yes, that is it.

5940. Did you expect, when you sent the third, that the whole three would have gone forward in the ordinary course?—Yes, I did.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Friday, at Benalla, at Eleven o’clock.

(Taken at Benalla.)

FRIDAY, 13TH MAY 1881.

Present:
The Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
W. Anderson, Esq., M.L.A.,
G. W. Hall, Esq., M.L.A.,
J. Gibb, Esq., M.L.A.
E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P.,
G. R. Fincham, Esq., M.L.A.

James Whelan sworn and examined.

5941. By the Commission.—How long have you been in the service?—I joined it in 1856.
5942. What position did you hold?—I was promoted to the rank of senior-constable in 1862, and the rank of sergeant in 1868.
5943. How long have you been stationed here?—Since November 1864.
5945. What day did Fitzpatrick go then?—At one o’clock on the 15th April, Healy returned from Greta, and I despatched Constable Fitzpatrick at two p.m. He received the direction to remain and take charge of the station. Mrs. Strahan was there with her family, and was to remain till Strahan returned, and then return back to Benalla station.
5946. Was there anybody in charge of the Greta station?—Strahan was in charge, but was on leave, so that was weakened then when he was sent, it was weakened because the other man had returned on patrol, as directed.
5947. Where did he go to?—At two a.m. the next morning he returned to Benalla and rapped at my quarters, and told me that he had been shot at by Ned Kelly and wounded in the arm. That was on the morning of the 16th. I examined his arm and saw a mark like a bullet wound; sent for Dr. Nicholson and had him attended to. I took his statement at the time. I was present at the Police Court here when his evidence was taken at the Petty Sessions, and also at the Court of Assizes at Beechworth, and he did not prevaricate in the least from the statement he first made to me.
5948. How did he come in contact with Ned Kelly at that time?—He stated when he was going to Greta that he rode across and went into Mrs. Kelly’s, and when there about—some short time, half-an-hour—he heard some chopping, and asked if Dan was at home, and was told by Mrs. Kelly that he was not. He heard some chopping on the hill, and got his horse and rode up to the top of the ranges where he heard the chopping, and found Williamson there, and asked where Dan Kelly was, and he said, “Out riding.” While speaking he saw two men riding into the paddock, and asked Williamson who they were, and he said he did not know. Fitzpatrick said, “I think that is Dan Kelly’s mare,” and went down and found Skillion with the saddle off his own horse.
5949. Had you a warrant for his arrest then?—No; there was a warrant at Chiltern, but not here. He saw the Gazette notice that this warrant was issued.

5950. Was it his duty to go there without a warrant?—I think he was wrong in going there, as he knew the characters they were, as he had assisted to arrest them at Wintons previously for an outrage before.

5951. Do you consider he fulfilled instructions in going there instead of Greta?—He was going in charge of a sub-district, and there was at that time, perhaps, one man only to several stations, and a man is master of his own movements, and according to the regulations of the service he is bound to arrest an offender, and according to law without a warrant or not. There is a penalty under the Police Offences Statute if he does not do so, and while he was in charge of a sub-district he would be in charge, but would be responsible for any crime while he was there, and if he was reported as passing a man who was there without a warrant he would be punished by his officer and by law.

5952. What occurred in consequence of his being shot?—Warrants were issued against Ned and Dan Kelly, Williamson and the others and Mrs. Kelly were arrested, and Skillion, and they were dealt with, but the other two were at large.

5953. What was done with reference to them?—There was search made for them. There were no extra men sent to the district, I think, at the time, but there were a few on the 24th October. Superintendent Sadleir sent a party from here to Mansfield, Constables Scanlan, the deceased, and the late Constable Lonigan, from Violet Town, to form a party with Kennedy at Mansfield, to go out to the Wombat, and sent Senior-constable Strahan from the party from here, and they were to meet up about the head of the King River.

5954. What occurred?—I remember that on the 26th October, Saturday, the murders on the police were committed at Wombat.

5955. Had Ned and Dan Kelly been out then all that time?—They had.

5956. Do you remember anything of the bank robbery at Euroa?—Yes.

5957. Personally were you present?—No. I was not present; it is only from hearsay. I know that on the evening of the 10th of December 1878, Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Sadleir left for Albury by the eight o’clock train. About half-past nine Mr. Wyatt came to the gate of the police station here. I met him at the gate.

5958. Were you in charge?—Yes. He came with a piece of wire and an insulator from the telegraph line in his hand. He said that he had been at Violet Town at court, and went down by the three p.m. train that day to Euroa, and when going down he found that the wires were cut on both sides. He did not say they were down entirely. When he went to Euroa he had but a few cases, and he thought that he would drive out to see the place, as he thought it was a storm that had blown them down. He got a horse from a publican named Hart, and it turned out to be a very bad one.

5959. Did Mr. Wyatt tell you this?—He did.

5960. You can leave out the details of that. What did you do in consequence of what Mr. Wyatt told you?—I went to the telegraph office with him, as he requested me, where he sent a telegram to Captain Standish. I then asked the telegraph-master to call Chiltern, as I intended to send a message to Mr. Nicolson to ask him if I would send a patrol to see about the wires. We could not get Chiltern. I then had to wait until the train got into Albury. I sent a telegram to Mr. Nicolson telling him what Mr. Wyatt said, and asked if I would send Detective Ward with a party down, but before I got an answer, about a quarter to twelve, I received a telegram from Captain Standish saying the Euroa bank was stuffed up, and directing me to recall Mr. Nicolson at once. I repeated it to Mr. Nicolson, and the message came that he was getting the special train to come back.

5961. Was that the first time you heard of the bank being stuffed up?—It was.

5962. Was there any of the force at Euroa who saw the bank stuffed up?—There was one constable there, and he arrived just at the time. After I came down from the telegraph office, Constable Anderson came and said the bank was stuffed up. He could get no details before he left; he only heard of it, and at once jumped into the train and came off.

5963. Is that what Anderson told you?—Yes, that he could give no details about it, as he only heard it at the railway platform just as the train was starting, and he only had time to jump in and come on to report it. I then sent a message to Mr. Nicolson and ordered a special train, and ordered the men—that was but one party on the station—and went with them to the train.

5964. Who were they?—Detective Ward was in charge; Constables Johnson, McDonnell, Hodgson, Graves—I forget the others—and two trackers, and constables Barry, Bell, Hedberg, and Anderson.

5965. What hour was that?—At two a.m.

5966. On the 11th?—On the 11th. There were no horse trucks, and I had to get two of those old luggage-vans. There was some difficulty to get in the horses, but Constable Johnson rode them into the van. Mr. Wyatt went down with that party and returned again. I then met Mr. Nicolson at the station.

5967. At what time?—I think between seven and eight. The special train came down the next morning—that is, the 11th. Mr. Wyatt was there, and said I need not go into details of telling what was done—that he would go back to the place where the wires were cut and tell Mr. Nicolson all about it.

5968. Mr. Nicolson came back by the special train as soon as you telegraphed?—He came back he replied and said he was looking for the special train, and when he got it he came back. Mr. Wyatt, in his evidence—if I might mention it to the Commission—said that when he came to the station with the insulator, that the sergeant turned pale. Well, I met him outside in the dark, and it was impossible he could see whether I was red or pale.

5969. What hour was that?—Between nine or ten o’clock p.m. We afterwards went into the office, and I took the wires and insulator from him.

5970. Were you present at the Glenrowan capture?—I was.

5971. Were you there all the time?—No; I went up to the train with Mr. Hare’s party, and saw them away at two a.m. on the night of the 28th June 1880, and then returned.

5972. What time did you get to Glenrowan?—About five in the morning—arrived at five o’clock in the morning.

5973. Was it daylight?—No, it was moonlight.

5974. Can you state what was going on at the time?—Everything was quiet as possible when the train stopped at the station—not a shot fired or anything. We got out of the train, and Senior-constable Kelly and Constable Walsh, from Wangaratta, came up and spoke to Mr. Sadleir. He did not come with Sergeant Steele. I may mention Mr. Sadleir asked Senior-constable Kelly how the house was surrounded, and where the men were. He said that the north-east end (not in those words) was well guarded, and the front, but he said the back, or the south-west end, was unprotected.

5975. You had better give it in his language?—He said, “The lower end of the house and the back is unprotected.”

5976. Was that the end nearest Benalla?—Yes, nearest Benalla.

5977. That was the south end of the house?—Yes.

5978. And the back was unprotected?—Yes. Mr. Sadleir said, “Where is Mr. O’Connor?” and Kelly pointed and said, “He is down here in front.” Mr. Sadleir said, “I must go and see him to see how things are.
You let the men take up their positions in the place that is unprotected.” We then extended in file in front of the railway gate and in front of the house—Jones’s house—and immediately we got in front there was a volley heard of one, two, three, right as we passed out of the house, and the balls struck the posts. It is a wire fence, but they struck the posts and tore up the sand as we went along; so we took up our position round about the house and had it quite secure. Daylight very soon came, and the horses that were in the yard were shot.

5979. By the police?—Yes.

5980. In Jones’ yard, that is?—Yes; and some of the men said that Ned Kelly had been seen, and that he had been trying to mount his horse previously to that, and it was suggested then to shoot the horses as a precaution against their securing them and getting off.

5981. Who gave the order to shoot them?—I cannot say, but I know it went round that it was better to shoot the horses. It was agreed to by the men.

5982. Had you no idea who gave the order?—No, I could not say.

5983. Was it the officer’s order?—No, there was no officer there; Mr. Sadleir was up at the upper end.

5984. Was it simply an agreement between the men that it would be better to shoot the horses because of having heard that Ned Kelly was trying to mount them?—Yes; and they went round, and the horses were shot.

5985. That was a little after daylight?—Yes, when the horses could be properly seen and known to be the Kelly horses.

5986. How is it there was no officer there to give the orders?—There was only Mr. Sadleir, and he could not be there and up at the upper end too.

5987. Where is that?—Neurer to Wangaratta. That is where Ned Kelly came out afterwards.

5988. Where was Mr. O’Connor at this time?—I had not seen him at all at the time. He had the black boys up—I understood so from Senior-constable Kelly—partly in front of the house at the other end but I did not see him as we marched up to take up our positions as I have described.

5989. Here is a plan of the place; will you look at that?—[The witness did so.]—This is about where
Mr. O’Connor would be, I think—[pointing].

5990. Do you know where he was?—I do not know myself, but I know the place that was pointed out.

5991. Do not say anything about what you do not know yourself?—You have asked me before about what Fitzpatrick told me, and I thought perhaps it was admissible what Senior-constable Kelly told me in the presence of Superintendent Sadleir, and told Superintendent Sadleir in my presence.

5992. That is quite admissible, but you must state you heard it from so-and-so?—I did so.

5993. What did you hear from Senior-constable Kelly?—He said to Mr. Sadleir, when he asked where Mr. O’Connor was, he said, “He is down here in front,” and that was only a very short distance from where we were standing.

5994. Anything further?—No. Mr. Sadleir went away with him, after he directed us to take up our positions at the lower end.

5995. Went towards Mr. O’Connor?—Yes.

5996. Were you present all through from the time of your arrival?—I was present all through from the time of my arrival until I brought down Ned Kelly and the bodies with Superintendent Sadleir at night to the lock-up.

5997. Was there much shooting after you took up your position?—There was. There were several shots came from the lower end of the house from the building, from the outlaws supposed to be, because there were no others in after the people got out.

5998. Was there heavy firing upon the house by the police?—There was.
5999. All round?—All round; but it was sung out, round about from one to another, “Fire high That was before the people came out.

6000. What time were the people let out?—I think about ten o’clock, as near as I can go. After that several shots came out of the window; rifle balls passed close to where I was, and used to hit the trees, and the men who had rifles fired into this window several times, and up to half-past one, between one and two, I think, there was firing from the window.

6001. You are sure it was “Fire high” was the order?—Yes; I heard it pass round several times, and each time we used to sing out, “Come out, come out,” for the people to come out, and that they would not be touched or interfered with.

6002. You say they came out about ten o’clock?—I think about that, I am not quite sure as to the hour.

6003. Did any officer give the order to the men?—It might have come from an officer. It came round the lines where we were. I could not say whether it came from the officers. I sang it out myself and Senior Constable Smyth, and passed it round.

6004. Was that the way an order was carried round the line usually?—I do not know what orders Mr. Sadleir might have sent round; there was another man went round, named Dwyer. I saw him going round, but I do not know what orders he had.

6005. Did you give the order to shout for those people to come out?—I did.
6006. And the men round about shouted?—Yes.

6007. Did those people tell you how many were in the house when they came out?—I was not in the place where they did come out, because I did not leave my post.

6008. Where was your post?—At the lower end of the house, opposite the window, towards Benalla.

6009. On the south side?—Yes.

6010. Had you any doubt about the place being occupied when there was no firing for several hours—did you not think—was it not possible the men were out?—Well, you could not tell, I could not be sure.

6011. Was there any suggestion to rush the house?—I did not hear it.

6012. What side was the house fired from?—From the corner—the lower corner nearer to Benalla. I had changed my position afterwards, and I was speaking to Mr. Sadleir before it was fired.

6013. Did any of the officers go round and give orders to the men?—There were only Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor.

6014. Did they go round and give orders?—Mr. Sadleir had a meeting, I understand, before I went up, of the sub-officers and the men about the firing of the house, and when I came up he told me they had agreed to it, and I saw Johnson going round with a bundle of straw and kerosene, and Mr. Sadleir was up at the end of the house, and the men were prepared to fire when Johnson was lighting it.

6015. Were you present then?—Yes.

6016. When the arrangement was made to set it on fire?—No, I was not. Mr. Sadleir said there was plenty of daylight, and there was a clergyman about going in, and he would not send the man in. He was sure of getting them, and he would not risk any life, and would not send in any man while they had armour on, and he would take them without loss of life later on.

6017. Did he lead you to understand that he knew there were only the outlaws in the house?—Yes, that was well understood, because the parties who came out said there was no but Cherry, who was in the back house, and by lighting the fire in the front house there was ample arrangement made to take the man out of the back house; and I went up with Mr. Sadleir and the clergyman, and he was taken out before there was any danger of his being touched by the fire.

6018. You remember seeing the clergyman going in?—Yes.
6019. Did he remain in?—A very short time.

6020. Did any of the police go near the house before he came out?—Several of them were up close. Mr. Sadleir and I were up close, and several other men I could not name, there were so many there, and Byrne’s body was out in about perhaps three or four seconds after the priest came out. It was brought out.

6021. How near were you?—As near as from here to the centre of the street—[pointing through the front door of the court house]; about twenty yards.

6022. You did not rush to the house before the priest let you know they were dead?—From the place where I was standing I could not get any nearer the house until the priest did come out.

6023. Do you mean in safety to yourself, under cover?—No.

6024. What prevented your getting nearer?—The length of time. He just went inside the door.

6025. Did you remain standing till he came out?—I remained standing till we saw him coming out.

6026. And then as soon as he gave the signal you all rushed?—He sang out the men were all dead, and we all rushed up to take them out before the fire would take effect.
6027. And you did not succeed?—Not with all of them.
6028. Did you see Superintendent Hare that morning at all?—I did.
6029. Where?—Between the bridge and telegraph office, after I was called, here in Benalla.
6030. Did you see him after that?—No, that was after he returned wounded.
6031. He came up here before you went away?—Yes, he was coming up to the office, and did not wait to get the wound dressed; the doctor followed him up to the office, he told me. I had sent for Mr. Sadleir, and left the man to receive the message at the office, and it was this constable who called me, and I sent him for Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. Hare said, “Turn out every man in the place,” which I did, except the watchhouse-keeper, who had a lunatic in charge; and Mr. Sadleir came over and we all went.
6032. Did you see Mr. O’Connor during the day?—I did not see him till the afternoon.
6033. What time?—I think it would be after two o’clock when I came round, as I never left the lower part of the building until about two o’clock. I kept down with the men and did not let them leave their posts. Some were rushing to see Ned Kelly after he was captured up at the upper end, but I did not go away till two when I saw him, and saw Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor.

6034. Were you there when he was captured?—Not on the spot.

6035. You were on the ground?—Yes.
6036. Are you pretty certain about the hour?—Yes.
6037. Have you a watch?—I have.
6038. What time was Kelly captured, do you know?—I could not say exactly the time, because I did not look at the watch; there was too much excitement to pull out your watch. It was a good bit after daylight, about seven o’clock I should think, but I did not look at the time, nor was I thinking of the time.
6039. Who arrived at Glenrowan first, you or Mr. Sadleir?—We arrived together, at the same time.
6040. Who was in charge at the time you arrived?—That I do not know.
6041. Who was the first officer or sub-officer you spoke to or heard Mr. Sadleir speak to after arriving?—Senior-constable Kelly.
6042. Did he at that time appear as if he had taken charge prior to your arrival?—Yes, he appeared to know where the men were posted, and he was the senior officer of Victoria.
6043. And he apparently had charge?—He was bound according to the regulations to take charge.
6044. I do not want to know what he was bound to do—what did he do?—He met us at the train, and told us the position of the men.
6045. How many men?—Seven went with Mr. Hare and remained, and Mr. O’Connor and six black trackers, that would be the number there. Constable Walsh had arrived from Wangaratta, he was there, and I do not know whether there were any more. I did not see any others.
6046. What did you do immediately after arrival, after hearing from the interview between Senior-constable Kelly and Mr. Sadleir?—We were not more than a minute on the platform. Senior-constable Kelly was telling Mr. Sadleir as we were getting out of the train, and Mr. Sadleir told us to take up our positions at the place Senior-constable Kelly said was unprotected, and we extended in file down in front to take up our places.
6047. In front of the hotel?—Yes; there was not any firing at the time, and everything was quiet.
6048. You must have crossed a certain drain that has been referred to in the evidence?—I have never been there since that night.
6049. You do not remember crossing that drain?—No; I think we followed down the track from the railway. We crossed a drain when we got a little below the house.
6050. What do you call a little below?—Say about twenty or thirty yards—we crossed to get to the back of the house. I know I got my foot wet in it.
6051. You went to the end of the house nearest Benalla—is that so?—Yes.
6052. You did not see Mr. O’Connor and his men during the time you were passing from the railway station to where you took up your position?—No.
6053. Did you see any men at all?—No, we could not see them at all.
6054. Did you see any constables before you took up that position except Senior-constable Kelly, whom you saw at the station?—None whatever.
6055. Do you know what Mr. Sadleir did immediately after your leaving the station?—I could not say what Mr. Sadleir did immediately after leaving the station.
6056. When did you next see him?—At the time Ned Kelly was taken, when he was going up towards the station. I was not within speaking distance of him—I was not up at the place—I could see them taking him up towards the station-house; it was sung out that Kelly was arrested.
6057. What position were you in—were you still in the same position you took up early in the morning?—Yes.
6058. The lower end of the hotel?—Yes, the Benalla end.
6059. How far would it be from where you were first stationed to where you saw Mr. Sadleir with Kelly?—I am under a disadvantage, not having been there since to measure—I think about 200 yards.
6060. What time was that in the morning when you saw Mr. Sadleir with Kelly?—I did not say I saw... him with him—I said I saw him at the time Ned Kelly was taken to the station-house, I could see him going to the station-house.

6061. How far from the station?—Not far.
6062. Close to the station?—Yes.
6063. Who gave you orders afterwards during the day—what officer?—I received no orders until the time that the house was going to be fired, because I was not up close.
6064. Did any officer come round to you during the day and instruct you to do particular work?—No.
6065. No officer at all!—No.
6066. Were you the next senior officer below Mr. Sadleir?—I was next in command to Mr. Sadleir.
6067. And no one came to you the whole day till just before the house was fired?—That is so.
6068. Do you remember the time Mr. O’Connor arrived in Benalla with the black trackers?—Yes.
6069. You remember his being here?—Yes.
6070. He was pretty constantly in Benalla—stationed there?—Yes.
6071. All the time then he was engaged on active duty here in connection with the black trackers?—Yes, he used to go out with black trackers—he and a senior-constable from Queensland and six trackers, together with our men.
6072. After moving from the end of the hotel where you first took up your station, you remained there till after daylight?—I did.
6073. In which direction did you next move?—The next move I made was up to the place where Ned Kelly was—the room where he was in at the station.
6074. Did you come back in front of the hotel, between the hotel and the railway station, to come to the platform?—I went up behind the station-house, as there were rifle balls.
6075. What do you mean by behind?—I crossed the railway.
6076. What time was that in the morning?—Not until about I think after one o’clock.
6077. And then you remained almost stationary from five in the morning till after one in the day in that particular position?—Yes.
6078. From the position you had taken up, had you a view of all the surrounding land between the front of the hotel and the railway line and the railway platform?—Yes, except there is a creek or gully.

James Whelan,
continued.
13th May 1881.

You could not see into that from where I was. You could see the front of the house. I had a view of the front of the house and the back, also the window that faced me, so that I had a good view of the house and any one going in the place back or front.

6079. And also you could see the railway platform?—Yes, the station-house.
6080. Who was the nearest constable stationed by you in the north?—Senior-constable Smyth, Constable Hewitt, and Constable Wilson, and Constable Dwyer came round and Constable Gascoigne.
6081. How many were stationed there?—They were the next to me.
6082. They remained pretty stationary, the same as yourself?—Yes, Constable Mullane was there firing a rifle into the window.
6083. Did those constables, or most of them, remain stationary in the same positions, the same as you did, all the morning?—I think Mullane was not there first.
6084. Were there any of those constables that remained stationary, as you did, during the whole of the morning?—Yes, Smyth and Hewitt. Wilson was higher up I think he remained I think he was there when I went up to see Ned Kelly.
6085. Were those constables under your immediate control and command?—All the men that were junior to me in rank were under my command.
6086. Those men were junior to you?—Yes.
6087. Then they were under your control?—Yes.
6088. Did they take orders from you?—Yes. I directed firing into the window after the people got out where those shots were coming from, as I had a gun that was no good to fire into the house.
6089. What did Dwyer do—what was his object in coming round?—He brought refreshment on one occasion to some of the men from the station, and the other time he brought ammunition.
6090. Did he bring it to you?—Well, I got none from him, because I did not want ball ammunition.
6091. Did he take it to others?—I did not see him, but I heard it.
6092. Did he come to you and ask if you wanted any?—No.
6093. Did you see him go to either of those constables immediately under your control?—I saw him go up past me, round at the back of the house, and I heard he had brought some ammunition and divided it, but I did not see him divide it.
6094. During the whole of that morning, from the time you took up your position, and after day-light, did you see anything of the six black trackers under Mr. O’Connor?—No, I did not.
6095. Not one of them?—No.
6096. If they were in front of the hotel, and between it and the station-master’s house, could you have seen them?—If they were on the rising ground I could have seen them.
6097. If they were in the gully you could not?—No.
6098. You would have known Mr. O'Connor, I suppose, at an equal distance to what you would know Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.
6099. You were as well acquainted with his general appearance as with Mr. Sadleir's?—Yes; I would know either of them at a distance.
6100. Do you know of your own knowledge where Mr. O'Connor and his black trackers were from daylight up to the time you say you first saw him?—Not of my own knowledge.
6101. Where was he coming from when you first saw him at two o'clock?—That was after I went round.
6102. Where did you first see him?—I think it was close to the station-house. I will not be positive.
6103. Could any number of men be concealed in that trench without your being able to see them?—I took very little notice of the trench, because I was too busily engaged in the afternoon when this was over. I had to get the horses and baggage and bodies in. I was responsible for everything, and I had no time to go and see the place. I have never been there since, so I cannot speak as to position well.
6104. Did you see any large amount of firing from the direction of that particular trench or gully towards the hotel during the morning?—Yes, there was a good deal of firing.
6105. Coming from the gully?—From the front of the house. I could not tell exactly whether it came from the gully or not, but the front of the house.
6106. Were there other police stationed in front of the hotel within your view during the morning?—Yes, but I do not remember who they were.
6107. Most of them for their protection would get behind a tree?—Yes, trees were a good protection, because were it not for the trees a good number of men would have been shot, not from the outlaws alone, but from our own rifles, because we were all round the place and were firing—the balls of the Martinis used to go through the house and into trees.
6108. All the police did as far as possible get behind trees for protection?—Yes, you could take aim from behind the tree and fire at the house. The men all kept as much as possible under cover.
6109. You are very positive about the time, because you had your watch and could refer to it?—Which time?
6110. Any time during the day?—I do not speak positively as to the time Kelly was arrested, because I did not look at my watch every hour or half-hour.
6111. All important events that took place that day you could tell within a reasonable space of time. Would you be surprised if it was sworn by those on the ground that there was not a shot fired after eleven o'clock that day from the hotel?—It would not be correct.
6112. Did you look at your watch between eleven and twelve o'clock?—I looked at my watch after one o'clock and I saw shots come from the window afterwards. I was opposite to it.
6113. Did you see the smoke from the firing?—I saw that there was no one at the house.
6114. You understand the difference between a shot being from the window, fired by some one inside, and from some one the other side of the house?—Yes.
6115. Will you swear positively that a shot was fired from that window after one o'clock?—I believe it was.
6116. Will you swear it was?—There was no one else to fire a shot from the house.
6117. I ask can you swear that after one o'clock a shot was fired from that window?—I believe it to have come from the window.

241

6118. You are on your oath; can you swear that a shot was fired from that window after one o'clock?—I cannot swear positively, but I believe it, and there was no place else for it to come from.
6119. The other constables would be in as good a position, those you have mentioned, as you would be yourself to express an opinion on that firing?—Equally, I should think.
6120. Will you explain what you meant by that you understood. You stated just now that you had been informed that Mr. Sadleir held a meeting after your arrival with the sub-officers; who gave you that information?—No I said that was a short time previous to the setting fire to the house.
6121. I misunderstood you. How near were you to Mr. Sadleir between the hours of one and three; what was the time the house was fired?—About three or half-past.
6122. How long before three had you seen Mr. Sadleir?—I was speaking to him just a few minutes before the house was fired, and he told me where to take up my position in case any one left the house.
6123. Before that had you seen Mr. Sadleir and spoken to him?—I had, when I went to the station-house to see Ned Kelly he was there.
6124. Did you at any time during the day hear any of the police or others propose to rush the hotel?—I did not.
6125. Not after the public came out?—No.
6126. You did not see Mr. O'Connor until what time?—About the time I went up to the station house, I think between one and two o'clock.

James Whelan, continued.
13th May 1881.
6127. Did you see the prisoners released from the hotel?—I did.
6128. Did you see Mr. Sadleir when they came out?—I saw him in front of the house when they came out, but I was not close to him; I could see him.
6129. Was he standing in the open space?—Well, there were no trees exactly where they came out.
6130. Where Mr. Sadleir was?—He was not behind a tree.
6131. He was standing in an open space?—Yes.
6132. How great a distance from the hotel?—Not far from where they first came out.
6133. How many yards, about?—About thirty yards, I should think—I had only a side look at it.
6134. Who was standing near Mr. Sadleir?—There was a whole crowd standing near Mr. Sadleir.
6135. Within thirty yards of the hotel Mr. Sadleir was standing in an open space?—I could not say exactly the distance, but I think it would not be more.
6136. Within this further fence?—Yes.
6137. A rifle would kill three times that distance?—Yes.
6138. And there was a large number standing round Mr. Sadleir at the time, and all standing in an open space?—It did not last long, because, as soon as they were examined, they were passed on between those who were prisoners.
6139. Where did Mr. Sadleir go then?—I cannot say.
6140. Was there any number who stayed at that spot where Mr. Sadleir was?—No, they all cleared off when they got free.
6141. How long were they there?—Just as long as to see they were not sympathizers, and then let go.
6142. Would it take ten minutes?—I think not so long.
6143. How soon after you saw those prisoners were released was a shot fired from the hotel?—The shot from the window was long after.
6144. How soon after the prisoners were released did you see a shot fired from the hotel?—I cannot remember.
6145. Was there any shot fired after that time till those shots after one o’clock?—There were several shots fired from that window afterwards.
6146. You have also told us had a view of the front of the building?—I could not see along the front, but if there was a shot fired at the front or back I could not tell whether it was from front or back.
6147. Then, in point of fact, you could not tell that about the window?—That is quite different from looking along the front of the house. I could tell from the end where I was, where I was opposite.
6148. You could see it came through the window?—Yes, because I was right opposite.
6149. Could you not tell any shot also, in the position you stood, that you could see the front and back of the house, the railway station, and the platform, could you not see any number of shots fired from the front?—A shot might come from the front, and so at the end you cannot see the ball going, nor from the back could I see it either.
6150. Did you see the one through the window at the end?—Yes, because I was point-blank in front of it.
6151. Was that like a ball coming through?—No; I saw a flash inside.
6152. Was that like a ball coming through?—I could hear firing; I could not tell from our own men or the others.
6153. In point of fact you are not in a position to say whether any shots were fired from the hotel, except from the window, from the time the prisoners came out till after one o’clock?—No.
6154. Who served out the ammunition?—I served out the ammunition and the arms the whole time.
6155. What were the men armed with?—Some Martini long rifles, some with double-barrelled guns, some with Spencer rifles, the black trackers had Sniders, and I think Mr. O’Connor had a Snider.
6156. There was a variety of ammunition required for those various weapons?—Yes.
6157. How many rounds of ammunition did you supply to each man?—The regulation number was 20 balls Martini, 24 for guns, 18 for revolvers; but they got some extra ammunition, the men that went out first. The ammunition was sent up by train, afterwards to be divided, but I did not divide it.
6158. Do you know what quantity was provided?—I could not tell without the returns.
6159. You know the quantity served to each man?—Yes.
6160. Did you get more than the one supply you started with?—No; the guns were not discharged much, because it was useless to discharge them unless the outlaws came out. It was no use firing those pellets at the house.
6161. How many cartridges would you have?—Twenty-four.

6162. How many do you think any of the men had?—They all had the regulation number.
6163. What was the most—how many for the man with the Spencer rifle?—Twenty-one—three sevens, one seven being in the magazine of the rifle.
6164. You were in charge of the ammunition?—I was in charge of everything—ammunition, horses, and men—that came in.
6165. How many supplies were given of ammunition to any of the men?—When they were going to Glenrowan?
6166. No, during the day’s engagement?—They took the regulation number of rounds first; then there was fresh ammunition sent by train; but I did not divide that, and do not know how much each got.
6167. Not at the railway station?—No.
6168. You did not go for the second supply?—No, I think the men with guns did not require any more; but with the Martinis great deal was taken. My gun was a double-barrelled breech-loader.
6169. What was the order of firing; was any man allowed to fire indiscriminately according to his will, or was any order given?—Well, I do not know of any distinct order being given; there might have been without my knowing it.
6170. When did the firing first commence?—The firing commenced immediately we took up our position. The first firing came from the outlaws, as we passed down the front of the house, and we returned it.
6171. And the force were scattered round the building?—Yes.
6172. So that, if it was left to indiscriminate judgment of the men, there was not only danger of shooting the outlaws but the men?—There was no time to make any arrangement, as because as soon as we got out of the train the firing from the outlaws began, and we had to take up our positions.
6173. Do you think that the capture could have been effected without this setting fire having been attempted at all?—I do not.
6174. You quite approve of the course taken in endeavoring to take them?—I quite approved of it, and I never expected, from what I knew of them, that they would all be taken together.
6175. When you went down in the morning you say you went between Jones’s house and the railway station?—Yes.
6176. You saw no one there?—No.
6177. What position were the men in when you went down?—Senior-constable Kelly had us at the front of the house. Mr. O’Connor and the trackers were at the upper end of the house, and part of the back of the house was guarded, but he said the lower end, next Benalla, and a portion of the back, were unprotected, and then Mr. Sadleir directed us to go on to take up our positions there as I have said.
6178. At that time there was no firing at all from the police?—None whatever, till the firing came from the outlaws first, just as we were going down. They could see us plainly getting out of the train, and we were just in front of the house—you can see the gate where we were passing.
6179. This fire was not returned from the front of the house where Mr. O’Connor was supposed to be?—No; it was not returned, not till we got our positions.
6180. When the prisoners came out of the house, who examined them?—I was not there; Mr. Sadleir was there; I was not close enough to see; I heard afterwards.
6181. Did you see Mr. Sadleir with them?—I saw him there, but I was too far to see or hear what he did; but I saw two of the prisoners McAuliffes who were there, well-known sympathizers, who were detained, and after the capture Captain Standish came up and they were brought before him, and he said under the circumstances he gave them a caution and discharged them.
6182. Were they made to fall on their faces when they came out of the house?—I was not close enough to see.
6183. If they had been on the ground, and a number of constables round them, and the outlaws in the house, it would have been quite easy for the outlaws to fire?—I think they could; it was near enough for them to hit from the position they were in.
6184. What is your opinion of the two different systems of endeavoring to catch the Kellys? Do you know the two systems?—Yes; the first system was when Mr. Nicolson came up to take up search parties before we had trackers. We had trackers from Coranderrk. He used to go out with parties himself. He went to the Watchbox Creek and Fern Hills and down to the Murray, where the outlaws were supposed to be, and where he was very close to them, it was ascertained, near the Baumgartens’ place.
6185. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—I heard of it. Mr. Hare came then; and I think his system was very good at the time, because there were a great number of men in the district.
6186. Mr. Nicolson after that adopted a different system altogether?—Yes; allow me to give the reason. I think it was a good system at that time, because he harassed the outlaws, and kept them in the back country. Mr. Hare’s search parties were out in all directions. He sent a party at night to the Strathbogie Ranges to watch a friend’s place where they were supposed to go, and they remained there for a week. They used to send their provisions out at night, and another party was sent out to the Quarry Hills at night, and the outlaws were harassed and kept back. That was necessary at the time, and if it had not been done the public and the press would have been crying down the police, and hinting that the police were afraid to meet them. The only men I heard grumble when a chance came was the men left behind grumbling at not going out. Then they got the Jerilderie money, and Mr. Nicolson returned, and at that time I think his was a good system, because he had a great number of spies or agents, and it would prevent the outlaws having the chance of keeping back in the back country, and give a chance of our capturing them on that account. I think both the systems at the different periods were good.
6187. Do you know anything of the time that Inspector Brook Smith was supposed to be on the outlaws—were you at Benalla at that time?—He was not stationed here; he was at Wangaratta, and used to go out from there.
6188. Did you ever hear the constables complain they were not allowed to follow on the trail of the outlaws?—I heard some underhand talk, but I could not say exactly what it was or who it was. I often have heard the men in the office speaking, and I have been an unwilling listener, and I could not tell who they were.

6189. Was Mr. Smith removed?—He was removed after Mr. Nicolson came, and then he was changed after Mr. Sadleir came and sent to Horsham.

6190. Was not that in consequence of alteration of districts?—Yes, but he remained under Mr. Sadleir for a long time.

6191. With regard to the different systems, in your opinion the systems pursued were the right ones at the time they were pursued?—I think they were.

6192. In fact, if Mr. Nicolson had attempted to pursue his system when he first came up here after the murders of the constables at the Wombat, it would be tantamount to doing nothing, because he would not have had his agents?—Yes, if he had remained in with his men, and even suppose he had his agents working, both the press and the public—

6193. I am asking this: Would it be possible to carry out the arrangements Mr. Nicolson did at the end of March—could he have done it at the first?—No.

6194. Would he have had agents at that time?—He could not have got so many.

6195. Then you were asked as to Mr. Hare’s system; you say that was to harass the men and keep them in the back country. Now supposing that Mr. Sadleir had not come down to Benalla; you stated, I think, that the constable who is in charge, or the sergeant in charge of the district, is by the regulations accountable to arrest offenders with warrants against them?—Every man in charge is responsible for the sub-district.

6196. What does that responsibility consist of?—To prevent crime and arrest offenders—to prevent it if possible.

6197. It is to make them amenable to justice?—Yes.

6198. Was Benalla Mr. Sadleir’s head-quarters?—Yes. I telegraphed to him, and he arrived here at eleven o’clock, and rode to Mansfield on his horse at once.

6199. He was in charge of the district at the time of the murders?—Yes.

6200. Were you in charge of the district at the time of the first warrant for Dan Kelly?—Yes, sub-district.

6201. Was Greta in your sub-district?—No, in the Beechworth district.

6202. If you were in charge of the district and had to commence again the search for the Kellys, what system would you pursue—by search parties and harassing or by endeavoring to get them by secret service?—If they had not got a bank and had not plenty of money, I would run them down. They would have to clear out of the district, and if they did we would catch them; but having plenty of money from the bank, and having so many friends, not only blood relations—too many for the game.

6203. How many years have you been in this district?—After I joined the service in 1856, I went to the Upper Ovens.

6204. How long have you been about Benalla?—I have been about going on seventeen years.

6205. You stated in your evidence that when Mr. Hare left the field at Glenrowan, as a matter of usage and according to the regulations, Senior-constable Kelly being the senior, upon him would devolve the charge of the Victorian police?—That is my opinion.

6206. Was it the case that Mr. O’Connor was not then in the Victorian police?—He was only then in charge of the troop of trackers, as far as I know.

6207. As a volunteer or as an officer of the Victorian police?—I do not think he was appointed an officer up to that time.

6208. Had he ever been an officer of the Victorian police before that?—Not to my knowledge.

6209. Could he have been without your knowledge?—I think not. I have seen the gazetted list of all the appointments.

6210. Were his head-quarters Benalla?—Yes.

6211. Were you the second officer in charge after Superintendent Sadleir?—Yes, I was the next.

6212. After he went away, you would be in charge and give orders?—Yes.

6213. Was Mr. O’Connor, during the time he was here with his trackers, recognised and known among the force—did you know him as a Victorian officer?—I did not.

6214. Then, as a matter of fact, Senior-constable Kelly would be in command without any order at all?—According to the regulations, the next in rank has to take it and is held responsible.

6215. About Mr. Wyatt, you say the first information you got of the Euroa robbery was from the telegram from the Chief Commissioner?—Yes.

6216. How soon afterwards did the constable come and inform about the Euroa robbery?—When I was at the telegraph office repeating the message to Mr. Nicolson, at Albury, Constable Anderson came to the station, and when I returned down from the telegraph office to the police station I found him there, and asked him what he knew.

6217. Did he tell you the bank had been robbed, from information he had received from parties who had been robbed?—He said he heard it at the railway station; and I said, “You have very little information;” and he said he came up to the station and heard the bank was robbed. The train was going, and not having time to telegraph, he jumped into the train and came here and came off, and I returned him with the other men to Euroa.

6218. About this information; you said he jumped into the train and came here—where did you see him?—At the police station.

6219. What o’clock?—About a quarter past twelve.

6220. How long from the information he gave did you conclude he had heard the information of the bank robbery?—The train takes an hour and a quarter from Euroa, and the train is due here at half-past eleven or a quarter to twelve.

6221. Did he tell you that, after the bank was robbed, and before they knew the actual robbery, that it had been reported to him in Euroa that something was wrong with the bank because the doors were open?—No.

6222. Would you be surprised to learn that the people at Euroa had informed him early in the evening that seeing no lights in the house, and seeing the doors open, they thought something was wrong: did he tell you that?—No.

6223. Did you hear that?—No.

6224. Then all he reported to you was that the bank was robbed at Euroa?—Yes, he heard it on the railway station.

6225. Did he inform you that any civilians offered to come up and give the news and leave him to do his duty there?—No.

6226. Did he say he had seen the bank manager before he came up?—He appeared to know nothing about it.

6227. Then if he did know more than that he would not have been doing his duty in not informing you?—No, he would not.

6228. You said Mr. Wyatt said in his evidence you turned pale; you are of a pallid complexion?—Yes.

6229. You did not feel pale on that occasion?—No.

6230. Did Mr. Wyatt directly or indirectly intimate to you, or did you in your mind gather from anything he said to you, that he believed that this was done by the Kellys—that this matter was something connected with them?—I would have thought so, but the fact of him telling me he went to Euroa. The wires were supposed to be cut at two o’clock and he was there making enquiries, stopping next door to the bank in the hotel, and did not leave Euroa till seven o’clock.

6231. How do you know that?—He told me he got a horse at Hart’s, that he passed the bank—passed up under the windows of the bank after the court—that is when the bank was supposed to be closed.

6232. Did he tell you this at the first interview?—Yes; and then the fact of the bank being closed, the wires cut at two o’clock in the day, and Mr. Wyatt being there, and also at Violet Town, and Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Nicolson being gone up to Albury, as I thought, on some important matter (they did not tell me what it was), I thought very little about the wires then—nothing being done.

6233. Then the information he gave you would not have the effect of making you pallid?—No.

6234. You swear from nothing Mr. Wyatt said to you, did you believe there was anything of importance with reference to the Kellys?—I thought it might be in connection with the Kellys, but I thought it might be a trap. That was my opinion at the time.

6235. You were asked about the position of the black-trackers and Mr. O’Connor?—Yes.

6236. Mr. O’Connor stated in his evidence, “I then followed the drain or gully down until I came to the position, which I never left until I was superseded by Mr. Sadleir”—when Mr. Sadleir superseded him at this drain, had you any knowledge of the position of the drain or gully alluded to then?—I knew the drain, where it runs, but on account of it being dark when I passed, and then in the afternoon engaged in other work, I took not much notice, and have not been there since, so I cannot state positively the position more than the passing by at the time, and there was a good deal of excitement, and not much time to take notice of anything.

6237. Would you expect from Mr. O’Connor’s position in the police force, according to your interpretation, that he would have taken a more active exercise of duty than he did on that occasion—did you think it remarkable his not coming more forward?—Well, I could not say, because Mr. Sadleir of course took, when I got there, command, and I could not say what Mr. O’Connor did before I went there.

6238. Then Mr. O’Connor, in your opinion, in the discharge of his duty after Mr. Hare left, would not be according to the regulations in charge of the Victorian police?—I think the man next in rank belonging to the Force would. For instance, if anything happened to Mr. Sadleir I would assume command as a right.

6239. That is part of your duty as a right?—Yes.

6240. Then Mr. O’Connor would not be in charge of the white police?—No.

6241. Then after Mr. Sadleir came on the ground any action through Senior-constable Kelly’s seniority would cease?—Yes.

6242. Then Mr. O’Connor’s duty was to keep in charge of the black trackers?—Yes.

6243. Then if he kept charge of those men he would be honorably discharging his duty in your opinion?—Yes, if Mr. Sadleir did not order something else.
6244. Would he be bound to obey Mr. Sadleir?—I should think so, on account of receiving pay from the Victorian Government.
6245. Did he receive pay then?—Yes.
6246. How do you know?—He used to sign the pay-sheets.
6247. I refer to after the day he volunteered to come back from Essendon?—I know merely from his getting his pay at the office.
6248. Did he receive pay to your knowledge after the time that he left Benalla—supposed to be for good—and the Glenrowan matter?—I cannot say. I mean previous to that, from the time he came to the colony.
6249. After Mr. O’Connor had left the Victorian service, and had gone to take the black trackers home, and was not amenable to any Victorian rule except public opinion, would he be responsible for anything except his own men?—I did not know he was relieved.
6250. If he was relieved, and was on his way back to Queensland, and volunteered with his black trackers, and of his own free will and accord came up to assist, would he be then answerable for any act of any Victorian police with him?—No, I think not.
6251. Would he be merely answerable for his own men?—I think so.
6252. Do you know anything about this drain at all?—I do not. I must candidly say I do not.
6253. Did you read the remarkable answer that Senior-Constable Kelly made at Beechworth, at the preliminary examination of Ned Kelly. When he stated that Mr. O’Connor had remained in a drain the whole time?—I may, but I do not remember it.
6254. Have you heard any constables commenting upon Mr. O’Connor on that occasion?—As I told you already, I have heard a good deal of talk, but nothing plain or sufficient for me to take notice of.
6255. It might have been mere rumour?—Yes.
6256. None about the firing; the back of the house is to the north?—North-west.
6257. The front to the railway station to south?—Yes.
6258. You call it the end now for the sake of explaining. I will call it the west, nearest Benalla. You were opposite the west window?—Yes.
6259. You swear that at or about one o’clock the last shot was fired from that window, which you recognized as from the outlaws?—Yes; there was no one else in the house.

6260. You were cross-examined closely as to that. If another constable says that the last shot was fired from the house at eleven, and it was the back window towards the stables, would not your evidence be as true as his?—We might both think we were telling the truth.
6261. That is not what I mean. There is the house, if you were opposite the window there where that is, and you swear that the last shot fired from the house from that window was at one o’clock, and the constable out here towards the stables swear if eleven o’clock, is it not quite possible that it might be true. Could you see a shot fired there?—No.
6262. Therefore it might be true as to that other window?—Yes.
6263. If he swears eleven o’clock from that window, that might be true?—It might be.
6264. And if he swore that was the last shot, is it not quite possible that he would not know anything about the shot fired towards you?—He could not see that.
6265. So that both might be true?—I think so.
6266. It has been stated that there was a great quantity of ammunition uselessly expended there. One man, I think, said he charged his Spencer rifle three or four times; that would be three times seven, and another constable swore that he fired over 100 rounds of ammunition. Have you any idea of the quantity of ammunition expended on that occasion?—I could not say, because there was one of those small casks with Martini-Henry and carbine rifle ammunition—a good portion of that was used, together with a lot of loose ammunition.
6267. How much did a cask of that hold?—About 500 rounds.
6268. What weight?—I could not say, but there was not much of that used, but there was a good deal of loose ammunition.
6269. Do you know Constable Dowling?—Yes.
6270. What party did he come with?—From Beechworth I think.
6271. Do you know at what hour Mullane came with that party?—I cannot fix the hour; it was pretty early. I saw him before the Violet Town men.
6272. You said you could not tell the hour Kelly was captured, but you think about seven o’clock?—It might be more.
6273. Was Dowling on the ground after that?—Not on the ground at that time.
6274. Mullane did not come on the ground till after the capture of Kelly?—I did not see him.
6275. You said the instructions were to fire high?—Yes.
6276. They commenced firing at what o’clock?—Immediately after we got there.
6277. And then the order was to fire high till the prisoners were let out?—Yes.
6278. That was circulated about?—Yes.

245

James Whelan, continued. 13th May 1881.
6279. Who gave the order to fire high?—I gave it.
6280. What was the object of firing high?—So that the people who were kept in prisoners by the outlaws would not be shot, and to frighten them to let out those innocent people, and not have them shot.
6281. Do you know that that very firing was what prevented the prisoners from coming out?—I have not heard that.
6282. Would you be surprised if one of those men swore that they were coming out, and were frightened by the firing?—I cannot be surprised at many things I hear.
6283. How soon did the real business of firing commence?—The firing was commenced after the volleys came down on us when we passed through the gate.
6284. How soon after the prisoners came out—about how soon did you know the Kellys were going to fight you?—We got not intimation they were going to fight.
6285. How soon did firing commence?—One man commenced very soon.
6286. A quarter of an hour?—I should think so.
6287. Was there a change in the orders given to fire low?—I do not remember that.
6288. Then the men might still continue that high firing?—There was low firing after the prisoners came out.
6289. How was that altered?—I do not know whether Mr. Sadleir gave the order or not.
6290. You do not?—No.
6291. You did give the order to fire high?—Yes.
6292. Do you know that any order was given for any systematic firing after that?—I did not hear of that.
6293. Did you get instructions from your officer, or did you watch the men that were right and left of you, and give them any instructions what they were to do?—Yes, I told the men with rifles to fire into this window where the shot was coming from.
6294. You were there from what hour?—From about five up to the time that I went to see Kelly.
6295. You were curious to see if it was the man or not?—When I went there were plenty of men to secure the place, and there were only two inside.
6296. During that time did you receive personally from your officers or by message any instructions of what you were to do?—I knew what I was to do.
6297. I asked did you receive any instructions?—I did not.
6298. When you came down to see Kelly did you receive any?—Yes; Mr. Sadleir told me he had been speaking and arranged with some of the sub-officers and some of the old hands that they would fire the house.
6299. What did he say?—I saw Senior constable Johnson bringing round the straw, and he went up at the Wangaratta end of the house; and I was speaking to Mr. Sadleir, and he said he had had a consultation before I came up with the sub-officers, and that they had agreed to set fire to the house at the lower end, and if the outlaws were in it they would come out, and that there would be no difficulty; and Senior constable Johnson, he said, wanted to rush the house, but that he saw there was plenty of daylight and plenty of time, and he had lost no men, and he did not intend losing any men; he intended capturing them without losing any men.
6300. He told you that Johnson wanted to rush the house, but he did not consider it advisable, as he had not lost any men, to run the risk of losing any men?—He did.
6301. Then after Johnson first proposed to rush the house, as you were told, did you see any indication on his part that that was his intention?—When he was carrying this bundle he was a short distance away.

James Whelan, continued.
13th May 1881.

6302. I suppose he had then given up the idea of rushing?—Yes; he was going to set fire.
6303. What position did Mr. O’Connor occupy with regard to his late position in this district? Mr. Nicolson was in command here: did he discharge the ordinary duties of the district or only in connection with the Kelly matters?—Mr. Sadleir was in charge of the district, and Mr. Nicolson, being Assistant Commissioner, would be in charge of both and each of the parties of the general police. I think Mr. Sadleir would be under his command.
6304. For instance, if a report came in from the district that a constable was drunk on duty, would that be dealt with by Mr. Sadleir or by Mr. Nicolson?—Where it is a breach of discipline Mr. Sadleir would deal with it, and submit his decision to the Chief Commissioner in Melbourne if it was a serious charge.
6305. What would you call a serious charge?—Say a constable assaulted a man, that would be far more serious than drunkenness.
6306. Suppose it was reported that a constable violently assaulted a civilian, that would be sent to the barracks?—Yes.
6307. Whom first to?—To me.
6308. What would you do with it?—Send it to Superintendent Sadleir.
6309. What would he do with it?—As both were in one office, I expect they would both consult and give a decision.
6310. Was that the usage in the office?—I do not know of any similar case cropping up that I could give an opinion about.

6311. Do you know as to whether Mr. Nicolson joined Mr. Sadleir in the general discipline of the force and management of it, or did he confine himself to the Kelly business?—I think principally the Kelly business; but I think he would aid and assist Mr. Sadleir, as being superior officer to him.

6312. Suppose a report came in that way, you would receive it, and note it, and your name would appear on it?—Yes.

6313. And you would forward it to Mr. Sadleir to deal with?—Yes.

6314. Would he report on it?—It might be a matter that was ordered before the Bench.

6315. If not a matter that was ordered before the Bench it would be dealt with by him or Mr. Nicolson?—I have not known a similar case, and cannot give an opinion.

6316. In what exact position was Mr. Nicolson, in your opinion, in the district—you cannot say how the duties were divided, whether he undertook the whole management of the district by superseding Mr. Sadleir, or whether he joined him?—I think Mr. Sadleir still retained charge of the district the same as before, but Mr. Nicolson was in charge of all the Kelly parties, and I think he would aid and assist Mr. Sadleir with his advice besides.

6317. I want to ascertain who was responsible if there was anything wrong?—When Captain Standish was here first Mr. Sadleir was under him, and I have frequently seen Captain Standish deal with cases of discipline brought into the office.

6318. That might be, because it would naturally go down to Melbourne?—Yes; he was still the Chief Commissioner. I know Mr. Nicolson was Acting Chief Commissioner in Melbourne.

6319. Did the Acting Chief Commissioner remove the responsibility from Captain Standish of being the head in Melbourne by his coming here?—No, I think not.

6320. You stated that Mr. O'Connor, in your opinion, was not an officer in the Victorian Police Force—now, Mr. O'Connor in his evidence says as follows, “On Monday the 10th, Senior-constable King and the six troopers arrived at two p.m. from Wodonga at Benalla. On the 11th of March Captain Standish ordered us out on our first trip, but had me sworn in previously a member of the Police Force of Victoria.” What is the meaning of “a member of the Police Force of Victoria,” in your opinion?—To be sworn in is when he would be one. I think he should be gazetted. I never saw his name in the Gazette.

6321. Not as a member of the police force, a constable, or any position?—No.

6322. Does a man sworn in the police force indicate to your mind that he was sworn as an officer—made as an officer?—I cannot say.

6323. What do you think?—I think he would certainly retain his rank as an officer as he came, as an officer from Queensland, and there would be nothing to alter that here, as he was sworn in.

6324. You think that having come here as an officer in charge of trackers, and being sworn in as a member of the police force of Victoria, he would occupy the same position?—Yes. I think he would have no power here without being sworn in.

6325. His power would be what?—As a sub-inspector.

6326. “And your men?—No; only myself and my senior-constable. The black trackers did not take the oath ever they are enlisted.” Then Captain Standish says, “Although you are Superintendent of Police, do not think you are over Mr. O’Connor.” Mr. O’Connor swears that Captain Standish said to Mr. Sadleir, that although he (Mr. Sadleir) was “Superintendent of Police, do not think you are over Mr. O’Connor”—That might mean as far as the trackers are concerned.

6327. “Prior to leaving” (on his first duty) “I told Captain Standish that I only required two of his men,” but this, I was told was not sufficient, and I must take not less than six Victorian constables with me, Captain Standish informed me, in the presence of Mr. Sadleir, that I was to be in charge of the party.” What would be your interpretation of that if that evidence is correct?—My interpretation would be that Mr. Sadleir would be in charge of the white men, and Mr. O’Connor of the trackers.

6328. Would you consider those other white Victorian police that were attached to the trackers under him—“Captain Standish informed me, in the presence of Mr. Sadleir, that I was to be in charge of the party,” and then he says what the party were—his own black police and six Victorian constables?—I think Mr. Sadleir would be in charge. Mr. O’Connor never assumed any authority or interfered with us at the station at all.

6329. Were there six Victorian police attached to his party?—Yes, the time they went up Ryan’s Creek, towards the King River.

6330. If that evidence is correct, of Mr. O’Connor’s, as to what Captain Standish said, he actually would be in charge of the black trackers and certain members of the Victorian police?—He would be in charge of the black trackers who came from Queensland, and Mr. Sadleir in charge of the six white troopers from here.

6331. Irrespective of what Captain Standish told him?—Yes, Mr. Sadleir would be able to answer that,
Superintendent, and would retain charge of the white party.

6333. How long was Mr. O'Connor here in charge of the party?—He came some time in March. I think the 10th or 12th, and remained here until the 25th of June. I mean in 1879 he came here, and remained till the 25th June 1880—sometime about that.

6334. You were here all that time, and your superior officer was Mr. Nicolson or Mr. Hare, when they were here in charge?—Yes.

6335. The next in the district would be Mr. Sadleir?—Sadleir, yes.

6336. Who would come next to you?—Senior-Constable Maud.

6337. First, there is Mr. Nicolson—then Mr. Sadleir; who comes next?—I do.

6338. Were you ever told that Mr. O'Connor was your superior officer, and you were to obey his commands any time he was here?—I never received any orders from him.

6339. Would you have considered him your superior officer without that instruction?—No, I would not.

6340. Then as a matter of fact you never received any intimation from Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Nicolson, Captain Standish, or Mr. Hare, that Mr. O'Connor was your superior officer, in virtue of being an inspector of Victorian Police?—I never did.

6341. And he never gave you any orders in that position?—He never did.

6342. How many black trackers did he bring?—Six. One died, and then he enlisted one that came up from Corranderrk.

6343. How many went away belonging to the Queensland Police?—Five. We retained the Corranderrk man that was attached to Mr. O'Connor’s troop when the parties left here, and he is here still.

6344. How many black trackers are there here now?—Six.

6345. How long have they been here?—They have been here since July, 1880.

6346. That is nine months or ten?—Yes.

6347. Had you the opportunity of daily seeing the conduct, discipline, and general efficiency of the trackers that Mr. O'Connor brought here?—Yes.

6348. Have you had daily knowledge of the character, and discipline, and general efficiency for the service of the present ones?—I have.

6349. How do you compare the two?—The later ones are more obedient. They were not as well disciplined at first, but I think they are as well, or better, now than the others, in my opinion. I cannot say as to their efficiency when out tracking except from hearsay.

6350. What will their duties be?—They have been tested, and the reports have been very favorable by the constable in charge of them.

6351. What is his name?—Kirkham.

6352. Had he a thorough knowledge of the others?—He had charge of them after Constable King was sent back to Queensland under Mr. O’Connor, and held charge of them till they wentaway, and then took charge of those taken when they were enlisted by Mr. Chomley. Constable Kirkham was then appointed in charge by Mr. Sadleir, and he has had charge of them under me since.

6353. Are you daily in the habit of seeing those trackers, and hearing Kirkham’s reports on them?—Yes.

6354. How long have you known Kirkham?—He came up about October, 1878, shortly after the Kellys broke out.

6355. Is he competent to form an opinion as to the two parties?—I think he is.

6356. Do you remember when Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson at the final matter a few weeks before the capture of the Kellys?—Yes.

6357. Do you recollect—have you read the report of this inquiry in the papers?—Some of them, in the Age, but they are not given fully in the Age.

6358. Do you know of your own knowledge that there is some misconception, or whatever it may be called, as between the present Assistant-Commissioner of Police and Mr. Hare, as to full information being given to him when he assumed the final command on the 2nd of June?—I do not know what information Mr. Nicolson gave Mr. Hare, but I know each of the officers at that time—any information I got or knew of—6359. I did not ask that. Do you know there was any misconception between the two?—I heard of it.

6360. Did you know or were you informed at that time that the Kellys were likely to meet your comrades in armour?—Yes, I heard it.

6361. Who informed you? Do not give the name if it is an outsider?—I had better not give the name, as it is from outside.

6362. Did you communicate, or had you any conversation about the fact of their appearing in armour with any of your officers?—I took the informant to both my officers, Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare.

6363. Did you believe yourself that, whenever you were called upon to meet the Kellys, you would meet them in armour?—I did not consider it was an idle report, on account of mould-boards being stolen, but I came to the conclusion, and Mr. Nicolson thought so too, that they had made a stronghold, and were lining it, as they were afraid of being tracked by black trackers. This man, the informant, said the armour was being made to fit them to ride in. I did not believe it; and Mr. Hare, the same week they came to Glenrowan, was told it too, and I came to the conclusion.

6364. What week would that be?—After the 20th of June; in fact, the informant was here, and we both saw him.

6365. Did he mention about the armour in your presence?—No; he told me he had told Mr. Hare.
6366. Did Mr. Hare have a conversation with you that led you to believe Mr. Hare believed it?—
That he did not believe about it; I think it was on the Thursday, and they broke out on the Sunday evening.
6367. Be very cautious about these dates. I understand you to say that you were aware, from a conversation with Mr. Hare, that at a certain period Mr. Hare, was aware that the Kellys were to appear in armour?—It was not stated that they were to appear in it, but that they had it, merely making it.
6368. Try and fix the time you had that conversation with Mr. Hare?—I am almost positive it would be the same week the Kellys broke out at Glenrowan—between the two Sundays.

James Whelan,
13th May 1881.

6369. Did Mr. Hare seem from his conversation with you to be then for the first time informed of it?—I am not sure. I could not say, but he did not appear to believe it; and he pooh-poohed the idea; and he thought that this informant—he said, "Well, he has only the one story every time he comes"; and I had a great opinion of the informant at the time; I said, "Well, I have only told you I believe, and I think that the man will tell nothing but what he hears and believes to be true; but, of course, he may be misled."
6370. Are you aware it has been given in evidence that a letter was accessible to Mr. Hare with the information upon his coming into the district that the Kellys were preparing armour?—I did not know of that.
6371. You cannot possibly say whether that appeared to take Mr. Hare by surprise?—Mr. Hare did not believe it, and I did not believe they could have had it out of the mould-boards to ride in; I believed the informant thought so; I did not think he wanted to mislead the police.
6372. You cannot form an opinion whether Mr. Hare had heard the information before?—No.
6373. Did you know that this informant had informed Mr. Nicolson and Mr. Hare about the armour?—Yes, Mr. Nicolson was aware of it.
6374. Was that by verbal communication or letter?—I took the informant to Mr. Nicolson’s office after he told me about it, and he told me after that he told Mr. Nicolson; I was not present.
6375. You said there were orders given to fire high at Glenrowan?—Yes.
6376. Did you hear any orders given to fire low?—I did not.
6377. If orders had been given to that effect, you would have heard them?—No; orders might have been given up where Mr. Saddleir was, and I could not hear it, unless I passed along the line. I might not have heard it, because there was a good distance between us.
6378. Were there any orders given about firing beyond that one occasion to fire high that you know of?—Yes; I directed the men about to fire at the window where I saw the balls coming from; that is the end window where I was opposite. I had no rifle myself, and I told Senior-Constable Mullane and other men with rifles to fire. Walsh had one of those old rifles given out to the police, and he fired at the window.
6379. It has been given in evidence that one of the outlaws was supposed to have appeared at the top of the chimney on one occasion?—That would be at the other end of the building, near Wangeratta.
6380. Did you see it?—No.
6381. Did you hear the men say so?—I heard it talked of that they were seen, I think it was, going into this chimney, and that instructions were given to fire at this fireplace.
6382. That would not be what I refer to—that was not at the top of the chimney?—No.
6383. Did you hear from any member of the force that he had seen the head of one out of the chimney?—No, I heard they were in the fireplace, at the bottom.
6384. About how far from the hotel were the nearest police from your observation when the priest came out of the hotel?—They were up pretty close just as he came out, because a few of the men and a good many civilians were approaching it as the priest went in, and he was out very quick, before there was time to advance much on the house; but some of the men were pretty close.
6385. How much?—I should think about as far as to the centre of the street from the court house here when the priest came out, and we ran on up to the building where Cherry was, and he was got out, and some more of the men got out Byrne’s body.
6386. I think you said you remained still till after the priest came out!—Yes, I said the priest was not more than a few seconds from the time he entered the front door till he was back, and then we moved up as he came back.
6387. When you saw the priest come in, you all remained stationary; you did not stir till the priest came out and held up his hand?—I do not think there was any advance until he came outside the door. Mrs.
Skillian, a sister of Ned Kelly, was moving up, and some other parties, but they did not get near the house, the priest was out so quick.
6388. In your opinion, were the police efficient in the use of the arms served out at Glenrowan?—I think they were very efficient the whole time, because I had a knowledge of the efficiency here. I issued all the arms to the men here. They were all instructed in the various kinds of arms except the Martini. I did not understand them myself at first, and the late Sergeant Porter was sent from the depot to instruct us. After that I could instruct the men as they were issued.
6389. The men in this district?—Most of the men passed through here before they went out on search parties.
6390. Then you speak in a general sense?—Some of the men have not been here, but I speak for the greater number of them.
6391. You are not aware that a few of the police stated they had not used arms and had had no practice?—There was an instruction for men having Colt’s revolvers to discharge them once a week, to put in new ammunition, which is necessary; and the men having other weapons with this patent ammunition it is not necessary, it retains its effect without firing off. There was a great deal of practice by order of the Chief Commissioner. Mr. Nicolson gave up charge the day or a day after, and Captain Standish and Mr. Hare assumed charge then.

6392. Did the police occasionally go to officers for instructions during the engagement, or the officers to go to the men for instructions?—There was very little instruction required, because all the men were posted. Ned Kelly was captured and Byrne was shot, and the only thing was to watch the building for the other two, and whatever arrangements would be made to rush them or get them.

6393. How did you know Byrne was shot?—The parties who came out stated so.

6394. You were continually firing on the house, I believe, after Ned Kelly was captured?—Yes; but, as I mentioned to you, the firing was high.

6395. There were no instructions beyond that, by any officer to the men, as to how they were to proceed?—There might have been at the other end; I do not think it.

6396. To your knowledge, were any arrangements made to have a medical man on the ground, in case of his services being required?—Mr. Sadleir detained the train to get Dr. Nicholson, who was attending Mr. Hare, so as to have him on the spot. He dressed his wound here, and came with us, and attended Ned Kelly, and was there to attend any one wounded.

6397. Would he have attended any of the police who might have been shot?—He came for that purpose.

6398. Did you hear any man offer to go to the hotel in Kelly’s armour before the place was set on fire?—I did not, but it might have occurred without my knowing.

6399. Did you hear of any civilians offering to go and storm the place?—No.

6400. Do you know a Frenchman named Amidie?—Yes.

6401. Did you hear that he offered to go and storm the house?—This is the first time I have heard of it.

6402. Were you perplexed in any way in capturing the outlaws, by your superior officers?—Not at all. It was reported in the papers outside that we were hampered—such was not the case. When the men went out they had perfect liberty, if they had anything valuable, to follow it up; but to communicate, if possible, with their officers, with some one who would bring them in, but to follow up the scent of any information they got. Both from Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Hare, and Mr. Nicolson they had that.

6403. Do you think, from your knowledge of the district, there are any fears of an outbreak from any associates of the gang?—I would respectfully beg not to answer that, if not forced. I will give any information as to the past, but I would respectfully ask not to give any opinion as to the future, as I think it would interfere with the public interests. I shall be very happy to give it to the Chairman of the Commission privately.

6404. What is your opinion of the services of the black trackers in their special calling?—I think they are very good, but I think so many as were not sent together, as six horses have to go, and at least two pack-horses—that makes eight; and a constable in charge, a white man—that makes nine. Well, if they came up with any offender, there is only one man to fight—we cannot trust much to the trackers to fight—there is only one man to fight, and nine horses, which make a great noise and bulk in the bush; so I think two or three at any time is sufficient to go out.

6405. Still you think their services are useful?—Yes.

6406. Can you assign any particular instance of their ability?—I can. They have in the late murder case at Wunghnu. They have tracked there, and I believe it is from their tracking there was circumstantial evidence—there was no positive proof of the murder—but sufficient evidence was got up, and the man was convicted and sentenced to death the other day at Beechworth.

6407. Who was in charge then of the black trackers?—Constable Kirkham, and Sub-Inspector Baber was out taking charge of the case.

6408. Do you remember any case where Mr. O’Connor was in charge?—Mr. Sadleir was with them, I was not, and I heard Mr. Sadleir speaking very highly of Mr. O’Connor’s “boys.”

6409. You remember the instance of Mr. Little losing the watch?—I remember, at the Agricultural Show, in the mud and in the wet, a pin was lost, and some three or four days afterwards he or some one came and got the services of the black trackers, and they found the pin. There was another case at Violet Town, where they tracked a man from the station-master’s garden up to his house.

6410. Is there any present trackers?—Yes; and there was a case at Shepparton also.

6411. You do not remember this instance of the watch?—I think it was a pin.

6412. You are speaking of another instance at the station-master’s house?—Up to his own house, and the man was convicted. Constables Kirkham and Johnson, I believe, arrested him.

6413. Are you speaking of the present party altogether?—Yes.

6414. You do not say anything with reference to the old party?—No; Mr. Sadleir was generally with them I had nothing to do with them.

6415. Do you know any other case?—Well there was. I have the things entered in a book, and I forget them all now.

6416. You said you were in the habit of serving out the arms and ammunition to the men?—Yes.

6417. And most of the search parties passed through Benalla, and were under your immediate observation?—A great number of them.

6418. I think you stated the bank robbery in Euroa was in December?—10th December 1878.

6419. And Mr. Nicolson was relieved by Mr. Hare and Captain Standish?—Mr. Nicolson’s eyes got sore on the trip to Fern Hills, and he was relieved after the trip to Euroa.

6420. When Captain Standish and Mr. Hare came up here, you say that Sergeant Porter came up here?—Yes.

6421. For what purpose?—To instruct me in the Martini rifle; I knew all the others.

6422. Anybody but you?—The men in the station, they were called into my office, and he instructed them; and me particularly in them, so that I was capable of instructing others.

6423. Mr. Nicolson says (Question 1003), “You say, On your return to duty in July 1879, were they all inefficient—you have your mind’s eye on some particular men?—Yes, the men at Benalla.” Is it within your own knowledge that the men became inefficient in the use of arms from December, when Porter came up here, to the time the Superintendent-Inspector returned to duty in July?—The Martins did not come up until December; the guns were sent up first.

6424. I will quote again—Mr. Nicolson says, “When I took charge at Benalla in July, relieving Mr. Hare and Captain Standish, I found the men, notwithstanding their seven months’ work, very ignorant of how to use their arms—the rifles—the most important arms of precision (the Martini-Henry), and other weapons with which they were armed. Some of them had lost their ramrods, others their sight-guards; some of them had never fired a gun in their lives (so they stated), and they had all the appearance of it.” “Ramrods are used for cleaning those guns?—Yes; they are fastened in the usual way. The guns are breech-loading.” “What were those men you alluded to?—Policemen.” “Were those the men you had selected for this special service, or were they there by accident?—They were the men left in my absence to continue the work.” “Those men you say, on your return to duty in July 1879, were they all inefficient—you have your mind’s eye on some particular men?—Yes; the men at Benalla.”—Can you account for that inefficiency during the seven months?—I think the men were efficient, not inefficient.

6425. But you cannot account for any inefficiency?—No; there was one ramrod lost, to my knowledge, by Senior-constable Irwin.

6426. Would the loss of the ramrod make a man inefficient with arms?—No.

6427. Is the Martini rod used only for cleaning?—Yes.

Cross-examined by Mr. O’Connor.

6428. So, except for cleaning, it would not render it useless?—No.

6429. Did the men, in your opinion, deteriorate from December 1879?—No; I think not.

6430. You stated when you were at Glenrowan you did not see me for a considerable time?—Yes.

6431. Mr. Nicolson. You will state what time you first remember seeing me?—The first time I remember seeing you was when I went round to see Ned Kelly at the station-house, and after leaving it I saw Mr. Sadleir, and then I saw you between the railway station and that drain.

6432. What time about?—Between one and two, to the best of my belief.

6433. When the prisoners were coming out, were you in a position to see them come out?—Yes; from the door.

6434. You could see Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.

6435. Did you see me?—You might have been there; I did not see you.

6436. Will you state to the Commission what you consider requisite to be a member of the police force—would swearing in simply make a man a member of the Victorian police force—is it necessary to be specially appointed?—Decidedly, and then sworn in.

6437. Then he must be appointed first?—Yes.

6438. Then it would be irregular if he was officially appointed before being sworn?—A man could not be. A man is appointed a constable, he has certain questions he has to write, and it is signed by the Chief Commissioner, to see if he is a fit candidate, and then he is ordered in, and told certain things he has to do.

6439. I want to find out is there a form—an official document—does a constable, when he is sworn in, or any man, have an official document to show for his appointment?—Yes, there is a form; he has to answer certain questions.

6440. He may be a member of the force without an official document?—Yes.

6441. If I was sworn in by Captain Standish under those circumstances, would I be, in your opinion, a member of the Victorian police force?—If you were sworn in as sub-inspector of the police of Victoria.

6442. I could not be sworn in as a sub-inspector?—Whatever rank, you would be sworn in to act and carry out the duties that would devolve upon you, and you would be gazetted in the Government Gazette.
6443. Is it the same oath to a constable as to an officer?—That I cannot say.

6444. Is it the same to a sergeant as to a constable?—Yes. The sergeant is first sworn in as a constable, and he rises from that usually.

6445. Were you re-sworn in as a sergeant on the passing of the new Police Act?—Yes, I think so.

6446. Do you know positively that I was sworn in?—I never knew it. I heard it from the evidence that I saw in the papers.

6447. Oh! no, I mean at the time I was up here?—I did not; but I thought it would be only reasonable, that you would have no power to act without it.

6448. Did you ever, after Glenrowan, hear any policeman or officer question my being an officer of the police force?—No; I always understood you had charge of the troop that came across, and that you were an officer from Queensland.

6449. A volunteer?—No, not a volunteer.

650. I must be one or the other?—You would be sent by the Chief Commissioner of Queensland, and might be sent without being a volunteer.

651. I want to find out was there a doubt in the minds of any in the police force as to my being a Victorian officer of police—did any man state that to you?—I never knew you were appointed to the Victorian police. You were only remaining with the trackers till such time as the gang were captured. That was my idea, and I never heard anything to the contrary.

652. When Constable Kirkham was attached to the trackers, was I not his officer?—Yes, after King went away. I believe Mr. Sadleir gave you one of our men to take charge of them.

653. Could I have given any orders to that man if I had not been a recognized officer of the force?—Yes, decidedly. Mr. Sadleir had given you that man; you certainly took all powers over him then.

654. That is of course in your opinion?—Yes.

655. Do you remember the police enquiry, after Glenrowan, reading or hearing of any evidence that Senior-Constable Kelly gave?—Yes; but I do not remember.

656. If I remind you of the words he said you may remember it. He swore in his evidence that the firing, the heavy firing, the indiscriminate firing, was altogether on the part of the Queensland police—do you remember ever seeing that statement?—I am not sure.

657. I only saw it in the Argus, but do you remember hearing of it?—I do not remember now. I might have. I never put anything in the papers.

658. Would it be the truth according to what you saw?—I could not say. There was no indiscriminate firing on the part of you and your men.

659. As far as you saw?—I did not see you or the boys from the position I was in, and I could not tell what they were doing at all.

660. Not the whole day?—No, not up to half-past two.

661. After that?—There was very little firing after that.

662. Were there not some heavy volleys while the house was being burnt?—Yes.

663. Do you think that the Queensland native police fired indiscriminately while you were there, more than the other people?—I did not see them.

664. You were asked if, in your opinion, I should not have been more active at Glenrowan, will you explain what you mean by being more active?—Mr. Graves.—No, the inference is perfectly wrong; I asked whether he considered you were at all in charge at Glenrowan; then I said that, of course, if you were not a Victorian officer, would he consider that, if you were in charge, you ought to have been more active.

665. By Mr. O'Conor.—You were asked if I should not have been more active at Glenrowan?—I do not recollect that question. He asked me if I thought you were in charge, and not Senior-Constable Kelly.

go round myself.

6472. If you had reason to believe everything was correct?—Circumstances alter cases, and I do not know what I would do, if I was there in charge.

6473. Where were you when the priest came out of the house, can you explain?—I was at the north-east corner, the Wangaratta end of the house, where Mr. Sadleir had posted me and some others, at the time that the firing was to be on the house, while Johnston was setting fire to it.

6474. Do you remember where Mr. Sadleir was?—Very close to me at the time.

6475. When the priest came out of the house?—No, he moved from that down. Mrs. Skillian made the attempt to go to the house, and Mr. Sadleir, I believe, went down and stopped her, and then came back, and as the priest came out he ran up towards the house, and I was close behind him.

6476. Did you see Kate Kelly or Mrs. Skillian come up to go into the house, appearing to?—Yes, she did not get up quite near.

6477. Near Mrs. Skillian?—Yes.

6478. Where was Mr. Sadleir from her position?—I think he stopped her from going any further, to the best of my belief; I cannot remember everything.

6479. Did you see me alongside of Mr. Sadleir?—You were up after the fire took place, at the time the priest came back; I saw you then.

6480. The women went back, and almost immediately the priest went forward; did you see him come forward out of the crowd?—I did.

6481. Was it near where Mrs. Skillian was?—I think the priest passed up near where Mr. Sadleir stopped Mrs. Skillian.

6482. Nearly in the same ground, a few yards?—Yes.

6483. Mr. Sadleir was in the same position, very near, as when the women attempted to go up?—Yes.

6484. Did you see Mr. Sadleir remonstrate with the priest?—Yes.

6485. Did you hear his words?—No, I did not hear what Mr. Sadleir said to the priest until after I was going to attend the sick man.

6486. You saw the priest make the advance, and go back, and then advance again, when the crowd called him?—Yes.

6487. Did not you see Mr. Sadleir, myself, and several men follow the priest up at a distance of a few yards, say four or five?—I think it was not so close as that. I think at the time the priest came out we were perhaps thirty yards away.

6488. You saw that I was with Mr. Sadleir?—Yes, I know you were up at the house at the time Cherry was brought out of the house.

6489. Do you remember when I was in Benalla, I cannot recollect the date, but after some races there, that Mr. Little, the butcher's brother in Benalla, lost a very valuable gold watch, worth fifty or a hundred guineas, on the racecourse; did you ever hear anything about that?—I do not remember hearing of that; I might have heard it, but I do not remember it.

6490. You do not remember two of my men going out and finding the watch five days after, and getting £5 note as a reward, and of Mr. Little promising another £5 note the next day, when he got change?—Yes, I remember it now.

6491. Did you hear anything about my police work at Lancefield?—I heard about their going up towards Wild Duck Creek.

6492. You never heard of their tracking there from Mr. Baber or any one?—No.

6493. By Mr. Hare.—During the time that Captain Standish and myself were stationed at Benalla did not the men practice constantly with firearms?—Yes.

6494. Daily, nearly?—Whenever there was a party in, they were practising with guns and revolvers, in the little paddock we had rented near the station, and it was found the Martinis used to carry too far.

6495. Were they not practising constantly with the arms they had to use?—A good deal.

6496. Were they proficient in the use of their arms?—Yes.

6497. Mr. Nicolson says that when he returned the second time, he found some of the men unaccustomed to the use of arms; do you know who they were?—No; there was never a mistake with the arms, though they used to have to turn out silently and hurriedly at night, excepting that once of Keen's.

6498. You did not attribute that to the want of knowledge of the arms?—No, because in loading his “Spencer” he put those cartridges in the magazine, and it appears you raise a spring which is the trigger-guard as well, and he did so, and looked into the barrel, and would see no cartridge, for except you look while it is being shut down you would think the weapon is unloaded,—as you eject one cartridge shell it throws the next one into the barrel.

James Whelan.
continued.
13th May 1881.

6499. By the Commission.—Could it come about by inadvertence?—It is a thing a man should never do to present his weapon at another, even though a man understood the arms. If a man looked into the barrel, except he watched in closely, the ball would go in in shutting it down without his seeing it.

6500. By Mr. Hare.—You had a great knowledge of everything during the time the officers were at Benalla:—I mean while Captain Standish, myself, Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Sadler were there. Did you see any jealousy arising out of anything here between the officers?—No I daily saw you, and every night at the telegraph office,—sometimes up to 12 o'clock at night, to get orders.

6501. Did you see any altercations between officers?—No; I thought you were the best of friends.

6502. Do you think we threw away any chances through jealousy?—I would be inclined to say positively that was not true.

6503. And you had a thorough knowledge of the parties and of the orders given through you?—Yes.

6504. By the Commission.—Would you say that on behalf of any officers?—I would say that the officers were all on the best of terms. They were always together. The three used to come up to the office on the wettest of nights; they used to come there, and I had to go there to receive orders.

6505. The public service did not suffer by any misunderstanding between the officers?—Certainly not.

6506. Did you see any?—No.

6507. Would that apply to the whole time Mr. O'Connor was there?—Yes. I never saw any disagreement there or apparently after Mr. Hare came back in June 1880. Mr. O'Connor used to come with him to the post-office at night.

6508. By Mr. Hare.—You spoke about the blacks,—you thought they were too large a number to work in the mountains. Have you had much experience in the mountain work?—I have not been out.

6509. Had you a knowledge of them?—Yes.

6510. Do you think the blacks, as worked in a body, would ever catch the Kellys?—Not with a party of nineteen horses, as I have said before.

6511. The last time they went out, what number had they going up to Beechworth?—The order was not to be less than six men.

6512. How many horses went on that occasion—the last troop that Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Nicolson went out with?—I cannot tell from memory now. Six troopers, because, if they came in contact with those offenders it was necessary to have men to fight.

6513. What do you think the best way to work the blacks according to your experience; in a body of six, or a couple of blacks with a party of police?—I should send only two, the same as I had when I followed Power and got Mr. McBean's mare.

6514. Do you know whether that is the practice in New South Wales?—No, I do not.

6515. Do you see any necessity for six going out?—I think it is too many.

6516. Do you not think it would be better to have two at the different stations—Beechworth, Wangaratta, and here, if you had a party to go with them?—I think it is better to have them together. It is easy to send them by railway as quick as they are required at any time.

6517. Would it not be known then?—No; you can send them away without notice being taken of them—they are frequently travelling on the line; because one man can take charge of them, and if you separate them it would take three constables.

6518. By the Commission.—Were you aware that Mr. O'Connor objected to such a number of Victorian police going out?—I heard it in the evidence.

6519. Suppose they had not gone, would the black trackers have been fit to cope with the outlaws?—I think they would have had a very poor chance.

6520. By Mr. Hare.—You were asked, with reference to two systems of working, the one by searching the country, and the other by agents, do you think that by the system I adopted, in harassing the men and sending them into the back country, they would have had more difficulty in getting provisions than if left alone and watched by agents?—Yes, I should think so.

6521. I ask whether the system itself, of keeping the men in the back country and giving them difficulties in procuring provisions was not better than allowing them to remain near their friends and blood relations?—Yes; but so long as they had the banks' money they had a sufficient number of sympathizers and blood relations even to keep them away from you; but certainly it would entail more hardships.

6522. That would entail the provisions being carried a further distance?—Yes.

6523. And have to hire more agents to carry them?—Yes.

6524. Take it that they lived on the Greta swamp, one man could provide provisions altogether?—Yes, easily.

6525. But suppose they had to live on the King River, he would have to pass different places, and have to ride at night?—One man could not do it then.

6526. So it would take a large number of agents to convey provisions to the back country?—Yes.

6527. You said also they would be driven away and caught; do you think if they left this part they would have been caught immediately?—Yes, I know it too. I think if they were to leave their own den they would be caught very quickly, four men together.

6528. By Mr. Nicolson.—How long did Sergeant Porter remain up here?—He only remained one night, I think, and left the next morning.

6529. To instruct the men in the use of those Martini-Henry rifles. What was it, to instruct them in the shooting or the mechanism?—For the loading and use of the arm.

6530. Did he instruct them in marking, as a marksman?—No.

6531. There were some extracts read to you about the shooting of the men, their knowledge of the use of arms. Do you remember soon after I came up a class being formed of the men for shooting?—I do.

6532. Why was that done?—Because you used to send them out to the Reef to practise with the Martinis. There were some times two parties here, and not much doing in searching, and they were kept practising at the Reefs.

6533. Did they require it?—Men always improve on practice.

6534. Were not some of the men ineffective, as far as actual practice went, though they knew how to handle the weapons?—The practice in the Martini is required, and is required frequently

253

6535. By the Commission.—Were the men efficient in the arms. I said, and I understood you to say it was in the use altogether?—Good marksmen?

6536. Yes?—I used to go out with the men with the double guns, but not with the men to the Reefs, so I could not say which was the best. Afterwards Mr. Nicolson gave prizes, to see which was the best marksman; a man can be efficient with arms and practice them all his life and not be a good shot, but be efficient and use them thoroughly, and without danger to himself or anybody else.

6537. By Mr. Nicolson.—Are you not aware that one of the men, when a weapon of that kind was placed in his hands, at that very time, and he was sent out on that duty, stated he had never fired a gun in his life. One of the men, Phillips?—I think he was one of the party who used to go out for shooting.

6538. Yes?—I do not remember he ever said that.

6539. Did you not report that to me yourself?—No.

6540. That was the case, at any rate. Then with reference to that very rifle, the Spencer. A man opening it, and finding it had no cartridges in it—would not a man efficient in the use of that weapon know that?—I made that remark, with the exception of that.

6541. Was not it a very gross error, showing great ignorance in handling that weapon, when he pulled the trigger, and, not seeing the cartridge, to say there is none in?—I made the exception with him and others. He should never have acted as he did. This particular man I mentioned.

6542. You spoke just now about the search parties in pursuit dispersing the outlaws. Are you not aware that in the Kelly country there are tier upon tier of ranges, and parties looking for those men they might go down one of those spurs and ride down among their friends ten miles behind the party pursuing?—Yes, but it kept them moving.

6543. Are you not aware of that?—Yes, within 100 yards of the party.

6544. Could they not have returned just where the police started from?—Yes, they could.

6545. With reference to this work of driving them away back, compelling them to have the use of more agents and sympathizers to bring provisions?—Yes, I consider it would.

6546. Had they not plenty of sympathizers?—Yes, plenty; there was no scarcity. And the more money they had the more they could get. I said the system of letting them come down would give the spies a better chance of seeing where they were.

6547. While they had money?—They had money all the time after the Euroa bank robbery. I said the more money they had the more sympathizers they would have, even outside their blood relations.

6548. Had they money after the Euroa affair?—Yes.

6549. Had they money after the Jerilderie?—Yes.

6550. Were not search parties kept up after Euroa and Jerilderie?—Yes, and before Euroa.

6551. After Euroa and Jerilderie?—Yes; search parties were kept up all the time, but not so many the last time.

6552. After Euroa and Jerilderie the system was discontinued?—To a certain extent; but you took a party one time, and went to Wangaratta with some information, and came back by Greta.

6553. That was only once?—Yes, and Mr. O'Connor—

6554. That was a false alarm?—Yes.

6555. By Mr. O'Connor.—You stated as a reason why it was bad for our party to go out was on account of so many men being in the party—nineteen horses and men you said?—Yes, I think it was too many.

6556. What was the number of Mr. Hare's party—the largest party he ever went out with without mine—not with me?—I think he generally took six or seven men.

6557. Could you not find the records in the office?—Yes.

6558. Are you aware he ever took out eleven men?—I do not remember; he might.

6559. Supposing I took out my six men, with one or two Victorian constables, that would not be too large a party?—No; but there would be only three then to fight.

6560. No matter; you did not know what the men were capable of when I brought them over—would that have been too large?—How many horses?

6561. Nine armed men on horses and two pack horses?—I think, if it could be avoided, it was too much.

6562. Why was it not avoided in the parties that Mr. Hare took out?—I do not know.

6563. If it was good for one, it was good for the other, in your opinion?—Decidedly.

6564. You are not aware that I objected to taking out so many white constables?—No.

6565. By the Commission.—Was Superintendent Sadleir at the side of the house where you were on the opposite side?—The opposite.
6566. Consequently you did not see much of him?—I did not.

6567. About the efficiency of the men; were the men inefficient who were left here by Mr. Nicolson; did he find them inefficient or more so after Captain Standish had left and Mr. Hare returned?—I did not observe any difference I think the men were all efficient, willing, and courageous.

6568. If I understood Mr. Nicolson on his direct examination to say, as to the men he left in his absence (that is, his absence after December and on to July, to continue the work at Benalla), that he found those men when he returned in July inefficient, would that impression be incorrect—that is, that they became inefficient during his absence from Benalla; was there a great change in the men during Mr. Nicolson’s absence?—I was going to ask, was it the same men Mr. Nicolson left that he found on his return; if so, I know there was a great change.

6569. The question I ask is this: would I be correct if I had formed the opinion that there was evidence before this Commission that the men left in this district, in Mr. Nicolson’s absence, to continue the work became inefficient during the temporary command of Captain Standish and Mr. Hare. We objected that his evidence did not contain any such thing, and he thought it was not a fair question?—I think not.

I will read the question as given here:—“Some of them had lost their ramrods, others their sight-guards; some of them had never fired a gun in their lives (so they stated), and they had all the appearance of it.” “Ramrods are used for cleaning those guns?—Yes, they are fastened in the usual way. The guns are breech-loading.” “What were those men you alluded to?—Policemen.” “Were those the men you had selected for this special service, or were they there by accident?—They were the men left in my absence.”

---

Mr. Nicolson.—That last is a misprint.

The Witness.—There was more practice with the Martini in Mr. Nicolson’s time than in Mr. Hare’s.

6570. By Mr. Nicolson.—Did not the men improve very much?—Yes, they got more practice.

6571. Was there a necessity for doing so at that time?—Yes, to make them good marksmen.

6572. In coming into contact with that gang, was not that of importance?—Yes. I think all the men were efficient in arms.

6573. By the Commission.—Were they capable of going through all necessary manoeuvres with the firearms?—They were.

6574. It was simply a question of steadiness of nerve whether they shot steadily?—Yes, and a good deal of practice.

6575. And they practised sufficiently to be good shots?—Yes.

6576. Would I be correct if I formed the opinion that there was evidence sufficient before me to satisfy my mind that the police of the colony of Victoria were inefficiently trained in the use of arms?—I cannot answer for the whole colony, but the men that were here under my command I found were all well able to use their arms; and it is very little difficulty in instructing a man to load a double-barrelled gun loaded at the breech; and being loaded with pellets it is easy to hit with it; but the Martini and Spencer rifles are quite different and need more practice.

6577. And those were new arms?—Yes.

6578. By Mr. Nicolson.—Had not I and you to teach the men how to dismount with those Martini Henrys?—Yes, you instructed me to do so. The horses were paddocked, and the men were drilled to see how soon the men could be got out properly.

6579. Were they not taught how to sling the rifle behind them, and so on?—After they were issued they had to be instructed in all those things.

6580. By Mr. Hare.—Do you mean that the men did not know how to do that before Mr. Nicolson came up, to mount with those long rifles?—Some of the men had not been there before at Beechworth.

6581. My party that went out, did they not?—Your party could do it, but there were some strange men that came.

6582. That was not the first instruction the men got?—(No answer).

Mr. Sadleir.—I understand that I shall have an opportunity of cross-examining this witness at a future time.

The witness withdrew.

Thomas Reilly sworn and examined.

6583. By the Commission.—What are you?—A foot constable.

6584. Were you at Glenrowan?—Yes.

6585. What time did you arrive at Glenrowan?—After five o’clock in the morning.

6586. You came on from Benalla?—Yes.

6587. Where were you stationed?—At the Benalla end of the house, about 150 yards from the house.

6588. You are stationed here?—Yes.

6589. Had you any opportunity of seeing what was going on towards the front of the house?—Yes, I could see the front of the house from my position.

6590. You could not see into it?—No, along the front of the house and back.

6591. Did you see the position occupied by Mr. O’Connor on that occasion?—No, I did not see him. during that day until about a quarter of an hour before the house was fired, when he came round with Mr. Sadleir.

6592. You have heard the evidence given by Sergeant Whelan with reference to the fighting at that house; is there anything particular that you can add?—I do not think it.

6593. Did you hear any instructions by any officer that day?—No, I cannot say I did.
6594. No officer came to you to give you any instructions?—No, no officer came to me to give me any instructions from the time Mr. Sadleir gave us general instructions when we were on the platform to go down, keep single file, and surround the house as soon as possible.

6595. Did you understand from Mr. Sadleir or anyone speaking to you that there was a portion of the house unguarded?—Yes, we were sent to that part, and I took up my position there.

6596. How far from Sergeant Whelan?—About 10 or 15 yards from him.

6597. What weapon were you using?—A double-barrelled breech-loader.

6598. You were not supposed to fire into the house?—I could not; it would not take any effect.

6599. You were simply watching for any of them to come out?—Yes.

6600. How often did you fire during the day?—I did not fire at all, it was no use.

6601. You simply stayed there and watched?—Yes.

6602. What time did you see Mr. Sadleir after that?—I saw him at different times during the day further out.

6603. Where was he?—At the further end of the house, and partly in front.

6604. How far from the house?—About 100 yards from the house.

6605. Did you see Mr. O'Connor at all?—I did not see Mr. O'Connor at all till the afternoon, when he came down with Mr. Sadleir.

6606. Would you have seen him if he came round—Yes.

6607. What do you call the field?—Round the house.

6608. Did you see the black trackers?—I saw them come out of the drain once, just as the people rushed out of the house.

6609. What time was that, do you estimate?—I could not exactly say, I took no time whatever.

6610. Did you see Mr. O'Connor with the black trackers then?—No.

6611. Not until the people were let out?—Yes.

6612. Where was he then?—With Mr. Sadleir.

6613. Where was Mr. Sadleir?—At the south side, the Melbourne end of the house, and he came round.

6614. And the people came out of the front?—Yes.

6615. What time did you see Mr. Sadleir?—At a distance, when the prisoners came out at the other end of the house, the Wangaratta end, but before the house was fired I saw him come to the south end.

6616. When you saw him with the prisoners Mr. O'Connor was not with him?—I did not see him with him.

6617. Do you know when the last shot came from the house by the outlaws?—I saw one of the outlaws at a window facing this end, about twelve o'clock.

6618. Do you know which it was?—I could not say, but he hit something against his chest, and I heard the armour ring.

6619. Did you see any shots fired after that from there?—Yes, from the window, at one o'clock.

6620. If people at the other side of the house had not seen any shots fired, and said there were none, might it be true, so far as they were concerned; we have it in evidence from some witnesses that there were no shots fired after eleven o'clock?—I would not be sure there were shots fired after that.

6621. One of the police has sworn he was at the back, and no shot was fired—might it not be true of the back of the house?—Yes; a man might fire there, and I not see him; or a man fire from the front, and the others not see him.

The witness withdrew.

Thomas Kirkham sworn and examined.

6622. What are you?—Mounted-constable of police, stationed at Benalla.

6623. Do you remember the day of the attack on Mrs. Jones's house?—I do.

6624. Were you there?—I was.

6625. What time did you come?—I went by the special train with Mr. Hare, from Benalla.

6626. What time was that?—We left here between one and two.

6627. What time did you get in?—As near as I could remember, about three o'clock.

6628. Did you understand immediately you arrived at Glenrowan that the Kellys were in that house?—Yes. When the train got within a little distance of Glenrowan somebody came and told us the Kellys were there waiting for us.

6629. So you were there from the very first?—I was.
6630. At what time did the firing commence?—Shortly after I got there.
6631. It would be somewhere about half-past three?—Yes, or a little before that.
6632. What were the orders given to you?—We had not been on the platform a very few minutes when I was holding half a dozen horses, and I heard Mr. Hare call out, “Let go the horses and come on,” and I let go the horses and went towards the house.
6633. What happened then?—I saw Mr. Hare running up towards the house, and Mr. O’Connor started shortly after him, they had not gone far when Mr. Hare got in advance and got across the fence, and I followed up and got across the fence too, and then the firing commenced.
6634. Where was the firing from?—From the house.
6635. Inside or outside?—I think from the verandah.
6636. Did you hear anybody calling out then from the house; did the outlaws call out?—The volley was returned by the police.
6637. What occurred then?—I saw Mr. Hare shot then, and sitting on a log, and I went further round to the left.
6638. You did not go to speak to Mr. Hare?—Yes, I did. I asked him what was the matter, and he said he was shot on the wrist, and I was holding half a dozen horses, and I heard Mr. Hare call out, “Let go the horses and come on,” and I let go the horses and went towards the house.
6639. Was he not in a dangerous position sitting on the log, exposed to their fire?—Yes, he was exposed to their fire.
6640. Do you know whether he left the ground then?—No, I do not. I do not know when he left. I went round and took up a position by a tree, and I saw Phillips and Gascoigne. I think they came shortly after.
6641. What quarter of the house?—The Benalla end.
6642. That is to the south?—Yes.
6643. What arms were you using?—The Martini-Henry rifle.
6644. Did you fire very often?—I did.
6645. Who gave you instructions after you took up your position?—Nobody.
6646. Before you took up your position?—When I left, Mr. Hare said, “For God’s sake do not let them get away”; that was all the orders I received from anybody.
6647. Did you see Mr. Sadleir or Mr. O’Connor?—Mr. Sadleir had not arrived then.
6648. Did you see Mr. O’Connor?—No, I did not. I saw him running after Mr. Hare while crossing the fence, but did not see him again for some time. He went from the railway station towards the house, but I did not see him again for some time.
6649. Where did you see him next?—After the first firing ceased. I had no ammunition.
6650. What time was that?—I suppose about three quarters of an hour after our arrival on the ground.
6651. That was about half-past four before Mr. Sadleir arrived?—Yes, before that.
6652. What did you do then?—I told Phillips and Gascoigne that I was going to the railway station to try and get more. I got down towards the station, and I met Senior-Constable Kelly and asked him what he had done, and he said he had sent to Benalla for more men; and I asked him if he had any more ammunition, and he said, “No, he had none to give me.” At that time a woman came out of Mrs. Jones’s, and some more women. Mr. O’Connor challenged them.
6653. You saw him then?—No, I heard him.
6654. Where was he?—The other side of the fence from me.
6655. Nearer the house than you?—Yes.
6656. Nearer Mrs. Jones’s?—Yes, nearer the front door.
6657. You did not see his position at all?—I did not.

6658. Did you return to the railway station for more ammunition?—Yes.
6659. Did you get it?—On the way Mr. O’Connor called me, and asked me if I was going to the railway station, and I said, “Yes, I was”; and I asked him if he had any word to send to the railway station; and he asked me to see how the ladies were that were in the carriage, and I went over to the railway station.
6660. What ladies?—Mrs. O’Connor and another.
6661. Did you get ammunition?—No, I could not find any.
6662. What did you do?—I got a lot of bread off the platform, and went back to where Mr. O’Connor was.
6663. Where was he then?—He was then standing in what has been talked of since as a drain so I intended to return from there to where I came from, but Mr. O’Connor said he would recommend me to stay there.
6664. Was it a secure place from the shot?—Yes, it was a very good position.
6665. Were the black boys close to him?—I only saw two at that time on his left, round the other side of the fence where I came from.
6666. How many rounds of ammunition had you used at this time?—Twenty.
6667. Have you any idea how many you used the whole day?—No, not the slightest idea.
6668. Did you use forty or fifty, or upwards?—I may have used forty.

6669. Where did you get fresh from, and what quantity?—I got some ammunition about eleven o’clock, I think.

6670. Not before?—No.

6671. What quantity did you get then?—I think I got twenty—two packages, ten in each.

6672. You used up the whole of it?—I do not think I did quite.

6673. Did you stay beside Mr. O’Connor all this time?—Well, I think I left him shortly after Mr. Sadleir came. Mr. Sadleir sent me over to the railway station to get provisions for the men, to send it round.

6674. What time?—About half-past five in the morning, as near as I could say. I arrived at three. We were confused all day about the time.

6675. Just about daylight?—Just about daylight he sent me to get provisions.

6676. Where was Mr. Sadleir at this time?—Talking to Mr. O’Connor.

6677. In the drain?—Yes.

6678. You were standing together?—Yes.

6679. Did you carry provisions round without being under cover in any way?—I brought some from the station, and gave it to some of the men, 6680. What men?—I do not know. I think they all refused it but one, that was Constable Kenny. It appeared they had got some, before I got there, from somebody else.

6681. Was there any danger in going round with provisions?—There was danger; you were exposed to the fire of the outlaws.

6682. Did the outlaws fire very rapidly from the building?—Yes. When I left for those provisions, I think Mr. O’Connor and the trackers gave them a volley from there, at the window, so that the outlaws should not get a shot at me when I was going.

6683. Did the outlaws fire very rapidly?—Not at that time I would not say very rapidly.

6684. What were your instructions with reference to firing high?—I think the first instructions from Mr. Sadleir were to fire high.

6685. What was the meaning of firing high?—I think some of the men had learned before this that there were civilians in the house, and they were lying on the floor.

6686. Could you fire with that accuracy, so that you could know whether you were firing high or not at any part of the morning?—I think so. It was not very dark.

6687. To fire within six inches?—You could see the windows, and fire.

6688. Did you fire just at the windows?—Yes, we fired higher than the windows.

6689. Would you not fire over the men’s heads possibly?—It was possible, certainly.

6690. Did you see the marks on the building to see how the bullets told on it?—The building was one perfect mass of riddles.

6691. Did you hear anybody calling upon the Kellys’ prisoners to come out?—Yes, I heard several people calling on them to come out.

6692. Did the firing cease when they were coming out?—I think there was some firing going on when the women were coming out.

6693. But when the men came out, at about ten o’clock?—As near as I can remember, that was the time.

6694. When did the women come out?—They came out earlier—about daylight.

6695. Was there no firing while the men were coming out?—None, as far as I remember.

6696. From either side?—No.

6697. Did you see Mr. Sadleir or Mr. O’Connor then?—No, I did not.

6698. Did you shift away from your position when they were coming out?—Yes.

6699. In what way?—Ran up towards them.

6700. Were you in front at the time?—I was in front at the time.

6701. You were with Mr. O’Connor?—No, not then.

6702. Where was he at that time?—I do not know, I am sure. I think Mr. O’Connor left and went away with Mr. Sadleir. I would not be sure.

6703. Immediately Mr. Sadleir came on the ground?—I would not be sure whether he went away then or not.

6704. You did not see him?—No.

6705. Were you in that so—called drain?—I was there with Mr. O’Connor for a while.

6706. Where did you go from there?—To the railway station.

6707. Where were you when you came back?—I came back to there with the provisions.

6708. Did you see Mr. O’Connor then?—Yes.

6709. How long was he there after you returned?—That I could not say.

T. Kirkham, continued.

13th May 1881.

257
6711. How long were you away from the drain after you came out of it for the bread?—I may have been half an hour, or more.
6712. Were Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O'Connor there when you came back?—I think so, but I am not sure.
6713. You say they left about that time—do you know which way they went?—I think they went up towards the Wangaratta end of the building.
6714. Was that where Kelly was captured?—Yes, at the north end.
6715. Do you know the time he was captured?—I think about half-past six.
6716. Where were you then?—With Mr. O'Connor.
6717. At the front of the building?—Yes.
6718. Was that in that drain?—It was.
6719. How long after that was it before you saw Mr. O'Connor when he left with Mr. Sadleir?—I would not be sure about his leaving with Mr. Sadleir.
6720. How long after that was it that you saw him; when did you see Mr. O'Connor after half-past six, when you were with him?—That is about when Kelly was captured?
6721. Yes?—He was there then; I saw him then.
6722. When did you see him again?—I next saw him talking to Mr. Sadleir, at the north end.
6723. When was that?—I think it was eleven o'clock. I would not be sure of the time; we were up all night.
6724. Was it after the prisoners came out or before?—After.
6725. Had you been in the drain all that time?—No, I had not; I had been all round the house.
6726. Were there any other policemen moving about?—They were changing positions.
6727. Often?—Yes.
6728. Have you any recollection of where Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O'Connor went to after the Kelly business?—No, I did not see much of them after that. I saw Mr. Sadleir on the railway station, sending telegrams away and so forth.
6729. What time was that?—Shortly after Kelly was taken.
6730. When did you see him again after that?—Next time I took particular notice of him I think was when the house was being fired in the afternoon.
6731. I thought you said you saw him when the people came out of the house; did you see the people coming out?—Yes.
6732. Did you see Mr. Sadleir then or Mr. O'Connor?—I think I saw Mr. Sadleir up where the men were being drafted, Constable Armstrong and Mr. Sadleir and one or two more. They were all lying on their bellies for safety, and they were being drafted.
6733. By Mr. Sadleir.—Who were lying that way?—The civilians.
6734. By the Commission.—Did you receive any order from any of the officers after the women came out?—I do not remember receiving any orders particularly.
6735. When you rushed up to the house at first, was it Mr. O'Connor who gave you orders to surround the house, or who?—No, Mr. Hare.
6736. What did Mr. Hare do then—you did not see him after?—I saw him sitting on a log, and I asked him if the wound was much; and he said he was shot, and said, “For God’s sake, surround the house, and do not let them get away; do the best you can with them.”
6737. When Mr. Sadleir came on the ground was there any firing?—There was a little; my ammunition had gone.
6738. The other constables were firing?—I would not be sure about that. I think Mr. Sadleir, when he came, gave us an order to fire a volley at the house, but to fire high.
6739. Who first informed you there were any civilians in the house at all?—Constables Gascoigne and Phillips went down about a man who came out of the front of the house, named McHugh. He said, I believe, “You can fire away for a month; the fellows are all in iron, and the place is full of civilians.”
6740. Was there not a woman came out of the house, before Mr. Sadleir arrived, with a wounded child?—McHugh, a man, came out with the child.
6741. What time was that?—I could not say.
6742. Whose child was it?—I think it was Reardon’s child.
6743. You knew at that time that civilians were in the house?—I did not know there were till McHugh came out; Gascoigne and the others found it out from him.
6744. Where did he come?—Straight in front of the house and down the railway line.
6745. Towards the station?—Towards the gate-house.
6746. Who was supposed to be in charge of the police at that time?—Senior-Constable Kelly, I suppose.
6747. Kelly was one of the first party that arrived?—Yes.
6748. And he seemed to take charge of the party after Mr. Hare was wounded, and was the most active in placing the men around the house?—When he came to me and I asked him for ammunition, he said he had been round to the back; and I asked if there were any men there, and he said, “Yes,” there were men at the back.
6749. Did you not see Mr. Sadleir before the civilians came out, calling on the civilians to come out; you say you were in front of the house at that time?—No, I cannot say I did.
6750. You rushed up as soon as they came out to where they were?—Yes.
6751. And Mr. Sadleir was there then?—Yes.
6752. And Mr. O’Connor?—I cannot say I saw Mr. O’Connor then.
6753. You got no orders from Mr. O’Connor, in any shape or form, but to remain in the drain?—He said, “Kirkham, I recommend you to stay here.”
6754. Did Mr. Sadleir seem to be taking charge of the men when he arrived?—Yes, he did.
6755. Did you hear Mr. O’Connor calling out to cease firing at any time?—No I heard one of our own men.

T. Kirkham.
continued.
13th May 1881.

6756. Did you hear that cry go round the house?—I heard Gascoigne singing out, “Look out for the women, cease firing, mind the man.”
6757. Could Mr. O’Connor have called that out and you not have heard it?—I think there was more than one called it out.
6758. You are not sure about it?—No.
6759. Were you long beside Mr. Hare after he was wounded?—No; I went away.
6760. Who was with Mr. Hare?—I do not know.
6761. You did not see whether he continued firing or not?—No, I did not.
6762. Mr. Hare was shot in the wrist immediately he got on the ground?—Yes.
6763. The first volley?—Yes.
6764. When Mr. Hare called to you to let the horses go and follow him, who was with you at the time; what constable came away with you?—I did not see anybody.
6765. Were you first or Mr. Hare first?—Mr. Hare was first.
6766. And you followed next after?—No; Mr. O’Connor was next behind.
6767. How did you come—who came next?—I think I did.
6768. Were any of the black boys with him?—I did not see them.
6769. What other constables were with that party, with Mr. O’Connor, yourself, and Mr. Hare—was Gascoigne?—Yes, and Phillips.
6770. Then you said you came on, and at the first volley Mr. Hare was shot?—Yes.
6771. And then he said “Surround the house,” and you went beyond him to get round the house?—Yes.
6772. What two constables were with you then?—I think Gascoigne and Phillips came immediately after.
6773. Then you were most advanced towards the house?—Gascoigne was most advanced, but Mr. Hare sang out to surround the house before I saw him sitting on the log.
6774. Then you were all together?—All of a heap.
6775. After he was wounded, you went on to complete that order?—Yes.
6776. Were you leading them, or Gascoigne?—I think I was there before Gascoigne.
6777. Who was near Mr. Hare at the time of his being wounded?—I could not say.
6778. Gascoigne was in front of you, and after Mr. Hare was wounded, you fired on the house yourselves?—Yes, I fired on Ned Kelly when he came out.
6779. Did you recognise him as Ned Kelly?—I thought it was Ned Kelly, he came out in advance of the other three.
6780. And you fired?—Yes.
6781. Did any of the other constables near you fire?—Yes, Phillips and Gascoigne.
6782. What occurred then, did they retreat?—After those shots had been fired they ran in again.
6784. What did you do?—Continued firing, and remained there for a short time.
6785. Was it in that position that you expended your twenty rounds of ammunition?—I could not say “expended.” I either expended them or lost them.
6786. As soon as you were short of ammunition, did you say you were short?—I told Gascoigne and others, and said I was going to the railway station.
6787. You went to the railway station?—Yes.
6788. Did you pass Mr. O’Connor going there?—Yes.
6789. Where was he?—In the so-called drain.
6790. It was after you came back that Mr. O’Connor asked you to remain there?—Yes.
6791. Was it in consequence of your having no ammunition, or why; did he assign any reason?—No, he said, “I would recommend you to stop here.”
6792. Then how long did you stop there; did you stop till you heard Mr. Sadleir’s party come?—Yes, I was there when they came. I heard their train come up to the station.
6793. Did Mr. Sadleir come to you where you were, or did you go towards him?—I think Mr. O’Connor was going to send me over to tell Mr. Sadleir to come.
6794. Did he tell you to?—Yes.
6795. Did you do so?—No, I do not think I did.
6796. You remained there?—Yes.
6797. Did you see Mr. Sadleir talking to Mr. O’Connor?—Yes.
6798. Did you see them talking together?—Yes.
6799. Did they go away then out of this trench?—As far as I remember, that is when Mr. Sadleir sent me for provisions.
6800. How long before you took round the provisions was it that Ned Kelly was captured?—I could not say.
6801. Was it long before that?—I do not know.
6802. Did you occupy, any time during the day, any position round the house with ammunition—did you go back to the same position?—No, I went to the end where Kelly was captured.
6803. Did you not see Mr. O’Connor again, or when did you see him again after leaving Mr. Sadleir in the trench?—I think it was nearly eleven o’clock; they were both talking at the Wangaratta end of the building.
6804. Before or after the prisoners were out?—After.
6805. Did you speak to Neil McHugh?—No.
6806. So what you heard about him was hearsay?—Yes, from Phillips, I think.
6807. Did you receive any orders from either of those gentlemen—either Mr. Sadleir or Mr. O’Connor—after you were in the drain with the food?—I do not remember any, only the one from Mr. Sadleir to “fire high.”
6808. Who gave you instructions to go round the building?—Nobody.
6809. Did you do it on your own account, as you thought best, or anything of that sort?—I did it on my own account. There were a lot of men then, and they were changing about.

6810. Did you look upon Mr. O’Connor at any time as giving you instructions after he said, “You had better remain here?”—Mr. O’Connor gave me no orders at all.
6811. While he was in the drain did he lead you to believe he had charge of the party?—No, but I considered he was my officer at that time inasmuch as I was given over to him by the Victorian Government to look after his boys. I understood I was to look after his boys there.
6812. You left the railway platform with Mr. Hare and Mr. O’Connor?—Yes.
6813. How far did you move in the direction of the hotel when you three were close together; Mr. Hare was in advance, Mr. O’Connor second, and you third?—Yes.
6814. How long had you proceeded from the railway before you saw Ned Kelly or any of the gang come out on the verandah?—A very few minutes.
6815. Do you remember the first volley fired?—Yes.
6816. Where from?—From the verandah.
6817. Were you in a position to see Mr. Hare or Mr. O’Connor fire in return?—I was in a position to see Mr. Hare.
6818. Did Mr. Hare fire?—All fired.
6819. Did you see Mr. Hare fire any shots in the direction of the hotel at that time?—Yes.
6820. How many?—I could not say.
6821. About how many?—I could not say.
6822. There were only three of you at that time, cannot you form some idea of the number fired by you three?—I could not.
6823. How long had Mr. Hare been on the ground from the first shot that was fired until you saw him sitting on the log?—Perhaps five or six minutes, or more.
6824. Did you see him at any time of the morning after that?—I did not see him from that particular time till I saw him to-day.
6825. Did he appear to be suffering extremely from the wound?—He did.
6826. To such an extent that he was then incapable of taking any active steps in the way of firing or otherwise?—That I could not say.
6827. I want you to express your opinion that you formed at the time you saw him sitting on the log?—He was apparently in great pain from what I saw.
6828. Had you previously known Mr. Hare?—Yes.
6829. Had you been with him in any search parties?—I was.
6830. Are you under the impression that the position you saw him in when he was complaining of being shot, that he would not have done that unless he was suffering extremely from the shot he received. In other words, was he acting the coward?—Not for a moment, no.
6831. Do you believe he was actually suffering from severe pain from the wound he received?—Yes.
6832. You did not see Mr. O’Connor from that time (the first volley) until on your way to the railway station?—Yes.
6833. How long after the first volley did you return to the railway station?—Perhaps three-quarters of an hour.

6834. Did you see Mr. O'Connor on your way to the railway station at that time?—Yes.
6835. Where was he?—In the so-called trench.
6836. Did you see him earlier in the morning going into that trench?—No.
6837. Did you see him when calling out to Mrs. Jones when she was leaving the hotel—had you seen him before he called on Mrs. Jones then?—No.
6838. But you had heard him. I ask whether you had seen Mr. O'Connor before he called out to Mrs. Jones, when he challenged her on leaving her hotel?—No, I did not.
6839. You heard him, you said, calling out to challenge Mrs. Jones when she was leaving the hotel?—No.
6840. I have taken down the very words; did you hear him calling out to anyone?—I heard him challenge McHugh and a woman.
6841. Not Mrs. Jones?—I could not say.
6842. What time did the woman come out of the hotel with McHugh—was it daylight?—I think not.
6843. How do you know then it was McHugh and a woman?—Gascoigne—6844. How did you know?—I did not know.
6845. It is from information you obtained?—That I heard him challenge?
6846. Yes?—I heard him.
6847. Did you know McHugh?—No.
6848. Did you see Mr. O'Connor?—I heard his voice.
6849. How long did you remain at the station on that occasion?—Half an hour or more.
6850. What kept you half an hour at the station—this was before daylight?—I was looking for ammunition.
6851. Had you previously met Senior-Constable Kelly at that time?—Yes.
6852. Had he told you that there was no ammunition?—That he had none—there was no Martini-Henry ammunition.
6853. Whom did you see on the platform after passing Kelly?—I think I saw one reporter.
6854. Did you see Mr. Sadleir there?—He had not arrived at that time.
6855. On your return from the railway station at that time you went to Mr. O'Connor?—Yes.
6856. Did you know at that time that Mr. Hare had left Glenrowan?—No, I did not know where he was.
6857. No one told you at the station he had gone to Benalla?—No.
6858. When you got to the trench what time would it be?—I could not say, I had no idea of the time.
6859. You had been three quarters of an hour there before you went to the railway station, you remained there half an hour or more, now just see if you remember what time it was when you got back to Mr. O'Connor?—I could not say.
6860. How long was it from the first volley fired until you came to the railway station for ammunition?—Perhaps half an hour or three quarters of an hour.

T. Kirkham, continued.
13th May 1881.

6861. That would make one hour and a quarter—what time would that make it?—A quarter past four, but the time was confused.
6862. What were the exact words that Mr. O'Connor said to you in the trench?—He said, “Kirkham, I recommend you to stay here.”
6863. Did he assign any reason?—No.
6864. Did you tell him you had no ammunition?—Yes.
6865. Had he any suitable ammunition for you?—No, I think the Snider was his.
6866. He recommended you to stay in consequence of being short of necessary material—is that to be inferred?—I could not say.
6867. Could you see the hotel from where you and Mr. O'Connor were then?—Yes.
6868. By sitting down?—No, by standing up.
6869. Would it require him to stand up to see?—Yes.
6870. You could not see it sitting?—No, I think not.
6871. Was it sufficiently light for you to see who was in the trench beside Mr. O'Connor?—I think there was no one there but Mr. O'Connor and the two black trackers.
6872. Was it light enough to see any one else?—Yes.
6873. About how great a distance could you see anybody else—how far in the trench could you distinguish anyone else?—There might be people up the trench further, and we not see them.
6874. As far as you commanded the trench, at what distance could you see?—We could not see up the trench at all.
6875. Why?—The trench comes up at a bend there, and goes off where we were.
6876. Was it in consequence of its bending there that you could not see?—Yes.
6877. Not in consequence of the darkness of the morning?—I think not.
6878. Was it moonlight?—Scarce any moon, I think.
6879. This would be about a quarter past four?—how long did you remain, about, in that trench with Mr. O'Connor?—I may have been there an hour.
6880. That would be about a quarter past five; where did you go then?—Mr. Sadleir was there then.
6881. Where did you go after you had been in the trench an hour with Mr. O'Connor?—When I went back from the railway station I stayed with Mr. O'Connor till Mr. Sadleir came.
6882. Mr. Sadleir came to you in the trench while you were with Mr. O'Connor in the trench—you will swear that?—Yes.
6883. Was it daylight then?—I think it was about daylight.
6884. What time was it daylight at that time of the year?—I could not say.
6885. This was June?—Perhaps half-past five.
6886. Is it daylight now at six o'clock, and we are in May?—Hardly, I think.
6887. Could you see a little after five in the latter end of June?—(No answer.)
6888. When Mr. Sadleir came, what did you do then?—We talked there for a few minutes, and then he sent me for provisions.
6889. And you went round, and came back to where he was?—Yes.
6890. Did he send you for provisions for himself?—No, for the men.
6891. How many of the men were at that spot?—Only myself and two black boys, Constable Canny, and Mr. O'Connor.
6892. Did any of you take any of those provisions you brought from the railway station?—I think the boys had a bit of bread.
6893. How long did you remain in the trench after that?—Half an hour or an hour.
6894. Did you see the women leave the hotel and the civilians?—Yes.
6895. Where were you at the time they left?—Standing about ten yards further down from where Mr. O'Connor and I had been.
6896. In the trench?—No, out of it.
6897. Exposed to the fire of the outlaws from the hotel?—Yes.
6898. With nothing intervening between you and the hotel to prevent you being shot?—Only a three-rail fence.
6899. Was there any great firing from the hotel, from the time Mr. Sadleir came until the women were released?—I do not think there was.
6900. Did you see the women coming from the hotel?—Yes.
6901. You were then about ten yards from Mr. O'Connor?—No, not then.
6902. Where were you?—Away from Mr. O'Connor, at the Benalla end.
6903. What time was it the women came out?—
6904. Mr. Sadleir.—Had the women come out before I arrived?—As far as I can recollect they came out shortly after the first firing.
6905. Did any of them speak to you?—No.
6906. Then after Mr. Sadleir came and you went back with the provisions, that would be some where about daylight in the morning; you remained in the trench till daylight, was that so?—Yes.
6907. What were you doing between daylight in the morning and eleven o'clock?—I was talking to some of the men at the Wangaratta end, and changing about that end.
6908. What was the use of your changing about; were you sent with instructions from the officers to talk with those men?—No.
6909. What practical use were you then between daylight and eleven o'clock; you stated you had no ammunition served out till eleven o'clock, and you were from about four in the morning till eleven without a single charge?—Yes, only my own two revolvers.
6910. Did you fire those?—No.
6911. What practical use were you on the ground if you were not instructed by the officers to give instructions to the men, from daylight till eleven o'clock?—I was on the Wangaratta end at that time.
6912. Did you tell Mr. Sadleir when he arrived you were out of ammunition?—I do not remember.
6913. Did you go down at eleven to see if any had arrived?—I did not, I heard that some men did.
6914. Did you stop behind a tree or anywhere till that time?—I was with the men.

6915. You were on the ground all day, from the early morning till the hotel was fired in the afternoon?—Yes.
6916. All the time?—Yes.
6917. You saw the firing from the hotel, when you arrived in the morning?—Yes.
6918. How long was that continued from the hotel from the first thing in the morning, because you were a close observer, you had no charges yourself and could see whether the firing was coming from the hotel?—I could not say when I saw the last firing from the house.
6919. When did the male prisoners leave the hotel?—About ten.
6920. Was there any firing immediately before that?—I think there was.
6921. Can you swear whether there was or not?—I cannot.
6922. Were you in a position to observe that?—They may have been firing without my knowledge.
6923. Were you not watching?—Yes.
6924. And you cannot say?—No.
6925. Was there any firing after they came out?—I think there was, but I cannot swear.
6926. At what time were you placed in any position to take charge of the black trackers, I mean the O'Connor trackers?—I got charge of them at Heathcote, at the time of the Lancefield robbery.
6927. That would be in the month of August 1879?—Yes.
6928. And you remained in that position till the time that Mr. O'Connor left?—Yes.
6929. You have also been in charge of the black trackers brought from Queensland since?—Yes.
6930. Do you think, from the experience you have gained in connection with the trackers, that you are now competent to take charge of them for a similar purpose to that for which they were first brought here?—I think so.
6931. Would the black trackers of themselves be of any practical use in tracking a gang like the Kelly outlaws, if they came upon them for the purpose of attack, would they fight?—Not without white police, that is my opinion.
6932. Then would you, from the knowledge you have gained, take say six of those black trackers for the purpose of tracking a gang similar to the late Kelly gang?—No.
6933. What mode would you adopt under similar circumstances as those during the Kelly business?—I consider two of them quite sufficient for a party.
6934. If you thought you were on the tracks of four desperate men, like the Kelly outlaws, what other force would you take besides the two trackers?—Six or eight whites.
6935. Men that have had experience in bush life—just describe the six or eight men you would like to take, suppose you were after them in real earnest?—Men used to the bush.
6936. And any other requisites?—Men of known courage.
6937. Good horsemen, men of known courage, and good shots?—Yes.
6938. Then you do not believe in the system of taking six blacks, and only one or two Europeans for the purpose of tracking a gang like the Kellys?—I cannot say I do; I say I consider two sufficient for a party.
6939. Do you think, from the information and from the knowledge you have gained of the trackers now, that you could, under circumstances similar to the Kelly business, conduct a band of men with two black trackers for that purpose—you have some opinion of your own pluck and ability?—A little.
6940. Do you think you could pick out another half dozen men and two black trackers, and be efficient for that work?—Yes.
6941. Equally with any other officer who has been in charge of those black trackers?—Yes.
6942. You do?—Yes.
6943. You have had some experience of the ability of those men for tracking purposes under ordinary circumstances?—Yes.
6944. What is the conclusion you have arrived at either as to Mr. O'Connor's or the present lot?—Well, I saw a good deal of both parties, and from what I saw of Mr. O'Connor's "boys" and the present lot, I must say I think the present lot superior to Mr. O'Connor's "boys," as far as tracking goes.
6945. Are some individuals superior to others in tracking?—Yes.
6946. I suppose you cannot account for that?—No.
6947. Are those men abstemious men?—They are.
6948. Total abstainers?—Almost, they will drink nothing.
6949. In that respect how do they compare with Mr. O'Connor's men?—Mr. O'Connor's "boys" touched nothing, unless he gave it himself.
6950. In that respect they are both about equal?—Yes.
6951. Did you, during the day you were at Glenrowan, hear any one volunteer to rush the hotel?—Yes.
6952. Who?—Constables Dwyer, Montford, and Armstrong.
6953. To whom did they make that proposal?—I think Dwyer went to Mr. Sadleir with that proposal.
6954. Was it a matter of conversation among the police round the hotel that the place should be rushed during the day, and as to sending that proposal to Mr. Sadleir?—I did not know of it.
6955. Did you suggest it to any of the constables who spoke to you in the morning when you had no ammunition?—No; not till the four of us spoke together; I did not mention it myself; we asked Dwyer to go to Mr. Sadleir, and he went and came back and said he said, "No."
6956. Dwyer went to Mr. Sadleir?—We asked him to go, and I think he went.
6957. Did he return and say Mr. Sadleir did not consent?—Yes, that we were not to go.
6958. About what time of the day was that?—Some time before the house was fired.
6959. Would it be an hour before?—Yes, if not more; as far as I could judge.
6960. How early in the day did you become acquainted with the fact that Byrne lay dead in the hotel?—I heard that after the civilians came out.
6961. Then you knew, as far as you know, no one was in the hotel but Hart and Dan Kelly?—As far as I knew.
6962. Did you know about the man Cherry being on the premises?—I heard he was lying in the back of the premises.
6963. Did Mr. Sadleir, as far as you observed, take active service from the time he arrived till the hotel was burnt in the afternoon?—Yes.

6964. Did you see him going round from policeman to policeman round the hotel; the hotel was surrounded, was it not?—Yes.

6965. Did you see him taking a circuit round from man to man?—I did not see him.

6966. When did you see him after early in the morning?—At the Benalla end of the house, when Father Gibney was going in.

6967. After the hotel was on fire?—Yes.

6968. Did you see him at the time the male prisoners came out at eleven?—I saw him when they came out.

6969. Did you see him going round from policeman to policeman round the hotel; the hotel was surrounded, was it not?—Yes.

6970. Who was the officer left in charge before Mr. Sadleir arrived?—Senior-Constable Kelly, as far as I know.

6971. Suppose that Senior-Constable Kelly gave you instructions, on the one hand, and Mr. O’Connor on the other, you knowing that Mr. Hare was away, which of them would you have obeyed?—I think I should have obeyed Senior-Constable Kelly, he was our officer of Victoria, and I know, as far as the regulations go, he would have been in charge after Mr. Hare left.

6972. Did you recognise Mr. O’Connor as an officer of the Victorian police at the time of the Glenrowan capture?—I could not say.

6973. I mean your opinion; did you know of yourself he was an officer of the Victorian police?—No.

6974. Did you know at any time he was an officer of the Victorian police?—I could not say whether he was or not.

6975. Were you at Benalla before the affair at Glenrowan?—Yes.

6976. How long had you been stationed at Benalla before that?—About eighteen months, or more.

6977. And a long time under Mr. O’Connor?—Yes.

6978. As mounted constable along with the Victorian police?—Yes.

6979. Would you recognise any instructions given you by Mr. O’Connor?—I mean, Mr. O’Connor being here in charge of the black boys, and you being with him, would you obey his instructions?—Well, I would obey his instructions as far as I could. I was given over to him.

6980. By whom?—By Mr. Sadleir.

6981. Specially appointed to take the duties of another man who had been relieved?—Yes.

6982. Were you not informed by Mr. Sadleir that Mr. O’Connor was your superior officer in that position?—No, I think not.

6983. Then, in point of fact, though you were there to do duty with the black trackers under Mr. O’Connor, you would recognise Senior-Constable Kelly as the superior officer; as far as you alone were concerned, was not Mr. O’Connor your superior officer?—Yes.

6984. Would you, if Mr. O’Connor gave an order, disobey it if Senior-Constable Kelly gave another order?—Under those circumstances I would scarcely know what to do.

6985. Did you consider Mr. O’Connor your superior officer while you remained here with the trackers?—Yes.

6986. Did you ever enquire with yourself whether Mr. O’Connor was your superior officer or not?—No, I just obeyed; I did not enquire that.

6987. Mr. O’Connor having gone out of the district, and, so far as you knew, being about to sail for Queensland, would you consider yourself under him when he came back with the black trackers to Glenrowan, or would you consider yourself under Senior-Constable Kelly?—If Senior-Constable Kelly had given me orders I should have obeyed them.

Mr. Hare.—This man has only been in the force about eighteen months or two years, before this. He was a recruit at that time.

6988. By the Commission.—You looked upon Mr. O’Connor, at all events, as having left the Victorian police when he was going to Queensland?—I did.

6989. You said you saw Mr. Hare sitting on a log, wounded?—Yes.

6990. Did he ask you to render him any assistance?—No.

6991. Or to go for the doctor?—No.

6992. Or to send for anybody?—No.

6993. You considered him badly wounded?—Yes apparently he was.

6994. Did you suggest anything to him?—No, I did not.

6995. If you had been called upon to rush this house, you would have been perfectly willing to have gone with a party before it was set on fire?—When we got orders to that effect we would have obeyed them.

6996. With regard to the black trackers and Mr. O’Connor, you were out frequently with them?—Yes.

6997. And you had many conversations with the black trackers?—Yes.
6998. Had you any conversations with the black trackers after Mr. O’Connor left, I mean the Queensland trackers?—They went with him.

6999. Were you out with them without Mr. O’Connor, ever?—Yes, on plenty of occasions.

7000. Did you have any conversation with them with regard to Mr. O’Connor, as to his ability and how they liked him?—No, never.

7001. They never expressed an opinion?—No.

7002. Never made any remark of what they thought of Mr. O’Connor?—No.

7003. Do you think they liked him generally?—Yes.

7004. They always obeyed his directions at that time or any other?—Yes.

7005. You are now in charge of the black trackers in Benalla?—Yes.

7006. Have those men here now been with the other trackers, or do they know nothing of them?—They know nothing of them.

7007. Have you had much practice with firearms since you have been in the force?—Yes a lot of practice.

7008. You consider yourself a good shot?—I do.

7009. Are you supplied with plenty of ammunition for practice?—Since I have been in the district I have had a lot of practice; since I joined the force.

7010. You are supplied with plenty of ammunition. How do they serve it out to you; in what quantities?—At the present time I have twenty rounds regulation with the Martini-Henry rifle, and I have eighteen for my revolvers.

7011. How long is that to last?—I am supposed to keep that always on hand; I am not supposed to use that.

7012. Except in active service?—Yes.

7013. Then there is none given you for practice?—There is none served out and allowed to fire it off without orders.

7014. Suppose you were to use those twenty rounds you have now, what would be the result?—I should have to account for it.

7015. If you told them you had used it for practice you would be supplied with other twenty?—Yes.

7016. Would you have to pay for it?—I should not use it without orders.

7017. If you applied for instructions, would they give you orders to use it?—Yes, I think so.

7018. And give you more?—I think so.

7019. You have not been restricted at all?—No, I have not.

7020. Have you ever heard of an order being issued restricting ammunition?—I did hear of such in Benalla.

7021. That is for practice?—I heard something to that effect.

7022. By whom?—I could not say.

7023. There was no order to you to be careful?—No.

7024. You were never restricted?—No.

7025. Do you know if any members of the force buy ammunition for themselves out of their own pockets?—Yes.

7026. Why do they do that if you say there is no restriction?—They may have bought it to have more practice on their own account.

7027. Because they are afraid to ask for more?—I could not say whether they have been afraid to ask for more.

7028. Do you not think if you had plenty of ammunition you would be very foolish to go and buy some out of your own pocket?—Yes; but I know of constables who, when we were getting plenty of practice, have sent to town for boxes of ammunition on their own account. For instance, before Mr. Nicolson left.

7029. Did they tell you why they did it?—Those men sent for that to make themselves perfect shots.

7030. Did you ever use more of your ammunition than what you were instructed to use by your superior officer for practice?—No.

7031. Did you receive instructions to use a certain quantity when you went out and no more?—Yes. When we go for practice we may get instructions to use six rounds, and we do that, and then we come back and get them renewed.

7032. How often is that—once a month?—I do not think there is any time stated. I have had a lot of practice during Mr. Nicolson’s and also Mr. Hare’s time, and since I have had a lot of practice in the force.

7033. You had plenty when Mr. Nicolson was here?—Yes.

7034. And plenty when Mr. Hare was here?—Yes; because I was in charge of Mr. O’Connor’s boys, and we went out often by Mr. O’Connor’s order.

7035. Did you see other members of the force having plenty?—I could not say.

7036. You did not go out with the other members?—No, bar one or two occasions. I went very often with Mr. O’Connor’s boys, by Mr. O’Connor’s orders.
7037. Were the boys good shots?—Two of them were—the others very bad.
7038. Did they practice with the rifle?—Yes, always.
7039. Which party was that?—Mr. O‘Connor’s boys, who have gone.
7040. Your own boys—are they good shots?—They use the revolvers so far; they have not used the gun yet. They do very well with the revolver.
7041. If they would not fight, what use would be the revolvers or the rifles?—I did not say they would not fight; I do not know whether they would fight or not.
7042. You think they would fight better with whites than without?—Yes, I think they would fight with whites.
7043. By Mr. O‘Connor.—When you were handed over to me, did you not understand from Mr.
Sadleir that you were to be under my orders?—Yes, I understood I was to be under your orders.
7044. Did you ever receive orders from anybody else, except through me?—I could not say I did.
7045. Cannot I bring to your recollection, when you applied for ammunition and it was refused you, my order got it for you?—I do not ever remember applying for ammunition.
7046. How did you get your ammunition; would Sergeant Whelan give you ammunition without my order for my party or not?—He would for me; he would not for your boys to practice without your order. I do not ever remember his refusing me for my own use for practice.
7047. You state that the last time you saw Mr. Hare, till to-day, he was sitting on a log; where abouts was this log?—In front of the house.
7048. Which side of the fence from the railway station?—The Benalla side.
7049. You state that you did not see Mr. Hare leave the ground, I believe?—No, I did not see him leaving the ground.
7050. Can you inform the Commission how long after the first shot the two engines left the station; you heard them pass down?—Yes; I could not say how long it was from the first shot till those engines left.
7051. Could not you make a very good guess at it—everything I know was guess-work; but was it in an hour or half an hour, or what time?—It may have been under an hour—I could not say; I would not say what time it was.

T. Kirkham,
continued,
13th May 1881.

7052. It might have been half an hour?—As far as I can remember, it was more; but I would not say as to time.
7053. Could you see whether Mr. Hare loaded his gun again, or do you think he could load his gun again with the bad wound he had—you stated you thought it was very severe—was it possible for him to load his gun and fire?—I do not think he could.
7054. Did you see him do it?—No, but he may without my seeing him.
7055. Would you not have been in a position to see him do it?—I might have been very close to him and yet he loaded it without my knowledge.
7056. Did he immediately leave the log and go to the station?—He was sitting on the log when I left him.
7057. When was it you first heard the women had left the house?—I saw the women leaving.
7058. Did you hear anybody call out to them to cease firing?—I heard two or three people call out to cease firing.
7059. Did you recognise Mr. Hare’s voice?—I only recognised Gascoigne’s voice.
7060. Did you recognise Mr. Hare’s voice, telling them to let the women out?—I cannot say I did.
7061. Did you recognise my voice?—No.
7062. You said so to let the women out?—I do not think I said that. I said you challenged McHugh.
7063. Do you remember my calling to you, you were on my left hand side, in a line nearly with me, and I called to you to see that the Kellys did not come out amongst the women. Do you remember that?—No.
I heard you challenge McHugh as I came down.
7064. Not by that name?—No, I did not know the name then.
7065. The challenge was, “Who goes there?” not “McHugh”?—Yes, that was it. I learned afterwards who it was.
7066. I think you cast a doubt upon my statement, in reference to taking my men out, and considering them sufficient with two white constables. You stated you did not think them, I understood you, good by themselves or reliable unless they had white men with them. Did you ever have any reason to doubt really the courage of my men. Have you ever had any occasion to doubt it?—Well, I suppose I am on my oath and must speak the truth, only on one occasion, and that was at Glenrowan.
7067. By the Commission.—What caused you to doubt it; what action was it?—When those civilians came out in the morning there were two or three or four of them, instead of coming out when Constable
Wilson and I called them, we went to get under the culvert.
7068. That is the trackers?—Yes.
7069. By Mr. O‘Connor.—Went to hide under the culvert. Where was this culvert, please?—Running under the road.
7070. Were you near them?—A little way from them, Wilson and I.
7071. And you both saw them go under the culvert?—Yes.
7072. Did they remain there any length of time?—No.
7073. How long?—I could not say; and I told them to come out and they said they had no ammunition.
7074. Which men?—I could not say; and I told them to come out and show their empty rifles, whether they had any ammunition or not.
7075. You never mentioned that to me during the whole day?—No. You just now asked me to give an instance.
7076. That is the first time you ever had any occasion to doubt the courage of the men?—The first and only one.
7077. ‘We had been out before on tracks that we thought were the outlaws’ tracks, our first and second trip—were you with the men at that time?—No, I was in Beechworth with Mr. Hare, in the cave party, behind Mrs. Byrne’s house.
7078. By the Commission.—I suppose you understand that they fired away as long as they had ammunition?—I think they did.
7079. By Mr. O’Connor.—Did you notice anybody else show what you might consider cowardice at Glenrowan?—I do not know that I did.
7080. Can you say decidedly?—I did not see anybody.
7081. In your opinion do you consider I had a good position in the front of the house?—Yes, I do.
7082. By the Commission.—In what sense do you mean the word “good”?—A safe position.
7083. Mr. O’Connor.—No, I refer to the outlaws.
7084. By the Commission.—How far from the house?—Thirty or forty yards.
7085. Mr. O’Connor.—That was not an answer to my question—my question was, was it not a good position to do the work we were supposed to be doing, endeavoring to arrest the outlaws and prevent them escaping till we got more assistance; was that not what we were doing?—Yes.
7086. Was not that position a good one for that?—Yes, for the command of the front of the house.
7087. By Mr. Hare.—How far was I from the house when I was shot—about?—I have not taken any notice of the ground, but I should say about thirty yards.
7088. Who was nearest to me when I was shot?—That I could not say.
7089. Who was up near me; what persons did you see near me when I was shot; whom do you remember seeing there?—Kenny and Barry.
7090. Were you near me—how far were you from me when I was shot?—Ten or twelve yards.
7091. Behind or in front?—Behind you.
7092. Did you see Mr. O’Connor when I was shot?—No, I did not.
7093. You say you saw him leave the railway station and follow me, did he go up to the house with me?—When you and he left the station together, I ran behind him, and, as far back as I can remember, I think you were very soon twenty yards in advance of him.
7094. Where did he go?—I do not know. I never saw him after. I cannot say.

7095. Did he go up to the house with me?—I did not see him.
7096. Mind you said you left behind him—did you not see him leave from behind me?—I saw him leave the platform with you; where he went I do not know.
7097. Did he go up to the house with me?—I did not see him.
7098. How many rounds of ammunition did you take with you from the train when you started?—Twenty.
7099. Where did you expend that ammunition?—Most of it between Phillips and Gascoigne.
7100. Was that in the front or left?—On the Benalla side.
7101. That is the left of the house?—Yes.
7102. Do you know how long the men were firing before I called out, “Surround the house”—how long after I was shot—to prevent the Kellys escaping?—I do not remember that.
7103. By the Commission.—Just a moment, when you spoke to Superintendent Hare, and you said he seemed to be suffering much, how long was that after the first volley was fired?—Three or four minutes.
7104. Did he not then tell you to surround the house to prevent the Kellys escaping?—Yes. To do the best I could, for God’s sake not to let them escape.
7105. By Mr. Hare.—Whereabouts is this log situated, was it between the fence and the house?—To the front and left.
7106. How far was it from the place I was shot at?—It may be fifteen yards.
7107. Nearer the railway station or the hotel?—Nearer the station.
7108. Had I retreated?—As far as I remember.
7109. Do you remember Ned Kelly and all the outlaws retreating into the hotel?—Yes.
7110. Was I standing opposite the hotel when they retreated?—I could not say.
7111. By the Commission.—Did you see Mr. Hare standing there when they retired?—I could not say. I was further round to the left.
7112. By Mr. Hare.—I suppose you were excited a little during the firing?—I was.
7113. Did you take notice of anybody who was next to me, or whether I fired many shots?—No, I could not say.
7114. By the Commission.—Did you see Mr. Hare standing there when they retired?—I could not say. I was further round to the left.
7115. By Mr. Hare.—I suppose you were excited a little during the firing?—I was.
7116. Did you take notice of anybody who was next to me, or whether I fired many shots?—No, I could not say.
7117. Had you not enough to do to look after yourself?—I had enough to do to look after myself.
7118. Was my hand bandaged when you saw me sitting on the log?—No.
7119. By the Commission.—You stated in your evidence it was about six minutes after you left the platform you saw Mr. Hare sitting on the log?—I do not remember saying that.
7120. How far would Mr. O'Connor be in the drain from where Mr. Hare was wounded?—It might be twenty-five or thirty yards, as far as I know.
7121. You did not see Mr. O'Connor after you left the railway, and Mr. Hare went to the front?—Not till I was going to the railway station for ammunition.
7122. How far was it from where Mr. Hare was wounded?—Twenty-five or thirty yards, I should think.
7123. Did you see Mr. Hare wounded; did you know he was shot when the volley was fired?—I heard him say he was shot.
7124. Did you see him sit down on the log at once, or did you see him twice?—I did not take particular notice at the time; he said he was wounded.
7125. You say it was three or four minutes after the volley was fired you saw him sitting on the log?—Yes.
7126. Did you see him before he was sitting on the log?—Yes; I think he was talking to some of the men before he was sitting on the log.
7127. Some little time after he was wounded?—It might be three or four minutes.
7128. By the Commission.—What are you?—A senior-constable of police.
7129. Where are you stationed?—I have been in charge of Violet Town station until last Tuesday, when I was relieved.
7130. Where were you stationed immediately before the taking of the Kellys at Glenrowan?—Immediately before at Violet Town.
7131. What time did you arrive on the scene that morning?—About half-past eleven, as near as I can recollect, in the forenoon.
7132. Then you were not there at the time the people were all got out?—I was not.
7133. Were you in the district during all the time the Kellys were at large?—Yes.
7134. And you were out with many search parties?—Yes. On the 28th October 1878 I received a telegram from Senior-Constable Maud, clerk in Mr. Sadleir’s office, to proceed to Benalla at once, re the Kelly gang.
7135. Where were you stationed before?—At Tatura, in the Goulburn Valley.
7136. I may tell you at once, that it is not the intention of the Commission to go into the general question to-night; you may be under examination again; it is really the Glenrowan matter they are going to deal with now. You arrived at Glenrowan about half-past eleven?—Yes.
7139. Where were you stationed before?—At Tatura, in the Goulburn Valley.
7140. I may tell you at once, that it is not the intention of the Commission to go into the general question to-night; you may be under examination again; it is really the Glenrowan matter they are going to deal with now. You arrived at Glenrowan about half-past eleven?—Yes.
7142. How long did the firing continue from the hotel after your arrival, as far as you know?—I think there were about three shots fired at about a quarter to twelve, and about one o’clock there were two fired.
7143. Those were the last?—About one o’clock were the last from the hotel.
7144. Did the police continue shooting into the building?—At times they did. They would cease firing for a short time, and then again fire.
7145. There was no reply?—No reply to them; not from a quarter to twelve till about one o’clock.
7146. That was the last?—That was the last shot I heard from the hotel.

7147. Did you know shortly after you arrived that there were only two of them living?—I was told on my arrival that there were only two of them living.

7148. Was there any proposal made at all to rush the hotel?—There was. I had proposed to Mr. Sadleir to rush it. I was told there were others. Armstrong and Dwyer also requested it.

7149. Was the front door of the hotel open at this time?—It was.

7150. During all the afternoon, when the police were firing in occasionally, as the case might be, did you receive any impression from no shots being fired back that it was possible the outlaws were dead?—I knew they were not dead, for about two o’clock I saw one of them come to the back door. I and Constable Wilson were on the north end of the hotel. We had a view of the back door, and one of them came to the back door.

7151. Could you see whether he had his armour on?—I could not, but I believe he had.

7152. Did you recognize which one that was?—I did not.

7153. Did you see his features?—No, we only saw the form of a man coming to the door, as if he was looking out.

7154. Was there no offer made to them to come out?—There were, several times; the police called on them to come out frequently.

7155. Did they say that their lives would be spared for the time if they came?—I did not hear the word used.

7156. And they did not come out?—They did not.

7157. Did they reply at all?—I did not hear them reply at all.

7158. Not even a reply to the firing?—No, I did not hear it.

7159. Were you present when the proposal was made to burn the house?—I was; I made it.

7160. Had you any idea at the time that you would be burning the bodies, or did you think it would drive them out?—To drive them out.

7161. Did you expect it would injure any human beings besides them?—I did not. I was not told there was any other person in the hotel.

7162. You were not told at that time that Byrne was lying at the hotel dead?—I was not told where he was; I was told he was shot.

7163. Were you present at the consultation about burning?—I was. I went to where Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor were standing, and I said to Mr. Sadleir—I asked him what he was intending to do, and he said, “I have sent for a cannon to Melbourne, to be here about three o’clock.”

7164. The proposal was to batter the house down?—Blow the house down with cannon. I said, “Surely you will not send down for a cannon; cannot you take other means to get them out.” I said, “Why not fire it?” Mr. Sadleir said, “How would you do that?” I said, “By getting some straw and kerosene and to get a younger man than you to do it.”

7165. Was that agreed to?—Not immediately. Mr. Sadleir said something to Mr. O’Connor, which I did not hear at the time, and he then said to me, “Well, in the name of God, do it”; but, if it is done, we will get a younger man than you to do it.”

7166. What did you say?—I said that anything I proposed I would carry out, and if it was done at all I would do it myself.

7167. You got the straw and kerosene?—Yes, and I saw Mr. Sadleir on the platform, when I said, “All ready.”

7168. Was he on the platform when this proposition was made?—No, on the ground, on the north side of the hotel.

7169. Was it arranged then?—I went away towards the range, and Mr. Sadleir met me, and he told me he would go and make arrangements to have a party to fire into the building while I would go up and set fire to it.

7170. And that was done?—Yes.

7171. When you came from Violet Town, what officer did you see upon the ground?—The first I saw was Mr. Sadleir. He was the only officer belonging to the Victorian police there. He was on the platform.

7172. Did you speak to him?—I did.

7173. Did he give you any instructions?—What he said first to me was, “Johnston, you will have to keep quiet and not irritate the men.”

7174. What did you understand by that?—I suppose Mr. Sadleir thought I would likely make a rush where the outlaws were. He said they had captured Ned, and Joe Byrne was shot, and the other two in the hotel they would get before night.

7175. Do you consider his object was to spare the police?—I think it was.

7176. By Mr. Sadleir.—What men were not to be irritated? Was it to “excite” or “irritate”?—To irritate or excite.

7177. What men?—The police.

7178. The police with you—the party you brought?—Yes; the police in general, I took it to be.

7179. By the Commission.—Is it generally known amongst the officers that you are of an impetuous temperament?—I am not aware of it.

Mr. Sadleir.—That is the man’s nature—he is very impetuous and very hot-headed.

7180. By the Commission.—Did you see the police round the house while the fire was catching it?—Yes, they were all round the building, at some distance off.
7181. Did any policeman attempt to go into the building, or to go near it, before the priest went into it?—No.

7182. Did the police follow the priest up or remain till he came out?—They were closing on the building as the priest went up. The priest went in at the front door and came out at the back, having gone right through the passage. The police at this time were closing on the building.

7183. Not rushing?—Not rushing, closing up.

7184. Did you see the motions of the priest as he came out?—Yes; he said, “They are all dead.”

7185. And then?—Then the rush was made up to the house.

7186. To bring out the bodies?—To bring out the bodies.

7187. Was Cherry injured at all by the fire?—No, not at all. Cherry was in the detached kitchen.

7188. And of course it did not matter for Byrne!—He was not injured; the other two were charred.

7189. Did you notice the position of the bodies as they lay, the two that were charred?—I did.

7190. Had they got the armours on?—No; neither.

7191. Was the armour laid on one side?—The armour was lying about a foot and a half from each of them. I might explain the room they were in. There was a double bed in it, and as soon as the fire had burnt down the bed so that I could get to see them, I got a pile of brick and timber away from the wall, and got out the bed; then I saw the bodies, and the manner in which they were lying.

7192. It struck you then, I presume from what you say, that they had not their armour on when they died?—No, they had not.

7193. Because even though the upper portion of the armour might be disturbed and put away from the body the portion they were lying on would surely be under the body?—The helmet and body-pieces and all were lying alongside.

7194. Not on?—No.

7195. Could not have been on?—Could not have been on.

7196. Did they present the appearance of having murdered one another?—No, I do not think they did.

7197. Could you account for their lying together?—They appeared to me to have laid down in one another’s arms—the left arm of one of them was not so much burnt as the right, that is, it appeared to be underneath the other.

7198. Then the impression on your mind was they did not shoot one another, but they had been wounded and lay down to die?—And been suffocated—that they were under the influence of drink and were suffocated.

7199. And not shot at all?—I do not believe they were shot.

7200. Did you see Mr. O’Connor during the time you were there?—Only once during the day, when I went to speak to Mr. Sadleir, about half-past two, about setting fire to the place.

7201. Where were Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor then?—They were on the north side of the building, about fifty yards from the railway fence.

7202. How far from the house?—About, I daresay, over fifty yards from the hotel.

7203. That is to say on the Wangaratta side?—On the Wangaratta side.

7204. Did you receive any instructions after you came, other than those that you mentioned, from Mr. Sadleir when you arrived?—I did not.

7205. Did you see the officers visiting the men?—I saw Mr. Sadleir go about among the men.

7206. You did not see Mr. O’Connor?—I did not, only once.

7207. You would have known him—Oh, yes.

7208. Were the two officers standing out in the open when you saw them?—No, Mr. O’Connor was standing with his back against a tree, with his back towards the building, and I think it was the Argus newspaper he was reading, and Mr. Sadleir was standing in front of him, the tree sheltered them both.

7209. Do you think the place could have been taken much sooner without great risk?—I think if we had been allowed to rush the place we might have got them.

7210. Do you think there would have been much chance of men being killed in the attempt?—There might have been some of us wounded.

7211. After all it was the most merciful proceeding not to run the risk of their lives?—No doubt it was.

7212. You did not arrive there till eleven o’clock?—About half-past eleven.

7213. Then you were perfectly cool and collected at that time?—I was.

7214. You had not been hurried up early in the morning?—I had been up previously the whole night.

7215. You were not like those who came in the first rush in the morning?—No.

7216. You stated there were three shots fired after that time from the hotel?—I know there were no shots. I do not believe after one there were shots fired.

7217. Was it possible, from the way in which the police surrounded the hotel, that shots could have been fired at about a quarter to twelve, and two about one.

7218. Do you think you were in a position to judge whether any shots were fired after that time from the hotel?—I had been up previously the whole night.

7219. You stated there were three shots after you arrived fired from the hotel?—Yes; he said, “They are all dead.”

7220. Did any policeman attempt to go into the building, or to go near it, before the priest went into it?—No.

7221. What were the two officers standing out in the open when you saw them?—I think if we had been allowed to rush the place we might have got them.

7222. Do you think there would have been much chance of men being killed in the attempt?—No doubt it was.

7223. Did any policeman attempt to go into the building, or to go near it, before the priest went into it?—No.

C. Johnston, continued.
13th May 1881.
been fired and some of the members of the police have been under the impression that they came from the hotel, before or after that time?—The shots I heard, I am satisfied were fired from the hotel, from the report.

7219. I am asking was it possible for the shots fired by some members of the police to have been mistaken by other members to have come from the hotel?—It might have been so.

7220. After one o’clock?—Not after one o’clock.

7221. At what time did you see one of the supposed outlaws come from the hotel, on the last occasion, at the back door?—As near as I can fix the time it was about two o’clock, it was after that that we heard a noise as if they were taking off the armour, or putting up a barricade. We heard that noise, and I believe it was then they were taking off the armour.

7222. At what time did you propose to Mr. Sadleir to allow you and others to rush the hotel?—Some time after I arrived on the ground, for I had gone round to see the position of the men.

7223. Was it after the last shot was fired?—Before the last shot was fired.

7224. Will you tell the reply that Mr. Sadleir made to you?—The reply was, “Wait awhile, Johnston, we will have them without any risk.”

C. Johnston, continued.
13th May 1881.

7225. Do you know whether you or any other member of the police proposed to Mr. Sadleir to be allowed to rush the hotel before the fire was proposed?—I did it, and I was told others did it too.

7226. Was that the second time or only once?—It was before the shots were fired at one o’clock.

7227. Did you propose it a second time before the house was fired?—Not when I saw him about the firing.

7228. Did you and other members of the police engage in conversation as to the advisability rushing the hotel, outside of the officers?—I did, I had conversation with several of the men about it.

7229. Were they of the same opinion?—There were several said they would go if I would.

7230. And you were prepared to go even before the last shot was fired?—I was.

7231. Did you know at the time it was proposed to fire the hotel that Mr. Sadleir had sent for a cannon?—I did not know Mr. Sadleir had sent for a cannon until I proposed the firing of the hotel.

7232. And then Mr. Sadleir would not consent at that time for you to set fire to it?—I think about a quarter to three. He consulted with Mr. O’Connor. I did not hear what the conversation was.

7233. And at that time they were standing at the tree?—Yes.

7234. You set fire to the hotel on the side nearest Benalla, was that so?—Yes.

7235. Is that the opposite side of the hotel from where the chimney was situated?—There is chimney at each side.

7236. A chimney at the end you set fire to?—Yes.

7237. After setting fire you remained at some distance?—After setting fire I went back to Mr. Sadleir where he was, against the tree.

7238. Did you speak to him then?—No; Mr. Sadleir said to me—“Well, if it does not take fire, it is not your fault. I do not know where I left your rifle.” I had left it with him when I went up. I think he said, “It is standing at the tree,” so I went round the rank of men to get my rifle.

7239. Then you returned to the position opposite to where you had set fire to the building?—No; that was on the north side where I had left my rifle. I got down partially in front of the building then.

7240. When did you come back to the position where you were able to knock away a portion of the building?—After we had got Cherry out of the building.

7241. That was after the priest had been in?—Yes, some time after.

7242. How far were the bodies lying from the wall that you set fire to?—They were in a different room to the room I set fire to, back on the skillion, on the same side, but in another room, the skillion at the back.

7243. Was there any window looking out from the end of the hotel that you set fire to?—No; there was one from the detached building.

7244. They were not in that?—No; there were none in the end of the building. There was a window in the back.

7245. Was it possible for you to have made a mistake about their being in armour or out of armour before they were dead?—I am satisfied they were out of armour before they were dead.

7246. You saw the two burnt stumps that remained before they were removed?—Yes, I removed them myself.

7247. Was any portion of the armour underneath those stumps?—No.

7248. On which side was the armour lying—on the innermost portion of the building?—Lying towards the door and bedstead, across the end of the building—that is where I set fire to the end of the bedstead—across, with the side to the end of the building; and the bodies were lying on the other side of the bed, between that and the door leading out on to the passage.

7249. And where was the armour lying?—Between the bodies and the passage.

7250. Altogether distinct and removed from the two stumps?—Yes, about a foot between the bodies and the armour.
7251. Do you think it is possible for those two men to have died in armour, or either of them?—It was not possible.

7252. You have no hesitation in saying now that those two men must, of their own accord, have taken off their armour before they died?—They did.

Mr. Sadleir.—Is not this examination departing from the purpose expressed to-day. If you go on to this, I must crave the permission of the Commission to cross-examine. I did not wish to do it.

The Chairman.—Has he stated anything materially different from other witnesses?

Mr. Sadleir.—He stated things very different from my own representation of the evidence.

7253. By the Commission.—Did you see anything of Mr. O’Connor from the time you arrived at eleven o’clock until you saw him in the position described by you behind the tree, when you asked about setting fire?—I did not.

7254. Were you in a position, from eleven till a quarter to three, to see what was done by the two officers, Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O’Connor, between eleven and a quarter to three?—I saw Mr. Sadleir go round frequently amongst his men, but Mr. O’Connor I did not see at all, except the time I have stated.

7255. At the time you saw him had he the black trackers immediately under his control?—No.

7256. Do you know where they were at the time?—I did not see them.

7257. Did you see them?—I only saw them in the afternoon, after the place was burnt.

7258. Not before?—Not before.

7259. What time elapsed after the police went towards the hotel before they entered?—That was when the priest went in?

7260. When the police went to the hotel, what time elapsed before their entry?—After the hotel was fired?

7261. Yes?—They ran as fast as ever they could up to the hotel.

7262. When the priest came out?—Yes, when the priest came out; they pulled out the body of Byrne and then got Martin Cherry out.

7263. But the place was on fire at the time?—Yes.

7264. And they ran in while the place was on fire?—It was as much as you could do to get in when we got up to it, with the smoke and fire through the house.

7265. You could not get the other bodies out?—No, it was impossible to get in at that time.

7266. What distance were you from the hotel when the priest entered?—About twenty yards.

7267. Were you as near the hotel as any of the police?—I was.

7268. None of the police were nearer than you were?—No, but we were all closing in on the hotel.

7269. You were at that distance when the priest came out?—Yes; we were not that distance when he went up first.

7270. How far then?—Thirty yards, I daresay, the nearest then.

7271. Arrangements were made for your protection at the time you went up to the building to set fire to it?—A body of police were to cover me while I went on foot.

7272. Did they fire at all while you went up?—Yes.

7273. And they protected you while you approached the building to fire it?—Yes.

7274. How far were they off when they were firing?—I think Mr. Sadleir was the nearest, I should think thirty yards away. He took up a position to watch the back between the two buildings, so that he had a good view if they came out at the back.

7275. Was he directing the men in the firing?—He was.

7276. Did you hear any orders he gave?—Yes.

7277. What?—They slackened the firing, and I heard him sing out, “Keep up the firing,” when I was going towards the building.

7278. Did you hear of any civilians offering to rush the place?—I did not.

7279. If you were left to yourself would you have rushed the place sooner?—I would have rushed the place, undoubtedly, sooner.

7280. Along with the other men?—Yes.

7281. Could you go from the main building to this place where Cherry’s body was lying without going through the place; was it entirely detached?—Yes, there might be three feet or more between the detached building and the dwelling-house.

7282. You did not know how Cherry had got into that?—No.

7283. Suppose the outlaws had been alive, do you not think they could have escaped into the shed behind when the fire came?—They could.

7284. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did not that take fire afterwards?—Yes.

7285. They would have had to come out of that afterwards?—They would have had to come out of that afterwards.

7286. By the Commission.—Could they have got in without exposing themselves to the fire of the police?—Not very well; Mr. Sadleir would have seen them from his position, passing from the passage to the other building, and on the other side there were other men.
By Mr. Sadleir.—That shed took fire afterwards?—Yes, after Cherry's body was removed.

By the Commission.—From all points were the police sheltered, or were some exposed?—Some were exposed; I saw Constable Dwyer standing down near the railway fence without cover.

How many were exposed within a distance of thirty yards?—I saw Dwyer once.

Within a distance of thirty yards, exposed to shots such as those men were reputed to be, do you not think a man would be certain to have his life in danger as much as he would by rushing the building?—Had the outlaws been out of armour and free from drink he would, but I do not think they could do it in armour.

You think they were prevented from shooting straight by the weight of armour?—Yes, they could not get proper sight by the weight of armour.

In that case would not the danger have been much less in rushing while they had the armour than while they had not?—I think that it would have been safer to rush them with the armour on than off.

Did you get that impression at the time or since?—That was not my opinion at the time, because until I got on the ground I never knew they had armour.

How soon after you arrived did you discover that?—Shortly after I got on the ground, I was taken in and shown Ned Kelly's armour.

That was about a quarter to half-past eleven?—Between half-past eleven and twelve.

Then the impression you derived was that the others were enclosed in similar armour?—I was told they were.

Was your impulse at that particular period to rush the building as being the best method?—No, I did not come to any conclusion about rushing the building until I saw the position.

Do you now think it would have been attended with less danger, and the whole proceeding consummated better by rushing the building?

Mr. Sadleir.—I had no time to think; he had had eight months to think.

The Chairman.—The object of the Commission is to know whether everything was done at the time.

Mr. Sadleir.—Under the circumstances at the time, this is quite another thing.

The Chairman.—No; the witness says he was prepared to rush the building at the time.

By the Commission (to the witness).—Did you consider that at the time?—No, not at the time, for I had come to this conclusion afterwards that it would be safer to rush with the armour on than without.

Mr. Sadleir.—That is my impression too.

The Witness.—That if the outlaws were free from drink they could have shot several of the police; had they not the armour on they could have shot several of the police.

Even as it was?—As it was.

Do you think the safety of the police, as we may put it, lay in the fact that the men were drunk and had armour on?—Well, I could not form an opinion then.

Was there any portion of the person of any policeman exposed when he was firing?—Yes. If you are standing against a tree some portion of you must, in taking aim, be exposed.

One-half exposed?—Yes.

Do you think that had you been in the position of those men in the house, with the windows and doors open to fire from, you could have shot some of those men who were not under cover?—I am satisfied I could.

If you were in armour?—No.

By the Commission.—What I want to ask you now is this: had you been in that house beleaguered by the police, and had the same opportunities that those three men had that were in the house, could you not have shot several of those outside?—I could.

Then your opinion at the present moment is that it was the armour and drink that saved the police?—The armour, I believe, was the cause of assisting the police to a great extent.

Do you not think that drink was another cause?—I think when they had access to drink they would indulge in it very freely.

Of course it is not evidence that you can swear to, but did you hear at the time whether those men were under the influence of drink or not from any prisoner?—I did not see any of the prisoners; they were all out before I got there.

Did you hear anything during the next two or three days?—I was told they were drinking but that was from some of my own comrades—that the prisoners who got out said they were drinking very freely.

Is it your opinion now that drink was to a very great extent the cause of their being in trouble in the way they were?—Well, from what I have heard of them, I think that where the drink was so plentiful about them that they would be likely to take advantage of it.

With regard to the position you took there, suppose Mr. Sadleir had been away at the time, to whom would you have looked for the command as to the course you should take?—The second officer.

Who would be the second officer?—I believe Sergeant Whelan was on the ground. I did not see him.

Did you look upon Mr. O'Connor as properly constituted as a sub-inspector to give orders at this time?—I think I would not.

7315. Would any of the men?—I do not know what any of the men would do, but I never did consider him an officer of the Victorian police.

7316. You would have taken them from Sergeant Whelan?—In the absence of Mr. Sadleir.

7317. Or Senior-Constable Kelly?—Yes; he was senior to me.

7318. By Mr. Sadleir.—Sergeant Steele was there?—Yes, but I did not see him.

7319. By the Commission.—We understand that had you gone there, and Mr. Sadleir not come up, you would have looked to the inferior officers of the Victorian police as your superiors in command?—Yes; and would have taken any order from them.

7320. After eight months’ thought over the matter, although at that time you did not know that the two outlaws inside the hotel were in armour or out of armour, suffering from drink, or otherwise, still at that time, on the spur of the moment, you proposed to rush the hotel in preference to setting fire to it?—Yes.

7321. You had not got eight months to arrive at that conclusion?—No.

7322. You say that there was another constable besides yourself who saw some one come out at the back door?—Constable Wilson.

7323. Any other?—I do not know. Wilson and I were together at one tree.

7324. This was after the last shot was fired?—After the last two shots were fired, about one o’clock.

7325. Were the shots fired out of the back window or not?—I could not say, but they were fired from the house.

7326. Did you see the flash or the smoke?—From the report; and, I came to the conclusion, I am satisfied it was from the building, because there were none of the police about the house to fire so close that you would take it to be one of the police firing.

7327. When you went round, what distance were the men apart surrounding the house?—There might be some of them five yards apart, and then perhaps ten yards; at another tree, where there would be one or two more.

7328. Then some of those other constables might have seen those men come to the door as well as yourself?—They might have.

7329. By Mr. Sadleir.—When you went up to the building did you think it child’s play to fire it?—I did not, indeed.

7330. Do you not think it would have been more dangerous to have sent four or five men down the passage of the hotel to look for the outlaws than to fire it?—Well, yes; there would be more risk going into the rooms than there would be walking up to the building to fire it.

7331. Considering you were covered by the firing party?—Yes.

7332. Would it not be still more risky if you did not know what part of the house they were in?—I did not know what room they were in. I was given to understand they were in the front of building.

7333. Who knew that?—I was given to understand that.

7334. Could any person know that?—I believe they were there when the prisoners came out, and by seeing one of them at the back my impression was he was in the front building.

7335. I am not speaking of the front building, but could you tell what part of that five-roomed house they were in?—No.

7336. Will you just imagine for a moment—suppose I had sent five constables down the passage—they could not fire while they went to rush the house?—They could not tell which room they would be in.

7337. Could the covering party help them outside?—No.

7338. Suppose you put your head into a room, you would have to look round to see if there was an outlaw waiting to shoot you?—Undoubtedly.

7339. And into the other rooms to look?—Except you sent four in at the front and four at the back.

7340. Suppose, under the circumstances you say of sending four in at the front and four at the back, what would their position be if they had to come to fire; would they not shoot each other?—Well, they might.

7341. Could they avoid it if they came to fire and they came into the passage at the two different doors; if they fired, must they not shoot each other?—Except they pounced on the outlaws at once when they got their eyes on them.

7342. But they might have to search four rooms first?—By-the-bye, I said four in the front and four at the back; two could go to each room, and I know two of the men would be good enough for two of the outlaws.

7343. By the Commission.—Was it not broad daylight?—Yes.

7344. And the windows open?—Yes.

7345. By Mr. Sadleir.—Suppose I had sent the four in, and the outlaws dropped a couple and wounded one or two of the others, and those who were able to retire had to retire, what would our position be then outside?—I do not know what you could do.

7346. Would not the end of that business be worse than the first?—Yes.

7347. Our hands tied for firing?—Yes, some of our comrades being in it.

7348. Dead or dying?—Yes.
7349. That would have to be repeated—send four more men in?—Yes.
7350. Suppose the same happened to them, would not the position be still worse?—Yes.
7351. You say Constable Dwyer was just as much exposed for a time, not covered by a tree; did you not hear me desiring him to take cover again?—I did.
7352. How long was he exposed?—Perhaps a couple of minutes I saw—a very short time—and I heard you give him orders to take cover.
7353. By the Commission.—Did you see other constables passing to and fro?—Yes, men were walking round from tree to tree.
7354. By Mr. Sadleir.—Were you the only member of the force that touched those bodies with the stick, or anything else?—I was the only member of the force who touched them till they were taken out of the fire.
7355. Do you not remember stooping down with me near the end where you set fire, and trying to get a glimpse of those bodies?—That was prior to the place being fired.
7356. Do you remember going again and trying to get another view?—Yes, you and Captain Standish.
7357. And going to see Cherry?—I saw him in the yard when he was taken out.
7358. How do you know other police did not try to reach those bodies when you were with me?—They could not, because the end of the house was not burned enough. I was not able to get them out when I tried first.
7359. From the position of the plates of armour, were they not lying within a foot of the bodies?—Yes.
7360. Was it not possible, suppose those men had lain upon their sides, locked in each others arms as you say, that when the heat caught or burnt the thongs, that those plates might have fallen in the position you saw them?—They could not possibly all have fallen on one side.
7361. I will put it another way—had you such a good view from the very first as to see that there were none of the plates between them, or lying underneath them?—I had not a good view till I got the bedstead out. The bodies were not moved.
7362. Were they not covered by the cinders and the fallen stuff from the ceiling?—They were some of them covered with the rafters.
7363. Was there not a dog?—Yes, lying near the bed.
7364. Could you tell what it was?—No. I thought it was a third person, a human body, at first.
7365. Till you stirred them up with a stick?—Yes; with a forked stick I got out one, and with an iron rod the other.
7366. Was there no possibility of your shifting those sheets of armour turning them over?—No there was not.
7367. Were you at any loss for any instructions during the day after I gave you the first instructions?—No, I could not see I was at any loss, for I understood what was to be done myself.
7368. Were there not five times the number of men there that were necessary?—I believe there were.
7369. And it was not necessary for the officer to see further than that all points were covered against an escape?—The building was well covered, so that they could not get away.
7370. Do you consider my movements that day would give proof they were covered enough?—Yes; and I considered you moved about very freely during the day amongst the men.
7371. By the Commission.—You were out in the search parties?—I was with Mr. Nicolson and with Mr. Sadleir.
7372. You will be called again in regard to that?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Glenrowan.

(Taken at Glenrowan.)

SATURDAY, 14th MAY 1881.

Present:
Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
J. H. Graves, Esq., M.L.A., E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P.,

William Canny sworn and examined.

7373. By the Commission.—What are you?—A mounted constable.
7374. You remember the morning of the day on which the Kellys were taken at Glenrowan here?—Yes.
7375. Where are you stationed now?—At Greta.
7376. What time did you arrive on the ground?—At twenty minutes to three.
7377. Then you were amongst the first that arrived?—Yes.
7378. Did Mr. Hare and Mr. O'Connor arrive at the same time?—Yes.
7379. They came in fact by the special train?—Yes.
7380. Do you remember what occurred immediately after you arrived?—Yes.
7381. State it?—When we came to the station, Mr. Hare ordered the horses to be got out, and we were in the act of taking them out, and had some out, and Constable Bracken came running there and said the Kellys were at Mrs. Jones's; and I asked Mr. Hare what we would do with the horses, and he said "Let them go"; and he said, "Come on, boys," and we followed him to Jones's hotel. Immediately after we got through the wicket gate with Mr. Hare, the Kellys came out north of the house by the chimney; and I believe Mr. Hare was the first man who fired after the Kellys fired, and there were about forty shots fired between the two parties, and I heard Mr. Hare say he was wounded in the wrist.
7382. How long after the first volley was that?—I cannot tell; there were about thirty or forty shots fired, and I heard him say he was wounded.
7383. Was Mr. Hare sitting down?—No, not at that time—standing up, going towards the hotel.
7384. Would it be five minutes after you arrived?—I could not tell about the time.
7385. I mean in front of the house?—I dare say it would be; it might be more.
7386. You were near Mr. Hare?—Yes, close on the right-hand side.
7387. Did he not say he was wounded immediately after the first volley?—Yes; thirty or forty shots fired.
7388. Were the black trackers and the police firing?—Yes; but I did not see the black trackers at this time.
7389. Were they any of those that fired?—I dare say they were; I could not say who was firing.
7390. They were in the train with you?—Yes.
7391. Did you see Mr. O'Connor at this time?—No, not at that time. I heard Mr. Hare sing out to Mr. O'Connor to fetch the boys, and to surround the house.
7392. What happened then?—After that I came back over the fence, and took up a position in front of the house. I could hear Mr. O'Connor speaking to the left of where I was in the drain.
7393. Speaking to his boys?—I suppose it was that.
7394. Do you remember about what time the women were let out of the hotel?—They came out after the first fire, after Mr. Hare left.
7395. About what time?—Four o'clock I think, as near as I could guess.
7396. How many came out?—I could not tell how many. Mrs. Jones came out for one, and Mrs. Reardon I believe was also one of them.
7397. Did you continue firing?—We ceased firing, as Mr. Hare told us to stop firing and surround the house till daylight.
7398. Did you stop firing till daylight?—No. Immediately after Mr. Hare left one man came out, who I believe was Ned Kelly, and he fired in the direction of the men on the Benalla side, and I fired at him two or three shots, and one of the trackers who was with me, named Barney, fired too, and this man retreated back.
7399. You did not see that the shots took any effect?—I could not tell that.
7400. Did you remain in the front until the men were let out?—Yes.
7401. About what time was that, do you think?—Twelve o'clock, I should think.
7402. As late as twelve?—Eleven or twelve; I could not be positive as to time.
7403. Did you see Mr. O'Connor giving any orders between the time Mr. Hare left and those men coming out?—No, not to the police. I received no orders.
7404. Did you see him at all?—Yes; he was in the drain at the time.
7405. What distance from you?—Ten or fifteen yards, I should think.
7406. Could he not give an order without your hearing?—No; I must have heard him.
7407. Where next did you see Mr. O'Connor?—I did say you saw him when the men were let out?—I saw him when the men were let out; he was with Mr. Sadleir then on this side of the house.
7408. Had he passed you in the drain?—I do not know which way he went. I think Mr. Sadleir sent a man for him to say he wanted him.
7409. Where did he meet Mr. Sadleir?—I think on the north side. I beg your pardon, I believe Mr. Sadleir went to Mr. O'Connor first in the drain. I saw him go to him. Then Mr. Sadleir went to where Constable Gascoigne was, and I could not see where he went then.
7410. Was Mr. O'Connor with him when he went round to see Gascoigne?—No.
7411. Was Gascoigne further on the Benalla side; Yes, he was on the Benalla side when Mr Sadleir arrived.
7412. Did you receive any orders at all from Mr. O'Connor during the day?—No.
7413. Did you act under his orders at all?—No? I took up the best position I could. After Mr. Hare was wounded I saw no one to give orders.
7414. Did you see Mr. O'Connor after the interview with Mr. Sadleir; what time would that interview be?—I could not say the time exactly; about eight or nine, perhaps.
7415. Did you see him after the Kellys' prisoners were let out of the house?—Yes, several times.
7416. Where was he?—On the Wangaratta side of Jones's hotel.
7417. How far away?—About 60 yards, I should think.
7427. Did you consider that the Kellys were kept much longer in the house than they were needed to be; would you have been willing to rush the house?—Yes, if we had orders, I would have made one.

7428. You did not propose it to your officer?—No.

7429. Do you know that a proposal of that sort was made?—I heard so. I never heard it made.

7430. Did you remain in that one position all day?—Till the prisoners came out, and then I went out to them, to where Mr. Sadleir was, on the north side.

7431. Was it far from where Kelly was caught that you saw Mr. Sadleir?—Just about the same place.

7432. Was Mr. O'Connor with Mr. Sadleir then?—When the prisoners came out, I think he was.

7433. Did you see anybody or hear of anybody taking orders from Mr. O'Connor on that day?—No, I did not.

7434. Did you consider yourself that Mr. O'Connor had any standing on that day?—No, I did not with the Victorian police.

7435. Were you present when Senior-Constable Johnson offered to fire the house?—No, I was not there.

7436. You arrived with Mr. Hare in the morning, at Benalla?—Yes.

7437. Do you remember leaving the platform here?—Yes.

7438. Who left with you?—Constable Gascoigne.

7439. Who else?—Mr. Hare was in front of us.

7440. Who was second?—I could not tell you; there were three or four—a lot.

7441. Where was Mr. O'Connor at that time?—I did not see him at that time. I did not see him leave the platform.

7442. He was not in advance of you?—No.

7443. You saw Mr. Hare go through the wicket gate?—Yes.

7444. Did you also pass through the gate?—Yes.

7445. With who else?—Constable Gascoigne.

7446. Any others?—Yes; but I do not know who.

7447. Did you see Mr. O'Connor?—No; he was not amongst that number.

7448. Did you see Mr. O'Connor any time outside that one-rail fence until later on in the day?—No.

7449. At what time did you see him at any time outside that fence?—I could not tell the time, but it was after Mr. Sadleir arrived.

7450. You did not know at the time the first volley was fired where he was, whether this side or the other side of the fence?—He was on this side.

7451. Did you see him at any time at any of the watercourses?—Yes.

7452. Which one?—The one down by the culvert—the road culvert.

7453. What time?—At four o'clock.

7454. Soon after your arrival?—Yes, about an hour.

7455. And after Mr. Hare had left the ground?—Yes.

7456. Did you see Mr. Hare after he was shot?—I saw him but I did not speak to him.

7457. Do you remember the engines leaving this station?—I heard them leave.

7458. How long would that be after the first volley was fired from the hotel?—A good long time. I could not tell.

7459. Could you fix it within something like a reasonable time?—Three quarters of an hour to an hour.

7460. There were two engines left—was it the first or second?—I do not remember whether there were two; it must have been from three quarters of an hour to an hour.

7461. It could not have been within ten minutes after Mr. Hare was shot?—No.

7462. Or a quarter of an hour?—No, I think not.

7463. After Mr. Hare was wounded did Gascoigne pass towards the Benalla end of Jones's hotel and you came back to the Wangaratta end?—Yes.

7464. I suppose you took your position then at this side of the house?—Not this side; I was in front. of the house.
7465. What I want to ask is this, would Mr. O’Connor’s position in the drain be between you and Gascoigne?—No, he was further down towards the railway line.
7466. Supposing his black trackers fired at the front of the house would their fire reach that house between your position and Gascoigne’s?—Yes, it would.
7467. Therefore, as far as the front of the house was concerned, Mr. O’Connor was in front of the house between your position at the railway and Gascoigne?—Yes.
7468. You stated that you received no orders from Mr. O’Connor—that he gave you none?—Yes.
7469. And that you did not consider him, as far as you were concerned, as your officer in command of you?—Yes.
7470. Did you receive any orders after Mr. Hare left the ground from any one—any person you considered your officer?—No, I did not.
7471. Did you receive any orders from Senior-constable Kelly?—No.
7472. Did you see him?—No, I heard him speak.
7473. From what position?—From the back of the house, towards where the present shed is standing.
7474. About what time was it you heard him speaking?—About four o’clock.
7475. That was before Mr. Sadleir came?—Yes, that was before Mr. Sadleir came.
7476. Did you know from the position you were standing that Gascoigne was over in the position you saw him go to after Mr. Hare was wounded?—Yes. I would not be positive it was Gascoigne, but I knew there was a man there.
7477. Was Kirkham there?—He was on that side.
7478. What other men were of your party?—Constable Phillips.
7479. On the Benalla end?—Yes.
7480. And Senior-constable Kelly?—He placed those men there; I heard him say so, I do not know.

POLICE.

2M

William Canny continued.
14th May 1881.

7481. You did not see him place them?—No.
7482. Did you receive any ammunition?—No.
7483. Or any orders from any one?—Not till Mr. Sadleir’s party arrived.
7484. Was it understood among the police that they were to surround the house—the last order of Mr. Hare—and that was all your duty till somebody came to relieve you from your position?—Yes, that was it; and that is what I did.
7485. Would it be correct to say that any men went round and round, in your opinion?—I believe Senior-constable Kelly went round.
7486. Did you see him?—No.
7487. Did he come round to you?—No.
7488. You said you received no orders from Mr. O’Connor, and you were within fifteen yards of him—did you hear him giving any orders to the black trackers that were with him under his command?—I did not hear him give an order. I heard him speaking. I could not tell what he said. It sounded a hollow sound, as if down in a hole.
7489. Could it be for particular action as to how they were to fire?—It might have been.
7490. Would you say it was not?—No.
7491. You remained in that position, and all the men, until after Mr. Sadleir took charge of the party?—Yes.
7492. Who moved you from your position first—did you move by any orders?—Not till the prisoners came out.
7493. Who moved you?—I moved myself.
7494. When did you get the first instructions?—When we fetched the prisoners. Mr. Sadleir gave the orders.
7495. Who fetched the prisoners?—Constables Graham and Arthur, and others.
7496. Then you went on with those prisoners to Mr. Sadleir; what was that for—was it for the purpose of examining the prisoners, to see the outlaws were not amongst them?—No; not to see that the outlaws were amongst them.
7497. What?—I believe that there were a lot of sympathizers amongst them—supposed to be—and I believe Mr. Sadleir wanted to retain some of those.
7498. Did he retain the McAulifes and let the others go?—Yes.
7499. Did you see Sergeant Steele come on the ground?—I heard him; I did not see him. I heard him challenged by one of the constables; I do not know who.
7500. Was the position that you heard him coming to between you and where the place is that you were shown as the place that Kelly was captured?—Yes.
7501. Do you know what position Sergeant Steele took up?—No.
7502. Did you hear any firing from the tree to your right?—There was firing there.
7503. Then if Sergeant Steele stated that he took that position immediately on coming from Wangaratta, would you have any reason to doubt his accuracy?—No.

7504. By Mr. O'Connor.—Can you state what time the special train arrived at Glenrowan?—I had a watch and I looked at it just then, it was twenty minutes to three.

7505. Do I understand you to mean when we came up to unship the horses?—Yes.

7506. Did you notice me on the platform at all?—No, I did not.

7507. Are you prepared to state that I was not on the platform?—No, certainly not; I was busy taking the horses out.

7508. You never heard me speak on the platform?—No, you might have.

7509. Mr. Hare, you stated, ran up in advance; who was the next man?—I believe it was Constable Gascoigne.

7510. You did not see me move up with Mr. Hare?—No.

7511. Where did you come up in the rush?—I was third man to Mr. Hare, going through the wicket gate.

7512. I mean leaving the platform. You say you were getting out the horses, where were you upon leaving the platform—were there several between you and Mr. Hare when he went up?—Yes, but some of them went towards the railway gate—some of the party.

7513. Would you show on the plan the gate you mean?—I mean the gate-house.

7514. On the railway line?—Yes, some of the men went on to that.

7515. I am speaking of leaving the railway platform. Now who can you swear left the platform with Mr. Hare?—Gascoigne, Phillips, and myself.

7516. You were the only ones?—Yes. There were lots, but they did not go through the wicket gate.

7517. Never mind the wicket gate at present; I mean before leaving the platform, Mr. Hare spoke and you heard him?—Yes.

7518. When we came out of the train, when the train pulled up at the platform, do you remember seeing Mr. Hare on the platform?—Yes.

7519. Did you see me on the platform?—I did not see you.

7520. You said I might have been there?—I am certain you were there.

7521. Then I ask you—did you see Mr. Hare start up towards the house?—Yes.

7522. You heard him speak to his men?—I followed him up.

7523. Did you hear him speak?—Yes, he said, “Come on, boys.”

7524. You say you did not hear me speak on the platform?—I do not remember on the platform.

7525. Who followed Mr. Hare off the platform?—I believe all the men started from the platform.

7526. I might have been with them?—You might have been with them.

7527. To your knowledge you do not know?—No, not starting from the platform.

7528. At what part of the ground did you pass the other man that led up next but one to Mr. Hare?—
Some of the men went down the creek along the line.

7529. Now in reference to the first discharge, are you aware that Mr. Hare in his evidence stated he was wounded by the first shot that was fired; is that correct?—He was wounded very soon; if it was not the first, it must have been the second anyhow. He was wounded very soon after.

275

7530. Did you hear Mr. Hare immediately state that he was wounded?—I heard him say he was wounded.

7531. How long after—I think you said ten minutes before—after a considerable amount of shooting?—There were a lot of shots fired before I heard him speak.

7532. Was it like two or three continuous volleys, and could have been fired in about half a minute?—There was one volley and a lot of shots fired.

7533. You might say one discharge?—Yes.

7534. Did you hear the words Mr. Hare used when he told us he was wounded?—Yes, he said—“I am wounded;” he said—“Come on, Mr. O’Connor, and fetch your boys and surround the house.”

7535. If anybody stated that he accosted me in these words—“Mr. O’Connor, I am wounded, I am shot in the arm, I must go back,” it is not correct?—He might not have used “Mr.”

7536. Was that the purport of what he said?—Yes.

7537. What distance was I from Mr. Hare when he spoke?—I could not form an opinion.

7538. Was there any person in a position to swear as to minute details after the first heavy volley in consequence of the smoke; could you see to be able to swear to what Mr. Hare did after the first heavy two or three volleys?—No, I could not; I know what he did before.

7540. You said after he left?—After he left in front of Jones’s; that is to my knowledge.

7541. After he left the front?—Mrs. Jones might have been out before; she came out very soon after the fire, I recognised her voice.

7542. Did Mrs. Jones come out by herself?—She came out by herself.

7543. Nobody following her?—I do not think so.
7544. When did the remainder of the women come out?—Mrs. Jones was the first woman out, she was scolding the police and calling them cowards.
7545. I mean by coming out, passing through the police line?—No one had passed down the line.
7546. Till after Mr. Hare left?—No, I think not till then.
7547. And no woman passed down through the police lines till after Mr. Hare left?—No, I do not think there were any—none passed me.
7548. Did you hear me speak while the women were coming down through the police line—did you hear me challenge the women?—No.
7549. Did you hear anybody challenge the women?—Yes, I heard several constables.
7550. Would you swear they were all constables?—No.
7551. I might have challenged them?—Yes.
7552. By the Commission.—What did you hear them say in challenging?—"Stop them, and say who goes there."
7553. By Mr. O'Connor.—Did you hear Constable Kirkham speak to the women?—I did not see him at all or hear him.
7554. You stated you received no commands from anybody after Mr. Hare left. In your opinion, was it necessary for any commands to have been given?—I do not know.
7555. Were you not instructed, as you say, by your officer to do a certain work?—Yes.
7556. Did you ever consider that it was necessary for any other officer to alter that plan?—The officer might, but I did not consider it necessary.
7557. You considered we were doing the best thing we could to get the Kellys with the small force we had?—Yes, I did.
7558. When was the first time in the morning that you first became acquainted with my position?—About four o'clock, before Mr. Sadleir arrived.
7559. Did you see me?—Barney the tracker informed me you were there.
7560. Did you see me?—Yes, I saw you put your head up and shoot at the house window.
7561. You cannot swear it was at the window?—No.
7562. When did you first see me in Benalla—first know I was over here working—met me personally, I mean?—It was in April 1879, I think.
7563. Had you just joined then?—No, I was on special then.
7564. Were you on probation then?—Yes.
7565. I suppose you made enquiries about who your officers were, and who were not?—Yes, I did.
7566. Did you ever ask what position I held?—I do not know that I did.
7567. Did you, from the very first, consider that I had no standing in the Victorian force?—I never looked up to you as an officer.
7568. Because I never came in contact with you to give orders; but I say did you ever hear anybody state to you that I had no standing in the police force?—No, I do not think anybody ever stated that to me; I did not look upon you as an officer here. I believed you had started to Queensland at the time you came to Glenrowan.
7569. I am speaking of when you first knew me, and you were on probation; and I want to know if you, from any other knowledge from men, or the sergeants, if you ever considered I had no standing in the police?—No; I never enquired. I always thought you were just as you say, by your officer to do a certain work.
7570. You never heard any man say, "He has nothing to do with us—he is only from Queensland"?—Yes; I have heard several say, "He has nothing to do with us."
7571. Was it a sub-officer?—No, not a sub-officer, but lots of constables say so.
7572. You do not know where they got their knowledge from?—No.
7573. You say, about Glenrowan, that after Mr. Sadleir came you saw me several times. Was I doing the same as Mr. Sadleir—walking about from post to post?—Some time after Mr. Sadleir arrived, the first place I saw you with Mr. Sadleir was on the Wangaratta side of Jones’s house.
7574. By the Commission.—Did you say the men came from the chimney end of the house?—Yes.
7575. If witnesses deposed the outlaws came and delivered their fire from and under the verandah, towards where you were approaching with Mr. Hare, would it be from the verandah or the chimney end of the house?—The chimney end.
7576. Therefore, if witnesses who came out from the house swear it was from the chimney end of the house, it would be correct?—Yes.

William Canny
continued.
14th May 1881.
7581. Did you see Mr. O'Conner?—No.

7582. Do you think Mr. O'Connor was ever through the wicket gate at all?—I do not think so—not up to the time Mr. Sadleir arrived.

7583. By Mr. Hare.—What time was it I said that to Mr. O'Connor, before the firing had ceased or after it had ceased?—After you left your position it was.

7584. Could I have made use of this expression—"O'Connor, I am wounded—shot in the arm—I must go back to have it tied up." Could I have made use of that expression after I had returned through the gate from my position?—Before you left your position it was.

7585. Are you sure of that?—Yes.

7586. That was after the firing was all over?—Yes.

7587. You say it was before I left my position?—You were coming this way, and I do not know whether you were over the fence.

7588. By the Commission.—Did you take up a position after you heard this language?—Yes.

7589. By Mr. Hare.—Coming to another part where Ned Kelly came out the second time, did you hear my voice then?—Yes.

7590. Where were you—in which direction?—In the Wangaratta direction.

7591. And you were lying in front of the house?—Yes.

7592. Was it near a tree?—Yes.

7593. Did you hear me say anything to Ned Kelly?—I heard you say to him, I think, that you wanted to speak to him.

7594. By the Commission.—What time was it when you heard him speak a second time—how long after the first?—Ten or fifteen minutes it might be.

7595. By Mr. Hare.—Could I have had time to run up to the station and be back to have my hand bandaged?—Yes.

7596. Mr. O'Connor.—Did you see which way Mr. Hare went after he was wounded?—He tried to get over the railway fence.

7597. Did you lose sight of him?—Yes, I lost sight of him, and then I heard him speaking on the fence to one of the outlaws when one came out to fire.

7598. That was in the first ten minutes?—Ten or fifteen minutes, it might have been more.

7599. You could not swear he went down to the station and got his wound dressed and came back?—No.

7600. He might have been there the whole time without coming to the station?—Yes.

7601. By Mr. Hare.—You saw me leave—retreat, and then saw me next by the gum-tree?—Yes—[The witness explained the positions upon the plan.]

The witness withdrew.

James Reardon, sworn and examined.

7602. By the Commission.—What are you?—I am a laborer on the railway line.

7603. Do you remember the night that the Kellys had you all in Mrs. Jones' hotel, prisoners?—Yes, on the night of the 27th.

7604. What time were you taken into the hotel?—Well, it might be about six o'clock on Sunday morning.

7605. And were you kept in the hotel all day?—Yes, and all night.

7606. How many were in the hotel prisoners—about?—Well, I counted 62 altogether on Sunday evening, and I could name the lot if I was at home now.

7607. Did the Kellys use you for any purpose?—Yes, they took me on Sunday morning from my own place. It was twenty minutes past two when I left my house—he took me to break the line; he had a man named Sullivan, a repairer on the line, in charge at the time—that was Ned Kelly, and then I heard the dogs barking, making a row, and I got up and dressed myself and went outside the door, and heard a horse whinneying down by the railway line, and I went towards where I heard the horse. I thought it was the horse of a friend, and I went down, and Sullivan was coming through the railway fence, and I said, "What is the matter?" and he said, "I am taken prisoner by this man." Ned Kelly came up and put a revolver to my cheek and said, "What is your name?" and I said "Reardon," and he said, "I want, you to come up and break the fence to one of the outlaws when one came out to fire."

7608. Was that McHugh?—Yes, Jack McHugh, I think. He took the spanner, and I instructed him, on being made, how to use it. Ned Kelly came up, and said, "Old man, you are a long time breaking up this road." I said, "I cannot do it quicker." And he said, "I will make you do it quicker. If you do not look sharp I will tickle you up with this revolver.” And I said, “I cannot do it quicker, do what you will.” And he said, “Give me no cheek.” So we broke the road. He wanted four lengths broken. I said, “One will do as well as twenty.” And he said, “Do you think so?” And I said I was certain.

7609. Why did you say that?—Because I thought if only one was off the train would jump it and go on safely.

7610. Did Ned Kelly point out the place?—Hart did.

7611. Then he brought you all up to Mrs. Jones’s?—Yes, we came to the station and remained at the gate-house, where the station-master lived, for perhaps two hours.

7612. How many of you?—There might be about twenty at the time, more or less.

7613. Did he keep bringing in fresh prisoners?—Every one that passed by that he got sight of he bailed up. Between that and evening he had 62, which I counted.

7614. I not suppose he treated you badly in the hotel?—No, he did not treat us badly—not at all.

7615. Was there any drinking?—Yes, they had drink in them in the morning. When I first saw them Steve Hart was pretty drunk.

7616. Did they continue drinking moderately or in any quantity?—I did not see them. I saw some people offer drink to Dan Kelly and Byrne, I believe, and they said “No;” but if Ned Kelly drank I cannot say, for he was in the kitchen at the back. We were locked in when it came night. We were all called in and the doors locked, and we were kept there.

7617. Was there no opportunity of escaping at all—did they keep you there all night?—All night. No opportunity at all—not the slightest. No chance.

7618. Were you there when the police came?—Yes, I was there when he went for Bracken, between nine and ten on Sunday night.

7619. They took him prisoner also?—Yes, there was only one constable here at the time.

7620. What occurred during the night before the police came?—Well, they were very jolly, and the people and Mrs. Jones cleared the house out. They would not have it without a dance. She wanted me to dance, and I said, “No, something is troubling me besides dancing.”

7621. Did she speak anything about Ned Kelly?—No; I did not hear it.

7622. Praising him, or anything?—Yes; she said, “We will all be let go very soon, but you may thank me for it,” and my missus asked Dan Kelly to let me go home with my children and family. “We will let you all go directly,” she said.

7623. What o’clock was that?—About an hour before the train came with the police.

7624. Was there a dance got up in the house?—Yes; there was three of the Kellys—Ned, Dan, and Byrne danced, and Mrs. Jones and her daughter, and three or four others I did not know.

7625. Did she praise Ned Kelly during that time?—Yes; she said he was a fine fellow.

7626. Did she say anything about the police?—No; I did not hear her.

7627. What further did she say about them?—Dan Kelly said, “Now you can all go home,” and I stood up and I picked up one of my children in my arms, and we were making to the door when Cherry picked up Ryan’s child, and Mrs. Jones stood at the door and said, “You are not to go yet; Kelly is to give you a lecture yet,” so we all turned back into the house again, and Mrs. Jones came in and said, “Kelly will give you all a lecture before you go.”

7628. Was that said seriously, or for the purpose of bringing you before Ned Kelly?—Ned Kelly came shortly after, and I was sitting down in a chair, and I was the first he came at, and he said, “Riordan, do not you be so fond of getting out of your bed at night. If you had a good horse, and I wanted it, I would take the horse and shoot you.” He turned from me and turned to Sullivan, who works with me, and said, “Were you ever in New Zealand?” And Sullivan said he was; and he said, “Are you Sullivan, the murderer?” and he said not. He said, “I would give £1,000 for him if you were, because he was a scoundrel.” Then he turned to Constable Bracken, and said, “You are sworn not to spare father, mother, brother, or sister.” “No,” says Bracken, “our oath is not that; it is to protect life and property, which you or any other man can see in written form.” Byrne came in then and he said, “The train is coming.” That stopped all the discourse. They turned into the back room—the three bushrangers—there was one taking care of Stanfield’s family. Then they went into one of the back rooms dressing themselves in their armour. I could hear the armour rattling.

7629. Had you been allowed to go you would have been clear away before the police came, when Dan Kelly said you might go?—Yes; we would have been clear away.

7630. Then Mrs. Jones’s interference was the cause of your being delayed?—Yes.

7631. Did Mrs. Jones about that time, or before that, praise Ned Kelly any further?—Not that I heard. If you heard my missus’s evidence, she could tell you a great deal more than I can.

7632. Was Mrs. Jones appearing to be very pleased that the outlaws were there?—Yes, Mrs. Jones appeared very pleased, indeed. Bracken saw where they planted the key, and at the time they went to put their armour on, he went and took the key. He put the key in his trousers, and came back to the door and stood there till he got his opportunity, and opened the door, and turned the key in the door.

7633. And you understood he was taking the key?—Yes.
7634. And he actually opened the door in your presence?—Yes.
7635. During all this time did you see the Kellys drink?—No, I did not see three nobblers during the whole day, but they had plenty of drink in the morning.
7636. Did Hart get sober?—Yes, more than he was in the early part of the day.
7637. Was he very drunk?—He had as much as he could bear.
7638. When the police came what occurred then?—The outlaws went around the house and fired.
7639. What way?—At the back; they came out the north end and into the verandah, and fired.
7640. Did they come into the house again?—There were three came in again. I do not believe Ned came in at all.
7641. Did the police immediately reply?—Yes, at once. There was a return shot at once.
7642. Was there a great volley fired immediately after?—Yes, there was two or three hot volleys very quick.
7643. Did you notice the effect of the firing in the house?—Yes, we could see the light. There was no light in the house.

James Reardon, continued.
14th May 1881.

7645. He told that quietly?—Yes; he said, “You all lie down if there is any firing,” and we did so.
7646. There was none hurt the first volley?—Yes; the second volley Jones’s boy was hurt.
7647. Was he lying down?—Yes, and he was shot on the side, and the bullet came up through his body.
7648. Did you ask the Kellys to let you out then?—Not then. I was frightened to stir then, but I did after.
7649. The whole of the prisoners did?—Yes.
7650. Did the Kellys say they would allow you?—Yes, if the police would.
7651. Did you hear the police calling on you to come?—Not before we did come. I think it was Mr. Sadleir’s voice when we came out.
7652. What time was that?—About half-past nine.
7653. How long after Kelly said he would let you out?—Hours after.
7654. When did Dan Kelly say you might go out?—About a quarter-past six, as near as I can recollect.
7655. What did he say?—He said, “You can go, but I am frightened you will get shot. I do not begrudge your going if you can escape.”
7656. Did you let it be known to the police in any way you wanted to get out?—Yes.
7657. How?—There was one tall chap—I forget his name—he put a white handkerchief out of the window, and there were three bullets went in at once. The shots went from the drain straight in the window.
7658. He of course fell back at once?—He threw himself on the ground.
7659. Was there any further attempt to get out?—Yes.
7660. Was any other notice given that they would like to get out?—After the second or third round was fired things got quiet for a bit. Ryan and his wife, and three or four children, and three of mine, and a strange woman from Benalla, they rushed out, and the firing was on them as hard as it could be blazed, from the drain, and I could not say where, and I rushed out, and my son with me.
7661. The sun was up at the time?—No, it was just at daylight.
7662. You were saying you and your wife got out?—Yes, and we had to go back into the house because of the firing.
7663. Where was that firing from?—From all directions. The most part of it was from that drain. The fire was strong from the drain; and Mr. O’Connor popped his head up from that drain, and said, “Who comes there?” with a loud voice. I recognized the voice. Ryan sang out, “Women and children,” and the firing still continued.
7664. Did you hear him giving any order then?—No, I did not.
7665. You tried to escape again?—Yes; we went back again, and said to Dan Kelly, “I wish to Heaven we were out of this. Mrs. Reardon put out the children, and make them scream, and scream yourself;” and she was coming past one of the rifles in the passage, and one of the rifles tangled in her dress, and Dan Kelly said to Byrne, “Take your rifle, or the woman will be shot;” and I came out, and she screamed and the children, and they came out. The fire was blazing out, and a policeman called out—I thought it was Sergeant Steele—“Come this way;” and he still kept firing at her—at my wife with the baby in her arms.
7666. Is it not possible he may have been covering her?—Firing at her and covering her are two different things.
7667. Did any of the bullets hit her?—She has a shawl with a bullet through the corner of it, which she can show you. I heard a voice saying, “Come this way.” Constable Arthur was standing close to Sergeant Steele, and he said, “If you fire on that woman again, I am —— if I do not shoot you, because you see she is an innocent woman.” Those were Arthur’s own words, and I did not believe the man would do that.
7668. So you were away before permission was given by the police?—Then I had to return back; there were bullets flying at me, and I crept on the ground, and went back to the house with the children, and as my son returned he got wounded in the shoulder, and fell on the jamb of the door, and he has got the bullet yet, and he is quite useless to me or himself. I would sooner have seen him killed. He is getting on for nineteen.

7669. Did you observe anything more that day?—I returned back into the house then and laid down among the lot inside, and put the children between my knees, and there was a bullet scraped the breast of my coat, and went across two other men, and went through the sofa at the other end of it. We remained there expecting every minute to be shot, until we heard the voice, I think to come out, about half-past nine. We got ten minutes.

7670. Whose voice?—I think it would be Mr. Sadleir’s, to the best of my belief. I cannot say for certain. Mr. Sadleir was the first I recognized after I came out. We all came out. I was the last, for I had the two children, one in each hand, and as I was coming down there was a constable named Divery, and he said, “Let us finish this —— lot,” or something like that. Then the terror of that drove me—I ran to the drain. A black-fellow there cocked his rifle at my face, and I did not know what to do with the children, and I ran away up to where Mr. Sadleir was.

7671. That was hot work?—Hot work I you would not like to be there I can tell you.
7672. Was there any of the outlaws shot while you were in?—Byrne was shot.
7673. Where?—At the end of the counter, going from the passage. He was standing still. I only heard him fall. I heard him fall like a log, and he never groaned or anything, and I could hear like the blood gushing.

7674. What time was that?—About five or six in the morning; but when I was coming out the other two (Dan Kelly and Hart)—they were both standing close together in the passage, not a move in them, with their armour on, with the butt end of their rifles on the ground.
7675. Were they struck at all while you were there?—Yes; I could hear the bullets flying off the armour several times.
7676. Their lives were saved for the time being by their armour?—Yes.
7677. Had they fired many shots before that?—They did in the early part, but I believe from the time that it came daylight they did not fire but very few that I could notice.

279

7678. Had they any knowledge while you were there that Ned Kelly was taken?—They did not.
Some of the people asked where was Ned Kelly, and they said they did not know, they thought he was done.
7679. What time was that?—A little before we got out, at break of day.
7680. Did they miss Ned Kelly before Byrne was shot?—Yes; they said he was gone, and supposed he was done.
7681. Did they say they wished he was amongst them?—No.
7682. “Done” meant “shot”?—Yes.
7683. Did they miss Ned Kelly before Byrne was shot?—I would not be sure; I wish to be correct, as Mr. O’Connor’s statement about he considered there were about eighteen or twenty came out of the house—friends and sympathisers of the Kellys. I am quite sure I am not a sympathiser.
7684. At the time that Steele, you say, was firing upon you and your wife escaping, were the outlaws firing from the hotel?—No, I am positive sure they were not.
7685. Why?—Because they were standing still, and I could hear if they did.
7686. Did they say they would not fire until you had escaped?—They said they would not.
7687. Sergeant Steele told you that he had shot your son?—Yes, Sergeant Steele told me, and several others.
7688. In saying so did he assign any reason?—Yes, he said he did not hold up his hand.
7689. Did he say he called on him to hold up his hands?—No; the boy had a child in one hand and held up his other hand.
7690. Was it daylight when you came out of the house?—Yes, we got clean out.
7691. It was not daylight at the time you had to return?—No.
7692. Was it daylight when Mr. O’Connor spoke to you from the culvert?—No.
7693. How could you tell?—From where he spoke. I was half-way between the verandah and the fence, and the others r Ryan and his family of three, and my children were on the right just over the culvert., and the voice sang out from under the culvert—“Who comes there?” and Ryan said, “Women and children.”
7694. What did they do then?—They went on and they continued to fire.
7695. Ryan escaped through the gate?—Yes, but it was so hot for me, I went back with my wife and son and child.
7696. What time was it, as near as you can make it, when you first proposed to go out?—I would not swear to the time. I daresay it might be about—I could not say exactly.
7697. How long was this before your son was shot?—About an hour, as near as I can remember.
7698. Did you see Mrs. Jones’s child shot?—I did not, but I heard him sing out, “I am shot, I am shot.”
7699. Your son was shot?—Yes.
7700. Mrs. Jones’ son shot and daughter wounded?—Yes.
7701. Did you see this man who asked you to take up rails; did you see him carry out any of the wounded children from the house, I mean McHugh?—No, I was in another room; I was told he did.
7702. Do you know the wounded child was carried out?—Yes, and carried to my place.
7703. Can you fix the time it was by any circumstance?—About the second volley fired by the police.
7704. Can you fix the time that McHugh carried out Mrs. Jones’s child?—No, I would not swear to it.
7705. Was it before or after you attempted to escape?—Before, and I followed them half an hour after.
7706. That would be an hour and three-quarters before your son was shot?—Yes.
7707. The point is this: the second volley the police fired was fired within ten minutes after the commencement?—Yes, and less.
7708. Within seven minutes?—Perhaps less still.
7709. The second volley was the time that Mrs. Jones’s child was shot?—Yes.
7710. How long after the child was shot did McHugh run out with it?—A few minutes after.
7711. Then that would be within twenty minutes after the police commenced to shoot!—It would be about that.
7712. By Mr. Sadleir.—Were both the children shot at that time?—Yes, one was out at the kitchen chimney, and Mrs. Jones said, “You cowardly ——, why do not you go out and fight hand to hand, as you said you would.”
7713. By the Commission.—That was very early in the morning?—Yes.
7714. By Mr. Sadleir.—The only other person shot was your son?—Yes, and Cherry. He was shot as he was going in the door; struck on the shoulder.
7715. By the Commission.—Did you look on after you escaped?—No, I went to the hospital at Wangaratta.
7716. Where was he struck?—Through the back, and lodged in the middle of the breast.
7717. Did you get the bullet extracted?—No, the bullet is in him still.
7718. Is the joint of the shoulder and the arm useless?—No, he can raise the arm, but he cannot work it.
7719. You said there was some dancing in the hotel—was there any singing?—Not that I remember.
There was a concertina playing a good part of Sunday.
7720. Who played it?—Mortimer.
7721. You did not hear Mrs. Jones’s boy sing a song?—Yes, a little boy she called to sing a song.
7722. Did you hear the words of that song?—Yes.
7723. What were the words?—“The Wild Colonial Boy.”
7724. Was Ned Kelly’s name brought in it?—No, some other person sang the Kelly song. Mrs. Jones promised her son sixpence to sing the song.
7725. Did she seem overjoyed to see him do it?—Yes.
7726. Was it for the purpose of giving amusement to Ned Kelly?—It was certainly to please him.

7727. Was Ned listening to it. It was not for the benefit of the prisoners?—No, indeed it was not. Dan Kelly and Byrne were there; I do not remember seeing Ned at the time.
7728. It was for the benefit of the Kelly party?—Yes.
7729. Was it sung to please the Kellys at Mrs. Jones’s request by the child?—Yes.
7730. Did you know Cherry was shot?—No, I did not until I came back from Wangaratta. Dr. Hutchinson examined him to find the bullet, and told me to send him to the hospital.
7731. Did you see them put on the armour?—No; I could hear the jingle.
7732. What way were they—front and back plate?—Yes, like on hinges, and they were all pliable; but the back piece was all solid. There were two flaps that hung down here—they were on hinges like.
7733. Did you see Ned Kelly going from the house when the first party came?—No.
7734. Did you see him go out to meet them?—No, but I could hear him walking round the house and talking.
7735. Were the front and back plates fastened at the side?—I could not tell that; they had their coats on at the time.
7736. Did the armour they wore seem to be similar?—Yes. I noticed Hart’s armour under his coat.
7737. Where did you see any armour at first?—At the gate.
7738. When?—On the Sunday morning.
7739. When they first came to you, they had the body-plates on?—Yes.
7740. Therefore, after they came, they must have ridden in that armour on horseback?—Quite likely; Ned had it on at my place, and had a white coat on, and I noticed a hump on his back.
7741. What were the Kelly party doing all Sunday?—Hart was here at the gatehouse, in charge of the station-master’s house and the women and children there, and the others were up at Mrs. Jones’s.
7742. What did they do on Sunday?—Ned went out jumping with some others out of the yard—hop, step, and leap—and the others were walking about the house to and fro.

7743. When it came on dark, what then?—They wanted to dance.

7744. For how long?—Mrs. Jones ordered the table out, and they had a couple of dances.

7745. She was trying to oblige them all she could?—Yes.

7746. Was it she that proposed the dancing?—I could not swear it, but, to the best of my belief, it was.

7747. Who took the floor first?—Mrs. Jones and her daughter.

7748. Was there plenty of grog in the hotel?—Yes, in the bar, but nobody seemed to drink much. I dare say I might have three or four drinks myself from the time I was taken in custody until I got out.

7749. Now did you people employ your time?—We passed our time very miserably, I assure you.

7750. Did you talk?—Not much; I was kept walking about the verandah.

7751. They allowed you to go out?—Yes, but they had a rifle under their arm, and I believe they had four or five revolvers each.

7752. You stated they went up and brought Bracken down a prisoner on the Sunday night?—Yes.

7753. Can you say they went there with their armour or not?—Yes, they had their armour on, and they brought the armour back in a bag, to the best of my belief. They had his firearms then, a double-barrelled gun, a revolver, and his horse.

7754. Was there a bag with them when they went?—Yes.

7755. Was the armour in it when they went?—I am not sure whether they had the armour in it, but they put it on when they went to Bracken's house.

7756. What time did it take to put this armour on when they heard the train was coming?—About twenty minutes, I suppose.

7757. Did Bracken go out and take the key, and go out at once?—He went out when he heard the police going towards the gate along the line.

7758. Did you expect the train to pass without stopping at Glenrowan?—I was afraid it would.

7759. Would it have done so?—Yes, because there was no one to signal it.

7760. If there was no signal at the station, it would go on?—Yes.

7761. Was there any conversation in the house about the train stopping?—They fancied they heard the train whistle, and they listened, and we all heard the train whistle, but could not be sure; we thought it was a cock crowing. Then, after a bit, we heard it again, and then we heard the rattle of the train, so we were frightened the train would go through; but when the train stopped at the station here, one of the Kellys said, "This is Curnow's work." I heard that, but I do not know which one of them said it.

7762. Did you expect to hear of a capsize when the train came?—He expected them from Benalla.

7763. Were you in when Curnow was liberated?—Yes, when they went for Mr. Bracken, they took Curnow with them, and let him out.

7764. Were there others let out?—Yes, some twenty-one were let go on the Sunday.

7765. Did Mr. Curnow know from you or anyone that the line had been taken up?—Yes, I told him in the morning at once that the line was broken; I said to him, "What a pity some one could not give warning to stop the train."

7766. Did you tell him on the morning how a warning could be given?—I did, and told him where it was broken. I am under a mistake if I did not tell him that holding something red, with a light behind it, would do.

7767. Will you swear you did say that?—To the best of my belief I did. I told Bracken also that the railway line was broken.

7768. Then, it was from you that Mr. Curnow knew the line was broken?—Yes, I told him on the verandah, when he gave me his pipe to have a smoke.

7769. Was it not known to all the prisoners in the house that the line was broken?—Yes. I suppose the late prisoners did not know it, but those in the early part did; they were going to bail up a circus that day.

7770. Did you see the Kellys' horses?—Yes; three were left at Jones' stable. The four came down the back of McDonnell's paddock, and into the stable. Two boys were riding them.

7771. Were those boys the Kellys, or friends of theirs?—No, they were not the Kellys, because they were at the house at the time.

281

7772. Were they the Kellys or others?—Others; and there was one of the horses up here tied to the fence—the horse that used to carry the pack. I think I showed him to Constable Johnson when I came back.

7773. By Mr. Sadleir.—Is it quite clear that two of Jones's children were shot before the police came from Beechworth and Wangaratta?—Yes.

7774. And the next that was shot was your son—by Sergeant Steele, you say?—Yes. The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday next at Eleven o'clock.

Mr. O’Connor called attention to a paragraph in the Age of the previous day which he considered reflected upon him.

The Chairman stated that the Commission disclaimed all connection with the paragraph in question.

Daniel Barry sworn and examined.

Question numbering mistake, drops back 500 units.

7275. By the Commission.—What are you?—Mounted constable.
7276. Stationed where?—Victoria Barracks, at present.
7277. Do you remember hearing of the murder of the three police officers in 1878, in the North Eastern district?—I do. I was then stationed at Learmonth, in the South-Western district.
7278. Did you propose to go to the North-Eastern district?—I applied to be transferred to that district.
7279. Were you engaged in searching after the Kellys?—Yes.
7280. With how many parties?—I do not know the number of parties. I was, in fact, continually employed, and out.
7281. How many constables went out in those search parties?—Different numbers, with different officers.
7282. Just state what you know—had the different superintendents different methods?—Yes, I think so.
7283. Whom were you under first?—Under Mr. Nicolson.
7284. What was his method the first time when you were out?—The ordinary search parties, with this difference, camping at night.
7285. How many, about, in a party?—About eight or nine.
7286. What was the difference in camping at night?—We would camp, and have tea, put out the fires where we camped, catch all our horses again, and remove in the darkness of night to some other place, perhaps a mile away.
7287. That was a precaution against surprise?—I think so.
7288. Would the eight or nine men make a great noise in going from one place to another?—In the darkness of night?
7289. Yes?—Yes, they would.
7290. Had a second camp been selected previously?—I presume so, but I do not know.
7291. Do not you know whether it was taken up indiscriminately or not?—I was never told. I simply went where the others led to.
7292. Did you in any of those search parties understand that you came close upon the Kellys?—Not until a certain time in the Warby Ranges with Mr. Hare.
7293. What time was that?—That was the first time when you came across, when you were with the parties as you thought?—As far as I know, that was the first time we saw any trace or sign. At one time I was at the Euroa Bank robbery—of course they had been there the night before—that was under Mr. Nicolson; but as for searching for them, the first time was with Mr. Hare, in the Warby Ranges.
7294. What led you to think you were close on them then?—By finding horse-marks, the print of shod horses where we camped.
7295. You say you were at the Euroa Bank robbery?—Yes, after the robbery.
7296. You came down with Detective Ward of Johnson’s party?—Yes.
7297. Were you told off as one of the party to remain in the cave watching Mrs. Byrne’s house?—Yes.
7298. What time was that?—There was one party immediately after the Jerilderie robbery of Mr. Hare’s 7299. Were you in that party?—Yes.
7300. How long were you there, approximately?—I think about forty-five days in Mr. Hare’s party, watching Mrs. Byrne’s house.
7301. Did you stop in the cave all that time?—It was not properly speaking a cave, but simply a blind gully, and we planted under some rocks.
7302. Did you think you remained there all that time without being observed?—I think three weeks without.
7303. Were you seen after that time?—Mrs. Byrne came down on the cave one day when I was on guard. I presume she knew, as Senior-Constable Mills spoke to her. I saw her approaching the cave, and told Mr. Hare, and he sent Mills to stop her.
7304. Was that at the time that Aaron Sherritt was lying in the camp?—No; I believe that was a few days before that occurrence.

7305. You understood she had been searching for you before?—I believe she was looking for the police before that.

7306. You think she saw Aaron Sherritt some days before that?—There is no certainty about it, as far as I know; but she could scarcely help seeing him.

7307. Have you formed any opinion as to whether it was the circumstance of her seeing him there that led to his being shot?—I formed an opinion about it, but I do not think that had anything to do with it.

7308. What is your impression about it?—About a month before he was shot (this is simply my own opinion) there was a report sent round, and it appeared in the press, and I knew it myself, about a party of police and black trackers being sent to the Woolshed, through information received. This information was not given by Sherritt, from what I have heard, but another informant; and it is my opinion they were lying about that at time, and had seen Sherritt, and thought it was he who gave that information, and shot him, because they thought he wanted to get the reward money, as it was near being done away—the £8,000.

7309. To get the reward before it was withdrawn?—I believe they were out that time—that Sherritt knew of it, but did not tell it.

7310. What ground have you for the belief?—For a long time I believed in Sherritt, and after a time I did not.

7311. Why?—From the carelessness he showed in doing his work.

7312. Did he seem indifferent?—Quite listless, and took no trouble in what he was doing. We had constantly to speak to him to keep him alive in what he was doing. And there was one particular occasion in the cave party: through the night we heard some crackers being let off—at first they seemed like a stock-whip—and heard some voices, and we wanted Sherritt to listen for those voices to see if he would know them. As soon as he heard them he cleared away in the bush from us—ran away in the scrub and planted, and after some search we found him asleep.

7313. Did you form any opinion whose those voices were?—I did not.

7314. You think they were the outlaws'?—I did not know. My instructions were not to run any risks.

7315. Did he give any explanation of his conduct in running away?—He would not tell me anything.

7316. Did you ask him any questions?—We asked him what the meaning of it was, and he said there was nothing in it and not worth taking notice of.

7317. Then in your opinion, from your own observation, do you think Aaron was untrue to the police from first to last?—I thought for a long time he was true to the police, but latterly not. That was after he got married. He got married on Boxing Day, 1879. I think I was then in the party in charge of the cave when he got married.

7318. And after then you saw carelessness in his manner?—Yes. He remained away from us for three or four days, and we had to get provisions for ourselves—go to his father's place to get them.

7319. You remember the second time you were in that cave party?—Yes.

7320. Did you consider before you left the party you had not been discovered or it was not known you were there?—Well, all the Sherritt family knew we were there.

7321. How many in the Sherritt family?—Three sons and four daughters and the father and the mother when we were there. That is not all the family, but all I know. That includes Aaron Sherritt.

7322. Do you know if the children knew?—The younger children knew, seeing us at the father and mother's place getting provisions.

7323. How many of those young children were there?—I think there were five little ones—I fancy so.

7324. They were attending the school?—They were going to the school.

7325. Where the Byrnes were?—I do not know. I am sure.

7326. Did you ever hear whether they were attending school with the Byrnes' children?—I heard it said so.

7327. So the opinion you have formed is that it was very probable it was well known you were in the cave?—Those many people knew it.

7328. You are quite certain that eight or nine people knew?—That many people knew it.

7329. Did you hear of anybody else knowing it?—No, I did not.

7330. Did the Barrys know it?—The younger Mrs. Sherritt knew it. She was in the cave.

7331. Would not her mother know it then?—I could not say that.

7332. Do you think Mrs. Barry, the mother-in-law, knew it?—It is very likely she would. Women are not likely to keep secrets.

7333. Were you one of the party that was stationed in Sherritt's hut?—I spent one or two nights there only. I was suffering from rheumatism, caused by being so long in the cave, and could not do the work.

7334. Were you there on the night when Sherritt was shot?—No.

7335. Have you formed any opinion what should have been the duties on that occasion?—It was a very dangerous position. They had a very poor show indeed.

7336. Why?—The house is surrounded by scrub, very close to it. There is the main road running in front, perhaps ten or twelve yards in front, and between the main road and the front door stands a big tree, and altogether the men inside had a very very bad show of coming out. It was not the question of coming out of the back door or the front door—it was a matter of coming out into the kitchen from the room.
7337. How far was the tree from the house?—Perhaps six yards.

7338. Were the surroundings of the hut such as would have made it very dangerous for the police to come out?—Yes, when it was a dark night.

7339. You consider in the dark night, if the outlaws were outside, they would have a very great advantage over those inside?—Yes; they had a very great advantage over those men—they had all the advantage.

7340. But even if you were there yourself, what would be your opinion as to your duties with regard to your officer. Would you have to obey his instructions and be guided by them. Suppose you were with the party with a senior-constable in charge?—It would be our duty to act in accordance with his instructions.

Daniel Barry, 17th May 1881.

7341. Would you not consult?—If I did different to his instructions and did well, it would be all right, but if not, look out.

7342. You would be dismissed?—I think so.

7343. In that case the whole responsibility you would throw on the officer in charge?—I understand so.

7344. Then, if the officer in charge is examined, and states that he instructed the others to take a certain course, and they did not obey him, that would not be his fault?—If he ordered them to do anything they are bound to obey.

7345. Could they refuse under the circumstances?—I think not.

7346. You would not disobey?—No.

7347. Would it not be your duty to go out and do whatever he told you?—If he tells me, it is my duty.

7348. Would you have done so?—I do not know whether I would or not. If the other two men refused, what is the good of two men rushing and the others remaining behind? But I am bound to obey orders.

7349. Were you at Glenrowan on the day the Kellys were captured?—Yes.

7350. What time did you go there?—I went with the first party, with Mr. Hare.

7351. That would be about three o'clock in the morning?—About that time, from perhaps half-past two.

7352. That is, you were there from the very beginning?—From the beginning.

7353. What position did you occupy in going up from Benalla?—I was on the pilot engine.

7354. As you were going along were you stopped by anything?—Yes. I think it was the traffic manager ordered me down off the engine, and to go down into the van connected with it.

7355. Then you did not remain on the pilot engine?—No.

7356. You do not know how the train came to be stopped?—No, I do not.

7357. When you arrived what occurred?—The first information I had of anything being wrong was Mr. Hare calling my name, and I got out. I was with the other men then, with Constables Gascoigne and Phillips; and we went from this train to the pilot engine, which was perhaps a quarter of a mile ahead, and got into it.

7358. Was there a van connected with it?—There was a van connected with it.

7359. That one backed on to the train behind, for what reasons?—I do not know; I believe from an understanding with Mr. Hare and the engine-driver. They all went together on to the platform at Glenrowan.

7360. You stopped at the platform?—Yes, we stopped at the platform. They were taking out the horses I stood at the back.

7361. Why were you taking out the horses?—To saddle the horses and be prepared in case we had to gallop after them and pursue them, as we understood they were at Glenrowan.

7362. You did not know the place?—Yes.

7363. Did you know they were at Jones’s house?—No.

7364. You did not know the hotel—you heard Bracken say exactly where they were?—No; simply that they were at Glenrowan.

7365. Did you hear anybody say that?—I heard Mr. Hare say he had received information that they were at Glenrowan. On going upon the engine, Mr. Hare gave us instructions that we were not to fire till we were fired on by the outlaws, and then to do our best, and if any were shot not to wait to pick them up, that there would be time enough for that afterwards. The horses were taken out to the platform. Before that, Mr. Hare, with this volunteer, Mr. Rawlins, went down to Mr. Stanistreet, the railway station master’s, at the gate. Constable Gascoigne, and I think Phillips, and I still remained with him. Of course we kept out wide and went to the house and went round it, where he made enquiries at the station master’s place. I heard Mrs. Stanistreet’s voice, and she was saying something that Ned Kelly had only left a moment, and had gone over that way. I did not see the direction that was pointed out. Then Mr. Hare went back to the platform and ordered the horses to be taken out and saddled. Before all the horses were taken out, I heard a voice, which I understood afterwards to be Bracken’s, singing out “The Kellys, the four of them, are at Mrs. Jones’s, surround them, surround them.” I think he made use of Mr. Hare’s name. I was holding some horses at the time, and Senior-Constable Kelly said, “Let them go, and come on,” and we rushed for Mrs. Jones’s place.
Mr. Hare sang out, “Come on,” and went through the wicket-gate. There were four or five of us with Mr. Hare, and when within about 25 yards of the front verandah we were fired on. We returned the fire, and it was kept up for perhaps five minutes without intermission.

7366. How many men went through the wicket-gate with you?—Five, I think, with Mr. Hare.
7367. Who were they?—Constables Phillips, Gascoigne, Kirkham, and myself.
7368. Was Canny with you?—No; and black tracker Hero.
7369. Those, so far as you know, are the five who followed Mr. Hare—were there any others?—No one else that I know.
7370. Did you see Mr. O’Connor during this period of excitement?—No, I saw him on the platform when the horses were being taken out, about that time; not afterwards through the day until about half-past two or three o’clock.
7371. Where were you stationed?—I was on the west end, next Benalla. The fire was kept up. Through this firing I heard Mr. Hare sing out, “O’Connor, get your boys and surround the house.”
7372. Was he replied to?—I heard no reply. He then said, “Get round the house, boys,” apparently addressing himself to us, “and do not let them get away.” At about that time he was joined by Senior Constable Kelly, and he said “For God’s sake, see that the men are all right, and do not let them (the outlaws) get away.” When he said, addressing us, “Surround the house,” I and Hero went together around to the west end of the house, and kept getting round till we were stopped by the next fire from the front.
7373. Was that towards the stockyard at the back of the house?—Yes, round at the west end; not exactly at the north end, pretty well round the corner.
7374. You see the plan there?—Yes, that is the clear road by the station master’s house. I was a little higher up than there, because, being a clear space, I could see more ground up and down, and could command more ground.

Daniel Barry, continued. 17th May 1881.

7375. Who was the next south of you, more towards the railway line—what constable?—At that time it was either Kirkham or Gascoigne, I could not say which. I could hear them there speaking, and knew their voices.
7376. Was there heavy firing immediately after you took your position?—There was a man sung out—Gascoigne sung out to stop firing because there were women in the house.
7377. What time was it?—About ten minutes perhaps—very soon after we took our positions.
7378. Did the women come out?—Mrs. Jones came out, and walked all over the ground abusing the men.
7379. What was the nature of her abuse?—Called us “murdering hounds,” and said we had shot her boy, and to take out all the rest of the family and shoot them. I also heard her go in, and apparently abuse the outlaws as well, and say why did not they go out and fight.
7380. When was Mr. Hare struck?—Very, very soon after—I should suppose the first or second shot—because in passing me he said, “Good gracious! I am hit the very first shot.” I was perhaps four or five yards from him in a straight line with him passing the house.
7381. You were aware he was hit?—From what he said himself.
7382. Did he give any other orders to you that you are aware of?—No, not then.
7383. Did he at any other time during the day?—I believe he went away then, after he was wounded.
7384. You consider he left then?—Yes; I did not see him leave.
7385. What was the general order on the field?—Singing out to us to surround the house, and not to let the outlaws get away.
7386. You heard that?—Yes.
7387. Did he say that to Senior-Constable Kelly?—He told Kelly to go and see the men were there, and that a ring was made round the house.
7388. Did you see any other woman come out besides Mrs. Jones?—No, but I heard a female screaming getting away. I understand it was Mrs. Reardon. She went away next the platform.
7389. Did you understand there were a lot of persons in the house, kept there by the Kellys?—No.
7390. When did you first come to know that?—Not till I saw the prisoners rush out in the morning. I saw other persons leave. The station master did while the firing was going on, and another man named Neil McHugh, taking Mrs. Jones’s boy in his arms.
7391. Did you see him?—Yes.
7392. Were they running away?—They walked out deliberately, as far as I could see. Mr. Stanistreet, the station master, was challenged by Senior-Constable Kelly, “Who goes there;” and he said, “Station master;” and he went right through.
7393. You did not see the police attempting to fire on any going out?—No.
7394. Did you see Reardon himself?—No.
7395. Where you were stationed you were not in a favorable position to see who was at the front door?—No.
7396. Until they got away?—Until they got away.
7397. While you were there, what time did you receive any orders from any officers after Mr. Hare went away?—Not until the house was going to be set fire to.
7398. So far as you know, the police were without orders till the house was set fire to?—I understood one man was in command; that would be in accordance with the regulations.
7399. Who did you understand was?—Up to the time Mr. Sadleir came, Senior-Constable Kelly.
7400. Did he give any instructions at all?—He came round to me with ammunition, and told me to keep my position, as it was a good one.
7401. What time was that?—Half-an-hour after the firing commenced.
7402. That was before daylight?—Yes.
7403. When did you receive any other instructions or order?—There was word passed round, but no order given, for the ranks to fire high. I do not know what time that was.
7404. Did you notice the effect of the firing upon the house?—Yes.
7405. Were the boards much riddled?—Yes; considerably riddled, and the roof as well.
7406. Were the walls riddled as badly as the roof?—I do not think it. Of course the roof made more noise—the bullets going through—being iron.
7407. You would see it before the house was set fire to?—A person would have to be very close to form a good idea; of course the bullets made a bigger rent going through the iron roof, and it being slanting too.
7408. Did you know anything about the arrangements that were being made to set fire to the house?—Yes, I was told a little about it. I was one of the men that was covering Senior-Constable Johnson when he went to set fire to the house.
7409. Were you in the same position then that you were in in the morning?—No.
7410. How did you come to change?—Senior-Constable Mullane came round and told me to come to the front of the house and fire into it while Johnson set fire to it at the end near the chimney—that is, at the west end.
7411. Then you got your instructions from Senior-Constable Mullane?—He said Mr. Sadleir said so.
7412. Was it understood that the outlaws w in the chimneys of the house—was it thought so?—I never heard it said so.
7413. Did you see the chimneys as they stood?—Yes.
7414. Would you consider that they had been greatly riddled with shot?—No, not greatly riddled.
7415. Very few marks upon them?—Very few indeed.
7416. Would you consider a man a good marksman who said he and others were told to fire into bricks to try and bring down the chimney, and yet left so few marks behind?—He ought to leave a few.
7417. How many rounds of ammunition did you fire that day, to your recollection?—About twenty-five.
7418. What were you armed with?—A Martini carbine—a short carbine.
7419. That took in a bullet?—Yes.

7420. You considered that every shot you fired went through the walls?—Yes. I was being fired on all the morning, else I would not have fired so much. I was preserving my ammunition, thinking I would want it before night.
7421. Were there others standing about, not firing at all?—Yes, plenty; there were men that did not fire a shot.
7422. Why did they not?—Because, I suppose, their shot guns would not be of any use at that distance; I believe that was the reason.
7423. That they were reserving their fire till the outlaws came out?—Yes.
7424. Were those belonging to Mr. Hare’s first party that went up with you, or men that joined subsequently?—There were none of Mr. Hare’s party, because I believe there were but one or two shot guns in Mr. Hare’s party.
7425. Was there never a general order given to fire?—No, I never heard any general order to fire. There was a signal to be given when the house was set fire to, but no other occasion.
7426. Did you fire without an order, or what caused you to fire?—I fired it when I was fired at by the outlaws. I thought of no other time.
7427. Did you never receive any order from an officer as to firing?—I received an order from Mr. Hare before reaching Glenrowan, in the train, and another order from Senior-Constable Mullane when setting fire to the house.
7428. Was the same order given to everyone else that was given to you?—There were but three of us in the train, and the three heard it.
7429. That applied to the rest as well as to yourself?—Yes.
7430. You do not know whether there was a general order given to the remainder of the men?—Mr. Hare’s party? We always understood each other. It was scarcely necessary to give the order.
7431. Was there a different order under Mr. Sadleir?—I was not ever out with him.
7432. Did you get an order from any other person as to firing?—No.
7433. Who gave the order to fire high?—I presume it came from an officer.
7434. Do you know it did?—No.
7435. Then how do you account for there being any men who did not fire at all?—It meant if they were to fire at all they were to fire high.

Mr. Sadleir.—That was the meaning no doubt.
The Witness.—I did not fire myself when that order was given.

7436. By the Commission.—When the order came to fire high, did you consider that was an order for you to commence firing at once?—No; if we were firing all round at once, someone was bound to be shot.

7437. If the order was not to fire until you were fired on, would you consider that a general order?—Yes, when I got it from an officer himself.

7438. What did you understand by firing high—how high?—At least perhaps six feet; not lower than that.

7439. What would be the object of that?—There was something said about some of them being up in the roof. I heard that said.

7440. Were many shots fired at the roof?—The roof was riddled pretty well.

7441. Did all the constables that had rifles fire, so far as you know?—So far as I know, they all did, one time or another.

7442. The ones with shot guns?—Those were the only ones that did not.

7443. Can you say who gave the order to fire high?—No.

7444. Can you say from your own knowledge that it was an officer’s order?—No.

7445. Did you know what the meaning of that order to fire high was?—No.

7446. Am I to infer you did not know whether it was to fire not to hurt the prisoners, or to fire high to hit the outlaws in the roof?—I thought it might be for our own safety, being all round the place, and also the outlaws perched on the roof.

7447. If all the party round the house fired a volley at once, is there a probability that the men in front would hurt the men in the rear?—It is very likely they would, as they would be exposed in firing.

7448. Do you know whether any of the Martini-Henry bullets went through the house from side to side?—I believe so.

7449. Have you carried a short Martini-Henry during all the time you were on service there?—Not all the time.

7450. Is it your opinion it is an effective weapon?—Yes.

7451. You have seen the Spencer and Martini-Henry rifles?—Yes, and used them.

7452. And a double-barrelled shot gun?—Yes.

7453. In your opinion, which is the most effective weapon of that lot?—The Martini carbine.

7454. Have you heard your brother constables who were out with search parties say that was the most efficient weapon?—They have expressed themselves in that way.

7455. As effective as a long Martini-Henry, and the long is more inconvenient to carry; is that the reason?—The carbines were not up there very long, but I speak from my experience. It is more convenient to carry than the long one.

7456. Are you aware that there were a large number of those short carbines in the possession of the Government of this colony?—I am not aware. I have heard the Artillery Corps had them.

7457. Have you noticed any scarcity of arms in the force?—I have never seen any scarcity when I required them; I always got a rifle when I required it.

7458. Any scarcity in the allowance of ammunition?—Well, we were told to use it carefully.

7459. By that you inferred you could not go and practise when you pleased?

7460. Any scarcity in the allowance of ammunition?

7461. When did you get another order from an officer or from your superior?—The next order was from Senior-Constable Mullane, about half-an-hour before the house was fired, about half-past two, I think; I had no record of time.

7462. Then do you recollect did you receive any orders as to your conduct—what you were to do from the time Senior-Constable Kelly gave the order till Senior-Constable Mullane gave the order?—No, not during that time.

7463. You were acting on your own responsibility all that time without instructions?—I consider that I was.

7464. Were you not acting on the first order you had from your superior officer?—Yes, certainly, I bore that in mind. The last order you always act on till you receive another.

7465. It is not customary to receive periodical orders; did you continue at that tree?—I did, but not all day.

7467. Did you consider yourself bound to remain at that tree?—Not if I saw the outlaws trying to get away; by no means.

7468. Did you remove from that tree any time?—The first time I did was when the prisoners rushed out of the house.

7469. Where did you go to then?—I went right to the end of the house.

7470. You considered you were doing that on your own responsibility?—Yes. I was not ordered to leave it, but I was doing it for the best to capture the outlaws.

7471. Then every constable would be doing what he did for the best in the absence of an order?—Yes, I would think so.

7472. Some were moving about during the day?—Yes, one or two, not a great many.

7473. They were often moving?—They seemed so to me.

7474. Were you on duty from the time Mr. Hare gave the order till Senior-Constable Kelly gave the order—you understood the order was to remain at your post, and to keep the outlaws from escaping?—Yes, to get them as best we could.

7475. You got no orders except those you have mentioned?—No.

7476. Did any constable or officer, or your superior officer of any grade, come round to you after the train with Mr. Sadleir arrived with any orders or instructions?—No, I think not.

7477. Did Mr. Sadleir or any of the senior-constables that came with him, or anyone, go round and ascertain if you were at your posts, or to give any order?—No.

7478. There was a chimney at each end of the house?—Yes.

7479. In your opinion, from the recollection of the place, would it have been safer to have approached behind that chimney, close to it, on either end?—No, it would not be safe.

7480. Was there any opening from which they could have fired?—The place was riddled with bullets, and they could see through.

7481. It was boarded up close at the end; no window?—There was no window at the end.

7482. Could a man have approached from either side to those chimneys without any danger?—No, not without any danger.

7483. From what point could they see them approaching?—Through the holes made by the firing in the darkness of the night.

7484. It was dark for a long time, and they would not see them; then they would not be watching so carefully then—it struck me those chimneys were fired at frequently, and it struck me the police could have approached it without much danger, and put a rope round and pulled it down?—I do not think it.

7485. You think they were too strong, or was it too dangerous an experiment?—I fancy it was too dangerous an experiment.

Mr. Sadleir.—I brought a rope from the Benalla railway station on purpose, with that object in view but when we looked we saw the bullets had made so many holes it was like looking through a lattice-work.

7486. By the Commission.—When you heard the order from somebody, whom you cannot tell, as to firing high, did you after that order fire high?—No, I fired into the window I was being fired at from. They were firing at me from that window.

7487. Then, after you received from somebody the order to fire high, you did not fire high, but into the window?—I fired at where they were firing at me from.

7488. Was that order given immediately Mr. Sadleir arrived on the ground?—It was some time after.

7489. But you are positive as to the fact of your being fired at from the house after the order to fire high?—Yes.

7490. Had you any doubt the outlaws were there then?—No.

7491. Could you distinguish who was firing?—I could simply see it was a man. This window was looking out from the back.

7492. Do you know the portion of the house where the bodies of Dan Kelly and Hart were discovered?—Yes.

7493. Was the window you were fired at from in close proximity to that?—Yes.

7494. That is north of the chimney?—Looking out north at the back.

7495. In answer to a question, you said there was no window at that end of the house?—Not at the west end—that window was at the north side.

7496. You recollect the position of the house; there was the front building with a chimney at either end?—Yes.

7497. At the Benalla end, towards the chimney along that side of the line, was there a window in the next house?—Yes.

7498. Was that the window you fired into?—No.

7499. Was there a window at that end in a line with the chimney?—There was a window on the back building at that end, but not in the front.

7500. If there was a window at the back end of the hotel, would not that window command the Benalla end of the hotel?—Yes, certainly it would.

7501. When the first attempt was made by the captives to escape from the house, were any of the people fired on by the police?—Not that I am aware of. They escaped on the end next the platform, the women did.
7502. Did you see any sign by a white handkerchief being put out of the window?—No.
7503. Or by any call an attempt made by the captives to be allowed to escape?—I neither heard a call nor saw any sign that they wished to escape. I heard word passed round to cease firing, there were people that wanted to get out.
7504. And the firing, did it cease entirely?—Yes.
7505. When did you first go to the North-Eastern District?—18th November 1878.
7506. Were you one of the cave party?—Yes.
7507. And remained there up to the last day when the whole of that party were removed; the second party, under Mr. Nicolson; the one that left on the 2nd of April—Mr. Nicolson’s?—I was not there to the finish.
7508. What day did you leave the cave party?—I do not know exactly.
7509. About what time?—I remained in Beechworth until it was wound up; other men took my place.
7510. You stated that the Sherritt family consisted of three sons and four daughters?—Yes.
7511. And the father and mother?—Yes.
7512. How long before you left the cave party did you know that the Sherritt party consisted of so many?—From hearsay before.
7513. How long before?—After Sherritt got married up to the beginning of January. I knew then, because I had to go to the house for provisions.
7514. You then knew that after Sherritt was married he did not attend so punctually to his duties?—Yes; I sent in a note to Detective Ward to that effect.
7515. Did you at that time form the opinion that in consequence of there being so many there, and your having to go for provisions, your existence in the cave was likely to be known?—Yes.
7516. At that time?—Yes.
7517. That would be in the month of December?—Yes; I sent in a note to Detective Ward to that effect.
7518. What do you call a note?—The report was not written; an informal report. That was in the month of December.
7519. Had you previous to that formed any opinion as to the secrecy of that cave party?—Well, I thought it was not known as soon as I thought it was likely to be known. I tried to get out of it, because I did not consider it safe. The Sherritt family were rowing among themselves, and I wanted to get out of it.
7520. Were you at Beechworth on the 2nd April when the whole of the cave party were brought in?—Yes, I was.
7521. Will you describe to us the subject of dispute between the members of that party and Senior-Constable Mullane?—I heard from some of the men that they were called on to make reports, and I went to Senior-Constable Mullane and asked him.
7522. That was the 2nd of April?—Yes; I asked him if I was to make out a report, and he said, "Yes," and I asked him what about, as it was an unusual thing; I had never done the same thing, and there must be some object for it; and he simply told me to go and do as I was told.
7523. That was simply to make out the report?—Yes, about the cave party.
7524. Did he indicate the nature of the report you were to make out?—No; I asked him to show how it started; who the order came from to make out the report. He said that he had got a telegram from Detective Ward telling us to make out reports, but would not show it to me.
7525. Would not show the telegram?—Yes; and also told me to go and do as I was told. Then I made out one of those reports that I handed in the other day.
7526. Is this the report you first sent in?—[handing a paper to the witness]—Yes, that is the first report.
7527. Just read that?—"North-Eastern Police District, Beechworth Station, April 2nd 1880—Report of Constable Barry, 2710, relative to special duty at Beechworth.—I beg to report, for the information of the Assistant-Commissioner of Police, that I was, on this day, called on by Senior-Constable Mullane to make out a report relative to special duty performed here by me through a telegram received from Detective Ward. The instructions were so vague that I really don’t know what to report about, but I am prepared to answer any questions that are put to me relative to this duty, either verbally or in writing.—DANIEL BARRY, 2710. The Assistant-Commissioner of Police, Benalla."
7528. What became of that?—I handed it to Mullane, and he wrote this memo, on the back of it:—"I have called on Constable Barry, 2710, for a report relative to how the special duty at Sebastopol was performed, and whether it came to his knowledge that the Byrnes or any of the friends of the outlaws were aware of the presence of the police at Sebastopol."
7529. In consequence of that, what did you do next?—I requested him to forward that report, and have it returned to me from the Superintendent whom it was intended for, as I thought it ought to be. However, he ordered me to make out another, which I did.
7530. Did you retain possession of that first report?—I made out this second report, and attached them both together.

7531. So that both formed one report?—Yes. “North-Eastern Police District, Beechworth Station, April 2nd 1880.—Report of Constable Daniel Barry, 2710, relative to note on the attached report.—I beg to report, for the information of the Assistant-Commissioner of Police, that I submitted the attached report to Senior-Constable Mullane; he returned it to me for to make out another report in reply to his memo. on the same. I therefore beg to state that the special duty at Sebastopol was performed in strict accordance with the instructions received from the Assistant-Commissioner, but as to whether the friends of the outlaws were aware of our presence there I am not in a position to state positively, as I never had an opportunity of going among them to enquire; but Mrs. Sherritt (senr.) has made statements to me, which I afterwards reported to Detective Ward, which would lead me to believe that the Byrne family were aware of our presence.—DANIEL BARRY, 2710. The Assistant-Commissioner of Police, Benalla.” I handed both those reports to Mullane, and he told me that would do. Those are the originals.

7532. How did you come to be possessed of them so that you could tell if those were the original reports sent in by you by order of a superior officer?—I got them returned to me from Detective Ward. He asked me to make out another report, as those would not do.

Daniel Barry, continued.
17th May 1881.

7533. And you took them back?—I took them back.

7534. Did you make out another?—I did.

7535. When Detective Ward told you those reports would not do, just use his exact words—what did he tell you, and the nature of the report required?—He said we were not to make out reports about what we thought, but what we actually did, and beyond that it was for us to get a good mark on our record-sheet for the hard work we had done.

7536. In consequence of that, you made out this report—[reading the same as follows]: “North-Eastern District, Beechworth Station, 2nd April 1880.—Report of Constable Daniel Barry, 2710, relative to special duty near Beechworth.—I beg to report, for the information of the Assistant-Commissioner of Police, that I have been engaged on special duty from 3rd December last to 17th March last, watching Byrne’s house at Sebastopol. During that time, so far as I could judge, none of that family were aware of our being in the vicinity. The instructions received from the Assistant-Commissioner of Police were strictly carried out, and the greatest possible precautions were used by the party to prevent our being discovered.—DANIEL BARRY, 2710. The Assistant-Commissioner of Police, Benalla?—I handed that to Detective Ward on receiving the others back.

7537. Did he wait while you wrote that?—He asked me to write it.

7538. Did he wait while you wrote it?—I wrote it in the barrack-room, and met him that evening and gave it to him, or the next morning, in the street.

7539. Did he dictate something like the wording of the report that would be acceptable to him?—He gave an idea of what should be said, but did not dictate it.

7540. How do you account for this, that you wrote that report stating you had no reason to believe your existence was known on the 2nd of April, when you wrote on Boxing Day to Detective Ward, informing him you believed, in consequence of the way you had to obtain provisions, your existence was known in December?—Because I could not positively say.

7541. If you thought it portion of your duty in December to write to Detective Ward conveying that information—is that the fact?—That is the fact.

7542. And yet in April you wrote that other?—It was not exactly that our existence was known, but that I did not like how things were going.

7543. I have taken down the number of the Sherritt family, and in consequence of Aaron not attending to his duties as you thought he ought, after marriage, you thought it within your province to write to Detective Ward of your own accord?—Not of my own accord. I was officer in charge at the time.

7544. Was it in consequence of the conversation between you and your comrades?—No; it was my duty to do it. I was in charge.

7545. There had been no conversation amongst your comrades about that in December?—When I wrote it I handed it to them. They all agreed to say the contents were correct.

7546. What arose between that time and April to remove from your mind the impression that your existence was known?—Nothing occurred to remove from my mind the impression that our existence was known.

7547. Then was it in your mind that you wrote that in April to please the officer who told you?—He ordered me to do it, and I obeyed his commands in making out a certain report, and I told him I wanted the others, to have the others to produce in my own defence if they were ever required.

7548. If you had been left free, you would have said you believed your existence was known several months before?—I would—belief, not positive knowledge.

7549. If allowed to report upon your belief; you would have reported your presence was known?—Yes.

7550. But yet, that being so, and with what you knew afterwards, you simply reported just what you knew?—Just what I knew. I had to put nothing on paper except what I could swear to, as I expected something would come of it in the days to come.

7551. Still you knew at the time that the Sherritts were aware of your being there?—Yes.

7552. Then, in point of fact, if you had been left to yourself, you would not have sent the last report?—No, by no means.

7553. You would have kept to the first or the second?—Yes, I would have kept to the first or the second.

7554. What led you then to believe the existence of this cave party was known?—So many people knowing we were there.

7555. Was there not any special circumstance that would lead you to a thorough belief of it?—And, besides the family amongst themselves were fighting. The Sherritts—the father and Aaron fought. I did not see them, I heard of them; and the two brothers fought.

7556. Was it on account of the marriage?—Yes; and the old man expressed himself very strongly to me about it.

7557. What kind of a man is he?—The usual sort of bushman you meet.

7558. Is he active?—Pretty active.

7559. And a shrewd old man?—He pretends to know a good deal.

7560. Was he a constable of police?—He said he was at home.

7561. You saw young Mrs. Sherritt?—Yes; she was in the cave at one time.

7562. That was one instance of its being known to other persons outside the persons in the cave?—Yes.

7563. Did you report that?—I reported it verbally; I was not then in charge of the part, but I told it to Detective Ward when I came in.

7564. Was it prior to the writing of that last report?—Yes.

7565. You stated just now you were determined only to report matters of fact, that you could swear to?—Yes.

7566. Why did not you report that?—Because I understood she was allowed to come I looked upon her as one of the family.

Mr. Hare stated he had got the gun he had on the occasion of the Glenrowan business, and wished to show it was possible for him to have loaded it again. Mr. Hare showed that it could be done, by firing off caps, holding the gun between his legs, and then pressing it to his shoulder, and firing it off.

Mr. Hare.——When it first came to my knowledge that it was said it was impossible for me to load my gun with one hand, I got my own gun and found I could, and I went down this morning to Rosier, and got the gun from him, and brought it from there and tried it here, and you saw the result.

7567. You produced the gun here this morning?—Yes.

7568. Is that the gun you fired at Glenrowan?—Yes. I do not think there is any breech-loader you could not fire with.

Mr. O'Connor.——Mr. Hare was wounded at the time.

7569. By Mr. Sadleir (to the witness).——You have been with the police from the very first murders in the district?—Yes.

7570. Do you remember one night when some police with Mr. Hare and myself watched at the Ovens River?—I do.

7571. Where were you placed as regards myself?—Between you and the Ovens River, on the bank of the river.

7572. It was on the night of the 1st February 1879?—Yes.

7573. We watched from sunset until morning?—Yes.

7574. Did you go to sleep all that night?—No.

7575. Not once?—Not once.

7576. I think I was next to you?—I believe so.

7577. Did you see me asleep that night?——I could not see; I was watching the other embankment.

7578. We were all watching intently?—Yes.

7579. Do you remember the bundle of hay and some kerosene?—Yes.

7580. Do you remember when that was placed first by Mr. Hare?——I do not remember him placing it at all.

7581. You remember when it was placed, was it not placed close to you?—It was never moved after it was placed, I believe.

7582. Do you remember its being laid upon a high bank, near the top of the bank, at one time during the evening?—I do not remember its being changed.

7583. Do you remember my kicking or throwing it down to where you sat?—I do not; it may have occurred.

7584. Do you think that if that were lighted it would simply blaze in our faces, and we could not see before us?——No, I do not remember that.

7585. You said you were conscious of coming near the Kellys once in the Warby Ranges, and you judge of that by seeing some horse prints; have you any notion of whether they may not have been horse prints of men on the station?—From the enquiries we made, I understood that none of the horses on the station were shod. I understood so then.
7586. Where did you see those horse prints?—In the gully looking down on Bryan’s place.
7587. Had you reason to suppose the Kellys’ horses were shod?—It was generally supposed they were from what we heard.
7588. What did you ever hear?—That they rode good-looking horses and shod all round.
7589. Did you ever hear that?—I heard it said.
7590. Will you mention one person who said it?—Well, we were very seldom supplied with information of that sort that we would know directly that we would swear to it. Constables were very seldom told anything straight that they could say or not.
7591. You have said about Mr. Stanistreet and McHugh escaping?—Yes.
7592. Was there anything in your conduct to prevent all the other innocent persons escaping?—I think not. The chance is they might be hit from the back if they escaped from the front.
7593. McHugh got away without difficulty?—Yes.
7594. And Mr. Stanistreet got away without difficulty?—Yes.
7595. It is not true then he was fired at—Mr. Stanistreet, I mean?—It is not true.
7596. Was there anything to prevent in your conduct, or any of the men you saw that morning, to prevent the other people going if they liked?—No; as long as they did not rush in a body.
7597. But if they came out calling out who they were, and throwing themselves upon the police, you would have let them come into your lines and examined them?—Yes, certainly. I do think so.
7598. You started to your post at that upper end, rather at the back of Mrs. Jones’s?—To the west end, the clear road that goes from Stanistreet’s place to the Sydney road. It runs north and south, I think.
7599. Sydney-road is at the back?—Yes.
7600. You took up that position on your own responsibility?—Yes.
7601. Chose the place afterwards?—Yes, through an order by Mr. Hare.
7602. Senior-Constable Kelly shortly after passed you and approved of it?—Yes.
7603. Do you remember seeing Constable Dwyer any time that morning?—After daylight I did.
7604. What time would that be?—Half-past seven, I daresay.
7605. Did he not bring the orders to fire?—No.
7606. Did he bring messages from me?—No.
7607. Did he speak to you at all?—He came round late in the day with some whisky; I think that was the first time he came to me.
7608. Were you in sight of Constable Gascoigne the early part of the morning?—Yes, I was.
7609. Did you not see me coming to speak to Gascoigne?—It was dark then. I could know Gascoigne by his voice, but not by seeing him.
7610. You did not see me speaking to him?—No.
7611. He could have pointed you out to me where you lay?—Yes.
7612. Having received Kelly’s instructions, were you in any need of orders all day as to what to do—Well, I do not think it.
7613. You were at no loss what to do?—No, I was not at any loss what to do.
7614. Was not your duty perfectly understood, and by every man that he had to do the best could, first to keep the Kellys from escaping?—Yes, certainly.
7615. And the next duty to knock them over, if he had the chance?—Yes, certainly.

Daniel Barry,continued.
17th May 1881.

7616. Was there any need to give any man instructions to that effect?—No, not to that effect, certainly not.
7617. In the place where you were posted, had you as much communication with the other men—I mean at the other side where most movement was?—It was not very safe to move where I was.
7618. And you had the least chance to hear what was said and done?—Yes.
7619. When the order came to you to fire high, would you suppose it would come from anyone except some person superior to yourself?—I thought it would come from some of the officers.
7620. You said you would expect it to come from me—was that so?—Yes.
7621. You cannot say when you first saw Constable Dwyer that day?—Not before half-past seven o’clock, as well as I recollect.
7622. On the other side from Gascoigne, what constables were there nearest to you?—At what time?
7623. Well, say from six o’clock?—Constable Stillard; Senior-Constable Smyth; Sergeant Whelan was lower down, not exactly between.
7624. By the Commission.—What do you mean by lower down?—Towards the house, south-west, nearer the gully, further away from the public-house.
7625. Further towards the railway line?—Yes, exactly.
7626. By Mr Sadleir.—You do not remember Constable Alexander being there?—Which one?
7627. Either of them?—No, I do not.
7628. You know them both?—Yes.
7629. What was the first time you saw me?—About two o'clock in the afternoon.
7630. I have asked you already—from your position you were not much in communication with the other men—could you see what was going on on the other side of the building?—No, I could not; and did not care about looking.
7631. I suppose the building interfered?—Yes, that was one reason, and the firing down was another.
7632. By the Commission.—From whom?—From the men at the other end of the house.
7633. Not from the hotel?—No.
7634. Do you mean the firing of your comrades?—Yes.
7635. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you examine those chimneys since that day?—Yes.
7636. How many bullet marks do you think were in—take the one next the Benalla end?—I do not recollect the exact number. I have counted them, but I do not recollect. I know there were a few on the Benalla end; not many, perhaps four or five.
7637-8. How many on the other?—I fancy there was scarcely up to twenty-five. I would not be certain.

Mr. Sadleir.—That is rather more than I expected, but I think there must have been between twenty-five and thirty. I think that is all I need ask.
7639. By the Commission.—As to the horses—you stated you were looking on the Warby Ranges for the tracks of horses?—Yes.
7640. When you are looking for a prisoner of any kind, would you not try and ascertain the appearance of the man you were looking for?—Certainly.
7641. Did you know the Kellys?—No.
7642. Would you try to ascertain the description of the horses they were riding?—I would look upon that as the principal thing.
7643. Are you a native of the country?—No.
7644. If you were asking for a description of horses, would it not be one of the first questions you would ask, “Are the horses I am trying to find shod or unshod”?—Yes; and I believe they were gazetted as riding shod horses.
7645. You were asked why you believed the horses were shod. Were you at Euroa after the bank robbery?—Yes.
7646. Were you at Faithful’s Creek?—Yes.
7647. Did you hear then some of the horses of the outlaws were shod?—Yes.
7648. Did you see the tracks from Faithful’s Creek?—No.
7649. Then, as a matter of fact, it was impressed on your mind that the Kellys were riding shod horses all through?—Yes, certainly, from the country they were in.
7650. That night you were watching on the bank of the river, when the bundle of hay was found there, and you were asked if you were asleep, were you charged with being asleep?—No.
7651. Were you asleep?—No.

Mr. Sadleir.—I did not mean you to infer that. He was perfectly wide awake—he was the most wide-awake man of the party.
7652. By Mr. Hare.—When you said this morning that you thought that Sherritt had lost interest in his work, when was that?—In the month of December.
7653. Was that at the cave party?—Yes, the second cave party, after he got married.
7654. Have you any idea how many shots the outlaws fired at the first engagement that morning—it has been called a volley—how many shots do you think came from the verandah that morning, from the outlaws, as near as you can recollect—was it 10, 50, or 100?—They kept firing for about five minutes; I could not reckon the shots.
7655. Approximately, how many would you say—what is your idea—have you never thought of it?—No, it never crossed my mind.
7656. How many do you think—did the four men fire a shot each?—They must have fired over 40 or 50 shots, I am certain.
7657. How many shots do you think we fired—the police—both the trackers and the white police, as near as you can think?—Twice that, at least.
7658. Before they left the ground?—Twice that number at least.
7659. Did our firing cease when the outlaws stopped firing?—Yes; that was one reason; the other was Constable Gascoigne singing out there were females in the house.
7660. Did you hear me call out “Cease firing” at all?—I did.

7661. By the Commission.—Was that before or after you heard the constable sing out?—After I heard the constable.
7662. By Mr. Hare.—Did I move from my position until the firing had ceased and the outlaws gone inside?—You remained giving orders until the firing ceased and for some time afterwards—a short time.
7663. Did I move from the position I took up in the first instance until the firing ceased? — You went back, after you were hit, among the timber.
7664. Was that before the firing ceased, before the outlaws retreated into the house? — The firing had not ceased, I think, when you retreated.
7665. Where to? — About ten yards towards the timber.
7667. Towards the gate, then? — Not exactly that, a little to the left of the gate.
7668. You say I continued giving orders from there? — Yes.
7669. To whom? — As I said before, you said, “O’Connor, get your boys and get round the house.”
7670. Did you see Mr. O’Connoy? — No.
7671. Was he on the hotel side of the gate? — He was not.
7672. You stated to the Commission that you took up your position after I told you to surround the house? — Yes.
7673. Did you see Kirkham? — I heard his voice.
7674. Where was he? — He was across the gate — he was one of the first men.
7675. Did he go up to your side where you took up your position or the other side? — He and Gascoigne were near each other on the Benalla side of the hotel.
7676. How long did he remain there? — Not very long.
7677. Where did he go to? — I heard his voice saying he was going away, but any more I could not catch — very soon after the first volley had ceased firing.
7678. Do you know where I went to when I left the field? — No.
7679. Did you see me leave the field? — No.
7680. Did you, at any time, hear me on any part of the ground? — I did not.
7681. You never saw me on the field again, or heard my voice? — No, I did not.
7682. You remember the cave party, at Mrs. Byrne’s, under me? — Yes.
7683. Do you remember whether I gave any similar orders there, with regard to firing at the people, to what I gave that morning on the engine? — Constable Arthur and I were brought up separately, and we got our orders.
7684. No; I mean at Mrs. Byrne’s. Do you remember any orders I gave then about firing? — Yes.
7685. What were they? — The orders that Arthur and I got were that we were not to fire until we heard a shot from the stockyard — Mrs. Byrne’s.
7686. Who was in there? — You had a party of men round the stockyard. and Constable Arthur and I were about 100 yards away in the heap of ferns.
7687. Did I always instruct the men never to fire a shot until they heard a shot come from me? — Certainly so.
7689. When you came up on the pilot engine you stated that I said not to fire until they fired at us — that is the case? — Yes.
7690. I also said anybody that was wounded was not to be touched till the Kellys were caught? — Yes.
7691. Where did I take up my position on that occasion on the engine? — In the front of the engine.
7692. The door? — Between both doors that go through the engine.
7693. Where did I put the men? — I was looking south.
7694. Was it on the tender or on the engine amongst the coals? — Gascoigne was amongst the coals, and I was between you and Gascoigne, looking south; Philips was looking on the north.
7695. I told some men to look on one side and some on the other? — Yes.
7696. By the Commission. — About what time did you hear or see the last shot from the hotel? — At about half-past twelve I saw the last shot.
7697. No more after that? — No.
7698. Were you in a good position to see if any were fired? — Yes; the principal firing was done at the back window, at me or the men next to me.
7699. What did you see? — I saw the smoke go through the window. The crack of the rifle and the smoke came through the front.
7700. You consider the positions of some of the men were dangerous, on account of their comrades firing opposite? — Yes, very dangerous. I was so myself for some time.
7701. Do you know the men who were opposite to you? — No.
7702. Do you know that Senior-Constable Kelly was at the very back of the yards? — He was changing round from one place to another pretty well.
7703. The officer has given you a character for being active during your service. Have you formed any opinion from your experience there as to whether it was possible to have captured the Kellys by a rush within the first two or three hours of their being surrounded? — Not with a number of people in the place.
7704. It would have been unsafe? — Very unsafe. You would not know whom to capture, and the innocent persons might be shot.
7705. That influenced your opinion? — I did not know there were people in the house.
7706. Were you expecting an order to rush the house at any time? — I expected we were going to rush the house at the very first onset.
7707. Do you consider there were any good opportunities of rushing the house after the prisoners were liberated, from your point of view?—No; I do not think so. The house was a very bad one for that sort of thing.

7708. Did anything else suggest itself to your mind as to capturing those men, except firing?—No; I did not see anything better.

7709. Did you hear anything about a rope to pull it down?—No.

Daniel Barry, 7709, Did you hear anything about a rope to pull it down?

7710. It would not have been a very difficult thing to put a rope round and pull the whole building down with the engine?—It would have had to be a very long rope.

7711. Were you present when the priest went into the house?—Yes.

7712. How near were the nearest police to the house when the priest entered?—There were some at the back I could not see.

7713. Where were you?—I was straight in front, right against that gate—I consider 75 yards.

7714. Were any nearer than you in front?—Yes, but not directly in front.

7715. How far from the house was the nearest man?—I could not tell how near they were at the back.

7716. From the front?—Some within 30 or 40 yards; they might have been nearer at the back.

7717. Was any approach made by the police when the priest entered?—At that time there was a lot of civilians rushing the place.

7718. That was after the priest rushed the place?—Really I was engaged in keeping those people from rushing the place. I heard them say, “Rush the place,”—the civilians. They seemed to be under the impression there was a man burning alive in it—Cherry—and my back was turned to the building in watching to keep them back.

7719. Did you see the priest come out?—No.

7720. Did you know after the civilians were released in the morning that Byrne was shot at that time, to your knowledge?—It was said round among the men, and word was passed round that he was shot.

7721. Did you also know then that Cherry was in an outbuilding?—I heard so, that he was in a detached kitchen at the back.

7722. Did you then also know the other two survivors, supposed to be Steve Hart and Dan Kelly?—Yes.

7723. At what time in the day did you know that?—I presume soon after the prisoners got out, the time it would take for it to go round from mouth to mouth.

7724. Was there any extraordinary danger in rushing when it was known there were only two outlaws alive in it?—You might rush the house, but to get in was another thing; you could only get in singly.

7725. One in at the back and one in the front, that would be only singly?—The outlaws could stand and shoot the men as they came inside.

7726. You saw the end of the building when it became daylight from where you were?—Yes.

7727. Was there any window at all on that end of the building?—The west end. There was a window in the detached kitchen, but not in the main building.

7728. Did you see any firing come from the window in the kitchen during the whole of the day?—Not a single shot.

7729. Was the end of the main building so riddled that anyone inside could have taken deliberate aim at anyone outside?—Yes, I was of that opinion.

7730. Clean shot holes?—Yes, it was softwood.

7731. So that the point of a revolver or rifle might have been put through and a sight taken?—They could have stood back and taken a chance shot.

7732. Was it riddled as thickly as those blots on this pad—[pointing to the same]?—Not quite as thick as that.

7733. Is it not likely that under the ordinary firing there would not be a larger proportion of bullets strike the building at the end than what struck the brick wall?—Certainly.

7734. Would there be a fair proportion scattered over that end of the building?—Far more over that than the chimney, because more would be directed to that than the chimney.

7735. You were asked whether you required any further orders after Mr. Hare gave you this order to surround the place, and you said you did not—those were sufficient for all purposes?—Yes, I think so.

7736. Had you been an officer in charge (you are only a young man) to the witness’s opinion on his (Mr. Sadleir’s) conduct on that occasion.

7737. By the Commission (to the witness).—Do you know whether those orders to fire high came from Mr. Sadleir?—No, I do not.

7738. Were you anxiously looking out for fresh orders all day?—I was looking out anxiously for some instructions, so as to regulate the firing better.

7739. Were you disappointed at not receiving them?—I was.

7740. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you not receive orders to fire high after the word passed round?—Yes.
7741. Did you take those orders as coming from me? — I understood you were there, and I expected they came from you.

7742. By the Commission.—Did you receive any orders to fire low, as the Kellys were supposed to be crouching in the chimney? — No.

7743. Would you have taken any different steps to capture the two outlaws remaining in the hotel than were adopted on that day? — I could not think of any better.

7744. Did it strike you there that day that some other course should be adopted different to your being placed in a position where you had to protect yourself against a portion of the fire of the police on the other side of the hotel? — Yes, I did.

7745. Were any orders given to your knowledge that the police on one side were to fire while the others remained under cover? — I never heard of any.

7746. Under ordinary circumstances, do you not think that the officer in charge ought to have made that a portion of his special duty? — Certainly I do.

7747. Did you know there were a lot of civilians at this particular time in the house? — No.

7748. When did you know they were there? — When they came out.

7749. Did you not see Mr. McHugh bringing out the wounded child? — I heard him speaking to Gascoigne a little distance away heard him giving his name; and Gascoigne covered him with his rifle, and got his name.

7750. With the wounded child? — Yes.

7751. Was the order sent round to fire high because the civilians were in the house? — No; I never heard it said on that account.

7752. You were not aware you were likely to shoot the civilians while you were firing in? — No only those I wanted to shoot.

7753. It was stated at Glenrowan that when the civilians came out they were fired at by police, and had to go back — did you see that? — No; I was not aware of that.

7754. Do you know where Sergeant Steele was stationed? — Yes; that was the east end.

7755. Immediately opposite from where you were standing? — Yes.

7756. Did you not see anything of the white handkerchief being held out the window? — No, I did not.

7757. There was nothing to indicate to you that there were prisoners in the house? — Nothing whatever.

7758. Until they came out? — Until they came out.

7759. No word passed round to that effect? — No.

7760. No screams from women? — That was when they were away.

7761. Did you hear any shots fired while they were escaping? — Yes.

7762. From whom? — From the police outside, if there were shots being fired then.

7763. Did you hear any cries from the women at the time? — They were singing out all the time.

7764. Calling out for mercy? — No, I could not say what they said. They were crying and screaming the greater part of the time, perhaps half an hour altogether or longer.

7765. At what time? — As soon as the firing ceased; they escaped very soon after.

7766. Besides hearing Constable Gascoigne saying women were present, and Mr. Hare’s orders, you were perfectly sure from your own knowledge, that there were women there from their screeching? — Yes.

7767. Did you communicate that to any men that came round; did you communicate that to Senior-Constable Kelly? — I am certain I did not, but he must have heard it better than I did.

7768. The women you heard did not return to the house? — No, we heard their voices going away towards the railway platform. After they left I considered there was no one in the house to shoot but the outlaws.

7769. Were you not covered by the tree from the shooting of your comrades? — Yes, when I remained behind it.

7770. Did you make known to any of your superiors that you were in danger from the firing of your comrades? — There was none to make it known to.

7771. Was not Senior-Constable Kelly near you? — No.

7772. Was there anyone in higher rank than you are? — When they fired a shot we kept singing out, “Who fired that shot,” and telling them to shoot in a different direction. The shots were whistling in the timber by us.

7773. Was it a fact the shots were endangering you — that the shots of the comrades were more dangerous than those of the outlaws? — Yes; and the particular time I allude to is immediately after the prisoners rushed out of the house. There was a long volley fired then, without any warning, I heard myself; and I was for some time myself in a very awkward position.

7774. Could you not have removed from where you were? — No, not after the firing commenced, that particular volley.

7775. We have it in evidence the constables were moving about all day? — Yes, that was when the firing ceased, and sometimes there would be an odd shot here and there.

7776. Was it only after one o’clock they were moving about?—They were moving about before that, pretty early in the day, after clear day and the sun had got up. It was a very cold day and they got moving about, not recklessly.

7777. Were they not in danger from moving about?—Well, the men were moving straight behind the trees, and they would not be; if they went to another position they would.

7778. I understood, from the evidence, that they did move from one position to another?—I saw constables Dwyer and Montford going round.

7779. Did you take any steps to communicate with the other side at all?—I sang out.

7780. Could they hear you from your position?—Well, we could hear them from our position.

7781. By Mr. O’Connor.—You were on that watch party, with Mr. Hare in command, at Mrs. Byrne’s house?—Yes.

7782. How many men were in the party?—The first was divided into two parties, I think, six in one and four in the other.

7783. Did they watch together?—Not for some time.

7784. They did eventually?—They did eventually.

7785. That is counting the officer, Mr. Hare?—I did not count him.

7786. That would be eleven, then?—Yes.

7787. You rode out to this place where you watched?—No, I did not.

7788. The party?—I do not know how they went.

7789. How did you go?—I went out to a certain point, driven out in a buggy by Detective Ward in the dusk of evening, and walked the rest of the way with our swags.

7790. How did you get away from there when you gave up watching?—There was one conveyance sent out for us—some rode and some drove.

7791. Do you know whether there were any horses anywhere about there—police horses?—I never saw any.

7792. You never heard of any police horses being put in Sherritt’s paddock at that time?—I heard of it.

7793. With the Government brand on them?—There were a good number of police horses without the Government brand on them.

7794. Can you not recollect if there was one with the police brand on?—I never saw them.

7795. Did you never hear it stated by Aaron Sherritt that Mrs. Byrne had discovered the party upon the first day or the second day by seeing those horses in Aaron Sherritt’s paddock subsequently?—I could not say that I did. He made many statements to me and he was so much in the habit of telling lies that I paid very little heed to him in that way.

7796. Will you give your opinion to the Commission that if such a thing was done as police horses, bearing the Government brand, being put into Aaron Sherritt’s paddock whether it would be a wise thing to do with the police watching there?—No, I do not think it would be a wise thing; you can easily say that afterwards, that it was not a wise thing.

7797. Do you know what distance this paddock was from where you were?—About a mile and a half or a mile, I should think.

7798. Subsequent to this you were with Mr. Hare on most of his search parties?—Yes.

7799. You notice in Mr. Hare’s evidence he states that it was the great hardships, that he never slept in a tent; and the men, I think he said, never slept in a tent; will you explain to the Commission how you did sleep, and what in?

7800. By Mr O’Connor (to the witness).—Upon arriving at Glenrowan you were, I believe, on the engine, were you not?—Yes.

7801. I believe you stated Mr. Hare left you there or you accompanied him down to Mr. Stanistreet’s, the railway station master’s?—Yes.

7802. Were you close to him when he had the conversation with Mrs. Stanistreet?—I was within hearing of him.

7803. Was Mr. Rawlins with him at that time?—Yes.

7804. Did you see Mr. Hare give Rawlins his revolver?—Mr. Rawlins had one. I saw one in his hand.

7805. Did you accompany him back to the platform again?—I did.

7806. What did Mr. Hare do when you arrived at the platform again?—He ordered the horses to be taken out again.

7807. What position was he in on the platform, can you remember; did he go down amongst the horses or remain at a carriage door, or where?—At that time, understanding that the outlaws were about, I took up my position at the back as guard.
7808. I do not mean that. I mean on the railway platform, where Mr. Hare stood on the platform when the horses were taken out. Was he standing near the first-class carriage door talking to me?—I cannot say.
7809. Did you see me on the platform?—I fancy I did, but I cannot say positively.
7810. You knew me by sight?—Yes, and expecting you were there I took it for granted that you were.
7811. When Bracken rushed down to the platform, do you remember distinctly seeing Mr. Hare?—No, the building was between where I was and where Mr. Hare was standing then. I was right at the back of the building.
7812. Not on the platform at all?—No, at the back on guard, looking out that we might not be surprised.
7813. Then you saw nothing of the first rush from the railway station?—Yes, I did. I was round at the back and ran round to the front.
7814. Where were you when Bracken gave the information?—Right at the back of the railway station.
7815. What did you do then—did you come on to the platform then?—I came to the end of the platform. I was holding four or five horses, and I asked what to do with them, and Senior-Constable Kelly said to let them go.
7816. Did you see Mr. Hare then?—I cannot say I saw him. They were all pretty well jumbled together at that time, and the horses too.
7817. When Constable Bracken gave the information, do you mean to state that Mr. Hare did not leave at once?—I cannot say that; there was no delay that I am aware of. I am certain of it.
7818. How long did it take for you to come from the back of the building and let go the horses and rush on?—About ten seconds.
7819. You did not see Mr. Hare then?—Yes; when I got clear of the building, I picked up with him.
7820. You state you did not see me?—No, I did not.
7821. Did you see me at all during the day?—Not during the day.
7822. Not after you took up your position in the morning?—No.
7823. Did you hear my voice?—That I cannot say.
7824. Did you hear anybody challenge a woman?—I might have heard voices, but could not tell who.
7825. Did you hear anybody call out "Cease firing"?—I did.
7826. Did you recognize the voice?—Yes.
7827. Whose?—Gascoigne’s and Mr. Hare’s.
7828. From the first volley from the outlaws until the first engine left, could you make a guess at the time?—No, I could not.
7829. By the Commission.—Did you hear the engine leave?—Yes.
7830. By Mr. O’Connor.—Now could you not make a guess?—No.
7831. By the Commission.—What position were you in at that time?—The west end of the building.
7832. Were you on the road?—Yes, across the cleared road referred to. I was at the other side of that road—to the west position.
7833. You had been there for some little time?—I was there after Mr. Hare’s order, and remained there till the prisoners were let out. That was the first time I altered my position.
7834. By Mr. O’Connor.—You have seen Glenrowan since the fight?—I have.

7835. I suppose you remember there are no trees in the front portion of the house?—There are not.
7836. I mean, if you had to take command of the front of the house, you would not be able to get a tree?—No, there are no trees.
7837. In your position you had a tree, had you not?—Yes.
7838. In your opinion, if you had to take command of the front of the building, would you have taken the position that I did—first of all, do you know my position?—I heard of it. I found empty cartridges there of a Snider rifle, and that showed where you were.
7839. By the Commission.—Is the only knowledge you have of the position that Mr. O’Connor and the black trackers held by seeing Snider shells or cartridges in the position they were said to be in?—I heard them singing out.
7840. Who?—The boys.
7841. What do you call “boys”?—The black trackers; so I knew they were in that direction, and then finding the cartridges after I came to that conclusion.
7842. By Mr. O’Connor.—You are aware they were in different portions of the field, and were not altogether with me?—Not at all; there was one with me.
7843. You are not aware of your knowledge that the remainder were with me?—Not of my knowledge; simply hearing them and finding those empty cartridges.
7844. Was there a great quantity?—A good quantity.
7845. Taking for granted that that was the position I was in, do you consider it was a good position for commanding the front of the house to prevent the outlaws escaping?—It was not a good position to shoot; there were better positions than that.

7846. Where would the better place have been in front of the house?—There is another drain between that and the house, and I believe that would have been a better position and quite as deep.

7847. Is this an after consideration of yours, or at the time?—a few days afterwards I was round and came to that conclusion.

7848. Were you aware of all about Glenrowan at the time of that fight—all those drains?—You could not help seeing them, and you were more likely to have seen the one I speak of, because it was nearer towards the house, and going towards it, while the other was going away from it.

7849. You never heard I was in another position?—No, I did not. I heard some of the “boys” were under the culvert; I did not know what that meant.

7850. You said the tracker Hero was near you at that time; did he show any cowardice?—No, not any; he was as plucky and cool as any man could be.

7851. Did you see any of the others show cowardice?—I did.

7852. Which?—Jackey.

7853. When was that?—Just when he heard the Kellys were coming, when Bracken sung out that the Kellys were there, and he thought they were coming on to us constables. Constable Canny handed tracker Jackey his gun to keep for him, while Canny was taking the horses out of the trucks. When word was passed for us to go forward, Constable Canny came for his gun, and I heard him ask Jackey for his gun, and Jackey could not speak with fear.

7854. Why?—He was speechless with fear. That was the only instance I saw.

7855. Did the man refuse to go forward, or hide himself anywhere?—I could not say that. I did not wait to see.

7856. Because the man did not speak to you, that is your reason?—Yes, he could speak well enough; I feel quite certain he was really frightened.

7857. By the Commission.—You did not notice where he got to afterwards?—No; he was singing out loud enough afterwards.

7858. What?—For the outlaws to come out.

7859. You said just now that the position Mr. O’Connor took up, in the cutting, was not the best one for firing from?—No, he could only hit the top of the verandah.

7860. What was it best for?—For safety; for his own safety, for himself.

7861. That would apply to all there?—Yes.

7862. By Mr. O’Connor.—Was not the position behind the tree as safe?—Certainly it was, if he remained behind it.

7863. Do you infer from that, that I made no use of my position?—No, not that; but I was in a better position to fire and retreat, when required, and my shots would take better effect than yours possibly could.

7864. Were you with me?—No.

7865. How can you come to that conclusion?—What conclusion?

7866. That my place was not a good place to cover the house?—Because the level of this drain was far lower than the embankment, even with the men standing.

7867. Do you mean that the surface of the ground was much higher than the bottom of the drain?—Yes.

7868. Of course it was; it would not be a drain unless it was. But do you mean to say it was over my head and I could not fire?—Not quite over your head.

7869. Can you state how high it was?—It was a sloping embankment; I believe the highest part would be very near seven feet—over your head probably—but you could see the top of the verandah looking over.

7870. By the Commission.—Where do you refer to—the drain nearest the railway line?—Yes; running parallel with that.

7871. Within the fence or without?—Within the railway reserve.

7872. In point of fact, the drain running nearest to the culvert towards the station house?—Yes.

7873. By Mr. O’Connor.—Did you go into that drain afterwards?—I did.

7874. How many days after?—Two or three days afterwards.

7875. And you think it was seven feet?—Not quite over your head probably.

7876. By the Commission.—Is that from the lowest part of the drain to the surface of the ground seven feet?—Yes.

By Mr. O’Connor.—The Commission saw the position, and it is after many months’ floods, and it was much shallower at that time than it is at the present time. (To the witness)—If you could fire from the drain, and if you could see to the level of the ground of the house, would it be a good place?—Certainly it would have been a very good place.

7880. By the Commission.—For what?—For guarding the front of the house and preventing the outlaws getting away.

7881. Would not the fence be an obstruction?—Not much; I believe that portion of the fence is wire pretty well.

7882. The top rail is not?—That is not much to prevent the shot from the low level.

7883. Would not that rail come in the line of fire from the position indicated?—It depends upon where you stand, certainly several bullets went through it.

7884. By Mr. O’Connor.—It is only about six inches wide—how long after the firing commenced was it that Mr. Sadleir arrived on the ground?—I cannot say. I did not see him.

7885. I mean on that day?—I heard and saw in the papers the different times that different parties arrived.

7886. I mean on that day; did any of the men tell you Mr. Sadleir had arrived at such a time?—They must have. I understood he came there with the Benalla party.

7887. What time would that be?—As soon as daylight, half-past seven or eight o’clock.

7888. Can you form an opinion as to how long elapsed before they arrived after Mr. Hare left?—No, I cannot.

7889. Did you see Mr. Hare, after he was wounded, sit down on a log?—No, I did not.

7890. If he had done so would you have been bound to see him?—I think I would have seen him, I heard his voice but I did not pay much heed. He was not very far away from where I was; he may have sat down.

7891. Did any man tell you during the morning that Mr. Hare had gone down to Benalla?—Yes, I heard that.

7892. What man—can you form any idea?—No.

7893. Was it before Mr. Sadleir arrived?—Yes, I think so.

7894. By Mr. Nicolson.—Do you remember coming up to Benalla first?—Yes.

7895. Had you long joined the force then?—Not very long; I had been three years and a half in the service at that time.

7896. Which was the first search party you went out with?—Under Senior-Constable Flood, in the direction of Greta.

7897. Was that the one with me?—Yes.

7898. You mentioned just now about the camping?—I have done so.

7899. Do you recollect the first time we camped at a place named Rushall?—I did not know the name.

7900. That place by Ryan’s Creek?—No.

7901. Do you remember the first night we camped?—Yes.

7902. Was it not near the creek?—Yes.

7903. Near some ferns?—Yes.

7904. Do you remember where the men slept?—I know where I slept, it was in the ferns.

7905. How far off from where we had our tea?—Perhaps 120 yards.

7906. We halted about sunset, and we had tea; and about the time we had tea we were ready to turn in; was it not the custom of the men to begin making their beds just at night where they were going to stop?—Yes.

7907. Were not the horses let out then?—Yes.

7908. Was there any clashing of the horses when we and our horses moved from where we had been feeding to were we were going to camp?—One night there was.

7909. Where was that?—We were trying to find the slip panel, we were nearly lost, we could not find the camp, it was at Greta.

7910. Were we not looking for the hut then?—We had had our tea. This was outside Greta and we were looking for a certain slip panel, and could not find it. Senior-Constable Flood was looking for it and I was sitting on my horse with a bag of flour in front of me.

7911. Was that the custom?—It was not kept up for a long time.

7912. What was kept up?—That practice of changing the camp after we had had our tea.

7913. It was kept up all the time I was out with you, unless we came and camped in a paddock, when we were out any distance in the ranges?—No, it was not; we did not catch our horses again and shift, the same as we did on that occasion at Greta, that night we were lost.

7914. What night was that?—I do not recollect exactly. [The witness looked at his pocket-book.] About the 23rd December 1878, that is very near it. I might say that that time, as far as the party were concerned, none of the men knew where they were going or anything else.

7915. By the Commission.—How can you say that with regard to Senior-Constable Flood?—He was in charge, but at that time we never knew where we were going.

7916. You are speaking of your individual knowledge?—I did not hear it.

7917. Did not Senior-Constable Flood know?—Yes, he did; but the men did not. We followed him, and he said where to go.

7918. Senior-Constable Flood had been then in the district for years?—He was not much the better for it.

7919. By Mr. Nicolson.—Did Flood say so?—He always said he did know the country.

7920. By the Commission.—You believe he was not speaking correctly when he said he knew the country, and that he did not know it?—Yes, that is the fact; he did not.

297

7921. By Mr. Nicolson.—In the first search party did we not go astray very often?—Yes; we were on the top of the Bald Hills, near Kelly’s, and did not know it; that was in the broad daylight, with Senior-Constable Flood.

7922. Did you know the country?—No.

7923. Did any of the men?—No; but we soon knew it much better than the men who pretended they did.

7924. When you were stationed in the cave you used to come in when off duty and see me nearly every time at Beechworth?—Yes, frequently.

7925. Did I not enter into conversation with you?—Yes.

7926. Did you ever tell me that you thought the cave party was discovered?—I only always told you what was true—what came to my knowledge. I always reported to Detective Ward, or Senior-Constable Mullane, and it would not be my place to report it to you, as I would presume that you knew whatever I told them.

7927. Do you remember when you withdrew from the cave altogether and came to Benalla?—Yes.

7928. Do you remember the conversation with me after it was all over?—Yes.

7929. Do you remember that you said the men, just before being withdrawn from the cave, had been obliged to move over to that house of Sherritt’s from the cave just a few days before they left?—Yes.

7930. What was my expression on hearing that?—did I appear to have known that before?—I do not know.

7931. Did you not express my surprise about their having moved from that cave into Sherritt’s, about any of the men being in Sherritt’s at all?—I cannot say you did.

7932. You remember our talking?—Yes.

7933. You have no recollection of my expressing surprise?—No.

7934. What firearm did you first practise with, excepting the revolver?—A double-barrelled shot gun.

7935. What had you next?—A Martini-Henry rifle.

7936. By the Commission.—Is not that an inconvenient weapon for horseback?—It is inconvenient, but a very good one.

7937. By Mr. Nicolson.—Did you prefer it to the shot gun?—Yes, certainly; according to the duty I was on.

7938. Is that a good weapon to carry generally?—It is not a good one in the night time, but generally it is a good weapon.

7939. What weapon did you select for your duty?—It was never left to me. I had a shot gun for a long time, and then I got the Martini-Henry rifle at Beechworth.

7940. Was it given to you at your own request?—No; in consequence of some shooting we had at Beechworth.

7941. What was that?—We went out shooting, and I did very well with the rifle, and consequently I had the rifle given me, and the shot gun taken away.

7942. Did you make any objection to that?—No.

7943. Did you prefer the Martini-Henry rifle?—Yes.

7944. What shooting was it?—Practising to make us good shots, I understood.

7945. Was there any order to that effect?—I understood there was an order issued by you that we were to do that.

7946. You seem very unwilling to mention it. You speak about—that you saw some members of the Sherritt family moving about to Mrs. Byrne’s?—No, I did not say that.

7947. You came in off duty at the cave, and you found it was very trying to your health?—Yes.

7948. You got rheumatism?—Yes, and I am not over it now.

7949. When you came in, you or some of the party, did you not apply to be allowed to go out on other duty for active exercise, after being confined in that cave?—I asked to be allowed to go out.

7950. Do you think it is a fair statement of a man who was on that duty, to complain of having been sent out on duty, after coming from the cave?—Certainly it was.

7951. Why?—Because there is a great difference between taking a short ride for the good of my health and being sent out a long hard ride.

7952. Were you sent out a long hard ride?—I was on different occasions.

7953. Did you report it to me?—No, I reported it to Detective Ward, and I expected he would report it to you.

7954. Had you not a right to speak to any officer you chose, if you spoke to a non-commissioned officer?—I expected he would have told you.
Daniel Barry, continued. 18th May 1881.

Dear Barry,—I am really sorry to hear of your troubles, but I can assure you I cannot help it. I sent out provisions on Saturday, and they promised me to send them to you as quick as possible. Moses is married since Boxing Day, and you must be a little lenient to him; he complained to me you were very cross to him this evening. I have just heard Jack is left for Melbourne, so you must bear with a little hardship for a day or so. Be kind to Aaron, although it is against your wishes, until you hear from me again. Mr. Nicolson is in Benalla, Mr. Sadleir is here, so keep quiet. I will relieve you on Wednesday evening; you can come in at nightfall. I will see in future, if possible, that you are not without bread. You must understand that this watch has to be kept in future with six (6) men, so you will be no worse off than your other comrades. Aaron complains that you said to him that you and Cox should be relieved. What has he to do with the relieving of you? I would strongly advise all you boys to be kind to Moses for your own sake. Mr. Nicolson is rather particular, and it would be unwise to quarrel on this duty. I will be able to give you more particulars in my next note. I do not understand what you mean when you say that there is something crooked; but if it is part of the day?

The witness withdrew.

I have just heard Jack is left for Melbourne, so you must bear with a little hardship for a day or so. Be kind to Aaron, although it is against your wishes, until you hear from me again. Mr. Nicolson is in Benalla, Mr. Sadleir is here, so keep quiet. I will relieve you on Wednesday evening; you can come in after nightfall. I will see in future, if possible, that you are not without bread. You must understand that this watch has to be kept in future with six (6) men, so you will be no worse off than your other comrades. Aaron complains that you said to him that you and Cox should be relieved. What has he to do with the relieving of you? I would strongly advise all you boys to be kind to Moses for your own sake. Mr. Nicolson is rather particular, and it would be unwise to quarrel on this duty. I will be able to give you more particulars in my next note. I do not understand what you mean when you say that there is something crooked; but if it is Aaron’s staying away, I can account for that. A man getting married likes to spend a few nights with the wife. I did not send the letter to Cox. Please tell Cox his dearly-beloved is in the enjoyment of good health, and is surprised where he is gone to. I remain, yours truly,—M. E. WARD."

"Beechworth, December 29th, 1879."

"Dear Barry,—I am really sorry to hear of your troubles, but I can assure you I cannot help it. I sent out provisions on Saturday, and they promised me to send them to you as quick as possible. Moses is married since Boxing Day, and you must be a little lenient to him; he complained to me you were very cross to him this evening. I have just heard Jack is left for Melbourne, so you must bear with a little hardship for a day or so. Be kind to Aaron, although it is against your wishes, until you hear from me again. Mr. Nicolson is in Benalla, Mr. Sadleir is here, so keep quiet. I will relieve you on Wednesday evening; you can come in after nightfall. another thing to say also about the party in the Warby Ranges. I had only an opportunity of mentioning one reason why I thought we were on the outlaws, and that was seeing the prints of shod horses; and there were other things that we saw as well. The statement made by the two young men that we stopped and spoke to, that came on to us that night, contradicted their own statement. For instance, one of them, when questioned if any other men left Bryan’s on that evening, said he had been ploughing in the paddock that day, and, when it was put to him afterwards, he said he was away in the bush, and seemed very much confused about it. The next is, also, seeing a fire on the top of a very high hill. We went up and saw it—went right to that in a place where you could not form an idea what that was required for, if it was not a signal of some sort. Another reason was the removal of stones from the tops of three different high hills. Two stones removed on the side, I think—that was the side facing the north. They seemed to be all in the same manner and same way, and upon the same side; and we also came on some footprints.

7973. What about the stones? — Big boulders removed from the side.

7974. What did you think that indicated? — A mark of some sort. I could not understand it. If it had happened only in one place, I would have thought nothing of it, but in three different places, it seemed to mean something; and in another place were footprints. That is all I have to say.

The witness withdrew.

John Kelly, Senior-Constable of Police, sworn.

7975. By the Commission.—Where are you stationed? — At present stationed at Terang. If you produce the record-sheet I could tell you all the dates. I have been in the service twenty years in January next.—[The record-sheet was handed to the Chairman by the Secretary.]

7976. What is your object in desiring to have the record-sheet here? — Just to show my previous service, what I have done.

7977. Just for the Commission to inspect it? — Yes, for the information of the Commission. I was stationed about nine years and a half at Ararat, and Beaufort about five years, and there I was doing plain-clothes duty through the district. In October 1871 I was transferred to Melbourne to the detective office. I applied afterwards, after a month or so there, to go back to the general service; as I was a stranger in town and to all the criminal class, it would take me some time to learn and find them out. I was transferred then by Mr. Hare from the depot to Dandenong.
The Witness.—He was at the station, but he died out near Mr. Clarke’s. I think he was a fine shooter and a good policeman.

Mr. Hare.—Bray, he died out at Trentham.

The Witness.—We were making for Moyhu, but it got very dark and commenced to thunder and lighten about four miles on the Boggy Creek. We had to camp there, and it was raining all night.

7983. Had you any accommodation at all—tents?—No, we had no tents. I had no blankets. The rest of the men had a small blue blanket each—I had none. Next morning we noticed a light. I went towards it. I found it was a Mr. John Lewis’s place. I told him we were police, and he got up and made a fire. We dried ourselves, and he got us some breakfast; and then we started towards Redcamp, on the Redcamp run. From there we went to Hedi. We stopped at Hedi police station that night. There were no police there, they were all away; at least the constable that was stationed there was away. We started up the King River on the following morning, and near Bungamara station I met the outlaws’ uncle, Jack Quinn, George Johnson, and a man of the name of Thomas, alias Galloping Jack. We had a conversation with them, and they told us they were looking for cattle. We stopped at Bungamara station that night, and met Sergeant Steele and some constables with him.

7984. Had they come from another direction?—They had come from another direction; they were further up the King.

7985. Then you were unsuccessful upon that occasion?—Yes.

7986. Will you pass over it a little more quickly, because we have got pretty well all this before from other witnesses?—We started next day in the Wombat, and arrived about ten o’clock that night at Mansfield. We stopped all the next day, and on Sunday, that would be the 3rd November, Sergeant Steele received a telegram, I believe from Mr. Sadleir, to return at once to Benalla—there was a man stuck up by the outlaws on the Murray flats. We returned to Benalla that night. We met Wild Wright and his brother (the dummy), and, I believe, a daughter of Tom Lloyd’s, on the road riding on horseback. Sergeant Steele and a party of men left that night in a special train; I believe, for Beechworth. I remained at Benalla for a few days with three or four men. At the same time, Senior-Constable Strahan and Shoebridge and two constables also came in from the ranges. We were ordered—there was a special train got ready, and Mr. Nicolson, Captain Standish, and five of us went to Beechworth.

7987. What was the date of that?—It would be about the 7th of November 1878. At Beechworth Mr. Sadleir met us on the platform—that was before daylight.

7988. Where did you go eventually?—We went to Sebastopol, Sherritt’s hut, and were unsuccessful, and I was instructed by Mr. Sadleir to return to Wangaratta.

7989. Have you seen the printed accounts of those things given by the other constables that have been examined?—I have read the papers.

7990. Do you agree with them?—I do.

7991. On that visit—was that the first time you saw Aaron Sherritt?—That was the first time I saw him.

7992. Under what circumstances did you see him?—I saw him near the back of Mrs. Byrne’s house speaking to Mr. Sadleir.

7993. Did you see Captain Standish speak to him?—I did, and Mr. Nicolson.

7994. Did you hear any overtures made by either of those officers to Sherritt?—I did not.

John Kelly. 18th May 1881.
8008. Did you hear any statements made in reference to the efficiency of Brook Smith in that attempt?—I did not. I never heard anything. There were horses—some of the police horses—found. I was there when Detective Ward and, I think, Senior-Constable Johnson and some other constables brought in some of the police horses that were found in the Warby Ranges.

8009. Did you see the horses?—I did. I was with Mr. Nicolson in the stable next morning. After returning from Sebastopol, I got instructions from Mr. Sadleir to go to Whorouly and Constable Ryan from Greta would meet me there.

8010. Was the horse that was found one horse or more do you remember?—There was one chestnut—a big chestnut—that I know. I rode him myself.

8011. Whose was that?—I think they had it for a pack horse—Sergeant Kennedy’s.

8012. Did he belong to the police force?—Yes.

8013. Did you observe the state he was in when he came in to the station, was he covered with marks or anything at all?—I did not notice any marks. They looked knocked up.

8014. Had he marks of perspiration over him or anything of that sort?—I do not remember.

8015. Had he been recently used?—There is no doubt he had been recently used.

8016. Why do you say “no doubt”?—Because he had the appearance of being knocked up.

8017. What was the appearance that made you think he had been recently used?—His sides were quite hollow, and he seemed to be recently worked.

8018. Would you say whether he had had a week’s spell or had he been worked within a few days before?—I do not think he had had a week’s spell.

8019. Do you think he had been worked by the outlaws or anyone else within a few days before?—I think so.

8020. Go on with your narrative?—I was about three weeks at Whorouly with Constable Ryan, watching the Whorouly bridge.

8021. What time was that?—About a week after coming down from the Woolshed in November.

8022. 1878?—Yes, 1878.

8023. It will be no use following up that narrative—is there anything of importance?—No, nothing of importance.

8024. Only that you were out with search parties continually?—Yes.

8025. Do you remember the time, or about the time, when the outlaws had killed Aaron Sherritt?—I do.

8026. Where were you then?—I was in Benalla.

8027. At the time?—Yes.

8028. What action was taken upon that?—Mr. Hare sent for me that Sunday afternoon, and said I was to bring down a horse with me to the telegraph office.

8029. Where was Mr. Hare?—In the telegraph office. He came to the door and met me, and read a telegram to me. He said, “Aaron Sherritt is shot.”

8030. What did you do then?—He told me to go over and see Mr. Stevens, the railway station master, and see if we could get a special train. I did so, and, Mr. Stevens said, “Yes,” he would get one ready. I got instructions to get some provisions and get ready. I had everything ready, and gave instructions to the men that were to come. Mr. Hare gave me a list. There were Constables Barry, Canny, Gascoigne, Kirkham, Arthur, and Phillips. We went down to the train about half-past one.

8031. On Sunday?—No, this was Monday morning.

8032. About half-past one in the morning?—Yes.

8033. Just at midnight?—Yes.

8034. With horses ready and everything?—And a special train from Melbourne came with Mr. O’Connor and five trackers, and four gentlemen belonging to the press, and two ladies. We got the horses in, and made a start for Glenrowan. I was in—8035. You say you made a start for Glenrowan?—Yes, by the train.

8036. Did you intend to stop at Glenrowan when you left Benalla?—No, we left for Beechworth.

8037. Did you really intend to stop at Glenrowan?—I do not think it; at least I never heard anything about stopping at Glenrowan. All of the five constables got into the guards’ van. There was one, Constable Kirkham, he got in with the black trackers in the carriage—a first-class carriage.

8038. He had some management of the black trackers?—He had. I was on the top step with the guard, and he had a lamp and this cleaning wadding that they have, and I kept the window clear watching the pilot engine. I mentioned in the stable before I left, to Constable Day, there is nothing surer than that the line would be pulled up, because I heard that they knew all our movements.

8039. How did you know that they knew all your movements?—I heard that from several parties.

8040. That is in a general way?—In a general way.

8041. Not that particular matter?—No.

8042. That is to say you understood that the Kellys had good information of all the movements of the police?—That was the general impression.

John Kelly, continued. 18th May 1881.
8043. That was the impression?—And through their sympathizers the way they were galloping about.

8044. From that you judged there was a possibility of the line being torn up?—Yes. When within a mile of Glenrowan, we noticed the pilot engine pulling up. I saw a man coming back with a light. I saw it was Archibald McFie, railroad guard, that was in the pilot engine. I said to him, “What’s up?” and he said, “I met a man with a red light in his hand—that stopped me.” He said, “The Kellys are up in Glenrowan, and they have them all stuck up there, and have pulled up the line.”

8045. Are you quite positive that he gave you that information—that the Kellys were in Glenrowan?—Yes.

8046. And had them all stuck up?—And had them all stuck up.

8047. What further did he say?—I jumped out, and Mr. Hare put his head out of the window and said, “What is up?” and I told him, and he jumped out with his gun and he went up with the guard and walked up to the pilot engine. Mr. Hare turned round and told me to take half the men to go on the engine; he would go on the pilot engine and let me go on the other. I had Constable Kenny and Constable Arthur with me, and I placed them upon the engine; the three of us, but the engines then were detached.

8048. They were coupled together—Coupled together afterwards. When we arrived there Mr. Hare said, “Get out the horses quick, Kelly.” Mr. Rawlings, a volunteer with us, whom I did not mention, came from Benalla with us.

8049. What was Mr. Rawlings?—A settler there. Mr. Hare went away for a bit. I placed Constable Barry at the back on guard, for fear anyone should come from the back.

8050. Do you know where Mr. Hare went?—Straight down towards the station master’s house; he and Rawlings.

8051. When did you next see Mr. Hare again?—The next I saw of him he was coming back, and Constable Bracken appeared upon the platform.

8052. Just about that time Mr. Hare returned?—About that time he came back. He said, “The Kellys are in Jones’s; surround the house—surround the house.” Those are the very words he said.

8053. That is Bracken?—Yes.

8054. What was done then?—Mr. Hare said, “Come on, men—come on, men.” We all rushed for our arms, and some of the arms were knocked about. There were, I believe, only one or two who had their arms in their hands. I was getting the horses out of the train. We all rushed down.

8055. What do you mean by “all”?—The constables, Mr. Hare, and I am not certain whether Mr. O’Connor did or not, but the black trackers were.

8056. Who left the station first?—I could not say.

8057. You left the station and came down by the road over the culverts?—Yes.

8058. The culverts being between that and what is called the wicket-gate?—Yes.

8059. Now will you carefully describe, as far as you remember, who was with you and near you?—I remember Mr. Rawlings was next to me; Mr. Hare was ahead, with three or four men with him.

8060. What men?—Barry, Gascoigne, Phillips, Arthur; I think that was all the men.

8061. Was Kirkham with him?—I could not say.

8062. Was Mr. O’Connor there?—I could not say.

8063. Just describe the way you proceeded towards the wicket-gate; did you arrive at the wicket gate in the railway fence in about the same order as you now describe?—There was Constable Kenny and two or three, I remember, stopped back picking up their rifles.

8064. You say Mr. Hare was in front and one or two constables?—Yes, and we were behind him.

8065. How far behind?—Four or five yards—it might be ten yards.

8066. Just describe the way Mr. Hare went?—They were making straight for the house.

8067. Did you see them go through this little wicket-gate here?—[pointing to the map]?—No.

8068. Did you go through?—I went through the other gate down to the railway lines straight, and up to that gate, I and Mr. Rawlings and some other man.

8069. You were near the station master’s house?—Yes; the next time I saw Mr. Hare was when the shots commenced to fire.

8070. How far were you from him?—Seven or eight yards.

8071. In what position?—I can show you upon the map.

8072. Were you towards Benalla from him?—No, on his right, towards the railway station.

8073. Were you outside the railway fence then?—I was, certainly.

8074. More in front of the house?—More in front of the house. I was above the corner, west of the railway—west—in a line with the front of the house, because they fell back to the west.

8075. How far was Mr. Hare from you when he was shot?—Six or seven yards.

8076. Who were there beside you when he was shot?—There was Constable Gascoigne, Arthur, Phillips, and some of the black trackers.

8077. Were the black trackers?—Some of them were there.

8078. Were they outside the fence?—Yes, they were there—[pointing to the map].

8079. What black trackers?—Hero, I think, was one of them.

8080. Were you here when Barry was giving his evidence yesterday?—Not the first part.

8081. If Barry swears that Hero was one of the men, do you think he would be right?—I think so; I saw him with Barry afterwards.

8082. Whom else did you see beside those men?—Mr. Rawlings was close to me, near to Mr. Hare.
8083. Were those men far from Mr. Hare when he was shot?—Five or six yards to the left of him, at the first volley.
8084. On either side of him?—Yes.
8085. Who fired the first shot, do you remember?—I remember it was the outlaws.

302

John Kelly, continued.
18th May 1881.

8086. What was your impression when you saw Mr. Hare and the other constables and yourself—what was the impression that they intended to do at that time, if they had not been met with that volley from the hotel?—They were rushing straight for the house.
8087. And the first volley that was fired?—Came from the house. I saw one man appear on the outside, and said, “Come on, you dogs; you cannot hurt us.”
8088. Was that Ned Kelly?—I could not say. Mr. Hare said, “I am shot.” I saw him sticking the gun, after he was shot, between his legs, and re-loading it and firing it out of his hand, like that—[describing same].
8089. You are quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of it.
8090. You are sure he shot?—I am as sure as that I am sitting upon this chair.
8091. You swear that?—I swear it.
8092. Did you see Mr. O’Connor there at that time?—I did not.
8093. When did you see him first?—I heard Mr. Hare. He turned back to me and said, “Kelly, surround the house, for God’s sake, do not let them escape,” and he sang out “O’Connor,” and Mr. O’Connor answered.
8094. What did he say?—He said, “Come on, O’Connor, the beggars have shot me—bring your boys with you; surround the house.”
8095. Did you see Mr. O’Connor at that time?—I did not see Mr. O’Connor at that time.
8096. Where do you suppose he replied from—you say you heard his voice answering?—He was to the right of us, inside the railway fence.
8097. What time did you see Mr. O’Connor first after that?—I will come to that presently. Mr. Hare went back to the railway station, and he came back in a few minutes and said, “Stop firing.” There was a tremendous fog of smoke then from the firing.
8098. “Cease firing” or “Stop firing”?—“Stop firing.”
8099. What reason did he assign?—We heard some women crying out in the house.
8100. You are quite sure that Mr. Hare went back to the station after he was shot and came back again?—Yes, he spoke to me.
8101. Do you remember where he was standing—what position was he in when he said “Stop firing”?—He came back after getting his hand bound.
8102. Whereabout was he?—Behind me.
8103. Where were you at that time?—Behind the corner post.
8104. Still there?—Yes.
8105. Did Mr. Hare’s voice come from the right or the left?—The other men were to the left.
8106. But his voice?—From the station master’s house; he went through that gate and came back through that gate—[pointing to the map.] I asked him to send up some ammunition. I asked Mr. Hare to please send up some ammunition.
8107. After he was wounded?—Yes.
8108. After he came back with his arm bandaged?—Yes.
8109. You did not think it was a serious thing, or you would not have asked your officer to send up ammunition?—I saw him going back to the railway station, and I asked him to send some ammunition—he said he felt weak.
8110. And must return to the station?—Must return to the station.
8111. Did he say “I am losing blood”?—Yes, from the loss of blood.
8112. Could you see him bleeding?—I could, quite plain.
8113. Was it bleeding under the bandage?—I could not say. I was not so close to him.
8114. Did he say “I will have to go back to the railway station”?—Yes, and I said, “Send up some ammunition.”
8115. Did he give you any orders?—He told me “For God’s sake” to “surround the house.”
8116. Was that after he came back from the railway station?—There was not five minutes between the time he was back.
8117. Then he twice repeated the orders to surround the house?—I ran down to the railway station—that is to the station master’s house. I mean it was there Mr. Rawlings brought the ammunition. I found it was the wrong ammunition. It was ammunition for the breech-loading guns.
8118. What breech-loading guns?—That the constables used to use.
8119. For their double-barrelled guns?—Yes.
8120. That was shot ammunition?—Yes, it was—all rifles, only one.
8121. I must ask you to be particular about that, for I intend to examine you particularly about the arms the men had. You know what arms the men under you had?—Yes, I know.
8122. What did you do when you found the ammunition was not right?—Mrs. Stanistreet, the station master’s wife, said, “You should not come here.” I said, “For God’s sake, go out of here—you will get shot here—take the children with you.” She said “Where will I go?”

8123. What did you reply?—I said, “Cannot you go over to MacDonald’s?” She said, “No, I will not go there.” “Well,” I said, “go out in the bush, towards Greta. There will be no danger there.”

8124. Did she go?—I believe she did. I had an overcoat on me, and a sling for the gun. I threw off the overcoat and the sling, and left them there. I had a wideawake hat, and I stuck it in my pocket. I went up then to Mr. O’Connor.

8125. Where was Mr. O’Connor at this time?—In the drain referred to on the map—inside the railway fence.

8126. How long was that after the first volley?—Five or six minutes, I suppose.

8127. Those things were done, and in a hurry?—All in a hurry.

8128. How long was it after Mr. Hare went back with the request to send ammunition that you found Mr. O’Connor in the railway drain?—A few minutes.

8129. Five?—No, I do not think five.

8130. Two?—It might be a couple of minutes.

8131. Between two and five minutes?—Yes.

8132. Had you any conversation with him?—There were two black trackers with him.

8133. Two drains have been mentioned as the position in which Mr. O’Connor was upon that day. Have you been to the place since?—I was there a few days after.

8134. Is the drain within the railway fence?—Yes.

8135. What is the fence composed of between that and the Jones’s house?—There is one rail—a top rail, about four by one.

8136. And how many wires?—Four or five wires; I could not say how many.

8137. Four or five wires and a top rail?—Yes. I asked Mr. O’Connor to come round—that we would place the men.

8138. Did the men come outside of the drain, outside the fence, and go round the house?—Yes, to surround the house. He said no, he would stop there. I went away then around; I went under the culvert—that culvert leading from that drain—[pointing to map]—and came out the other side.

8139. That is the Wangaratta side of the house?—No; the Benalla side.

8140. You went down the drain?—Yes, and crossed under the culvert to the other side.

8141. That is the Benalla side?—Yes.

8142. What constable did you meet first?—Arthur.

8143. What did you say to him?—I asked where the rest of the men were. He pointed out Gascoigne and Phillips.

8144. Where was Gascoigne?—Nearest to the house.

8145. Up the road towards the Sydney road?—At the end of the house on the Benalla side.

8146. That is the south end of the house?—Yes.

8147. Did you go to him?—I went further on, and I found Kirkham.

8148. That was the next man?—That was the next man. He had a black tracker with him.

8149. Is that Hero, do you think?—No.

8150. Then that is two black trackers?—Yes.

8151. You account now for one, and Barry says that one was with Kirkham; that is two?—The next I met with Constable Barry.

8152. That is the third man and two black trackers at the end?—Yes. I told Barry it was a good position, and to keep it. He was behind a tree, and he had a good view of the back of the hotel.

8153. He was still upon the south side?—Yes.

8154. Would that be in a line where the bodies of the two outlaws were found afterwards?—Yes. I gave them some ammunition.

8155. What ammunition?—Martini-Henry.

8156. You did not tell us where you got that ammunition?—I gave him some of my own. I had none from the railway station then. I took Constable Arthur with me. I told them I would go round, and went to the other side of the house.

8157. Where did you find Arthur?—He was the first I found at the back, and where Phillips and Gascoigne were. I took him further back.

8158. To see that the line was completed?—Yes. Constable Kenny I did not see, but he told me after that he had a position to the right of Mr. O’Connor, and a black tracker was with him.

8159. In front of the house?—Yes. I went to the north. When we got round to the north side of the house, crawling up upon our knees, we came upon a rifle and a skull-cap.

8160. When you passed round the house to the north, if you went round that way, you would come against the stockyard’s fence?—Yes, we went right round the fence.

8161. Did you station anyone at the stockyard fence?—No, we went round there, and Constable Arthur.

8162. You found a rifle?—We found a revolving rifle.
8163. Did you or Arthur find it?—Both of us at the same time. Arthur pointed to the rifle, and said, “Look at this,” and I pointed to the silk skull-cap, and said, “Look at this too”; it was all full of blood.
8164. The cap was?—Yes; and there was a pool of blood there, and I said, “My God, some of them have escaped.”
8165. Was that the revolving rifle?—Yes, I have a bullet belonging to it—a six-chambered rifle. I took the rifle, and planted it in the little scrub there for a bit.
8166. Was the blood fresh?—It was fresh upon it. In fact, it stuck to my hand when I took up the rifle.
8167. What occurred then?—We fired a few shots at the top of the house, to let them see we were round there at that side. We saw people passing in and out from the kitchen to the hotel, and heard Mrs. Jones talking about her child being shot. We remained there for some time—I believe, to the best of my knowledge, till between five and six o’clock.
8168. You were at the finding of the rifle. We want to ascertain exactly what you did then. You say you brought Arthur with you, and found the skull-cap?—Yes, and the rifle.
8169. Did you take any proceedings to see that the house was completely surrounded, for that would leave that position already occupied by Steele and all round open—was it open?—It was as bright as day, and no person could come out that we could not see at that side.
8170. It was moonlight?—It was as bright as the day—moonlight.
8171. Was there any firing upon the house from the side where you could see?—There was not from our side.
8172. That is from the north?—That is from the north.
8173. What did you do after you found the rifle?—About half an hour before Phillips came round to me.
8174. Were the constables walking round amongst the trees?—No.
8175. How did they come?—Constable Phillips came round to the front from the railway station, like from that direction—[pointing to map].
8176. Was not Constable Phillips one of the first men?—Yes, he was near Gascoigne, I believe. He told me that he had followed a man that came out with a child in his arms (McHugh), and that he told him they were inside all in iron.
8177. That the outlaws were inside and in iron?—Yes. I said to Phillips, “They are not all in; we have found a rifle and a skull-cap.” The next that came was Sergeant Steele. At the same time, I heard two trains, one coming close down from Wangaratta and the other from Benalla.

John Kelly, continued, 18th May 1881.

8178. You say that the next who came was Steele—did you hear the Wangaratta party coming?—I did. I asked who was there, and they said, “Wangaratta police.”
8179. Did they take up their position, or did you order them to take up a position?—Sergeant Steele and took up a position at the north end, close to the house.
8180. Is that the tree that stands close to the building that is there now?—Yes, he had a full view of the back door. I ran down to meet Mr. Sadleir when I heard the train coming in, and he was standing upon the platform when I went down.
8181. The Wangaratta party then strengthened your party?—Yes, and took a position.
8182. Who told them to take a position?—I told them to go further up. I told Mr. Sadleir the circumstances of the matter, and how the thing stood.
8183. After you saw Sergeant Steele opposite the door, and saw that his men were made up at the rear of the house, you then went to meet the train?—I went to meet the train.
8184. And Mr. Sadleir was there?—Yes.
8185. Whom did you see first?—Mr. Sadleir.
8186. What did you say to him?—He asked me where Mr. O’Connor was, and I said, “He is down here, in a hole”; and he said, “Take me down and show me where he is.” I went down. Mr. Sadleir said, “Come on after us”; and I told him some of them would get shot if they did not come single file.
8187. If they came in a body they would be shot?—They would; because the outlaws—at least I believe it to be them—were firing out of the two front windows. I walked down the drain with Mr. Sadleir, and within ten yards of Mr. O’Connor, and Mr. Sadleir said, “Come here, O’Connor”; and he said, “No, you come here.” Mr. Sadleir turned round to me and said, “You go and place the men wherever you think they are required.”
8188. Whom had Mr. Sadleir beside you and him?—Constable O’Dwyer then came up.
8189. After the conversation?—After the conversation.
8190. Mr. Sadleir told you to go and place the men?—Yes, where I thought they were required. I went round with a man.
8191. What man?—Sergeant Whelan.
8192. You went round with his relief party?—Yes.
8193. Who were the relief party?—Mr. Sadleir’s party.
8194. Who were they?—Whelan, Senior-Constable Smyth, Milan, Ryan, Wallace, Wilson, Kelly, Reilly.
8195. That is the big Kelly?—Yes; and one or two others.
8196. Did you place those men?—I did.
8197. All round the house?—Constable Kelly I took the furthest round.
8198. That is the man now stationed at Benalla?—Yes.
8199. Where do you call the furthest round?—By the stockyards.
8200. At the back of the stockyards?—Yes. Not quite at the back, a little to the Benalla side. I went round about again to the north side.
8201. Were not you afraid of being shot in going round?—No; I kept back a good bit, so as to avoid getting shot.
8202. And to see the men all in front of you?—Yes.
8203. You could see the men?—I could see the men. I came round to the railway fence.
8204. You came right round the house?—Worked round the house.
8205. Who was the next to Kelly?—Sergeant Steele’s men were next to him, Constable Moore.
8206. Was Sergeant Steele opposite the back door, behind the tree, where you have already said he was?—Yes, he was there.
8207. Was Riordan’s son shot at this time?—No.
8208. Who was next towards the railway station?—Phillips or Arthur. I am not certain. They were behind me then.
8209. Were they outside?—They were outside Sergeant Steele.
8210. Were they outside the railway fence or inside it?—Outside it.
8211. That is Jones’s; outside of the railway fence?—Yes.
8212. Did you come inside the railway fence?—I did not.
8213. When you came round did you visit Mr. O’Connor again?—No; I never went near him. I never spoke a word to him from that day to this.
8214. Did you visit him at all between Mr. Hare’s leaving by the train for Benalla, after his second return to the railway station, at the time you took Mr. Sadleir to him?—No; never saw him or spoke to him.
8215. Did you go inside the railway fence from the time that Mr. Hare left you until you went down to the railway station to meet your officer, Mr. Sadleir?—I did, I remember now.
8216. Where did you go?—I went to the railway station, and took a rifle down with me.
8217. That bloody rifle?—Yes.
8218. And the skull-cap?—And the skull-cap; I had that upon me.
8219. Where did you leave it?—I had it upon me—the cap—as I had lost my hat at this time, that I had stuck in my pocket.
8220. When you went all round by Mr. Sadleir’s instructions, did you report to Mr. Sadleir that the house was invested?—No.
8221. How soon afterwards did you report to your officer that you had completed his order?—I do not remember reporting it at all.
8222. When did you next see Mr. Sadleir?—The next I saw him was after the capture of Ned Kelly, I remember that now.
8223. Where did you see him then?—On the railway station; it was about seven o’clock. It was when Ned Kelly was brought to the railway station.
8224. How soon was it after you got the order to surround the house?—About two hours.
8225. Were you present at the capture of Ned Kelly?—I was.
8226. Will you tell the Commission the circumstances?—I was away down at a tree in the railway fence.

305

8227. North or south of the house?—To the north-east, I think.
8228. You mean the Wangaratta side?—Yes. Guard Dowsett was some distance further up from me.
8229. That is the guard of the railway?—That is the guard of the railway. It was about seven o’clock, or it might have been after, when some figure like a blackfellow appeared up in the bush. I heard a man—one of the men—sing out, “Look at this fellow.”
8230. Where were you stationed then?—I was behind a tree, on the north-east side of the house.
8231. And Dowsett was coming up towards you?—He was away to the right of me.
8232. Advancing towards you?—No, behind a log. I sang out, “Challenge him, and if he do not answer you, shoot him.” It was Constable Arthur. With that, he pulled out a revolver, and fired at him.
8233. Who did?—Ned Kelly.
8234. What happened?—Three or four of the constables had fired at him, and he advanced. On coming towards the house, in the direction of Jones’s, there were several shots fired at him; they had no effect. I sang out, “Look out, he is bullet-proof.”
8235. Would that advance of his, coming towards the house where the outlaws were, bring him just in the direction where Sergeant Steele was stationed?—Yes, just in the direction where Steele was. Dowsett was firing at him, too, with his revolver. He was behind a big fallen tree, and I got up alongside him. He moved up and had his hand outside the tree (Ned Kelly), and Dowsett said, “There is a good show for you.” His hand was hanging out a bit.

8236. To do what?—To shoot at it; he had a tree between us, and the hand hanging out a bit. I fired at him, and Dowsett said it was a little to the right.

8237. Was it a bullet you had?—Yes, a Martini carbine.

8238. You were to the right, he said?—Yes, I fired again, and Dowsett said, “By God, you have hit him.” After that he moved over to a fallen log, at the Jones’s side of the log. Sergeant Steele came up from where he was, and I moved on up to them, beside Constable Bracken, and I said,” Come on, lads, we will rush him.” Sergeant Steele popped out and fired at him—came close up and fired at him.

8239. Did he hit him?—I believe so—I could not say.

8240. Did you see him stagger?—I fired two shots, and with that he dropped upon his haunches, like that—[explaining the same].

8241. If you saw a man fire two shots at another man who was standing up straight before the shots, and he falls then, is it reasonable to suppose it is from the effect of the shot that he staggered and fell?—Yes.

8242. It would be?—Yes, I considered so. Sergeant Steele ran and got him by the wrist and under the beard.

8243. Then he had not his helmet on?—The helmet was on; Sergeant Steele said not, but I say it was.

8244. How did he get his beard?—He had him by the neck; it was not the beard. He had him by the neck some way.

8245. Was he lying upon the ground or half way?—Half way against the log, that way—[half lying down].

8246. Your opinion is that he had that helmet on when Sergeant Steele seized him?—Yes because when I pulled the helmet off I said, “By God, it is Ned.”

8247. You pulled off the helmet?—I pulled off the helmet, and Steele held it up, and said, “I told you I would be at his death.” There were three or four gentlemen and others, and some constables came up then.

8248. Did you see Ned Kelly rolling over upon Steele?—I threw him over upon him.

8249. In that little sandy gutter?—Yes.

8250. Had he his armour on at that time?—He had.

8251. Was his helmet off at that time you threw him upon Steele?—No, it was not. We took the armour off and searched him. I searched him, and Dr. Nicholson and I took the armour to the railway station, and Sergeant Steele and some other men took him.

8252. How was the armour fastened on?—With bolts and nuts.

8253. Was it fastened over the shoulder?—With straps.

8254. What sort of straps?—About two inches wide.

8255. Made of what?—Leather.

8256. And buckled?—And buckled.

8257. Leather or green hide?—Leather, regular straps.

8258. Were there any saddle straps about it?—I do not think there were.

8259. Did you see Dr. Nicholson examine him?—I did.

8260. What wounds had he?—Several wounds.

8261. Can you describe them?—Wounds in his arm and all along his thighs.

8262. Which of those were fresh in your opinion?—The ones on the legs seemed fresh.

8263. You say that you found the rifle covered with blood?—Yes; and he told me himself, in the presence of Phillips, that he got shot in the hand and the foot in the first volley fired by Mr. Hare’s party.

8264. Then he was shot in the hand?—Yes, in the elbow.

8265. And that it was a pellet; he would have been shot by the shot gun?—I could not say.

8266. I ask you if he was shot at the first fire, and if a pellet made that wound, he would have been shot by a shot gun that belonged to the first party that came up there?—Yes; he told me that he walked into the hotel, and asked Joe Byrne to follow him out, and that he went out at the back and Byrne did not follow. He said, “If Byrne came out to load my rifle I would be able to pick any of you off at 600 yards.”

8267. Did he allude to the rifle?—To his own rifle.

8268. Did he allude to the revolvers, rifle, or another rifle?—The revolving rifle. He had no other rifle. He told me that was his own.

8269. Did you have to carry him down to the railway station?—No; I took his arm; I and Dr. Nicholson.

8270. He walked?—They took him between them.

POLICE.

2 Q

John Kelly, continued.

18th May 1881.

8271. Was not there danger in going along with him?—There was a bullet dropped between Dr. Nicholson and me when we were taking the armour off, fired from the back.

8272. I understood, in the evidence that you gave, that you stated that you had been recommended to 8273. Did you join the Customs Department upon the recommendation of your officer?—I did.
8274. Where were you sent for customs duty?—Up to Hamilton.
8275. In the Western district?—In the Western district.
8276. When you heard of the death of Kennedy —?—He was not shot at that time.
8277. When you heard of the death of your comrades, did you volunteer to leave the Customs Department and go back to that district?—I was not in the Customs Department then I was on leave here, in Melbourne.
8278. Did you volunteer to go back to the district?—Yes I threw up my leave, and went back to Benalla. I was then stationed at Wood’s Point.
8279. After you left the Customs Department, had you joined the North-Eastern district prior to your volunteering to go there before your time of leave expired?—No; I was sent back to the station at Wood’s Point after leaving the Customs.
8280. You were on leave of absence at the time of the murders?—I was on leave of absence at the time of the murders.
8281. And you were asked to go back and not take out your leave?—No; I went back voluntarily.
8282. Did you go to Hedi?—Not at that time; we went through Hedi.
8283. Where did you go to?—The King River.
8284. Was not that the most exposed position of the whole service?—Yes.
8285. Did not it take you amongst all the Kellys and Quinns up there?—Yes.
8286. And the most exposed position of the lot?—Yes.
8287. You stated that you came to Whorouly?—Yes.
8288. Was not that also a most exposed position?—It was.
8289. When you came to Glenrowan with Mr. Hare’s party, you were the senior officer of the Victorian police—at least you were constable of police, and were senior of the police force under Mr. Hare?—Yes.
8290. After the capture of Ned Kelly, did you receive any instructions to go to any particular place—to go to Greta?—I did.
8291. What was the position of Greta?—I was going to be sent to live in the hotel with three constables.
8292. Had you been just lately married at the time?—Yes.
8293. How long had you been married at the time?—Two or three months.
8294. Did you always show the utmost readiness to go to the front in the most exposed positions—Hedi, and all those places?—I did.
8295. Do you recollect meeting me about Hedi by yourself?—I do.
8296. In the most exposed part up there?—Yes.
8297. Alone, and by yourself?—Yes.
8298. And I asked you what brought you here?—Yes, I remember that.
8299. And my saying to you, “Do not you think you had better have some men with you,” thinking it queer you should be by yourself in that exposed position?—There was one constable with me then.
8300. You recollect that?—I do.
8301. Did you ever show the slightest reluctance to do your duty, or go to the post of danger?—I did not.
8302. You asked for the record sheet. I believe. I did not see the object of it before, when I think I see it now. Did you refuse to go to Greta?—I told Mr. Sadleir I did not like to be sent there. I was after giving evidence in the police court. I was the only member of the force who gave evidence against him in the Beechworth court at that time, and I was advised by people friendly to me to leave the district.
8303. Do you know that after the murder by the Kellys, that so important was the evidence required of McIntyre, that he was ordered away down here, so as to be available for the service?—Yes, he was sent to the depot.
8304. Was he ordered here for his own safety?—For his own safety.
8305. And for the protection of Crown evidence?—That is what I understand.
8306. When you were ordered to Greta, were you one and the only constable examined as against Ned Kelly?—At the police court in Beechworth.
8307. Was the Greta station then the most dangerous position for you to be sent to?—I think it was the most in the district.
8308. Is that the nearest to Kelly’s place?—Yes.
8309. To Lloyd’s place?—Yes, to Tom Lloyd’s place.
8310. Is it nearest to people who are accused of being the most active sympathizers?—Yes.
8311. Right in the very centre?—Yes.
8312. Was it personal fear, what is called cowardice, that made you ask of your officer to be sent to anywhere but Greta?—It was not. Mr. Sadleir told me that Mr. Nicolson wanted a report from me, to ask my reason for not going there. I think my report is upon the 16th of September.
8313. What did you report?—If the report could be produced I should like it.
8314. You can say what it was—give the general tenor of your report?—I think I have a copy of it—[handing in a paper which was read by the Chairman as follows:—]

(Copy.)

North-Eastern Police District, Benalla Station, 16th September 1880.
Report of Senior-Const. Kelly relative to being transferred to Greta.

I beg to inform the superintendent that my reason for asking him not to transfer me to the station referred to is the prominent part which I took in the capture and destruction of the Kelly gang, and the well known feeling which exist against me there. I am the only member of the force in this district who gave evidence against Ned Kelly, and I have been advised, by many persons friendly to me, to endeavor to get removed from this district, as after the execution of Edward Kelly, there will be a much more bitter feeling of hatred against certain members of the force—myself in particular; and that sooner or later some serious or fatal violence will be committed on me. I do not desire to avoid going to live at Greta from any personal fear of such consequences; but I think that the ill-feeling which exist against me there would be a serious obstacle to the efficient performance of my duties. My being sent there will be looked upon as a challenge to the friends and sympathizers of the families connected with the outlaws, and will result as above referred to. I may remind the superintendent that, being on leave at the time of the murders of the police at the Wombat, I at once threw up my leave and returned to Benalla, and went into the bush with a party of men, and have been for nearly two (2) years exposed to the hardships of the search. Moreover, there is no place at Greta at which I can live, except Mrs. O’Brien’s public-house. Her position respecting the Kellys is pretty well known, and I should receive but little consideration from her. I therefore trust that I shall be permitted to perform my duties in some locality where I can place my wife in a suitable home.

JOHN KELLY, Senior-Coast. 1825.

8315. Did you get any reply to that report?—I did, after about six weeks, I think.
8316. And you did not go to Greta at all?—No; I was transferred to the Western district.
8317. What was the nature of the reply?—I never got only just the order for the transfer. I know nothing of the correspondence that took place.
8318. Did you consider that you were well-treated by being shifted from the place—that it was in kindness to you?—Yes.
8319. That you were shifted?—Yes.
8320. You did not think it would militate against you in any way at any future time?—I did not.
8321. If there was a report sent that your request to be relieved amounted to cowardice, would you be astonished at that?—I would.
8322. And if a report of that sort were sent in, would it be a bar to your promotion, do you believe?—I believe so.
8323. Did you ever hear what the tenor of the report was?—Never—never a word about it. In this case it is necessary to tell you what the report was. I will read it for you presently.
8324. When records are made in the sheet reflecting on a constable, have they an opportunity at the time of knowing of those?—They have not.
8325. Suppose it were a report unfavorable to the conduct of the men, they have no opportunity of knowing that those records have been made?—No, none.
8326. That record sheet of records made from time to time always remains in the office, does it?—I believe one is in the superintendent’s office and one in the chief’s.
8327. Suppose any time a constable has a record made to his disadvantage—say two years ago—would that record militate against his future promotion in time to come?—I believe it would.
8328. For all time to come would it weigh with the officer who had to deal with the constable’s case in after life: is that so?—Yes, I believe it would.
8329. So that a record of a damaging character being made against a constable, he has no opportunity to explain any particular conduct on his part which induced the officer to make the record?—No; I never heard of a man having an opportunity to make a record.
8330. So that the men are really at the mercy of the officers?—Yes.
8331. So that if the officers are so dishonest as to make a false record of a man’s conduct it would remain upon the record sheet, and it would never come to his own knowledge?—I believe I have heard of a constable applying for his record sheet to know what was in it, and I believe it was read to him in the office.
8332. I suppose a member of the police force would never apply for a record sheet without he had some reasonable grounds to suppose that some record had been made to his disadvantage?—Yes, exactly.

The Chairman.—We will conduct the business in our own way. You must not interfere. The simple result of these interferences will be that we will sit in private and not allow any stranger to be present. We have found that these interferences with the witness have very seriously altered his tone before the Commission, not in this case but in other cases; and we have it in serious consideration whether we will not sit in private and get the information the best way we can.

Mr. Sadleir.—I beg your pardon. The reason I spoke was that I saw you bow to me, and I understood it to be a permission to speak.

The Chairman.—I beg your pardon; it was a mistake. (To the witness.) This report of yours is dated 16th September 1880. Then, “25/10/80. The senior-constable, up to the date of the capture of the Kelly gang, showed himself very efficient. Subsequently, when told off to take charge of Greta station, with three constables, he pleaded to be excused from the fear of personal risk. Another constable undertook the duty, and the senior-constable’s transfer was recommended as a mark of my disapproval of his conduct.” That is signed by Superintendent Sadleir. Do you know if any other constables have asked to be relieved?—I heard that Senior-Constable Johnon asked; I do not know of my own personal knowledge; and Sergeant Steele, I heard too that he applied to leave.

8334. You heard this?—Yes.

8335. For what reason?—I do not know.

8336. Have you ever heard of anybody desiring to be relieved because his life was in danger—a constable?—I did not.

8337. Did you consider that the place was one of peculiar risk (where you were ordered to go to) to yourself personally?—I did.

8338. I think you gave evidence that it was right in the centre of the disaffected district?—Yes.

8339. Within a very short distance of Kelly’s house?—Yes.

8340. And within a very short distance of Lloyd’s?—Yes.

8341. And McAuliffe’s?—Yes.

8342. And other sympathizers immediately round?—Yes.

8343. And that Mrs. O’Brien, the keeper of the house, was in your opinion a sympathizer to some extent?—Yes.

8344. Is the country such that you could be waylaid and shot at any time?—At any time. If you go outside the door they could have an opportunity of shooting you.

8345. It is heavily timbered country?—Yes.

8346. And away from Greta you get into ranges where men could be sheltered?—Yes.

8347. You, heard the Chairman read the report entered in your record sheet?—I heard it.

8348. Are you thoroughly seized of the importance of it; is it so clear to your mind that you can now express an opinion of its importance to you?—It is damaging to me.

8349. In the future would that militate against your position in the police force with the officers?—Yes.

8350. Is that charge cowardice?—I consider it is.

8351. Would you consider it a charge of cowardice?—I would.

8352. Do you know that a lot of men have been discharged for cowardice in the service?—I do not.

8353. Do you know of Constable Baker discharged for not taking a blackfellow?—I do not.

8354. Do you know that cowardice of that character is a subject of dismissal?—I know it is.

8355. Do you know that if not dismissed it is the severest charge against you that could be got?—Yes.

8356. If an officer going to recommend you for promotion saw that charge in your record sheet would it not make him hesitate before he recommended you for promotion?—I believe he would.

8357. Do not you know he would?—Yes.

8358. You say in your application to be relieved from service at Greta, that it was not from fear of personal violence—you say it is not “from any personal fear of such consequences, but I think that the ill-feeling which exists against me there would be a serious obstacle to the efficient performance of my duties. My being sent there will be looked upon as a challenge to come and assassinate you”; that is a challenge to come and assassinate you?—Yes, I believe it would be.

8359. Is not the murder of the police at Wombat considered a dastardly assassination, that the men had not a show?—No, they had not.

8360. Is there anything to prevent them assassinating you, if they were the same ill-disposed people at Greta, with the like impunity?—There is nothing to prevent them.

8361. Nothing to prevent their going behind a tree and shooting you if you were there?—Yes.

8362. Was not that place at that particular time a place of particular danger from the barracks being in the public-house, where the public had access at all hours up to a certain hour of the night?—It was so looked upon.

8363. Would it not be a much more dangerous place as being a challenge them than if the barracks were in an ordinary place?—Yes, I believe so.

8364. At the Greta hotel would it not be possible for men to come in at the back door and front door up to any hour of the day or night when the public had a right to access to the licensed house?—Yes, at any time.

8365. From your knowledge of the district do you think there is any place in the district where there are more ill-disposed people likely to assassinate you than in that district?—I believe it is the worst place in the colony.

8366. I want to ascertain exactly the discipline of the police force and the feeling amongst the men—was there, to your knowledge, amongst the men a feeling that any officers (I do not particularize officers) would have a down upon and would not advance the prospects in the force of men who had been in Mr. Hare’s party at Glenrowan?—I believe there was an ill feeling against Mr. Hare’s party with some of the men.

8367. Which of the men did you say?—Against Mr. Hare’s party of men—for his selecting all his own men.
8368. Feeling on whose part?—Some of the other constables. They were Bourke men.
8369. You say they were Bourke men principally in Mr. Hare’s party?—Yes.
8370. Did the same feeling exist amongst the officers; was it stated to exist amongst the officers?—I do not know.
8371. You have no opinion upon that matter?—I have no opinion upon that matter.
8372. Then if it is stated that there was ill feeling and that the men’s promotion would not be ensured that belonged to this particular party at Glenrowan, and that they would not be recommended for promotion, would that be true or false?—I cannot say.
8373. Would it be true or false, in your opinion. The question I ask you is this: what did you, in your own mind, consider that order to Greta was for. Did you think it was to ensure your promotion or as a punishment?—Mr. Sadleir told me that he was going to get me advanced, and that by not going there I should lose all.
8374. You got that notice?—He told me that repeatedly.
8375. At what time?—I think it was in the stable one morning.
8376. When?—Before I put that application in.
8377. Are you advanced or put back in the service?—I am neither. I am in the same position.
8378. You are a constable in charge of a district in the west?—At Terang.
8379. Then you have not received any promotion for your service?—I have not.
8380. In any way?—In any way.
8381. And it would depend upon the officer recommending you there?—Yes, I think it would depend upon the officer.
8382. You are in Mr. Chambers’s district now, are you?—Yes.
8383. In order to ensure your promotion when you change your district, have you to make way, as it is called, make your character known to the new officer?—I suppose he will go by the record sheet.
8384. Have you not, in going to a fresh district, to prove by your conduct that you are worthy?—You have.
8385. And that puts a man back in the service?—No doubt.
8386. Then with regard to changes, if a man is stationed in the country and he applies for a change, is it considered promotion or the reverse if he is sent down to the depot here?—If he applies for a change it would be at his own request he was sent down.
8387. Supposing it is not at his own request he is transferred from the district, is it considered an advantageous station or the reverse to be sent from a country district down to the barracks?—They consider it a punishment, so I found.
8388. Is that so looked upon in the service?—Yes.
8389. It is not at all events a sign of promotion?—No.

8390. You say you knew how the men of Mr. Hare’s party were armed. How many of the party had double shot guns?—Only one.
8391. Who was that?—Canny.
8392. No officer?—Mr. Hare had a double shot gun.
8393. Then if the doctor’s evidence gave a sworn statement that the wound in the hand with which disabled Kelly from shooting was from a pellet, which is similar to the one used in the cartridges by the police, and that it was in the early part of the fight, must it have been either from the gun of Mr. Hare or Constable Canny?—Yes.
8394. Must have been?—Must have been.
8395. No other man had a double shot gun?—No other man had a double shot gun.
8396. Have you ever opened the cartridges with which those guns were loaded?—I have.
8397. What is the description of the charge?—Eighteen pellets and the wire cartridge.
8398. The wire cartridge is the casing of the pellets?—Yes, there are eighteen in one. We used pellets in one, and wire in the other.
8399. Are there not pellets in both?—Those are BB shot.
8400. Not so large as the other?—No.
8401. If the doctor says that the wounds inflicted on Ned Kelly were not recent, had been done prior to the shooting by Steele, and that he had a wound in the arm, and it was effected by a pellet similar to the one the police were armed with, would you say it was one of the two persons that were armed with the gun that did it?—Yes, certainly.
8402. How many men fired at him, when he stumbled at the tree, with double-barrelled guns—do you know?—None but Sergeant Steele.
8403. Was Sergeant Steele armed with a double-barrelled gun too?—Yes.
8404. Was he armed all through that day with the double-barrelled gun?—Yes.
8405. To your knowledge?—Yes.

John Kelly, continued.
18th May 1881.
8407. Do you think that if a woman swears she was shot at by Constable Steele, and that the bullet went through her shawl and cut a bullet hole through, Sergeant Steele being armed with a double-barrelled gun and wire cartridges, could that be true?—It could not.

8408. It could not be true?—No.

8409. Who was the first constable you saw shoot Ned Kelly, when he was coming down that day?—I think Constable Arthur.

8410. And he fired more than one shot at him?—He did.

8411. Did Ned Kelly attempt to shoot him?—He did, he fired at him.

8412. Could you ascertain in the morning about how many constables fired the first volley against the outlaws, when they fired?—I could not say how many fired.

8413. Did you fire?—I did.

8414. Is it true that you went round the station during the whole time that elapsed between the leaving of Mr. Hare in the train, and the taking charge of Mr. Sadleir?—Yes, I went round.

8415. All that time you have sworn that to your knowledge Mr. O’Connor was inside the railway fence, in the drain that you have mentioned?—Yes.

8416. Do you say that from not seeing him elsewhere or, how do you arrive at the knowledge?—I never had seen him at any other place all the time.

8417. Then you only say that he was there from the fact of your not seeing him?—Yes.

8418. Had you any knowledge whether you were the responsible officer in charge from anything that was said to you from the time of Mr. Hare’s departure till you reported the position to Mr. Sadleir?—I considered that I was. I had all responsibility, I never looked upon Mr. O’Connor except just as in charge of the blacks.

8419. You felt the responsibility was upon you?—Yes.

8420. When Mr. Hare called upon Mr. O’Connor and the black boys to come forward, that he was wounded, and you saw your officer retreat or go away from the wounds; if Mr. O’Connor had then and there come forward and taken the command, would you have accepted his orders?—I would assist.

8421. Would you have accepted his orders at once?—I would.

8422. Therefore it was as a matter of fact, because he did not do so, that you, believing you were in command, took the steps you did take?—Yes.

8423. Did the men ask you when you were going round whether you or Mr. O’Connor were in charge?—No.

8424. They accepted your orders?—Yes, and never asked.

8425. Do you recollect when Sergeant Steele advanced from Wangaratta with his party and came and took his position in the nearest post to the house?—Yes.

8426. He was the nearest constable?—Yes, to the house at the side.

8427. Was any firing going on then?—There was not.

8428. Was Sergeant Steele then your senior officer?—Yes.

8429. He would be, in fact, in charge of you?—I consider so.

8430. The moment he came upon the ground and you reported to him the position of affairs, by the rules of the service he was in charge of the party until Mr. Sadleir came, and by his position took the charge from him?—He did not wait for the report, for I understood he knew all about it.

8431. Who?—Sergeant Steele; he went straight and took a position. Constable Bracken was with him.

8432. That was the constable that went and brought him there?—Yes.

8433. And must have told him that the Kellys were there?—Yes.

8434. He went up at once to the front of the house, in the closest position?—Yes.

8435. Did you communicate to him the position of affairs?—No, I did not.

8436. Did you tell him that there were women in the house?—No.

8437. Had you at that time discovered Ned Kelly’s rifle?—I had.

8438. Did you tell him you were afraid one of them had gone and you had the arms?—I did not; he did not wait for a second.
ammunition to the men surrounding the house, except on one occasion?—I did; I gave Constable Barry ammunition twice.

8446. How much?—I think I gave him a package once; I do not know how many the other time.

8447. Do you recollect Mr. Gaunson examining you in the court house, I being present, as to Mr. O’Connor’s position on that occasion?—I do.

8448. What did you tell the court?—I told them the same as I have sworn here.

8449. How many rounds of ammunition did you fire?—I could not say how many.

8450. Were not you asked that at Beechworth?—I believe I was.

8451. Do you recollect what you said?—I do not, really.

8452. Did any superior officer to you go round the constables to see that they were all right at any time during the day?—I do not remember seeing any of them.

8453. You have one statement there in your report, where you say, “Moreover, there is no place at Greta at which I can live, except Mrs. O’Brien’s public house. Her position respecting the Kellys is well known, and I should receive but little consideration from her.” What do you mean by “her position respecting the Kellys”?—I always took her to be a sympathizer.

8454. You know that the police are now stationed in her house?—Yes, I do.

8455. Then from that fact, and from your opinion, you consider it a very unwise step to place the police in the house of an enemy, you might say?—I think so.

8456. How did it become necessary to station the police in her house?—There are no quarters there, I believe.

8457. Were there any quarters there before that?—I do not think so.

8458. Do you recollect the time the Kellys were stated to have bought ammunition in Melbourne?—I heard about it.

8459. Do you recollect the time?—I do not.

8460. About that time do you remember reading in the papers and elsewhere that the Kellys brought ammunition?—I remember reading about it.

8461. Do you know that Mrs. O’Brien came up in the train in which they were supposed to be bringing ammunition; did you hear that?—I did not.

8462. Did you hear that Mr. Sadleir either searched or had her luggage searched, believing that she had the ammunition?—I did not hear. I was up in Hedi ten months.

8463. In going round to the police at Glenrowan, did you hear any of them volunteer to rush Mrs. Jones’s hotel?—I did. There was Constable Armstrong, Constable Dixon; and Armstrong in particular spoke to me about it. I told Mr. Sadleir, and he said he did not see why he should sacrifice any man’s life for the two ruffians inside.

8464. Did they explain to you any plan by which they would rush the house?—No, they did not.

8465. Then you are not in a position to say whether it was a practicable plan or not?—No.

8466. Have you any idea of your own about it?—Only just to rush right in—some men at the back and some at the front, and some were bound to get shot.

8467. Some of them would have been shot?—Yes.

8468. If you were left to your own free will would you have rushed the place?—I would, with the men.

8469. You are of the same opinion now, knowing all the circumstances. If the same was to be repeated you would take a part in the rush?—I would.

8470. What time of the day was that?—About two o’clock.

8471. In answering Mr. Hall’s question, do you mean to say you would rush at any time during the day?—No, not when all the prisoners were in, but after they left it.

8472. Do you know that Cherry was wounded inside after the rest of the people were left?—I heard the prisoners say. I was with Mr. Sadleir when he questioned them, after they came out. And the two McCormacks and Delaneys we examined, the two of them, and they pointed out where those two were lying down.

8473. What two?—Dan Kelly and Steve Hart.

8474. The question I ask is: did the people detained by the Kellys, when they came out, tell you that Martin Cherry was lying wounded in the premises?—I believe they did, but I am not certain.

8475. Can you say whether your officer knew, from any information given him in your presence, that Martin Cherry was in the house and the outlaws?—I could not say. I heard he was in the back kitchen.

8476. Who told you that?—I do not know.

8477. At what time in the day did you hear that?—About two o’clock, I think.

8478. When you heard he was in the back kitchen, did you hear whether he was wounded or not?—I did not.

8479. Here is your evidence, Mr. Gaunson examining—is this correct, “I asked Mr. O’Connor”—is that your signature?—Yes.

8480. “I asked Mr. O’Connor if he would come round out of the ditch; he did not do so, he remained in the ditch.” Is that correct?—That is correct.

8481. Has any constable in the district got promotion for his services that you are aware of?—No.

8482. Have they got better stations?—Yes, there are some senior-constables—Flood and Mullane.

8483. Have they got promotion since the Kelly business?—No, they got it during that time.

8484. Is there any rank between senior-constable and sergeant?—Yes, there is.
§485. What?—Sixpence a day extra and a stripe extra.
§486. Supposing that you were promoted now, what would be the next promotion that you could possibly get?—Second-class sergeant.
§487. Is that the same as Sergeant Steele?—That is the same as Sergeant Steele.
§488. Is there any such thing as good-service pay without getting a stripe?—There is sixpence a day after ten years' service.
§489. Have you ten years' service?—I have twenty, next January.
§490. Then, without giving you the stripe for service, it would have been quite possible for your officer to give you extra pay without giving you promotion?—Without giving me promotion I could not get it.
§491. You are now a senior-constable?—Yes.
§492. Can you get extra pay after the ten years' service without being entitled to that pay by the extra stripe?—I would get it without the extra stripe.
§493. Did you get that?—Yes.
§494. Then you got the sixpence a day extra?—I have.
§495. When did you get it?—I think it is four or five years in existence.
§496. But you did not get any promotion, either in pay or in the service, since the Kelly business?—No, none whatever.
§497. The only promotion you got was change to the westward into a new officer's district?—Yes.
§498. Are you aware of any constable of any district, or of any senior-constable, since the capture of the Kellys having got promotion in the district for his services or from other causes?—I do not think any of us have been promoted.
§499. Then promotion has been at a standstill in the district?—Yes.
§500. Nobody has been promoted over your head had you remained in the district?—No.
§501. You say the only promotion you got was removal to another district; do you consider that a promotion?—It is no promotion; there is nothing extra for it.
§502. I gather from your answer to Mr. Graves it is rather a disadvantage to go into a strange place and under a strange officer who does not know you; you do not look upon that as promotion?—It is no promotion.
§503. You are two months married?—Nearly twelve months.
§504. But two months married at the time you were ordered to Greta?—Yes.
§505. Putting yourself out of the question, would Greta be a desirable station for your wife at a public-house?—It would not; I would not take her there.
§506. Would it involve your paying for lodgings and for your wife?—Yes, I had to do it.
§507. Did you tell that to your officer?—Yes.
§508. Did you tell him you were married and that there was no place for your wife at Greta?—Yes, he asked me when I came back. I was down here on leave, and Mr. Sadleir asked me and called me into the office to tell me about the transfer. He said, "Have you brought up your wife?" and I said, "No"; and he said, "I am very glad you have not for a bit, for I want you to go to Greta with three constables."
§509. Then you did not tell him you could not bring her to Greta?—No, I did not.
§510. By Mr. Sadleir.—When news of Sherritt's death came to us, was it not in the afternoon, not in the morning.—When was that?
§511. On Sunday the 27th. I have got it that you said it was in the morning; was not it in the afternoon?—No, I said in the afternoon.
§512. Then I misheard you. I will come direct to the matter—you heard it from Mr. Hare?—I heard it from Mr. Hare.
§513. It was a slip of the tongue of the witness, no one else seemed to notice it?—I went over to you to come over to the telegraph office in the morning over another matter.
§514. I will fake the order of the evidence as it was given for cross-examination. You said you went up to rush the house with Mr. Hare—what would the probable consequences have been of rushing a house with men inside armed?—We did not know they were armed.
§515. You said that, later in the day, if the house were rushed some men's lives would have been lost?—Yes, I believe they would.
§516. Was it necessary to lose any lives?—I do not think it was.
§517. Would it have been generalship—I ask you as a sub-officer of experience—would it have been generalship of any officer to lose lives unnecessarily?—I do not think it would.
§518. You would not approve of a rush?—No.
§519. Is that really what you wanted to say?—That is it.
§520. At what hour did you find the rifle with blood upon it?—About four o'clock I think, to the best of my belief.
§521. Do not you remember coming to me and telling me about that?—I told you upon the platform, when you came there.

John Kelly, continued,
18th May 1881.
8522. Was it then you told me about the rifle?—Yes.
8523. I thought it was subsequent?—No.
8524. Can you account for Constable Barry not knowing that there were innocent persons in the house. He said that positively. Can you understand how any man could be ignorant of that?—In the first set off I thought they were all their own friends that were there, except Mr. Jones's family.
8525. By the Commission.—Do you mean by that sympathizers?—Yes.
8526. By Mr. Sadleir.—Can you understand at the time I arrived, from half-past five to six, how any man belonging to the first party could be ignorant that there were innocent persons in the house?—I did not tell him.
8527. Was it not taken for granted by every one on the ground that there were a number of persons there not outlaws?—Could not I have what?
8528. Constable Barry said yesterday that he did not know all day long till the prisoners escaped at ten o'clock that they were in the house. Can you understand how any man could be ignorant of that fact?—I do not understand the question.

8529. Constable Barry was one of the constables upon the ground from the first start with Mr. Hare?—Yes.
8530. In his evidence he stated that until ten o'clock, when the prisoners were allowed out, he had no knowledge that they were upon the premises?—He would hear the women screaming.
8531. No doubt he told the truth, but can you understand how it was that he was in ignorance?—I cannot understand it.
8532. By the Commission.—How soon did you know there were innocent people in the house?—When Phillips came round to me.
8533. What time was that?—Just before Sergeant Steele came—about five o'clock, I suppose.
8534. How long was Sergeant Steele there before Mr. Sadleir came?—Not more than five or six minutes.
8535. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did not you explain fully to me the position of everything when I came?—Yes.
8536. You mentioned one part of the building that was not secured?—Yes.
8537. And you heard my direction to Sergeant Whelan about that?—I did not.
8538. Sergeant Whelan went down the line with his men?—Yes, he went and took up a post behind a tree, and stopped there all the time.
8539. He took most of his party?—Yes.
8540. That is, my party?—Yes.
8541. When I went to speak with Mr. O'Connor?—Yes.
8542. Do you remember we were being fired at?—I do.
8543. Who called attention to that?—I turned round and called the men to come in single file.
8544. You were therefore the first to speak?—Yes.
8545. Did I say this, “Scatter, men; do not keep in a body”?—Yes.
8546. Did you tell me at the time I landed at the platform that you thought one of them was away?—I am not certain whether I did or not I believe I did.
8547. I do not think you did?—I am not certain. I told you about the rifle, and I think I must have told you then that I thought one of them was away.
8548. Do you not call to mind whether you may not have seen me again in the course of about half an hour?—I do not.
8549. Can you be positive of that?—I cannot.
8550. Was not I in communication with you nearly all the day?—I did not see you after you went down to speak to Mr. O'Connor till I saw you up the platform, when Ned Kelly was taken into the van.
8551. What time was that?—About seven o'clock.
8552. That was an hour later?—Yes, about that.
8553. And after that you saw me constantly?—Yes, constantly. You and I examined together all the prisoners that came out of the house, and you ordered me to take the two young McAuliffes in charger when I told you who they were.
8554. Upon the platform, at seven o'clock, when I saw Ned Kelly, did you find any difficulty in finding me?—No.
8555. Nor any man upon the ground?—No. I saw you once when the priest came to me about going into the house. I told him I could not give him any authority without seeing you.
8556. By the Commission.—What time was that?—About three o'clock, when the house was going to be fired.
8557. By Mr. Sadleir.—When an officer, a principal officer, takes charge of men, what would you think of his running about with his own messages?—I do not think it is the officer's place to run about.
8558. Did you ever see an officer running with his own messages—did you ever see such a thing?—No; he puts it through a non-commissioned officer.
8559. He takes a smart non-commissioned officer, or a smart constable, to take his messages?—Yes, always.

8560. By the Commission.—Would you expect to see an officer on a duty like that go round to visit his outposts to see that they were all right in position—is that a duty that he would put upon an orderly if he was surrounding a place—would you consider it his duty to visit his outposts, and see that they were upon the spot?

Mr. Sadleir.—Certainly.

8561. By the Commission.—I ask him?—(The Witness.)—Yes.

8562. Did you consider that your duty?—I did.

8563. When you were in the position of command, the position of the highest man in the service in charge, did you consider it your duty to go round and see that your men were not shirking their duty?—I did consider it my duty.

8564. By Mr. Sadleir.—Could I have any doubt about the manner in which the men were doing their duty that morning?—I did not. I never saw a man that did not do his duty then.

8565. By the Commission.—Do you think it was a portion of Mr. Sadleir’s duty to go round and see the outposts the same as you did?—I think it was, at least once, to see how they were posted.

8566. Did you consider it the duty of Mr. Sadleir to go round and visit the outposts after he arrived in the same way as you had previously done?—Yes.

8567. Do you consider it was your duty to do that?—Yes.

8568. Whoever came after you it would be his duty to do the same thing?—Yes.

8569. Whoever he may be, if it was an inspector or any one else?—Yes.

8570. By Mr. Sadleir.—Can you say whether I did or not?—I cannot say.

8571. By the Commission.—Did you see him?—I did not see him.

8572. By Mr. Sadleir.—Was not moving about at the first a very difficult matter?—Yes, it was.

8573. Had not each man enough to do at his post to mind himself.—They were all under cover and behind trees.

8574. They had enough to do to observe what was before them?—Yes.

313

8576. When you went round was it sufficient to see every man at his post without speaking to him?—Yes, I did.

8577. By the Commission.—On visiting your posts, did you see that they were properly posted?—Yes I saw them.

8578. Did you ask them if they had ammunition?—Yes, I asked Barry.

8579. If a man had no ammunition would he be utterly useless?—He would.

8580. Would it not be your duty to see, not only that he was at his place but that his arms were serviceable, and that he was not wounded?—The men would inform an officer if the arms had anything the matter with them, and if they had not ammunition.

8581. Could they do that without leaving their posts if officers did not go round?—No.

8582. By Mr. Sadleir.—Did you see Constable Dwyer going round?—No, I did not see him going round.

8583. Did you see him going from post to post, not quite round, but part of the way?—Yes, I remember now I did see him.

8584. Have you any knowledge of who sent him?—Of my own knowledge I did not know. I heard that you sent him.

8585. If a favorable entry is made upon your record, you are informed of that, are you?—No.

8586. Is not that an established rule in the department, and not a rule by me or any officer?—I believe by the head of the department.

8587. There is no constable who is aware of what is there. Will Mr. Longmore object to read the last entry but one.—[The same was read by the Chairman as follows:—] “16/8/80. Was engaged in the Kelly search since October 1878, and was one of the first party of police who attacked the gang at Glenrowan on the 28th June 1880. Showed great zeal throughout, and special bravery and efficiency in the attack on the gang, and in assisting in the capture of Ned Kelly. Supt. Sadleir.—Recommended for promotion, half-yearly return.” That is 27/8/80.

Mr. Sadleir.—That is an addendum?

The Chairman.—Yes.

8588. By Mr. Sadleir (to the witness).—Does that satisfy your expectations?—Yes, the entry satisfies me.

8589. Do you think anything in the world could have been stated more fairly?—No; I consider that is very fair.

8590. Did not I select you, and give you to understand so, from the opinion I have of your services—did I not select you for Hedi, thinking you the best man I could find for it?—I believe you did.
By the Commission (to Mr. Sadleir).—Did you tell him that you selected him on that account?—No.

By Mr. Sadleir (to the witness).—Do you remember my putting it that way to you; do you remember my saying, “Kelly, you are the only man I have fit to go”?—Yes, I remember that.

Was it not only as a temporary arrangement to get the first difficulty over; you did not look upon it as my placing you there permanently, only that as long as the anger lasted after that day at Glenrowan did I wish you to be in charge?—Yes; but I told you I would take any station in the district before Greta.

Mr. Sadleir.—I know you did.

By the Commission.—Did you distinctly understand, from what Mr. Sadleir told you, that it was to be only a temporary remove to Greta?—Yes, temporary.

You knew that?—Yes.

Have you any idea of the meaning of “temporary”?—I expected four or five months.

There are men put temporarily in charge of a station, and left there for six or seven years?—I do not think so. That would not be temporary.

By Mr. Sadleir.—Did not I hold out promises of promotion to you as far as I was authorized?—Yes.

And there was nothing more that I could do?—There was not.

Would you consider that, if hopes of promotion were held out to you, a very unfavorable report would strike those hopes down?—That would prevent it.

But the hopes of promotion were conditional, and the condition was not fulfilled.

By the Commission.—“27/8/80”—that is the date of that recommendation for promotion; there is no condition here.

But the conversation was after that he was recommended for promotion, and he probably knew it. When a man is specially recommended I usually tell him, but it was after that recommendation that this conversation took place and those further hopes of promotion were held out.

And after that conversation you wrote this minute upon the paper?

By the Commission.—Which minute?

By Mr. Sadleir.—Yes. I had no particular view to do it; it was to express exactly my opinion, without regard to any other consideration.

By the Commission.—And that was in your mind to prevent the promotion.

By Mr. Sadleir.—Yes, I had no particular view to do it; it was to express exactly my opinion, without regard to any other consideration.

By the Commission.—What would be the effect of that expression of opinion?

By Mr. Sadleir.—No doubt it would be injurious to the man.

By the Commission.—Do we understand you to say that, irrespective of this private record sheet, when a man was recommended for promotion, you generally informed him of it?

By Mr. Sadleir.—No, when a man was specially recommended for promotion.

I ask you, as a sensible man, put yourself for a moment in the position of an officer in charge of a difficult district like that, what would your feelings be after a disappointment if a man you chose declined, for any reason whatever, to go into the place?—Into which place?

I say—put yourself in the position of an officer in charge of a district like that, would it not be a disappointment to you if a man you selected for a difficult and dangerous post showed a disinclination to go?—Yes.

By the Commission. 2 r

By Mr. Sadleir (to the witness).—I believe it is injurious to me.

Is it any exaggeration of the reasons you gave me for not wishing to go?—No.

Is it not my duty, without any personal favor to you, or any consideration for your private feelings and interests, to say exactly what I thought was fair?—Yes.

There is only one question more, and I suppose there is a reference to some jealousy felt by the force—whether officers or men I do not know—as regards Mr. Hare’s county of Bourke men—men of his own district; was there one man of Mr. Hare’s district in the first attack upon Glenrowan—Gascoigne does not belong to his district?—No.

Never did?—Never did.

Phillips was not of his district?—He was transferred, I believe.

And Arthur?—Yes.

And Barry, he was an exception, he might be a Bourke man?—Yes, Barry was Bourke at the time.

No, he was a Western district man; yourself, you were a North-Eastern district man?—Yes.

Where could the jealousy come in?—It was in the first set-off.

I understand it to be Glenrowan. As regards Glenrowan, there was no man to be jealous of because he belonged to Bourke—Mr. Hare’s district?—No.

8614. By Mr. Hare.—You were at Benalla when I relieved Mr. Nicolson on the 2nd June?—I was; I was stationed at Benalla.

8615. Do you remember an agent, I will not mention his name, coming down from Beechworth to see me?—Yes.

8616. One of Mr. Nicolson’s agents?—Yes.

Mr. Nicolson.—I have not the slightest objection to Mr. Hare’s question, but yesterday the Commission decided that this matter should refer to Mr. O’Connor.

8617. By Mr. Hare.—It does not reflect at all against Mr. Nicolson. I made the statement in my original report, which I want the witness to substantiate. If the report is taken for granted, there is an end of it. I shall not then want to put the question. (To the witness) —Do you remember the fact that an agent had come down from Beechworth for the purpose of seeing me?—Yes, I remember that.

8618. Did you make an appointment that evening at my request to meet him at a certain place?—I did.

8619. Did we keep our appointment—you and I?—We did.

8620. Did the agent?—No.

8621. After waiting there for some time did we see him elsewhere?—I suggested we should go where we thought we should meet him, as he was going by train.

8622. At the railway?—Yes.

8623. Did we see him there?—Yes, we did.

8624. What did I say to him?—I walked away from you. You took him to the end of the railway station platform, in the dark, and spoke to him there.

8625. Did you hear any of the conversation?—No, I did not.

8626. None at all?—No.

8627. What became of him?—He went away. He told me he would not work for you.

8628. When?—Before you saw him.

8629. Before I saw him?—Before you saw him.

8630. That night?—That night.

8631. You did not tell me that then?—I do not know. I forget if I did.

8632. I am certain you did not, because why should I meet him?—I pressed upon him to come and see you—that it was all nonsense.

8633. You did not speak to him after I saw him?—No.

8634. He went away in the train?—He went away, and I did not see him till after the Glenrowan affair.

8635. Come now to Sunday, 27th June, what time did I send you up to the railway station that afternoon to see about a train or an engine?—About three o’clock, I suppose, in the afternoon.

8636. When we were stopped near Glenrowan, what position were you in, were you in front of me or behind me in the carriage?—I was in front of you—I was next to the engine.

8637. Did you speak to the guard before I came up?—I did. You put your head out of the window.

8638. Where were you then?—Standing upon the step of the guard’s van.

8639. Are you sure that the guard was not midway between the pilot engine and our engine?—I spoke to him, I remember well; he said to me about meeting a man with a red light.

8640. Was not that after I left?—I did not walk with three men towards the pilot engine?—Yes.

8641. I left you with the train?—Yes, I stopped there with the train; you went up to find the man—that is the schoolmaster.

8642. Did not I meet the guard some distance from the train?—I understood the guard came up to the train. I remember your putting your head out of the window. You asked what was up, and I said, “The pilot engine has stopped.”

8643. Exactly; I saw that myself. You do not recollect which I met?—I saw Archie McFie, the guard.

8644. When we got to Glenrowan platform what was the first thing I did when I got out?—You sang out to me to get the horses out.

8645. Are you sure of that; were the horses removed till I returned from the station master’s house?—We were getting the horses out.

8646. Answer that question—did you see me and Mr. Rawlins going to the station master’s house?—I did.

8647. Did you say the horses were being got out whilst I was away?—A few of them were out.

8648. Are you sure of that?—I am sure.

8649. You say that you heard me call out to Mr. O’Connor to surround the house?—Yes.

8650. What distance could my voice have been heard when I called out that?—I should say it could be heard near the railway station there.

315

8651. Did Mr. O’Connor surround the house?—He did not.

8652. How many shots did you fire in the first engagement, have you any recollection?—I have not.

John Kelly, continued.
18th May 1881.
8653. About?—Ten or fifteen. I should say.

8654. Are you sure that you asked me for ammunition when I was returning the second time or the first time, when I was going back to the railway station the first time or after I had been wounded?—I am not certain which of the times.

8655. Do you remember saying anything to me at Benalla when you came to see me, after I was wounded, about Kirkham leaving his post?—I do.

8656. State what it was?—When I came, in company with Mr. Sadleir, I found Kirkham in the trench with Mr. O’Connor. I said, “Kirkham, what brought you here?” He said, “I came for ammunition.” I said, “You know well you cannot get ammunition there, and you have no right to leave your post.”

8657. Who was with Mr. O’Connor then?—Kirkham.

8658. And who else?—Two black trackers.

8659. That is four of them there?—Yes.

8660. How many men had you surrounding the house at this time, or when you posted the men there?—They were all—five men and three trackers.

8661. Where was Kirkham’s post on that morning, after the firing ceased, the first firing?—It was at the Benalla side of the house.

8662. Who was first posted the nearest to the front?—Gascoigne.

8663. Who was next?—Phillips, I think, was next to him.

8664. Who was next?—Kirkham.

8665. Who was next?—Barry.

8666. That was the post you gave him?—Yes.

8667. When you returned you found him in the drain with Mr. O’Connor?—I did.

8668. And what did you say to him?—I said, “Kirkham, what brought you here?” He said, “I came for ammunition.” I said, “You have no business to leave your post; you should stop where I put you.”

8669. How many men had you then surrounding the house when you placed Kirkham there?—Only five, with three black trackers; Sergeant Steele’s party were not there then.

8670. Was it before or after the arrival of Mr Sadleir that you saw Kirkham with Mr. O’Connor?—In company with Mr. Sadleir.

8671. Is that the first time you saw him there?—That is the first time.

8672. By the Commission.—How long after the first party went there did Mr. Sadleir arrive?—Mr. Sadleir arrived after five o’clock—between five and six.

8673. And the first party arrived, your party?—At about three o’clock, I think.

8674. Do you know when Kirkham left his post?—I do not.

8675. You say you found fault with him when Mr. Sadleir was there?—Yes.

8676. I thought you stated just now that Mr. Sadleir went up and spoke to Mr. O’Connor, and you went away?—The very minute I came up with Mr. Sadleir I spoke to Kirkham.

8677. Then you had some conversation with Kirkham?—Just the few words I am after speaking.

8678. And then ran away?—Then went away; Mr. Sadleir told me to go round.

Cross-examined by Mr. O’Connor.

8679. You stated that the special train arrived at Benalla about half-past one a.m. from Melbourne, and brought me up and my men?—I think it would be about half-past one or two; I am not certain. I did not look at the time.

8680. You say also at this time they put the horses in?—Yes.

8681. Are you not aware that part of the horses were in the vans when the special arrived?—Yes, I remember now they were.

8682. Then that statement of yours is not correct?—It is an error.

8683. By the Commission.—Are you talking of all the horses?—Yes; I remember we had all the horses in trucks just before the train came up.

8684. By Mr. O’Connor.—Upon arriving at Glenrowan, or rather when the train, stopped—not at the station—upon the train stopping did not you see a porter walking up to the train, or a guard, carrying a lamp?—Yes, I think so. I spoke to Archie McFie.

8685. Did not you see him come to the carriage door to Mr. Hare and speak to him?—No.

8686. Where did he go to?—Mr. Hare came out before the man spoke to him.

8687. Where did Mr. Hare meet him?—Close to the guard’s van.

8688. That is in the rear of the train?—No, in the front of it, next to the engine.

8689. The guard’s van?—Yes, that was attached to the engine.

8690. Is it not usual to attach the guard’s van to the end of the train?—I do not know, but it was attached to the engine on that night, and I and Constable Barry and another man were in the van attached to the engine.

8691. Upon arriving at Glenrowan, you state that you commenced to take horses out at once?—Yes.

8692. Who gave you that order?—Mr. Hare, before he went down to the station master’s house.

8693. Did he give you a reason for taking out the horses?—No, he did not wait a second.

8694. He did not say a word?—No, only, “Kelly, get out the horses.”

8695. You also stated that Mr. Hare went direct for the house?—He did.

8696. And that you ran along parallel with or along the line?—Yes.

8697. Which was the longest way?—The line, I believe.

8698. Considerably longer?—I do not think it is considerably longer.
8699. Did you run till you got outside the fence. That was what I understood you to say?—Yes.

8700. You ran along the line?—Yes, out of the gate.

8701. Would you recognize upon the plan?—I saw it.

8702. You see it is considerably the longer way round?—Yes.

8703. What delayed Mr. Hare from arriving at the house long before you did?—He did arrive before I did.

8704. And the firing was over?—No, it was just commenced. I was behind him, I suppose, seven, or eight, or ten yards. Mr. Rawlins and I ran down there. I remember him well. I do not know whether any of the other men were there.

8705. Returning to the railway platform again—you said that you placed Constable Barry as guard over the rear?—Yes.

8706. If he swears that he accompanied Mr. Hare down to Stanistreet it would not be true?—I know well that I placed Constable Barry there. I remember putting one man to go and guard at the back of the station, and I am certain it was Barry.

8707. You swear to-day that you put him there while Mr. Hare went down to see Mr. Stanistreet and Rawlins. Barry swears that he accompanied Mr. Hare down?—I know I put him on guard. I suppose they were not two minutes—not a minute.

8708. By the Commission.—What is the distance between the station and the station master’s house?—About 100 yards, I suppose.

8709. How far were you behind Superintendent Hare upon making a start?—We were getting our arms. Mr. Hare rushed the moment Bracken appeared, and we were behind, getting our arms.

8710. Would you be one minute behind him?—Scarcely; we might be.

8711. How many extra yards would you have to go to?—I do not know.

8712. Would it be twenty?—I do not think so.

8713. By Mr. O’Connor.—Then when you actually, what I may call, overtook Mr. Hare he was wounded?—Yes, I believe he was.

8714. Did he make any remark to you about it at once?—He said he was shot.

8715. He turned round and spoke to you by name?—No, he did not by name at that time.

8716. Could you remember the words he made use of?—I believe the words he made use of were, “I am shot.”

8717. Did he say, “O’Connor, I am wounded.” Did he call me by name?—He called you by name when he came down.

8718. At first, “I am wounded”?—“Those beggars shot me.”

8719. “O’Connor, those beggars shot me”?—Yes.

8720. By the Commission.—Did he say, “O’Connor”?—Yes, he did. He sang out, “O’Connor, where are you? Where is O’Connor? Come on.”

8721. By Mr. O’Connor.—Did he or did he not try to find out where I was?—He asked where you were.

8722. Whom did he ask?—Me. He said, “Where is O’Connor?”

8723. That is another statement. I asked you what Mr. Hare said. Did he say, “O’Connor, I am wounded.” And you say he said, “O’Connor, those beggars shot me”; and then you give another statement, and then another. That is three different things that you say Mr. Hare said. What did he say?—I believe those are the words he said. He said, “Where is O’Connor?” and you answered in this ditch.

8724. I answered from that ditch?—Yes.

8725. You said before in your evidence that I did not answer?—I did not say so. You said, “I am here,” or something in that way. How would he know you were there then?

8726. By the Commission.—Mr. O’Connor asks, did you see Mr. Hare wounded?—I did; I saw him wounded.

8727. What did he say about Mr. O’Connor when he was wounded?—He said, “Where is O’Connor?” then he came down.

8728. By Mr. O’Connor.—I did not ask you that question, what I asked you was this: was Mr. Hare wounded before you arrived; and you said, “Yes.” Mr. Graves asked you did you see Mr. Hare wounded; and you said, “Yes”?—I did not see him get the bullet, but I saw him after sticking the gun between his legs.

8729. That is not the question. Mr. Graves asked you did you see Mr. Hare wounded; and you said, “Yes.” And I asked you did Mr. Hare come up after he was wounded; and you said, “Yes.” I only want a plain answer to this: was Mr. Hare wounded before you arrived—before you overtook him?—I do not think it.

8730. You do not think it?—No; I was not close to him.

8731. Then my question was: did you hear Mr. Hare speak?—I did hear him speak.

8732. Whom did he speak to?—I do not think he spoke to anyone in particular at that time till he turned round. After firing his shots he turned round.

8733. I have not come to that yet. Mr. Hare, you state, spoke to no one in particular—did he speak generally?—He spoke to me by name.

8734. That is somebody in particular?—Yes.
8735. Then he spoke to you?—Yes, he did, and to you.
8736. You state that he spoke to nobody in particular, and the next minute you say he spoke to you and to me by name?—I do not say so.
8737. You do?—You want to make me say so.
8738. By the Commission.—The question is this: did you hear Mr. Hare say, “I am shot”?—I did.
8739. Did he say that to anyone in particular?—No, not at that time.
8740. By Mr. O’Connor.—I ask then did not you hear Mr. Hare address me by name, and tell me that he was wounded?—He said to me, “Where is O’Connor?”
8741. That is a different thing altogether?—And you answered him.
8742. By the Commission.—Did you consider that he spoke to you—addressed you, when he said that?—I did.
8743. By Mr. O’Connor.—Did he call me by name; the witness has said that he called me by name, and said, “O’Connor, those beggars have shot me”?—Yes.
8744. You state that Mr. Hare left the railway platform?—Yes.
8745. Did you accompany him?—No.

8746. How do you know he went back then?—I did not see him go down to the gate; I saw him go to the direction of the railway.
8747. You said in your evidence that he went to the railway?—Where did he go? He went in that direction.
8748. As you did not accompany him you say you do not know whether he went to the platform. He may have stopped short of it. You say then he came back again?—Yes, he came back again.
8749. Was not it quite possible that Mr. Hare never went to the platform?—His hand was bandaged up when he came back.
8750. I have witnesses to prove that he never left the platform after he arrived there?—You have no witnesses that can prove that.
8751. Again you say that you cannot tell whether he went to the platform or not; he went in that direction?—I saw him going in that direction.
8752. At what period of the fight was it you came to my position and asked me to come with you to place the men?—About ten minutes.
8753. Ten minutes after Mr. Hare left?—About eight or ten minutes, I suppose.
8754. After Mr. Hare left?—Yes, during the time that I went down from the corner, when I saw Rawlins coming along the railway line, I ran down to meet him at Mr. Stanistreet’s house, the station master’s house. I saw there was no ammunition, and I told Mr. Stanistreet to leave the house and take off his coat and run up to you.
8755. Did anybody hear you ask me that question?—There was nobody there about except the two black trackers.
8756. You asserted that you asked me that question?—As sure as I am sitting on this chair, I asked that.
8757. By the Commission.—You swear that?—I swear that.
8758. You also swear that you saw Mr. Hare going to the station wounded, and that he came back bandaged?—Yes, I do.
8759. By Mr. O’Connor.—How many times did you go to the railway station?—During the whole day?
8760. No, during the time up to Mr. Sadleir’s arrival?—Once with the rifle, before Mr. Sadleir arrived.
8761. When was the second time you came to me?—The second time?
8762. Yes?—Only the time I came with Mr. Sadleir I never went near you.
8763. That was the second time?—That was the second time.
8764. You do not remember coming to me and telling me about the Kellys escaping?—I never went near you.
8765. You did not give me that information about the rifle?—I did not; I never spoke to you.
8766. Did you tell any one else that you found the rifle?—Yes, I told Mr. Sadleir.
8767. Did you tell any of the men?—I told several of the men; any of the men that were upon the railway station and the gentlemen of the press.
8768. Then some one else might have told me that you found the rifle?—Yes, some one might have told you.
8769. Then when Mr. Sadleir arrived did you inform him that I refused to assist you?—I did not. I told him where you were.
8770. You did not tell him I refused to assist you?—No, I did not.
8771. What was the first time you saw me after I left my position, left this trench?—I do not remember seeing you till about ten o’clock, I think, after the prisoners coming out.

8772. And not the time they were coming out afterwards; was it with Mr. Sadleir, or how?—I saw you up towards the railway station.

8773. You did not see me with Mr. Sadleir, when the prisoners were coming out?—No. I was close to Mr. Sadleir, always with him; I do not remember seeing you there.

8774. You say that when Mr. Hare called out to me to surround the house I did not do it?—You did not.

8775. What do you mean by “surrounding the house”?—I mean to place men all round the house, not to let one escape.

8776. You looked upon yourself as the officer in charge of the white men and I was in charge of the blacks?—Yes.

8777. And I did not surround the house with my men?—No.

8778. Are you not aware that the black boy “Hero” was one of the first out through the wicket gate—sworn to in evidence?—No; I know Barry told me he was a good man.

8779. By the Commission.—And did come through?—No, he did not tell me that.

8780. By Mr. O’Connor.—Then if it was a fact, and the men were assisting?—They were—what I saw of Hero and this man Kirkham.

8781. They were assisting to do the same work as you were—to keep the outlaws in the house till the daylight?—They were.

8782. Now, although you say you did not consider that I was an officer over you or in the force, do you state that Constable Kirkham was not under me?—Under you?

8783. Yes, under me?—I did not consider he was under you.

8784. You never did?—Never.

8785. You never were aware that he was transferred to me?—No, I never was. I was well aware that he was in charge of the blacks, and any time they were out Kirkham was with them. Whenever I went out with the blacks I was always told never to interfere with them—to leave everything to Kirkham.

8786. Whose orders to you were those?—Through Sergeant Whelan.

8787. From whom did they come to him?—Mr. Nicolson.

8788. Mr. Nicolson then would be in a position to say where I got the instructions from?—I do not know anything about that.

8789. Then you consider that Constable Kirkham never had anything to do with my command, and that was the reason why you ordered him to keep such a position?—Yes.

John Kelly, continued, 18th May 1881.

8790. And were very much annoyed, or angry we may call it, when you found he was with me?—I was not; I was angry with him to find that he left his post; it was not on account of his being with you.

8791. You were angry, I suppose, because you found he had left his post?—Yes.

8792. He was one of your subordinates, and he disobeyed you?—Yes.

8793. Did you report this to Mr. Sadleir when he arrived?—It was in the presence of Mr. Sadleir I said it. I said, “Kirkham, what brought you here?”

8794. Did Mr. Sadleir then reprimand the man?—I do not know; I went away; Mr. Sadleir told me to go on.

8795. By the Commission.—Was it when Mr. Sadleir and you came to the place where Mr. O’Connor was that it first came to your knowledge that Kirkham had left the place where you wished him to be?—That was the first time.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tuesday week at Eleven o’clock.

TUESDAY, 31ST MAY 1881.

Present:

The Hon. F. Longmore, M.L.A., in the Chair;
E. J. Dixon, Esq., J.P., J. H. Graves, Esq., M.L.A.,

John Kelly further examined.

8796. By Sergeant Steele.—Did you hear me tell the men who came from Wangaratta to scatter round to the back to prevent Ned Kelly getting away?—I do not remember that you said so.

8797. I wish to show that the report furnished by Mr. Sadleir in reference to the outlaw Kelly was based on the report of Senior-Constable Kelly, and that I was never applied to in regard to it, though I was the senior officer on the ground at the time?—I never wrote a report.

The Chairman (to Sergeant Steele).—You will have an opportunity of referring to these points in giving your own evidence, and you will then be on your oath.

8798. By Sergeant Steele (to the witness).—Were you called upon by your senior officer to send in a report?—No; only about the reward.

8799. Did you make a report verbally?—I may have done so. Mr. Sadleir.—No doubt he did make various statements to me, and Sergeant Steele objected to some statements in my report and was allowed an opportunity of forwarding his own view. All the reports, together with his remonstrances, are in the office.

8800. By Sergeant Steele (to the witness).—Did you furnish a statement to the newspapers?—I did at Glenrowan, and you made a statement at the same time.

8801. Was the statement in the Age of the 25th a correct account of what transpired that morning?—I am not aware what it is.

8802. Have you not read it?—I have, but it is a long time ago.

8803. By the Commission.—Did you and the others at Glenrowan make certain statements to the reporters of the press?—Yes.

8804. Did you do it by making a verbal statement which was taken down by a member of the press?—Yes, there was one reporter there.

8805. Did he ask you to give a detailed report of what took place, and he took it down verbatim?—Yes.

8806. Did any other members of the police force do the same?—Yes.

8807. You were never asked to send in a written report to a superior officer?—No, I never was.

The witness withdrew.

Arthur Loftus Maule Steele sworn and examined.

8808. By the Commission.—What are you?—A sergeant of police. I joined the police force on the 8th of June 1857, I took charge of the police station at Wangaratta on the 6th of November 1876.

8809. What were you then?—Sergeant.

8810. Was that your first acquaintance with the North-Eastern district?—No, I had been in the district for thirteen years previous, about Yackandandah and other parts, and knocked a good deal about the district.

8811. Can you inform the Commission as to what led up to the Kelly outbreak?—Yes. Horse-stealing at that time was very rife indeed, and one of the outlaws—Steve Hart, who lived near Wangaratta—was arrested by me on several charges of horse-stealing.

8812. Have you the date of the arrests?—I have not, but I know it was about eighteen months before the outbreak. He had done a sentence, and came out of gaol about eighteen months before the outbreak. I think, as near as I can remember. And there were also a great many horses stolen from the neighborhood of Greta, which were traced to the Murray—Baumgarten's place. The two Baumgartens, and a man named Studders, and another named Kennedy.

8813. What Kennedy is that?—A man named Samuel Kennedy, residing at Howlong in New South Wales, on the border. Kennedy and Studders live in New South Wales, and the Baumgartens in Victoria. Kennedy and William Baumgarten were convicted for stealing those horses from Greta. Detective Brown and I found out that the Kellys—Edward and Dan Kelly—were connected with the larceny of those horses.

8814. About what time?—At the time those horses were stolen, and they brought the horses to the Murray. There were other convictions as well. A man named Loury, alias Cook, was convicted also for being implicated in the same mob of horses. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the Kellys at Chiltern. I think a constable named Robinson laid the information.

8815. For one Kelly or both?—I think against Dan Kelly and Jack Lloyd, but the other information was laid by, I think, Detective Brown against Ned Kelly. I am not quite certain who laid that information against him.

8816. Can you say there was an information against Ned Kelly at all?—I believe there was.

8817. Are you sure—of your own knowledge?—I do not think I ever saw it, but it was notified to me that there was a warrant. The next thing I heard about was—I made several efforts to arrest Ned Kelly and Dan, but was unsuccessful—I received a report, by telegram, on the 16th of April 1878, that Constable Fitzpatrick had been shot at the Eleven-mile Creek by Edward Kelly, when effecting the arrest of Dan Kelly. I received this telegram about nine o'clock in the morning. Mr. Nicolson, then the inspecting superintendent, was at Wangaratta the same morning, and I waited until twelve o'clock for instructions from Benalla, but I received no instructions, and I started with Constable Brown. I was informed in this telegram I received that warrants had issued for the arrest of Edward and Dan Kelly. Skillian, Williamson, and Mrs. Kelly.

8818. Why did you mention Mr. Nicolson?—I showed him the telegram. At the time we were just talking about the Kellys, and some conversation passed about Edward Kelly, and I told him I thought he would take the bush. He had just walked out of the office when this telegram came, and I showed it him when he returned.

8819. Could he not have given you instructions then?—He was not in charge of the district at the time. He was travelling at the time.

8820. Was Mr. Nicolson then the officer in charge of the district?—No. He was on his way to Bright. to make investigations as inspecting superintendent.

1821. Did he inspect your barracks on that occasion?—Yes, I think he did, and made an entry in the book—I would not be sure on that point—I could tell by examining the occurrence book of the station. I started with Constable Brown for the Eleven-mile Creek. We watched Mrs. Kelly's place for some considerable time from the hill opposite the house. At nine o'clock in the evening we arrested William Williamson. I went to Skillian's place, but could not find him then, so I took Williamson into Greta, and returned again, at about one o'clock in the morning, in company with Senior-Constable Strahan and Brown, and arrested Skillian. We also arrested Mrs. Kelly. She had not been in her bed at all during that night. I was there on three occasions, and she had not been to bed. Jim Quin was in the house.

1822. What was the charge on which they were arrested?—For aiding and abetting Ned Kelly in shooting with intent to murder Constable Fitzpatrick. That was the only occasion on which I visited Mrs. Kelly's place at night, or disturbed her in any way during the night. We took Williamson, Skillian, and Mrs. Kelly to Greta, and then brought them on to Benalla in a dray. They were remanded from time to time, and committed for the offence with which they were charged.

1823. And convicted?—Yes, and subsequently convicted. I was called upon by Superintendent Sadleir to go to Benalla to make up a party to meet Sergeant Kennedy in the ranges to try and effect the arrest of Edward Kelly.

1824. Had Mrs. Kelly an infant with her when you arrested her?—I do not think so. I think not at the time. I think she had a child in gaol, if I recollect rightly.

1825. Was she a married woman to your knowledge?—Her husband has been dead for some time. I did not know of her being married again lately.

1826. When did her husband die?—Before I went to Wangaratta. I had been about eighteen months or two years there then.

1827. Was he dead five years before?—I could not say. I never made any enquiry about that, but he was dead sometime before I was there.

1828. Had she a young family in the house?—There were some girls, the youngest, I should think, about ten or twelve years of age.

1829. Proceed with your narrative?—I was unable to go in the ranges, in consequence of being subsequently served with a subpoena to attend the equity court. On the 28th of October I received information of the murder of the police at Stringy Bark, Wombat.

1830. Did you make any search between that time and the murder of the constables at Wombat?—Yes, repeatedly. I was continually knocking about those parts.

1831. Between the time of the arrest and the time of the murders you were continually searching?—Yes; generally about the Eleven-mile Creek and the section paddocks. We made several efforts to try and capture them. The principal reason for my going about at the time was the inefficiency of the constable stationed at the Greta station—Constable Thom—which I complained of.

1832. It was his duty to arrest them, if possible?—Yes; it was about fifteen miles from my station. I think they could have been arrested if he had exercised proper discretion and made proper endeavors to capture them. On the other hand, I could not show about the neighborhood at all but there was a message sent by a boy in the neighborhood, or some of the little girls ran off in different directions in and about the neighborhood of Mrs. Kelly's, and made the fact known. I reported to Mr. Brook Smith about Thom's inefficiency.

1833. In writing?—I think, both in writing and verbally. Thom was removed from there.

1834. Did you complain long before he was removed?—I think I spoke to Mr. Smith about a week or a fortnight before. He had some difficulty in getting a suitable man; and Senior-Constable Strahan, who was chosen to come, was a married man, and at Snowy Creek, and could not be removed at once, but he was removed. I pointed out that Constable Thom was almost useless there.

1835. Could he ride?—Yes.

1836. In what did his inefficiency show itself?—He seemed to be on very intimate terms with some of the Kellys' friends, and I think he was an intemperate man.

1837. In fact, that he was a drunkard?—I cannot say exactly that I saw him absolutely drunk, but he used to come in a muddled state; he seemed to remain in a sort of stupid state for some time.

A. L. M. Steele, continued.
31st May 1881.

1838. Was there a want of activity and pluck about him?—Yes, he was a careless man, and he would converse with those men for hours about the bar of the public-house, and at the same time, perhaps, their comrades were about the district on horseback.

1839. There was only this one man stationed at Greta at this time?—Only one.

1840. Who succeeded him?—Senior-Constable Strahan.

1841. How long did he remain before the station was abolished?—I could not exactly say. The station was abolished soon after the murders or the police, I think.

1842. Not before the murders?—No, I think it was after.

1843. In your opinion it was not only necessary that a better man than Thom should be stationed there then, but also that the Greta station ought to have been strengthened rather than abolished?—Certainly. I considered that one man was almost useless at a place like Greta. I did not think it was safe for him to go out. If I were there myself alone at Greta I would not feel disposed to knock about amongst those people.

8844. Instead of abolishing the station you would have increased the number of police constables if you had been in charge of it, even before the murders?—Before the murders, I certainly would. Greta and also Hedi should have been increased. There should have been not less than two men at each of those stations. But I rather approved of abolishing the station after the murders, in order to give those men a little scope to knock about and place the police in a better position to get information.

8845. Do you think the murders would have been committed if the stations had been properly manned?—My impression is if the strength of the station had been kept up and active men placed there that it would have kept down the horsestealing and its results. Consequently the murders would not have been committed, and the Kellys would have been in gaol instead of out.

8846. In consequence of abolishing the station, the horse stealers and the men committing those outrages got ahead?—Yes.

8847. If vigilant action had been kept up there it is likely they would not have gone to this length?—Yes.

8848. How long was Senior-Constable Strahan there?—Only a short time before the shooting of Fitzpatrick.

8849. Do you know for certain where there was, before the murders at the Wombat, more than one police constable stationed at Greta?—Yes, just a short time before, I think Constable Ryan went there.

8850. You have answered as to what would have been the effect of efficient police supervision in the past—does that opinion exist in your mind as far as the district at present is concerned?—Yes. I think if the strength of the stations is kept up, and those men looked after, that it will, to a great extent, check horsestealing—particularly in a neighborhood like Greta, where it was carried on in such a bare faced manner that large mobs of horses were taken from the farmers' paddocks, and taken by Greta.

8851. With proper police supervision in the North-Eastern district you think there is no probability of another gang like the Kellys taking the bush?—No. I do not think so. I think the reason they would take the bush at present would be if there was any charge preferred against any character up there. I think there are only two or three of those; and if they were wanted by the police and there was a likelihood of their being arrested and sent to a long term of imprisonment for horsestealing, I believe they would turn out, but only just a few that are up there I do not think there are more than three or four that would try it. I think they would prefer getting their living by work rather than by taking the bush, from what they have already experienced.

8852. It has been stated that there are a very large number of young men in that district who have never been known to perform any description of work; do you know that of your own knowledge?—No.

8853. Do you believe that from your own experience of the district?—I think when they have attained a certain age they go to shearing, and then return to their friends and idle about for a few months in the year; but they all work more or less, I think.

8854. Have the constables at other stations just as good an opportunity of arresting horse stealers as at Greta; they have to pass through other districts?—Yes, but those men kept the bush; they used to take to the back country and get into the ranges. The Kellys used to cross at night, generally moonlight, and get them out of the district; and sometimes draw up fictitious receipts and produce them to the police as they did at the Baumgartens. Through discrepancies in the receipts and enquiries we found afterwards that those receipts were forgeries.

8855. You mean that Greta is the key of the whole district?—No; but at that time there were more horses stolen from there than any other part of the district. They would take large mobs, sometimes fourteen or fifteen plough horses from farmers. I think from Mr. Whitty there was that number taken one night; and Ned Kelly, when he got over in the neighborhood of Bungowanna, New South Wales, was not known there, and they imagined it was some person travelling with horses for sale or for the market.

8856. Will you proceed with your narrative where you left off?—I was stating that I received information of the murder of the police at the Wombat on the 28th of October 1878. I started with a party of police for the head of the King River and Rose. I met a party of police on the King, and went on into Mansfield. On Sunday the 1st November 1878 I left for Benalla; I arrived at eight p.m. There was a special train in readiness for me when I arrived there. I started with a large party of men for Beechworth, in order to search the ranges about Rats' Castle and the Main Divide, between Yackandandah and Middle Creek, where the outlaws were supposed to have been seen. It would be Monday the 2nd of November when I arrived at Beechworth. Before leaving Benalla there was a rumor of the outlaws having gone through Wangaratta, seen by a young fellow named — passing at the back of the hospital, and going under the One-mile railway bridge. I spoke to Mr. Sadleir about this. I cannot give the exact words, or say whether I went to him on hearing it, or whether he heard it at the same time; but we spoke over this matter, and he told me to go on to Wangaratta— the train was at my disposal, I could delay it for half an hour or an hour if I considered it necessary—and to see if there was anything in this rumor. Mr. Sadleir told me that Mr. Brook Smith was at Wangaratta with a party of men, and that if there was anything in it I could send word to him and then go on. I arrived at Wangaratta at one a.m. in the morning. I aw Constable Twomey; he met me at the railway platform at Wangaratta. I asked him if this rumor was true that I heard about the men passing through. He said that they had seen the tracks; he had just been down at the back of the hospital to the One-mile bridge, and there were the tracks of the horses right enough there, and that the boy saw the men driving pack-horses at four o’clock in the morning—just at grey in the morning. He told me the horses were shod, some of them, and with very large feet, and that he had tracked them in the direction stated by the boy. I asked him when they heard about it, and what was done, and he said nothing had been done so far. I then told him that it was undoubtedly the outlaws, and it was owing to the flooded state of the creek at that time—that the water was bank and bank and it was evidently Steve Hart who had piloted them under the bridge. There was a narrow ledge under the bridge that no man could keep unless he knew the bridge well, and I was aware that Steve Hart was well acquainted with that ledge. They would have been swamped in the creek otherwise. I told him my opinion was the outlaws would make for the Warby ranges, and to go up at once and report the matter to Mr. Smith. I then proceeded to carry out my instructions at Rats’ Castle and the Main Divide.

8857. Do you know anything of what occurred, whether Mr. Brook Smith got that information?—I believe he did. That is my impression—that is only hearsay. I was told he did. I wish to point out that this is the occasion on which Mr. Hare and Constable Falkiner wanted to make it appear that I turned my back on the outlaws, and went in an opposite direction when I received information. I noticed that Falkiner was cross-examined to say who this sergeant was. He was one of my party, and he and Mr. Hare knew exactly my instructions, and it struck me the evidence was given with a view of conveying a bad impression to the Commission.

8858. Have you seen the printed official evidence?—No, only the newspaper reports. It is in Constable Falkiner’s evidence, when he was cross-examined by Mr. Hare. I refer to this matter, because I think it could have been fully explained at the time.

8859. Could you on your own responsibility have pursued those tracks?—If I had disobeyed the orders I had received; there was the possibility it might not have been them.

8860. I understood you to say that Mr. Sadleir’s instructions to you were to proceed in a certain direction, but not to confine you to any particular course?—He informed me that Mr. Smith was at Wangaratta with a party of men, and if there was anything in the rumor to send word to Mr. Smith, and to go on and carry out my instructions.

8861. Then the Commission understand that there was a party to fulfil that duty?—There was a large party of men at Wangaratta. I would have been only too happy to stop there and follow them up, because I think it was the best information received during the whole pursuit of the Kellys.

8862. You think you would not have been at liberty to proceed?—I ran a great risk. If they turned up at Rats’ Castle afterwards, and I had disobeyed any instructions, I would have been in a rather peculiar position with my superior officers.

8863. You say you were thoroughly convinced, from your own knowledge of the circumstances there at the bridge, that those were the outlaws—would you not therefore have been justified in proceeding at once with the force at your command?—No, I think not. Had there not been a party of police at Wangaratta I would have taken the responsibility on myself, but Mr. Smith was there with a large party of men at the time, and I sent up word by a constable to tell him that it was undoubtedly the outlaws, that Steve Hart had piloted them over the bridge; and I added, “Start at four in the morning, and you are bound to catch them on the Warby ranges.”

8864. Is it your impression now that if the police there had immediately proceeded and followed up those tracks, that they would have succeeded in capturing them?—It would be a hard thing to say. They might have followed them and eventually come on the horses.

8865. You know the country so well, and knew the time the horses passed there, and the tracks were still fresh—do you think, if immediate steps had been taken to proceed after them, there would have been a chance of capturing them?—Yes, I think so. I could have followed the horses myself without a tracker; the horses were bogging into the ground six inches, the ground was so very soft. We tracked them all about the hills some weeks afterwards.

8866. What occurred at Rats’ Castle?—I searched Rats’ Castle and the ranges—what they call the Table-land; that was on the 2nd. I then went to search the Stanley ranges; I think that was the 4th, and that we had rested our horses on the 3rd.

8867. Have you anything of importance to tell the Commission of what occurred between that time and the time you went to Glenrowan other than that you were searching constantly?—Nothing further than that we were continually going out on search parties.

8868. Were you one of the cave party?—No, I was not.

8869. Or stationed at Sherritt’s house?—No.

8870. You were one of the party that went out with Captain Standish, Mr. Nicolson, and Mr. Hare, to Seba?—Yes.

8871. Do you remember meeting Sherritt?—I do.

8872. Will you describe to the Commission the circumstances under which Sherritt was met, and, as far as you know, what took place at that interview, and between whom?—When we went down, after searching Mrs. Byrne’s, we saw Sherritt coming on with an axe on his shoulder, and I think Strahan and I stopped to speak to him; Mr. Nicolson came up soon after, and I think we told Mr. Nicolson who he was, and he took him to one side, and after some conversation I think Captain Standish joined him, and also Mr. Sadleir, but I heard nothing. Sherritt merely made the remark to me, “I know that — dog,” referring to the man with the police who had his face blackened.

8873. During that conversation did you hear either of those officers publicly make any overtures to him to assist them in the capture of the Kelly gang?—No.

8874. Did you see or hear Mr. Nicolson remonstrate with Captain Standish for making such an overture to the man in the presence of the police?—I cannot say I heard that; I was too far away. Strahan and I were talking together.

8875. Were you then in as good a position as any other members of the force to hear any conversation that took place between the officers and Sherritt?—I think I should be. Strahan and I were the closest to them, but we retired in order to give them an opportunity I believe we were closest to them, but I did not listen to their conversation. I knew the object of it, but I had no desire to hear what transpired.

8876. You knew instinctively the object?—Yes.

8877. You did not hear any overtures made?—No.

8878. Did Mr. Nicolson at that time make any remark to you of the inadvisability of making overtures to Sherritt in that way?—No.

8879. Did you hear from Mr. Nicolson or anybody that Captain Standish had been remonstrated with for that?—I cannot say. I do not recollect it.

8880. Between October 30th, 1878, and November 15th, you were in charge of Wangaratta?—Yes.

8881. Did you at any time receive information that the Kellys were likely to be supplied with provisions from any particular spot?—No.

8882. Did you receive any information that they were likely to be provided with provisions from Mrs. Skillian’s hut?—No, I did not. In fact I knew very little till Mr. Nicolson came. Everything was kept secret, to a great extent, from me at Wangaratta.

8883. Do you mean what the police knew?—Yes.

8884. You have stated you were in charge at Wangaratta between 30th October and 15th November—do you recollect a party going out with your officer, Mr. Brook Smith?—Yes, I recollect going out.

8885. Were you with that party?—I was—that is with one. Mr. Smith went out, after I had gone on to Rats’ Castle, a day or two after, to Yarrawonga.

8886. Were you with the party when Kennedy’s pack-horse was found?—No.

8887. Do you recollect that occasion?—No.

8888. Can you give any information about that party from your own knowledge?—Yes; after the hut was rushed at Sebastopol, I returned to Wangaratta, and there was an agent of the police came in that night. Senior-Constable Johnson came in with the party of police and told me about some tracks they had found that night.

8889. Was Mr. Smith in charge of that party?—Yes, and they were to start very early the next morning; however they did not start until it was pretty late.

8890. Why not?—I believe they were waiting for Inspector Smith. He had some business to transact; he told them he could not get away. They were waiting for him, I believe.

8891. Who was in immediate charge of the police; was Mr. Sadleir or Mr. Nicolson there on that occasion?—I think Mr. Nicolson came up the same evening.

8892. As the tracks were found?—Yes.

8893. Do you recollect, about the 3rd November, hearing that the Kellys had passed through Wangaratta?—No, not on the 3rd.

8894. About I said did you receive any information from Constable Twoomey that the Kellys had been said to have passed through Wangaratta?—I heard it in Benalla, and I was, I have stated, about coming up in the special train on the morning of the 2nd.

8895. How many troopers had you with you then?—Eight or nine.

8896. It would be wrong to say you had twelve or thirteen?—I could not exactly say. I know I had a good strong party of men with me.

8897. What do you consider a strong party; would you be surprised to learn you had twelve or thirteen in your charge?—I do not think I had so many then. I know it was a party of police that came from Mansfield that day and took the special train as soon as we had something to eat. It was two small parties met, but there were not, I think, more than eight or nine altogether.

8898. Why did you not take action then to follow them up?—I had instructions to go to Rats’ Castle.

8899. Then your duty you considered—even though you heard of the Kellys—was to carry out the order given to you?—In this particular instance, where there were men available; but I have explained that already.

8900. Then, if the information was good there, you would not have found them in Rats’ Castle?—No, certainly not; but I could not say for a certainty; and if they had turned up after in Rats’ Castle, it would have been a serious thing for me to have disobeyed orders.

8901. Although you got reliable information, you considered it was your duty under the certain circumstances to go to Rats' Castle?—Certainly.

8902. Did Inspector Smith lead you to believe he was going to pursue them at once?—I did not see him; I sent a message by Constable Twoomey to him.

8903. You say you were one of the party in search of the Kellys on the Warby ranges?—I went out one morning with Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Nicolson, and Mr. Smith—a large party of men went out. That was after the horses were found.

8904. What were the general instructions on those search parties?—They were altered from time to time—the night parties.

8905. You could act at once on your own responsibility?—Yes, latterly I could; but at first I received instructions. I did not go out anywhere with a party of men, on account of the expense attending it, unless I received orders to go to a particular place. I had been out sixteen days in the ranges at that time. On several occasions I had been out, and generally stopped fourteen or sixteen days.

8906. You could act on your own information and go anywhere you liked when you were out?—Yes.

8907. If you heard reliable information in your barracks could you go?—Certainly.

8908. Without instructions from your officer?—I never was instructed to do so, but I would have done so; but to take a large party of men out in the ranges and keep them there for fourteen days, I would, not do that without special instructions.

8909. Have you anything special further to say before you come to Glenrowan?—There is nothing special, only a reference to some tracks on the Warby ranges, where I have been repeatedly, where I have seen stones removed there. It is a place that picnic parties go out to from Wangaratta, and they send those stones down the ranges, and people are continually hunting horses on those ranges. It is only an hour's ride from Wangaratta.

8910. You think there was nothing in the moving of those stones referred to by Mr. Hare?—No, nothing. I think the outlaws may have occasionally visited their friends there, but I think it is a piece of folly to think they would camp there. There is not a gully. I could not hunt there. I have been through the ranges there. People are continually hunting sheep and kangaroos, and so on. They could not obtain food there for any time.

8911. Where do you think they were all the time?—I think they were in some unsuspected house, some man's house we did not suspect. It is only a matter of opinion. Arrangements were altered in regard to the duty of search parties from time to time. I have some notes as to the duty.

8912. Those search parties were very severe both on men and horses?—Yes. And then Mr. Nicolson thought it was better to let the men go out and watch houses they were likely to frequent, and we pursued that for a long time, and followed that till Mr. Hare relieved Mr. Nicolson. Mr. Hare asked me what we were doing, and he said he thought we could not do better than go on.

8913. Do you approve of secret agency?—I think it was the only way to get the Kellys. We would not have got them for ten years, riding about.

8914. Did you obtain any reliable information from them from the time that Mr. Nicolson took charge on the second occasion until the capture?—I did.

8915. Of what nature?—Well, that they were seen coming to the house that was watched by this agent.

8916. Give us the information?—I was told that they came on two occasions to a certain man's house.

8917. Mr. Nicolson pursued this system of secret agency from the time he took charge in June or July 1879 for eleven months until April. Will you tell the Commission any information of your own knowledge that was received that was of any practical use?—I was under the impression that they had left the district altogether until the agent told me he saw two men coming along between eleven and twelve at night in a certain direction.

8918. Then the secret agent gave information that they had not left the colony?—Yes.

8919. And that proves that the system was important?—Yes.

8920. He gave you information that two men had been seen?—Yes.

8921. Did you ascertain whether those two were two of the Kelly outlaws?—I believe the man saw their arms.

8922. This is what I want to get at. This man gave you information that he saw two persons whom he believed to be two of the gang. Did you ascertain that those persons seen were portion of the Kelly gang?—That we could not do unless we went to them.

8923. Then, as a matter of fact those persons may or may not have been two of the Kelly outlaws?—I could not see who else could be armed.

8924. He informed some one; did he inform you?—Yes.

8925. What did you do in consequence?—Mr. Nicolson also knew about it, and we had men sent out (four men) to watch the place at night.

8926. What was the result of that watch?—We did not see any one come at night; we watched for a month.
8927. Did you discover in any way, for certain, that those two men were the outlaws?—I could not discover it unless I applied to the man.

8928. You took his word that he saw two, who he believed were those, but as far as you knew from any information obtained by the police, you did not know that those two men were or were not the Kellys?—Not unless by what he told us. It was corroborated to a certain extent by the clothes that the outlaws had on, on the morning of the capture.

8929. How long was this before the capture?—Not more than a couple of months or three.

8930. With the exception of the information you have now given us do you know, as a matter of fact, that any information was obtained by the police, on or before the shooting of Aaron Sherritt, that the Kellys were in this country or out of it?—Only what I heard from Mr. Nicolson.

8931. Of your own knowledge you were not in a position to say they were in this country or not?—No, not then.

8932. Were you before, from the time that Mr. Nicolson took charge in July until the murder of Sherritt, could you take an oath at any time that those men were in the colony of Victoria?—I could not; I believed it from what Mr. Nicolson told me. Those agents worked with Mr. Nicolson, and he told me what he heard from the agents employed. Many of the agents he employed did not communicate with me.

8933. In consequence of any information he gave you second hand, could you swear that the Kellys were in Victoria before the shooting of Sherritt?—Certainly not. I would not swear such a thing.

8934. And there was no evidence?—I believe Mr. Nicolson had evidence. I was not told anything by the agents, except what was told to Mr. Nicolson—they worked with him. That was the only agent that told me direct, and I believed in what he said. I believed he was a thoroughly honest man.

8935. You were stationed at Wangaratta all the time?—Yes.

8936. And had taken an active part in the search for the Kellys?—Yes.

8937. And you are not in a position to say the Kellys were in the country for two or three months prior to the shooting of Sherritt?—I could not swear it.

8938. Have you seen the agent recently?—No, not since just before Mr. Nicolson left the district.

8939. Have you heard from any of them that they declined giving further information to the police?—No, I did not. I heard a great deal of talk about it.

8940. Do you think now there would be a great difficulty in getting secret agents in case of an outbreak?—I am afraid it would be a great difficulty.

8941. Why?—From the names getting publicity, and the thing being so much talked about. It is generally known now who were the agents.

8942. You do not know for certain that they would not act?—I merely speak from conversation throughout the district.

8943. From the men themselves?—No, I have not spoken to an agent except one since, and he seems very much afraid; and he said, if he had known as much he would have been very afraid to act for the police.

8944. You are not aware of any threats?—No, I am not aware of any threats.

8945. And from private individuals have any statements been made to you, that if they were in a position they would not give information?—The only agent I spoke to said he would not.

8946. You have read the evidence before the Commission, in the press?—Yes.

A. L. M. Steele, continued.
31st May 1881.

8947. Can you point out in that any cases where the names of agents have been given where they ought to have been suppressed, during the whole of this enquiry, that would do likely to militate against further information being given?—There may not have been names mentioned, but those people who have been knocking about in the country.

8948. Is there any portion of the evidence, and by whom given, that would militate against other people giving information in the future?—I do not think they would undertake the duty.

8949. There is a broadcast statement reflecting on some one, and you have read the evidence through, and you believe the people would not give the information; will you point out any evidence or names in it where they have made revelations that they ought not to have done?—No, I do not think I could. I have not given that particular attention to it.

8950. You state that a great deal of information was kept at Benalla and you were not supplied with it?—Yes.

8951. Do you think from what you have since heard—from the information obtained from secret agents—that you, as an active officer stationed at Benalla, ought to have been informed of that?—I do, certainly. I will give an instance: when the police went to the races at Whorouly, I think I had a perfect right to have been told there about it; and in many other cases I think so too, whether the information was correct or not.

8952. Why should you have been informed about the police at the races?—My station was nearer to Whorouly than it was to Benalla, and the men were run up by special train right past that place.

8953. Are there any other cases that information was in the possession of any of the officers that you consider would have been an advantage to the public if you, as an officer at Wangaratta, had been informed of it?—For some months I received no information at all. I did not know what was going on, further than being sent out on the ranges with the men and came back, and I would generally report the result that I could see nothing—find no tracks.

8954. I gathered from your statement that there was information in the possession of officers at Benalla that you considered that you ought to have been made acquainted with. Can you point out any other instances, from information that you have since obtained, that information ought to have been given to you at the time?—Yes, from the information supplied to this Commission that the officers were in possession of; I heard nothing of it.

8955. Will you state any other cases specifically?—For instance, the whole of the information that Mr. Hare received about the Warby ranges. He was under the impression that he had some good tracks there, or something to lead them on. I knew nothing of that till some time after.

8956. That was while he was out with a search party?—Yes.

8957. Are you not aware, according to his evidence, that he exhausted all the resources at his command to follow those tracks?—Yes, but I think that it would have been of great importance for my men to have known about that, so as to be ready to intercept them at some other part of the district.

8958. How far was that spot where the tracks were seen from Wangaratta?—Seven or eight miles.

8959. That would necessitate the sending of men to give you information?—There was a man that came in to post letters or something from Mr. Hare’s party, but he brought no information to me—not officially. He gossiped about what the men were talking about.

8960. In reference to this secret information obtained from the agents, it appeared to be the greatest point you have laid stress on, and it was obtained by officers at Benalla, and you not supplied with it. Can you give any instance where information was in possession of the officer, and you were not supplied with it, from private agents?—Merely what I have seen stated before the Commission here, of what the officers knew, concerning the outlaws at Benalla. I heard nothing of that at the time.

8961. Will you indicate some special cases that you have cause to complain of. I mean it from a public point of view?—There was an occasion on which the police went out with Mr. O’Connor’s party on some information from Mr. Sadleir. I forget the circumstances of the case, but I saw it in the papers, and I heard nothing about it.

8962. Would it base been of any advantage if you had been supplied with that information?—It might possibly if I had been out with my men. I cannot say.

8963. It is no use making complaints unless you can show the Commission that there was some failure in consequence?—There was information received, I believe, at El Dorado, in reference to the outlaws being seen about there.

8964. At what time?—That was the early part of April. It would be about ten or eleven months after they were out. Men were sent up there by special train.

8965. There is a printed list of the reported appearances—[handing a paper to the witness]. Just indicate the one you refer to at El Dorado?—[The witness looked at the paper.]

8966. Do you refer to when Mr. Hare was watching Mrs. Byrne’s place for twenty-five days and nights?—Yes, that was the time.

8967. Are you aware that Mr. Hare, according to his evidence, was concealed there, and endeavor to keep the fact secret of his being concealed and watching the place?—He was desirous, I believe, of keeping it secret, but it was no secret.

8968. What means could you have taken of any practical use if you had been informed of that?—Watching the crossings of the King River between Whorouly and Wangaratta, and watching the Ovens crossings.

8969. Was not your duty always?—It would not be possible, with the number of men I had to look after all of them.

8970. If you knew that Mrs. Byrne’s place had been watched, and they were likely to leave there, could you possibly tell which course they would take?—I think they would make back to Greta—that was evidently their haunt—and back to the King.

8971. I understood you to allude more particularly to the advantage of adopting a system of secret service rather than by search parties?—Yes.

8972. Then I understood you to say that information was in the possession of some of the officers of a secret character, and was kept from you, that you ought to be supplied with. Will you indicate any of those?—Nearly all the information of the secret agents was kept from me, with the exception of what I was told by Mr. Nicolson on his visits to Wangaratta. He was the only one that told me what information he could get from agents.

8973. Did he enter pretty fully into all the information he got, from what you have since heard?—He did a good deal of it. What affected my portion of the district he let me know. I must state that there was a general ill feeling existing about the special party of men being brought from Melbourne, and run about on information, while old district men there received no information during the time Mr. Hare and Mr. Sadleir were acting there. I was not the only sub-officer that complained of this, it was a general ill feeling existing through what was termed the Bourke men being run about the district, on information obtained by the officer, by special train, and the others kept ignorant of the facts.

8974. Is it a fact that there was a jealousy in the North-Eastern district existing in the minds of the police in consequence of Mr. Hare having taken with him a number of police from the Bourke district?— There was to a certain extent, as I have mentioned, the other men being left out in the cold, getting no in for an t i on.

8975. Does that feeling exist even to the present day?—No, it died out a good deal; those men were afterwards permanently stationed in the district, and some of them were removed. It died out utterly.

8976. In consequence of that jealousy that existed at the time you speak of, do you think that it would have a tendency to defeat the ends you had in view?—Well, it seemed as though it were intended that one party of police should catch the Kellys and no other.

8977. What effect had it on you when in the district—that is the question?—I do not understand the question.

8978. You have told us there was a feeling in the district about the Bourke district men, and you think it lia died out. I then asked whether that feeling of jealousy had a tendency to prevent the capture of the Kehlys at that time?—Well, so far as confining the search to one party of men, I should say it had.

8979. Were you prevented from searching in consequence of Bonike men being there?—I was not sent out, I merely went out in the ranges on my own account.

8980. Are you aware that the evidence shows that several of the search parties that went out with Mr. Hare, went out without definite information?—Yes, they may have gone just the same as I went out on several occasions myself.

8981. Were the Bourke men there on the 2nd November, when the Kellys crossed the line, as you described this morning?—No, I think they were not. I think some men had come up then.

8982. Were you quite satisfied with the information you obtained at that time that the Kellys were not far off then, and that you could have followed the tracks?—Yes, I think so.

8983. Is it a fact that you would not take that course because you had received definite instructions to proceed to another place by Mr. Sadleir?—Yes; but also because there was another party there in charge of Inspector Smith.

8984. Although you were positive you were close on the Kellys, you, as an officer having the charge of one sub-district, you would not disobey the orders of your superior officer?—I was not actually in charge of my sub-district then. I had come down from Mansfield then, and had been in the ranges searching for several days before I had received my instructions from Mr. Sadleir, in consequence of information received by Mr. Nicolson of their being seen in the neighborhood of Rats' Castle. I was sent there because of my knowledge of that locality. I suppose. I was twelve years stationed there. When I arrived at Wangaratta I made the enquiries from the constable that was stationed in Wangaratta, at the train at one in the morning. I heard what he had to say, and when told that the tracks had gone under the bridge, and knowing the state of the water, I said, “No honest man would have done that. It must have been Steve hart. Go and tell Mr. Smith; and he is sure to find them some place about the Warby ranges.” Hart’s father and mother lived in that direction in the ranges.

Mr. Sadleir.—There are some telegrams that deal with that subject.

8985. By the Commission.—Suppose another gang of outlaws were in existence to-day, and you were at Beechworth, and your superior officer entrusted you with a body of men for the purpose of making a search for that gang, and sent you direct to Mansfield, and on the road, when you got in the neighborhood of Greta, new information came to you, and believed the gang were there close by, would you proceed to Mansfield or track the gang?—I would certainly follow them; and if the telegraph wire had been available I would have telegraphed to Mr. Sadleir, but it was one in the morning.

8986. Were you under such strict instructions from your superior officer that you could not act upon any information, however conclusive, that came to your knowledge during the time you were travelling from one place to another—would you be justified in disobeying that order and following the men?—I would use my own discretion.

8987. Never mind the discretion?—If I was certain it was the men I would certainly follow them.

8988. Were you not more convinced in your mind that the information that you obtained at that time was more likely to be the gang than you were when two of the gang were said to have been seen more recently by that private agent you spoke of?—No; I do not think it was a bit more reliable.

8989. Would you attach any blame to the superior officer for not taking early steps to take up the tracks from under the railway bridge?—Those tracks were made known early in the day to the police at Wangaratta. I was only acting there on my own responsibility. It was from the tracks I had seen and what my own mind had dictated. It was not even known then that Steve Hart was connected with the outlaws, or Byrne. It was men named Brown and King that were supposed to be with them, and I believe I was the first man that mentioned that it was not King, but Steve Hart. What made me come to the conclusion that it was them that were seen at this hour that morning was, Hart’s father lived out in the direction they were going.

8990. You were under the impression on the 2nd November, from information you obtained, that those were the tracks of the outlaws?—I believed it was then, but the police were aware of it before at Wangaratta.

8991. I am only dealing with your case; you were there with a number of police?—Yes.

8992. Have you anything further to say before we come to Glenrowan?—No, I have nothing further to say except in reference to when I received information of the murder of Sherritt.

8993. What did you do then?—I received information at one p.m., 27th June 1880, from the police at Beechworth.

8994. Was it on the Saturday or Sunday?—The Sunday. Sherritt was shot on the Saturday night. It was about one o’clock, and I could not get the Benalla telegraph office at the time, so I sent a messenger to the railway station telegraph, who communicated with the superintendent at Benalla; told him to go to the office, that there was important information on the line. We were told then to carry out instructions previously supplied by Inspecting-Superintendent Nicolson.

8995. What were they?—To watch all the crossings and fords and so forth about the bridges, and to report at two a.m. in the following morning, to take up our different stations. I attended the office as directed and reported all correct. My station was about the last that answered, I believe, on the line. I remained in the office to hear the result from the different stations. There was a telegram came from Mr. Sadleir to Mr. Hare, which I took down to the railway station, as I wished to see Mr. Hare’s men as they were passing up; I knew he was coming up by special train. When I got to the station, it was about five minutes to three when I got to the station at Wangaratta. I learned here about the train coming, and I got anxious about five minutes past three about the train.

8996. Did you hear any information?—No, but you can hear the train down the line for nearly seven or eight miles coming, but I could not hear it, and I asked Mr. Lang to telegraph what time it left; the reply was, “Five minutes past two.” I remarked to Mr. Lang, “There must be something wrong,” and I ran down to the One-mile bridge, down the line.

8997. How far?—About 200 or 300 yards. When listening there for the train I heard a volley fired.

8998. How far was this from Glenrowan?—I suppose about ten miles from Glenrowan. Then I heard an occasional rifle shot; single shot. I ran back, and Mr. Lang desired me not to be in a hurry. He said it might be something in the trucks. I listened again, and about a minute or so after I heard another volley, and a rifle shot occasionally. I told Mr. Lang to get the Beechworth engine ready. The engine was there under steam at the time, and I told him I would run up and get the men and run them down on the engine. Before going away I went into the office and told the station master to send a special messenger to Mr. Sadleir’s private house, there was heavy firing down the line, or words to that effect, as near as I can recollect. I mentioned it to the operator at the machine; I told him what to say verbally, and he repeated it. I think I requested him to go to the town office, as I started for the town office at once. When I was leaving the station, Morgan, the engine driver, called me and said, “I think I hear a horseman coming on the sleepers.” I listened, but could not hear, and I continued on towards the station, when he again called to me and said he could hear a horseman coming on the line. I then heard a horse distinctly striking the sleepers occasionally, and I went down and ran about a mile down the line and waited some time, and I could hear a horse coming in the distance. It was Constable Bracken; he was coming to Wangaratta. He was then on the metal and I was between the line, but he recognized my voice as I called; and he told me Mr. Hare was wounded, and that they were all down at Glenrowan blazing away at the police. I got on his horse, and I rode on into Wangaratta and got the men up and went to the office to Mr. Sadleir. Mr. Sadleir had got to the town office at this time; that is, in Benalla, because he was speaking to me in the office when it was announced on the wire. They said that Mr. Hare had just arrived at Benalla.

8999. Wounded?—Yes. When I found from Bracken that the line had been torn up, I got all the available men; those that could ride I got horses for them, and sent two foot constables on the engine and told them where the line was torn up, and told them to be careful, and I proceeded with five men myself to Glenrowan.

9000. You rode to Glenrowan?—Yes.

9001. What time did you arrive there?—At the time I arrived, when I got to the tree near the house, it was three minutes past five in the morning. I looked at my watch.

9002. What occurred?—We rode very fast down to Glenrowan, as hard as the horses could carry us, and hung them up just in sight of Mrs. Jones’s hotel. We came down on foot. We were challenged by the police down on the north-east side of the hotel. There were two, Senior-Constable Kelly and Constable Arthur, were lying behind a log and they challenged us. Kelly recognized my voice when I answered, and I went up to him. I asked him “Were they still in?” meaning the outlaws. He said he did not know, that he picked up a rifle all covered with blood, that there was somebody shot. Then he related all about Mr. Hare getting wounded and the first affair.

9003. What did he tell you?—That Mr. Hare was wounded at the first volley. He said they were going up to the house; that he was fired at and wounded in the wrist. I then told him I thought we were too far away from the house to keep them in, and that if they had not gone they would be gone before daylight, and I would go up to a big tree by that fence. Kelly thought it was dangerous to go there. He said I would be shot before I got there. However, I made three cuts across and got to the tree.
was any person about before I made another run. There was no move then. I had been ten or fifteen minutes at the tree then when I heard the train coming in from Benalla—saw it passing up in front.

9005. Was it good daylight then?—No, this was about twenty-five minutes past five.

9006. Why do you say you saw the train?—It was a beautiful, bright, moonlight night, a very bright light. Just as the train stopped at the station, I heard the sound of iron and of people moving about within in the house. It seemed as if they had the armour, and were throwing one piece on the top of the other.

9007. Did you know it was iron then?—I recollected what Mr. Nicolson had told me then. I thought it would be cuirasses, I did not think it would be complete armour.'

9008. Then you, when you came to the tree, formed the opinion that the cuirasse statement was correct?—Yes, I called out to the men to look out and shoot low; they were putting on their cuirasses. Just at that moment a woman came to the door, and she screamed out, "For God’s sake let me go." I called to her to come on quick, and she seemed to go back. She ran into the house. The screams seemed to come from the house, and she came out again and said, "For God’s sake let me and my child go out,"

9009. Who was the woman?—I have heard since it was Mrs. Riordan.

9010. Was there any firing whilst she was coming out?—Yes. The outlaws fired and it was answered. She had got to the fence; before she got through the fence, and the outlaws fired; and then the police replied at once, and I fired at a man coming out, at a man who followed her out on his hands and knees, and I called on him to hold up his hands.

9011. Would it be the truth that you fired at her?—No. It is false. I got the woman away. She ran past me quite close, and if I had fired I must have shot her dead.

9012. What were you armed with?—A gun with slugs.

9013. Then it would not be true that the bullet went through the woman’s shawl?—Certainly not. I had no bullet. As Mrs. Riordan ran away there was a man came crawling on his hands and knees, and I called to him two or three times to throw up his hands, or I would fire at him.

9014. Did you fire at him?—I did, just as he came in a line with the chimney. I fired, and, just as I fired, there was a tremendous volley from the police all round me from the drain in front of the place, and also the opposite side. I was obliged to lie down from the fire myself. The bullets were coming round me from all sides.

9015. That was the boy Riordan?—Yes. I thought he wanted to flank me in the tree. He persisted in coming on his hands and knees; and there was a statement made by Riordan to the effect that he was shot by me at nine in the morning. I did not fire a shot from the time Kelly was taken till I left the ground. I after this learned he made a statement, to which I sent a reply to Mr. Sadleir’s office, that he was shot, with his hands up, at nine o’clock in the morning; nor did he know who it was till he spoke to the doctor in the hospital. I had said I had shot somebody—evidently it was not Byrne, and I could not imagine who it was I had shot. Dr. Hutchison enquired from the boy, and I told the doctor about the slug, and it turn out it was only a slug. I fired two shots at him—one as he left the house, and the second at the door; but the top rail of the fence seems to have got the greater part of the charge.

9016. Then you did not keep firing upon the house steadily?—No. I only fired four shots altogether—two at young Riordan, and the two at Ned Kelly.

9017. Then the statement that the women and children were fired on when they left the house was not true?—Not up to the time I left the ground. I had charge of Ned Kelly after he was captured. I was hurt in the groin. Ned Kelly was not taken at this time. Things remained very quiet for I dare say nearly three-quarters of an hour, except an odd shot fired at some horses that were knocked over—some of the police firing at them.

9018. Was that from your side of the house?—No, the far side; and I believe there was one shot from below me. I heard some of the men say they shot some of the horses.

9019. What for?—They said they were afraid they would come out and get the horses and get away. It was near sunrise. I heard the police shout in front of the place, I looked round, and I saw Ned Kelly coming from the direction of the range.

9020. It was sufficiently light to see who were coming out?—Yes. I could see the figures.

9021. You are quite sure young Riordan crawled as you said?—Yes.

9022. Up to the time of the police calling out had you any interview or did you receive any directions from the officer who then by seniority was in charge of the party?—No, never saw him at all.

9023. Do you know who it was?—I heard Mr. Sadleir’s voice.

9024. Up to that time you had no communication with him?—No, I had not seen him at all. I heard what I thought was Mr. O’Connor’s voice, just as Mr. Sadleir was coming down, calling out—"If there are any innocent people inside come out, and you will not be fired on.” I repeated that several times.

9025. When you did that you would be the nearest constable to the people inside?—Certainly.

9026. So they could hear you plainly?—They must have heard me. I called out as loud as I could, and it was a still, clear night. I took it at the time to be Mr. O'Connor's voice, because I had been told by Senior-Constable Kelly where Mr. O'Connor was. He said he was in a drain in front of the house, with his blackfellows.

9027. Did he make any other remark about it?—Not then.
9028. Did he at any time?—He made a remark afterwards in the morning. He said—"You should see O'Connor down in the drain. If you gave him a thousand pounds he would not put his head up."
9029. Did you consider yourself, upon coming up and speaking to Senior-Constable Kelly, then virtually responsible by usages of the force?—On that side of the ground I did.
9030. That would be the usage of the service?—Yes.
9031. The moment you came on the ground?—I understood when I came there I was in charge of that side of the ground, and I would have acted on my own responsibility on that side of the ground, no matter whether Mr. Sadleir was on the ground or not, because I was not under his direct orders.
9032. You were senior in rank in the service to Kelly?—Yes.
9033. Why do you say "that side of the ground"; would you not equally on the Benalla side of the ground?—Yes. Not where Mr. Sadleir was.

9034. Before he came?—Yes, I consider I was the senior officer till Mr. Sadleir came there. Kelly, the bushranger, came walking down. He was wrapped in what I thought was a blanket, I found out afterwards it was a cloak. Constable Arthur fired at him, and I told him to be cautious what he was firing at. I thought it was a blackfellow. He looked like a tall black man, an aboriginal about Wangaratta; and I thought curiosity had brought him down there at daylight to see what was the matter. Just then a shot was fired, and he threw his cloak back, and he pulled up his revolver, and raised his arm, and put the weapon on it, and fired at Constable Arthur. As Arthur ran down to the railway station he fired two shots at him. Then Constable Phillips fired at him, and he kept advancing towards him, and Phillips left his tree and joined constables Caussey and Moore at the back of the house. Constable Healy fired at him—fired two shots out of a shot gun as he came towards him. He then pulled out his revolver, but it did not seem to go off, and he left his tree and joined the other three constables at the back of the house, remarking that he was either a madman, or a lunatic, or a ghost. There was several remarks by the police lying about there; some said it was the devil; in fact they did not know what it was, this man coming down. He then struck down towards Senior-Constable Kelly and some other constables, I do not know who, and Constable Kelly retreated towards the railway fence, and called to me to look out, I would be shot at the tree. Ned Kelly then walked in between some trees and reloaded. All this time they were firing from the back door and windows of the house—the other outlaws. When the fire slackened a little I ran down. I thought I would be able to get Kelly before he reloaded, while he was sitting loading. He saw me going down, and he stood up and covered me with his revolver. I knelt down to avoid his shot, lay on the ground, and I had a bullet from the back strike the dirt up in my eye, and I could not see clearly for a few minutes till I got my eye clear. He then fired at me and missed me, and walked out to his left, striking down towards the railway station.

9035. That was the third shot you had seen him fire and missed on each occasion?—He fired five rounds the first occasion. He did not seem to hit any person. He would bring his hand very steadily, like this—[indicating by gesture]. They were a long distance from him—no man within fifty or sixty yards of him except Healy, who stopped till he came thirty yards up, but he had not a charge in his revolver, because he presented his revolver at Healy but it did not go off.
9036. Have you a high opinion of Ned Kelly as a marksman?—I did not think anything of him as a marksman. I was between him and the house. I can only judge from the remark he made that he thought I was "foxing" when the dirt had been thrown up in my eye as I was kneeling down. I ran up to him, then I saw the shot hit him about the hand, and he jumped back a little, and he called out, "Come out, boys, and we will whip the lot of them." He was then on sideways to me, and he was taking an aim at the railway station when I fired the first shot at him.

9037. Was he firing at the railway station?—People collected about at the fence.
9038. The reporters, and so on?—I think so. My intention was to club him, but he saw me coming as he passed by, and he turned round and covered me with his revolver, and tried to bring it to bear on me, so I shot him on the outside of the right leg, about the knee. He staggered back from the first shot I gave him—a yard or so back, and he was in the act of raising his hand up when I fired a second shot at his hand and hip, as he tried to raise his hand. He was trying to raise the revolver again, and when he got the second shot he dropped, and sang out, "That is enough; I am done." I then ran towards him. When I got within about two yards of him he put the revolver back, and the helmet fell off his head at the moment he touched the ground. I saw at once who it was. He put his revolver back, and I ran round and caught the revolver, and he fired it off and blew my hat off and just missed my ear. I wrenched the revolver out of his hand, and seized him by the beard till Senior-Constable Kelly, Constable Bracken, and others came up.
9039. Did you then take him down to the station?—I helped to take him down to the station. I was holding him down when the constables came up. There was a little water-way close by a sandy creek, and the men in turning him over threw him over the top of me. I was holding him down, and I had my leg severely hurt in the groin, and I helped to carry him down; but when I sat beside him I could scarcely sit, and I could not knock about after without the assistance of a rifle to lean on. When we carried him down—Constable Bracken and I carried him down—we took him into the van; it was a little above the station, and Mr. Sadleir and some others came into the van. There was a bullet or something struck there, and Mr. Sadleir considered it was not safe, and told me I had better take him into the station house.

9040. Was that the first time you saw Mr. Sadleir?—Yes.
9041. By Mr. Sadleir.—You heard my voice?—I heard your voice coming down from the train. Mr. Sadleir could have been about without my seeing him.
9042. By the Commission.—I only ask was that the first time?—That was the first time I saw Mr. Sadleir to speak to.
9043. Do you know anything further about the Glenrowan affair?—No; I did nothing during that day. I saw occasionally; I would limp outside and have a look; I could see the men firing in the house. It was about, I should think, a quarter to seven in the morning that Kelly was arrested—a little before the sun rose; and from that time until I left I was looking after Ned Kelly, except just occasionally I was relieved for a moment. I mentioned to Mr. Sadleir I was hurt, and he said I had better look after Kelly.
9044. Did he smell of spirits?—Not when he was arrested.
9045. Do you think he was under the influence of drink at the time you arrested him?—No; he spoke quite soberly. He said “Steady, do not break my fingers,” when I wrenched the revolver out of his hand.
9046. Did you look at his wounds then?—We did.
9047. How many wounds were fresh and how many old?—He seemed to have a mark on the foot by the toe and on the arm.
9048. Were those recent?—No, old wounds; but all the shot marks and wounds in his hands were fresh. They did not bleed till I seized his wrist, when the blood shot out.
9049. Those would be done by double-barrelled guns?—Yes, they were slugs, for, as I seized his hands, the blood gushed out.
9050. Did you see the mark where he was shot in the foot?—I did.
9051. Was that a bullet or slug?—I think it was a bullet.
9052. Would you say it was a revolver or a rifle bullet?—I think a rifle bullet, judging from the manner in which the boot was torn.
9053. How do you account for the rifle being covered with blood?—It was from the left arm that was wounded that the blood came.
9054. On the rifle?—Yes. His right hand was as right as possible; only the punctured wounds from the shots from the slugs he had got a few seconds before.
9055. I think you said you were at Sebastopol?—Yes.
9056. Who gave you instructions to go there?—A constable came out to Myrtleford for me, and I went in in the morning.
9057. Was that verbally or by official despatch?—I think I had a memorandum.
9058. “Constable Steele will report himself, and attend at such and such a place”—Yes. “Sergeant Steele to arrive at Beechworth before daylight in the morning” I think that was the purport of it.

329

9059. You know that district well?—Yes, I know that district as well as any man.
9060. Was Greta a sub-district attached to Wangaratta or Benalla?—Greta is nearer to Benalla.
9061. Which place is it visited from?—By police officers do you mean?
9062. Did you ever go there on duty to see if the station was right?—Yes, I was in the habit of inspecting that station.
9063. Then it would be inspected from Wangaratta?—Yes.
9064. From the sleepy inefficient appearance of Thom did you consider it your duty to report him specially?—Yes, I brought it under the notice of Mr. Smith, who was then in charge of the North-Eastern district.
9065. Can you say of your own knowledge whether the prosecutions for outrages were very frequent at the time Thom had charge?—I cannot remember any.
9066. Do you know that his predecessor had prosecutions at almost every court?—I know that before Thom they had a good number of cases.
9067. Do you consider that that impunity in Thom’s time emboldened those men to break out as they finally did?—I think it encouraged them very much in horsestealing.
9068. In connection with bush offences, is it within your knowledge that the criminal classes are chiefly from that horse and cattle stealing class?—Yes, I think so; those that resort to bushranging.
9069. Cattle-duffing and so on?—Yes.
9070. When those men come into Wangaratta, are not they the class you watch principally?—Yes; they usually get a little drink, and are what is called flash, rowdy men.
9071. You are a mounted sergeant, are you not?—Yes.
9072. What is the difference of position in the service between the foot and mounted men?—I do not see that there is any difference; as a rule, I think a foot sergeant generally gets on better in the service; a mounted sergeant is generally stationed in remote places in the country, and has not so good a chance of getting on.

What difference is there in the pay?—The pay is the same; so I understand. I think I get the same as a second class foot sergeant.

In your opinion, is a foot constable in charge of a station which has a large area of bush land as effective in the bush as a man who is accustomed to riding?—I do not think so.

He cannot be, in your opinion?—I do not think so. He should be able to go out himself at any time. I know I have a good deal more confidence in going out myself to knock about in the bush than to send a young mounted constable.

If you were in charge of a station like Wangaratta, how many men would you have under you?—Three mounted men and the mounted sergeant.

How many men have you in immediate charge at Wangaratta?—I had only three before the Kellys broke out.

As sergeant, if you had a special case to arrest in the bush—a man charged with an outrage of a violent character—would you go yourself to execute that warrant?—I certainly would.

Is it the usage for a foot sergeant, in such a case, to delegate that work, which you say you would do yourself, to one of his men?—He might, if he had not a horse himself.

As a rule, do they do it?—I think they do not.

Does that appear to you advantageous to the public service?—I think it would be always better for the sub-officer, in serious cases, to go out himself and execute a warrant of that sort.

Do you consider that the sergeants who are in charge of large stations like Wangaratta should be competent to go and do duty on horseback, if required?—I do; I think they should not be left without a mounted sergeant.

In your opinion, then, should all officers be able to ride on horseback?—I think they should.

At the time of the Kelly outrages, it is said that the police were inefficiently armed; what arms had you in the barracks at the time?—One Spencer rifle.

And how many revolvers?—All the mounted men had a Webley revolver; the foot constables had one Colt's revolver, for taking prisoners to gaol, which was handed to them when they went on prisoners' escort.

Do you consider that the arms furnished about that time were efficient in quality and sufficient in number?—I think so—in the state of the country then; of course we had no anticipation then of such an outrage as the murder of the police. I think the revolvers were quite sufficient.

Do you consider now that it is requisite for the police in that district to be all efficiently armed?—I think they should all be efficiently armed; all the mounted police, especially, should be supplied with a rifle.

You said you had a Spencer rifle, and you also stated, in your evidence, that you carried a double-barrelled gun—was that from choice?—This was some time after the Kellys broke out. We were supplied with a double-barrelled gun by the department.

Which do you consider the most effective weapon—that, or the short Martini-Henry carbine?—The gun is very good for night work, if you attack in the night, but I would prefer the rifle for daylight.

As a general weapon for arming the police force, which is the most efficient?—The Martini-Henry.

Have you heard the men express an opinion on that?—Yes.

How were your men armed that you brought from Wangaratta?—Some with the long Martini-Henry, some with the breech-loading guns, and some with the old Enfield rifle.

Does not this diversity of arming render it extremely hard to have a sufficient quantity of ammunition available for those different arms?—Yes, it does make it rather complicated.

Would it be better to have them all of one character, and one ammunition?—I think so. I think if the foot police had the Martini-Henry rifle, and the mounted police the small carbine, it would be a vast improvement.

Are you senior to Sergeant Whelan in the service, or junior?—I think senior in the service, but he holds a higher rank. I believe he was promoted just at the time the Kellys were arrested. I fancy I am senior in the service; I could not say exactly.

POLICE.
confined to four or five?—I think so.
9099. And most of those are in the immediate knowledge of Greta?—Yes, about Greta, and down more towards Lake Rowan.
9100. Do you consider that what the constables have to fear there is cowardly assassination from some of those fellows?—Well, I am sure it is a very hard question to answer. Of course, if they interfered with the police at all, they would assassinate them in the dark.
9101. You think there is no fear of their coming out to meet them?—No, I do not believe there is a man about there that has sufficient pluck to tackle a man to his face there.
9102. Was there an order, that in consequence of the dangerous character of those men, that arrests were not to be made by single constables?—I could not say I heard something of that sort.
9103. Is it an understood thing that it would be an irregular thing for one man to go and arrest such characters as the Kellys?—I do not recollect. I know if I were sending men out I would send a couple.
9104. Would that be from the orders you received, or from your opinion of what was safe?—I do not recollect receiving such an order, but I would not send a man out in that locality by himself to arrest a man.
9105. That would be a wise discretion on the part of any man?—Yes; perhaps more, if they were available, and they had to arrest more than one.
9106. Have you been promised promotion by any of your officers?—No, quite the reverse.
9107. What do you mean by that?—In making that statement I had forgotten that Mr. Nicolson did hold out an inducement to me—that I seemed to be neglected in the service, or something of that sort; and he said that if I took a prominent part in the capture of the Kellys that it would tend to my promotion. That was long before they were arrested.
9108. Was that from seeing the active character of your pursuit?—I think so.
9109. It has been stated in some report in the paper, or otherwise, that the Kellys had suffered some insults, or otherwise, or ill-treatment, from either Strahan, you, or Flood—is it true, as far as you are concerned?—I think I only went once to the place, and then I treated Mrs. Kelly with every courtesy.
9110. Have you ever insulted any member of the family?—Never in my life. I tried to pacify all, and treated all as well as I could, under the circumstances of my being obliged to arrest them.
9111. Do you know constables Flood and Strahan?—Yes.
9112. Have you any reason to believe there is the slightest truth that the Kelly family have suffered insult from those men—the female branches of it?—I could not say, not of my own knowledge. Strahan is rather a gruff man; he says some queer things to people, that might annoy them, but I think it is more a jesting manner. He has made some remarks, I believe, but not with any bad motive.
9113. Was Flood at the station?—Yes, Strahan was there only a short time before the Kellys broke out.
9114. Would a man then be of the least use for keeping those outrages in check if he were unacquainted with the country and the people?—It would be much better to have a man that was acquainted, but of course a smart man that took an interest in his duty would soon become acquainted; it is only a limited locality there, and could be known in a short time.
9115. Are you aware on the removal of Flood and other efficient men the shire councils and inhabitants petitioned Captain Standish not to remove his efficient men, or that results disastrous to the country would ensue?—I am not aware.
9116. Were you there when Flood was removed?—Yes, I was at Yackandandah. He was stationed with me at Yackandandah when he went to Greta.
9117. Was there any complaint made amongst the police or the civilians about the three days Mr. Smith was out after the Kellys?—Yes, there was some.
9118. That he had neglected that duty?—They blamed him for not following up the tracks.
9119. Would that not be a neglect of duty?—Yes, certainly it would.
9120. Do you know whether Mr. Nicolson was then at Wangaratta?—He came into Wangaratta afterwards, I believe. He came in, I think, the same evening that one of the horses were found.
9121. If an outrage is committed in your district, as a sergeant, what action are you bound to take upon hearing of it?—I report it to the superintendent of my district; or I would start myself and make enquiries into it, and do the best I could to try and find the offenders.
9122. Without waiting for any instructions how you were to proceed?—I would not wait for any instructions how to proceed.
9123. Is it your duty to repress outrage and arrest offenders as soon as you hear of it?—Yes, I would in my district. I report the matter if I could to my superintendent and circulate information generally to the surrounding police stations.
9124. Presuming a portion of the time the Kellys were out of your district, do you consider that the action of your superior officer interfered with what you might have done to make them amenable to justice?—I think I would have acted in some respects differently; I would have had a general search in every house throughout the district.
9125. Would you not say I must make them amenable to justice or they must leave my district?—Yes; but I must admit they were very clever men and kept out of the way, and until I was convinced by Mr. Nicolson that they were in the district I was under the impression they had gone away altogether—they kept so close.
9126. Until you heard of them on information you believed that?—Yes, and some other information that Mr. Nicolson gave me. I thought they had gone out of the district altogether, they had kept so quiet eight or nine months previously.

9127. Did you get the information that Mr. Smith had seen them at Hart’s place?—Yes.
9128. After the Jerilderie robbery did you hear that their friends were passing notes at Wangaratta?—Yes.
9129. Did you know that there was official information that their friends were passing notes of large amount—Bank of New South Wales notes—at Wangaratta?—Yes, I obtained that information myself and telegraphed it to the Chief Commissioner, I think.
9130. Did you know when you went to Sebastopol that information had been given to your officer that the outlaws had been seen at that place a couple of days before?—I did not know what it was.
9131. Have you heard since?—Yes, I heard that the agent had given information that brought the police there.
9132. Specially in time for your men to be there after the Kellys were there?—No. I heard that they had been there, but they were gone a day or two before. I believed they called there the same day that they passed through Wangaratta or that night. It was two or three days after when we went to old Sherritt’s hut, at Sebastopol.
9133. What charges were against Byrne and Hart?—There was nothing whatever against Hart. He had done a sentence in Beechworth gaol. He came to Wangaratta and he promised he would work, but when he had been at his father’s place it appears he threw down the axe they were grubbing with, and said, “A short life and a merry one,” and he got his horse and rode away. There was nothing whatever against him then.
9134. You heard the complaints made some time ago against the newspapers for furnishing reports, and the police stated they interfered very much with the capture of the outlaws?—Yes.
9135. Do you know of any instance yourself whereby a newspaper report interfered with the police in the capture of the Kellys?—I could not quote any particular instance, but generally speaking I believe it had a very bad effect—the information the police have furnished. I believe it was furnished by the police at the depot.
9136. Then they are to blame?—If the police are such fools as to do that, they must abide by the consequences.
9137. Do you know at any time whether at that time the police did not get valuable information from the press?—I could not say. I never asked the press for anything nor supplied them with anything.
9138. Did you ever read anything in the paper that gave you fresh information?—Yes, I have read things in the paper I did not know about before.
9139. Do you not know that the police, many of them, went to the papers pretty regularly for the purpose of getting information as to the outlaws?—I could not say so, but I think we generally heard through some of our own men if there was anything new stirring amongst them.
9140. Do you remember hearing or reading in one of the papers about some of the outlaws being seen at the Glenrowan police station just before they were captured, purchasing provisions. The information came from a little girl, and it was afterwards supplied to the press?—No, I never read that; some papers I did not see.
9141. Do you think it prudent to leave those police iii the Kelly district who were connected with the capture of the outlaws?—Oh, I think so; I do not think there is the slightest danger. I think they have as great an antipathy against me as any other person, and I have not the slightest dread of them. I think it would display great cowardice for me or any other man to leave the district.
9142. Would you like to go to Greta by yourself?—I would not mind in the least.
9143. You stated you were promised promotion if your record was good?—Yes.
9144. Was any other man promised promotion?—I did not hear of any.
9145. The Kelly capture took place just about the time of the change of the two Governments, the Service and the Berry, the elections were about that time; is it true that you said that your officer, Mr. Nicolson, promised you promotion provided Mr. Berry came back to power?—No, that is quite untrue. Mr. Nicolson never said anything of the kind to me. He made a remark to me one day, at Wangaratta. I had told him about some money that had been drawn out of the banks, and he knew I had a great deal of trouble camping out and knocking about after the Kellys. It was the time I supplied the information of their coming about Hart’s place. He then said you are not a man very far advanced in the service, and he said, “If you distinguish yourself in the capture of the Kellys, it will advance you in the service,” or words to that effect.
9146. Did you have a letter from Mr. Nicolson from the Acting Chief Commissioner after the capture of the Kellys?—Yes, I have.
9147. Did you read that letter to any people in Wangaratta?—I do not think so.
9148. Did that letter promise you promotion?—Mr. Nicolson congratulated me upon my courage.
9149. Is that letter in existence?—I think I have it at home, somewhere. He said, “I must congratulate you upon the courage displayed in the capture of Kelly. In reference to my promise of promotion your conduct is such that it does not require my aid.”
9150. Can you say that the letter was written from the Acting Chief Commissioner to you, congratulating you upon your active part taken in the capture of the Kellys, and saying that you had been promised promotion, and if the Berry Ministry came into power again?—I do not think he ever mentioned the Berry Ministry at all.

9151. Or the Service Ministry?—No.

9152. Did you write a letter to that effect to any people in Wangaratta?—Never.

9153. It would be untrue?—Yes. Mr. Nicolson said, “Not being at the capture myself, I think my position is rather a delicate one, but your conduct should not require my aid to advance you in the service.” That is it as near as possible.

9154. By the Commission (to Mr. Nicolson).—Are you sure you were Acting Commissioner at the time?

Mr. Nicolson.—I was not, I was quite out of it at that time.

9155. By the Commission (to the witness).—Was the letter written from the Wimmera?—I am not sure.

9156. Is there a feeling among the men that it requires political influence to get advancement in the force?—Yes, there is a great feeling of that sort.

A. L. M. Steele, continued.

31st May 1881.

9157. That they are not advanced then for merit?—I do not think they are. I know, myself, many men in the service who have been advanced through political influence.

9158. Are you aware of whether those appointments are political or by merit as a general rule—are you aware of any promotions having been made through political influence?—I cannot see how they could have been made otherwise; the men who have been promoted have done nothing to merit them.

9159. What are the promotions that have been made undeservedly that lead you to mention that?—It would be a very unfair thing to ask me as a sub-officer to say so in reference to the promotions of men under me.

9160. I understand from some of the witnesses that a country officer of hard and not distinguished service may sometimes pass over the head of a very deserving officer in another district—how do you yourself expect to obtain promotion in the service; do you seek it through political influence or through your superior officer?—I never tried any political influence since I have been in the service. I have been very unfortunate. I have been in a part of the district, the North-Eastern district, where there were intemperate officers, and frequent changes of officers, and I, to a great extent, was neglected. I worked very hard in the police force, and have had numerous convictions, and suppressed crime; and latterly, instead of improving in the service, I seem to be retrograding the last few months since the capture of the Kellys. My character has suffered more during that time than during the twenty-four years’ service.

9161. Are you aware there is a record kept generally of marks?—There is supposed to be. But I never saw it.

9162. You state, since the capture of the Kellys you are not in as good a position as before—in what respect?—Latterly some person has been speaking to the Acting Chief Commissioner in reference to me, and there has been, and information has come to me, that it is about a little disturbance between the magistrates and myself at Wangaratta; and my hopes in the force have been quite blasted through these remarks about myself. I have no chance of defending myself, that is before the present Chief Commissioner, and it is evidently some tattling. I have not been called upon to answer any charges. I could answer them if I had a chance.

9163. Who is your accuser?—I do not know.

9164. Have you formed any opinion of who your accuser is?—I cannot, unless it is the superintendent of the district.

9165. Who is that?—Mr. Sadleir was.

9166. Is it usual for charges of this kind to be against any man in the service without his getting a fair chance of answering?—I think not. Of course the police and local magistrates will have some little disturbance occasionally. This had to do with complaints made in reference to remarks that I made in regard to the local magistrates; and even suppose I did make the remarks, I was quite justified, because what I said could be proved to be true.

9167. Has the magistrate complained?—He has.

9168. Who was he?—Mr. Parfitt was one.

9169. Is he a publican?—Yes. Mr. Bickerton was one also; but Mr. Parfitt urged the thing because my duties called me out to his place to make some enquiries; there is some animosity against me. I went out there, and it appears that he, with the police officers, would take the word of individuals in preference to an old experienced sub-officer in the force.

9170. Mr. Sadleir.—The papers are all in the commissioner’s office. Sergeant Steele has seen all that I have.

9171. By the Commission.—Have you been called upon by the Acting Superintendent of Police to explain this conduct?—I have not been.

9172. And, in consequence, you feel some injustice has been done?—From a paragraph in the last minutes sent to me he said, “Several complaints have been made to me; what I want to find out is what those several complaints are.” I want to know why I am accused by the Acting Chief Commissioner, and not get the chance of defending myself, because my character will bear fully looking into as much as any sub-officer in the district. I think I have been unfairly dealt with in that respect.

9173. Have you anything you wish to add in reference to the Glenrowan affair?—No; I think I have given all the particulars about it.

9174. When you came to Glenrowan that morning, you said you saw Senior-Constable Kelly?—Yes.

9175. I presume you were pressed for time; but did he give you a general outline of where the men were posted?—No, he did not say where they were posted. He merely said O’Connor and the black trackers were down in the drain.

9176. Did he say anything about how the opposite side of the house was guarded?—No, he did not say anything about it; he merely remarked there were about 30 of them up in the house, and they were all armed.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at Eleven o’clock.

Arthur Loftus Maule Steele further examined.

The Witness.—Before proceeding I wish to amend my evidence of yesterday by altering the date on which I came from Mansfield from the 2nd November to 3rd November. It was Sunday the 3rd November I came from Mansfield to Benalla and took the special train.

333

9177. By Mr. O’Connor.—You stated yesterday that you heard by wire at Wangaratta, through the station, that the special train containing Mr. Hare and party left Benalla at five minutes past two on the 28th June 1880?—Yes.

9178. What was the time—can you remember that—you heard the first firing at Glenrowan?—I should think about ten minutes past three.

9179. What time was it you heard that Mr. Hare returned to Benalla?—At the office, about half an hour after.

9180. That would be about twenty minutes to four?—Yes, as near as I can guess.

9181. You stated that Constable Bracken told you Mr. Hare was wounded, and had left Glenrowan for Benalla?—No, I did not say that. He told me he was wounded, but he did not say anything about having left.

9182. Can you remember exactly what Senior-Constable Kelly stated to you in reference to how things had gone on at Glenrowan when you arrived, when you first saw him?—He gave just a brief statement of what transpired at the first onset.

9183. Did he state to you about Mr. Hare being wounded, and what he did and said?—He said he was wounded, at the first volley he thought.

9184. Did he say he remained on the field or anything, can you remember?—No. He said he went to the station to get his wound dressed up or something—some remark about his going down. He was bleeding at the wrist a good deal.

9185. Did he tell you he saw Mr. Hare load and fire several shots after he was wounded?—No.

9186. We have heard several rumors and reports amongst the police—fallacies—could you state any conversation you ever heard in reference to Glenrowan connected with Senior-Constable Kelly or any person that you know?—If I was to state all I heard in connection with the Glenrowan affair—

9187. The capture of Ned Kelly?—It would not appear like the capture of Ned Kelly at all if I told all the stories I heard about it. I know that about five minutes after, one constable came to me and said there is a lot of constables there intend to swindle you out of the arrest of Ned Kelly.

9188. By the Commission.—Who was that?—Constable Montfort.

9189. By Mr. O’Connor.—Who were the men who were supposed to be in this scheme; did you see any one?—Well, I saw three or four men together down there, Constable Arthur and Phillips. I saw Senior-Constable Kelly was a little from them at the time, he was not exactly with them at the time.

9190. Do you remember the enquiry at Beechworth where Senior-Constable Kelly swore that the indiscriminate and heavy fire was on the part of the Queensland police?—Yes, I did hear him say the blackfellows were blazing away at anything and everything.

9191. The words that he made use of were something to that effect, that the indiscriminate and heavy firing was on the part of the Queensland police?—He did make the remark on one occasion, I believe.

9192. From your knowledge of what took place at Glenrowan, would that be true; did not every one fire as much as they liked—was there any restriction?—I do not think there was any restriction from what I saw, because when the outlaws came out at the northern side of the house, as Mr. Sadleir came down the line, the moment they fired Mr. Reardon was running through the fence, getting away. At the time they fired I also fired at the boy Reardon, and there was a regular volley fired all round, and it lasted several minutes.

9193. By the Commission.—The police must have been on the ground two hours before you arrived?—Yes.

9194. You cannot express any opinion as to the firing before you arrived?—No; there was complete silence when I arrived, and no firing for some time after. I understood from hearsay that there were only the two volleys that were fired at first when the train came up. I have heard that from the men that the shots I heard at Wangaratta, the volleys, were the only ones that had been fired at the first commencement; that is only hearsay.

9195. By Mr. O'Connor.—Did I understand from your evidence that after taking Ned Kelly to the station you never went round again?—No, I did not leave the station except when a constable relieved me, and I went up to look at the remains of the outlaws that were carried out—the charred remains.

9196. That was about five or six?—I could not say what time, but I did not go beyond that.

9197. By the Commission.—After the capture of Ned Kelly you went with him to the railway station and remained there till after the hotel was burnt?—Yes.

9198. By Mr. O'Connor.—Had you an opportunity of seeing any person about the hotel?—Yes.

9199. Did you see me at any time?—Yes, several times.

9200. You saw me several times walking round?—Yes.

9201. Where?—Near Mr. Sadleir on one occasion, standing with Mr. Sadleir behind a tree. They were both firing on the one occasion.

9202. By the Commission.—What hour?—I could not exactly say. I noticed Mr. Sadleir and Mr. O'Connor both moving about as they advanced.

9203. Cannot you say about?—It was some considerable time before the burning of the house.

9204. How long?—Two or three hours before.

9205. When did you first see Mr. O'Connor after the capture of Ned Kelly?—I think he came soon after the capture.

9206. Never mind about thinking; when did you first see Mr. O'Connor that you can swear to?—About twenty minutes or half an hour after the arrest of Kelly, at the railway station. I think he came up and had a look at Ned Kelly and went away.

9207. By Mr. O'Connor.—In your opinion any person on the field there that knew me must have seen me?—I think so. I know I saw you on several occasions when I went out; when I went out, as a rule, I saw you.

9208. By Mr. Sadleir.—You mentioned about the crime about Greta before the murders, that was before I took charge of the district?—Yes, it was.

9209. And the Mansfield police, of whom I was in charge, had nothing to do with it?—I used to communicate occasionally with the Mansfield police with reference to Broken River and Avon Vale offenders.

A. L. M. Steele, 31st May 1881.
first to tell me about that?—Yes, I told you.

9219. Were you not the first to give me the rumor?—Yes.
9220. And it was then only as a mere rumor?—Just a rumor.
9221. I could give you no instructions on that?—You did give some.
9222. Not further than telling you that you were to go on to Wangaratta, and to act as you thought best?—No.
9223. I will put it another way—you were at perfect liberty?—No.
9224. If there had been no party under Mr. Smith at Wangaratta, might you not have felt justified in staying?—Yes.
9225. Your only reason for not staying was because there was a party ready to take it up?—Yes.
9226. Were you tied down absolutely by my instructions?—I considered I was as regards going to Rats’ Castle.

9227. Was I fully aware of this rumor?—No, you were not, I think. I had just mentioned to you that there was some talk by the station master about some one being seen.
9228. Still, if there had been no party at Wangaratta you would have followed it?—Yes, of course. I had jaded horses; we had ridden all day in the wet, and were wringing wet. I had travelled forty miles that day, and it was better for fresh horses and men to go after them.

9229. Did you know the strength of Mr. Brook Smith’s party at Wangaratta then?—I think he had six men; I asked Twomey, and his reply was, “Six,” and I was quite satisfied there were. He was to follow them up, from the enquiries I made; I was very sorry I could not follow the men myself.
9230. By the Commission.—How many men had you with you?—I could not tell the exact number. I have been told since there were about thirteen or fourteen men, but there were so many parties I could not tell unless I kept a memorandum. I could have told but for losing my book.

9231. By Mr. Sadleir.—On the morning of the Glenrowan affair, will you state the actual hour of Ned Kelly’s arrest?—Between six and seven o’clock.
9232. The sun rose that morning at seventeen minutes after seven?—The sun rose, a little after we got him to the station by your direction, as we were carrying him out.
9233. Is it not a place surrounded by hills and high timber—is there not a gap?—Yes.
9234. Is there not enough to make the morning darker by a few minutes than on the plains?—I do not think so. The sun rises on that gap towards Wangaratta. I think we could see the sun the moment it got above the horizon.
9235. You were rolled under Ned Kelly, had you an opportunity of judging if he smelt of liquor?—I had.
9236. Did he?—I think not.
9237. Had you tasted food or drink for many hours?—No, nothing that night.
9238. You were perfectly satisfied he had none?—I am. He did not smell. I bent over him, and he spoke as soberly as possible. He got some liquor afterwards, as you know. I am very quick in detecting the smell of drink.

9239. You mention there are four people who may give trouble in that district still?—Yes.
9240. I will read some names—[reading a list of names]—there are ten of those men I have mentioned to you; do you think any of those might?—I think the two — , and — , and — , are four of the most dangerous men in the district.
9241. And that the others are not so dangerous?—No, but they are dangerous men.
9242. You made a report on the 6th of July representing your share in the capture of Ned Kelly—the action you took. I have that report, dated 6th July. In making your application for the reward, do you refer to that report?—That was the second report I sent in. I sent in one which I sent down with the other papers from Wangaratta to the secretary for the board.
9243. I speak of the 6th July last—have you any recollection?—I recollect sending a report as to the revolver taken from his side, and disputing certain statements.
9244. Did you not, in making your application re the reward, refer to report on the 6th July?—Yes.
9245. It was sent to me. I want to read my remarks upon your report, and I ask whether it is a fair statement of your services on that day;—”Claim No. 30. Sergeant Arthur Loftus Maule Steele (1179). I have read some names—[reading a list of names]—there are ten of those men I have mentioned to you; do you think any of those might?—I think the two — , and — , and — , are four of the most dangerous men in the district.”

9246. You never heard of that before?—No.
9247. So that there is a great deal both for and against a member of the force that he does not hear about?—Yes.

The Chairman.—This is the record sheet:—”16/8/80. Has been engaged in charge of several search parties re Kelly gang since October 1878, and joined in the attack on the gang at Glenrowan soon after five a.m. on 28th June 1880; was the first person to lay hands on Ned Kelly; behaved on that occasion with special bravery.” That is signed by Mr. Sadleir.

Mr. Sadleir.—That is new to Sergeant Steele also, I believe.

The Witness.—My reason for sending in my report of the 6th was that I did not consider I had been fairly dealt with. I was merely casually mentioned in Mr. Sadleir’s report to the Chief Commissioner of Police in reference to the capture of Ned Kelly. My firm belief is that had it not been for the action I took there would have been no Ned Kelly taken alive.

9248. By the Commission.—That is rather an extraordinary statement.—Do you mean to say that except for you, in your opinion, Ned Kelly would not have been captured alive—do you mean that he would have escaped or been killed on that occasion?—I believe he would have gained the house, because there was no person to intercept him between that and the house except myself. I brought him down. The men had opened out that he stuck up that way, and must have intended coming up under the shelter of the scrub. Had it not been for my arresting him I believe he would have been burned with the others.

9249. Do you mean that but for your advancing in that way, and the covering fire of the outlaws, he would have joined the rest of the outlaws?—Yes.

9250. And then you presume, had he joined them, he would have come to the same fate as the rest of his companions?—Yes, that is my opinion.

9251. What was Constable Arthur doing at the time?—He ran down.

9252. Away from him?—Across me to the railway station.

9253. Do you mean to say the other constables cleared away except yourself?—There was not a man near Ned Kelly. He was a quarter of an hour almost from the time he fired, and as he did so they opened right and left of him. I saw no constable come to my assistance till I shot him and had him on the ground. I saw Senior-Constable Kelly coming from cover and seize him by the whiskers; Constable Bracken was the second constable that came up, then Dr. Nicolson, then Mr. Marsden, the clerk of the court at Wangaratta, and constables Dwyer and Montfort; but Senior-Constable Kelly was the first to join me from the Wangaratta side from round the tree. That was when I had disarmed him and had him on the ground.

9254. Can you inform the Commission who fired at him first?—I think Arthur was the first.

9255. And who else?—Phillips and Healy.

9256. Was that before you fired at him?—Yes, some time before.

9257. Could you and Kelly and the other constables be distinctly seen by persons on the railway platform at that time?—They could not see me, except leaving the tree.

9258. Could you or any others be seen where the capture took place from the platform?—Yes.

9259. Were there any of the public standing about the fence?—Yes, Mr. Rawlins, and Mr. Marsden, and some newspaper reporters.

9260. They should see what took place?—Yes.

9261. I will read a few lines of Dowsett’s report to the Award Board, dated December 13th, 1880:—
